"In the case in hand the remaining assets of the assignors consisted principally of real estate. In determining its value the auditor had to depend upon the conflicting opinions of witnesses. In giving their opinions upon questions of value, especially of real estate, witnesses are often inclined to rely on their judgment of what it ought to bring in the market rather than on any knowledge of the actual state of the market. But opinions of what the land would be worth for manufacturing purposes, without proof that it could be sold or was in demand for such purposes; of what the witness would give for the land if he had the money to invest; of what the property would sell for if time were given for payment; of its value as an investment, without proof that money was seeking investment in that direction; opinions based on these and like conditions do not answer the question now before us.

"The question is whether the assignors were in possession of means of any kind with which, or out of which, they could themselves at once discharge all their remaining liabilities in full, or out of which their creditors could collect all their debts by legal process.

"In deciding this question favorably to the preferred creditors, we must know then: 1, that the property was available; for, owing to peculiar circumstances, the debtor's assets, though in ordinary times ample, may prove unavailable because unconvertible into money; 2, that if convertible into money, it would bring enough at an immediate cash sale by the assignors, or at a forced sale at the instance of the creditors, to pay the assignors' debts in full.

"If these are the facts in this case, then the learned auditor's general conclusion that the assignors were able to pay their debts is correct, and his report of distribution proper; but a finding that they were able to pay their debts, based upon any other theory of the value of their remaining assets, would be incorrect.

"For the purposes of this case, the property was worth just what it would bring if immediately converted into money, and no more. The learned auditor's conclusion is 'that the weight of the testimony establishes the fact that, at the time of the assignment in question, the company was solvent; or, in other words, that at that time its assets exceeded in amount its liabilities.'

"If it were not for his subsequent answer to the exceptant's second legal point, we might have no cause to doubt that this finding necessarily implies all that we have suggested as to the meaning of the term 'inability to pay debts,' in the Act of 1848. But in the point referred to the learned auditor was requested to find as follows:

"If the assets of the Pittston Knitting Company exceeded their liabilities at the time of the assignment, yet if they were not available and could not readily be converted into cash, then the assignment comes within the provisions of the Act of April 17, 1843, and inures to the benefit of all the creditors."

"The learned auditor refused to find as requested, and perhaps, upon a critical analysis of the point, he was justified in so doing. But, nevertheless, the point would seem to have been intended to obtain a specific ruling to the effect that in deciding the main question of the assignor's ability to pay their debts, it was the adequacy and availability of their property for that purpose at the time of the assignment, by reason of its ready convertibility into money, by the voluntary act of the assignors, or by process of law at the instance of the creditors, which was to control. Thus understood, it will be seen, from what we have heretofore said, that a correct legal principle applicable to assignments of this nature was involved in the point.

"The questions constantly recur: Was the property of the assignors of such nature and value that they could themselves have disposed of it at once for enough to pay all their debts, or that the creditors could at that time have collected their debts out of it by legal process?

If, in this sense, their assets exceeded their liabilities, they were unquestionably solvent. These, as we think, are the vital questions of fact in the case. From their decision is to be deduced the main conclusion as to the ability or inability of the assignors to pay their debts.

"The learned auditor has evidently considered the case with great care, and his findings upon the general question are stated unequivocally. They will not be disturbed except for very clear mistake. But it is because of this degree of conclusiveness which attaches to an auditor's findings as to matters of fact, and because his remarks in answer to the exceptant's second legal point (by reason of what is omitted more than by what is said) have created some uncertainty in our mind as to the basis upon which his conclusion as to the value of the assignors' assets is rested, and not because we are prepared to declare his general conclusion unwarranted by the evidence, that we feel constrained to refer the matter back to him for a specific finding in the particular mentioned.

"We adopt his reasons for overruling the exceptions to the account.

"And now, January, 1885, the report is re-committed to the auditor, with the request that he report specifically upon the questions suggested in the foregoing opinions."

The second report of the auditor was as follows:

"To the Honorable the Judges of the Court of Common Pleas in and for the County of Luzerne:

"In pursuance of the request of Your Honors, contained in opinion by Rice, P. J., filed January 13, 1885, the undersigned, the auditor appointed in above case to pass upon the exceptions filed to the account of A. Bryden, trustee of the Pittston Knitting Company, Limited, and report distribution of the moneys in hands of said trustee, would respectively report:

"That a day was fixed by the auditor, to further hear the parties for and against said exceptions, more particularly upon the question of the ability of the knitting company aforesaid to pay its debts at the time of its assignment to Bryden. The parties met the auditor on the day fixed by their counsel, when the arguments were heard. And the testimony has been fully considered, as well as the arguments by the auditor, and we have to report that upon the question of the ability of the Pittston Knitting Company to pay its debts at the time of the assignment, we are of the same opinion as we were when the auditor's report was prepared. We, therefore, in accordance with the request of the court and after a careful and full consideration of the testimony, find specifically the following fact:

"That when the Pittston Knitting Company 'Limited' made its assignment to A. Bryden, in trust for certain of its creditors in said assignment referred to, it had assets sufficient to have at once paid all its debts, and that these assets at the time of said assignment would have sold for cash for a sum sufficient to have paid all its liabilities in full."

On argument of the exceptions filed to the second report of the auditor, the court delivered the following opinion:

"In his original report the auditor found that the assignment of the insurance moneys to the accountant, in trust for certain of the creditors of the assignors (the Pittston Knitting Company), was not on account of its inability at that time to pay its debts. His supplemental report has removed all doubt as to the basis upon which the main conclusion was rested. He now reports specifically that at the time of the assignment the Knitting Company 'had assets sufficient to have at once paid all its debts, and that these assets at the time of said assignment would have sold for cash for a sum sufficient to have paid all its liabilities in full.'

"This finding fully meets the requirements stated in our previous opinion (see Re Bryden, 42 Legal Int. 80), and if it is warranted by the evidence, then the assignment to the accountant cannot be held to inure to the benefit of all the creditors, and the distribution reported by the auditor must be confirmed.

"The very earnest and able argument of the counsel for the exceptants has caused us to re-examine the evidence with great care. The testimony upon this question of fact is conflicting, and it must be confessed that the opinions expressed by some of the witnesses as to the value of the assets are not entitled to much weight, for the reason that they are speculative and involve the existence of conditions which do not appear in the facts. This remark, however, does not apply to the testimony of all the witnesses produced by the bondholders; and we are unable to declare that the auditor is clearly mistaken in his finding, much less to declare that there is no evidence whatever to sustain it. It is unnecessary to cite authorities as to the weight which must be given to an auditor's finding upon a pure question of facts. According to the familiar rule upon the subject, the court not being satisfied that a mistake has been committed, this report must be confirmed."

A decree having been made and entered overruling the exceptions to the reports of the auditor and confirming said reports, the appellants took this appeal, making the following specification of errors in the decree of the court below:

1. Overruling the first exception to the first report of the auditor, to wit: that the learned auditor erred in failing to report that the said Pittston Knitting Company, Limited, was insolvent at the time of making the assignment of December 1, 1882, though the uncontradicted testimony of the manager established that the company was then unable to pay its debts as they fell due in the ordinary course of trade and business.

2. Overruling the second exception to the first report of the auditor, to wit: that the learned auditor erred in failing to report the placing of a portion of the company's assets in the hands of a trustee, for certain of its creditors, was a preference within the scope of the Act of 1843.

3. Overruling the third exception to the first report of the auditor, to wit: that the learned auditor erred in reporting that the bondholders of the knitting company alone should participate in the distribution of the fund accounted for.

4. Overruling the fourth exception to the first report of the auditor, to wit: that the learned auditor erred in reporting as a fact that the knitting company was solvent because its assets exceeded in amount its liabilities.

5. Overruling the fifth exception to the first report of the auditor, to wit: that the learned auditor erred in reporting as a fact that the value of the assets of the company, limited, exceeded its liabilities, because the weight of expert testimony of the value of its real estate was the only foundation for so finding.

6. Overruling the sixth exception to the first report of the auditor, to wit: that the learned auditor should have found the value of the real estate of the company, limited, at the sum which it would have brought at a forced sale at the time of the assignment.

7. Overruling the seventh exception to the first report of the auditor, to wit: that the learned auditor erred in reporting that the company, limited, was of ability to pay its debts at the time of the assignment of December 1, 1882.

8. Overruling the eighth exception to the first report of the auditor, to wit: that the learned auditor erred in dismissing the first exception filed to the said account of Andrew Bryden. This first exception to the account being that "The accountant's claim of $550 for legal services is excessive."

9. Overruling the ninth exception to the first report of the auditor, to wit: that the learned auditor erred in dismissing the second exception filed to the account of Andrew Bryden. This second exception to the account being, that "Claim for $481, commission, is excessive."

10. Overruling the tenth exception to the first report of the auditor, to wit: that the learned auditor erred in refusing to find the first conclusion of law as requested by the present exceptants. This first conclusion of law being that "The value of the factory lot is immaterial in this case; the assignment to Andrew Bryden comes within the provisions of the Act of April 17, 1843, and inures to the benefit of all creditors."

11. Overruling the eleventh exception to the first report of the auditor, to wit: that the learned auditor erred in refusing to find the second conclusion of law as requested by the present exceptants. This second conclusion of law being that "If the assets of the Pittston Knitting Company exceeded its liabilities at the time of the assignment, yet if they were not available and could not be readily converted into cash, then the assignment comes within the provisions of the Act of April 17, 1843, and inures to the benefit of all creditors."

12. Overruling the twelfth exception to the first report of the auditor, to wit: that the learned auditor erred in failing to report that the embarrassments of the company, limited, its unpaid bills, the four suits against it, and its partial assignment of its only cash assets to a trustee just prior to the issuing of executions against it, were the natural succession of events in the history of a case of inability to pay debts within the meaning of the Act of 1843.

13. Overruling the thirteenth exception to the first report of the auditor, to wit: that the learned auditor erred in excluding the exceptants from a pro rata share or dividend of the fund accounted for by the said Andrew Bryden.

14. Overruling the fourteenth exception to the first report of the auditor, to wit: that the learned auditor erred in reporting and finding the solvency of the company, limited, from the weight of testimony of the value of its lands for manufacturing purposes or investment, without regard to their value at a forced sale.

15. Overruling the fifteenth exception to the first report of the auditor, to wit: that the learned auditor erred in finding that the lands of the knitting company, limited, had a market value and were available for conversion into cash, without finding what that market value and availability for conversion into cash amounted to in dollars and cents.

16. Overruling the sixteenth exception to the first report of the auditor, to wit: that the learned auditor erred in disregarding the testimony of the company's manager, that at the time of the assignment to Bryden in trust, the company was unable to meet its indebtedness.

17. Overruling the former part of the first exception to the second report of the auditor, to wit: because there is no evidence to support his (the auditor's) finding of fact, that the Pittston Knitting Company had assets sufficient at the time of the assignment to Andrew Bryden to have at once paid all its debts, and that the auditor erred in such finding.

18. Overruling the latter part of the first exception to the second report of the auditor to wit: because there is no evidence to support his (the auditor's) finding of fact that these assets (which the company had), at the time of the assignment, would have sold for cash for a sum sufficient to have paid all its liabilities in full, and that the auditor erred in such finding.

19. Overruling the second exception to the second report of the auditor, to wit: that the auditor erred in such finding of fact (that the assets of the knitting company at the time of the assignment would have sold for cash for a sum sufficient to have paid all its liabilities in full), because it was contradictory to the only competent testimony in the case.

20. Overruling the third exception to the second report of the auditor, to wit: that the auditor erred in said finding of fact (that the assets of the knitting company at the time of the assignment would have sold for cash for a sum sufficient to have paid all its liabilities in full), because it was clearly against the weight of the evidence.

Messrs. F. C. Sturgis and John Bethell Uhl, for appellants.

Mr. George S. Ferris, for appellees.

Mr. Justice Sterrett delivered the opinion of the court:

It would be a useless expenditure of time and labor to specially notice each of the twenty specifications of error in this case. The only result would be to make more apparent what is very evident from an examination of the evidence: that there is no special merit in any of them.

Some of the assignments of error present questions which arose and have been finally disposed of on the writ of error brought by appellants to No. 84 of this term [the preceding case]. The learned auditor's findings of fact, which constitute the burden of complaint, were fully warranted by the evidence before him; and, upon the facts thus found, no other decree than that entered by the court below could have been consistently based.

Decree affirmed and appeal dismissed, at the costs of appellants.

LANCASTER COUNTY NATIONAL BANK, Pf. in Err.,

v.

Michael L. HUVER, Assignee.

1. A lender who, before paying over money on a borrower's discounted note, discovers that the borrower is insolvent, may tender back the note and refuse payment of the money.
2. The assignee of the borrower has no rights superior to those of the borrower himself.

(Decided October 4, 1886.)

ERROR to the Common Pleas of Lancaster County, to review a judgment for the plaintiff for want of a sufficient affidavit of defense. Reversed.

This was an action of assumpsit by Michael L. Huver, assignee of Henry H. Shenk and wife, against the Lancaster County National Bank.

In his affidavit of claim the plaintiff alleged that the suit was founded upon the following claim, viz.:

"A deposit in Lancaster County National Bank, March 30, 1885, of $248.58, in favor of said Henry H. Shenk, who has since assigned his estate to Michael L. Huver, by deed of voluntary assignment, in trust for creditors; and he verily believes there is now due and owing by the said Lancaster County National Bank, the defendant, to the said plaintiff, the sum of $248.58, with interest from April 25, 1885, for the recovery of which this suit is brought."

The defendant filed an affidavit of defense in which it alleged that the affidavit of claim was not such a copy of a book debt or claim as entitles the plaintiff to judgment for want of an affidavit of defense; and that the defendant had a just and legal defense to the whole of the plaintiff's demand, the nature and character of which were as follows:

On March 30, 1885, Henry H. Shenk made his note for $250 payable thirty days after date, and on same date had it discounted by the Lancaster County National Bank; the proceeds, $248.58, were placed to his credit on the books of the Bank, and no check was drawn against that sum. The next day he made an assignment for benefit of creditors to Michael L. Huver; and at once the Bank, on discovering his insolvency, credited his account with $1.42, the discount, charged him with $250, the amount of the note, and tendered the note to Shenk and his assignee. They refused to receive it; Huver, the assignee, demanded the $248.58 and, on refusal, brought suit in his own name against the Bank.

The note had not matured when the suit was entered.

PATTERSON, J., making absolute a rule for judgment for want of a sufficient affidavit of defense, delivered the following opinion:

"The statement of the case is, we are of the opinion, enough to show that the plaintiff must have judgment against the above defendant. The defendant discounted on March 30, 1885, the note of Henry H. Shenk, and same day placed to his credit, on the books of the Bank, defendant, the proceeds thereof, to wit: $248.58. On the 31st day of March, 1885, said Henry H. Shenk assigned his estate, by deed of voluntary assignment for the benefit of his creditors, to Michael L. Huver, the above named assignee; which deed was recorded same day, at 8.55 A. M. This assignment passed all the property or money to the credit of Shenk to his assignee, the said Huver. Then on the same 31st of March, did the defendant restate the said assignor's account in the Bank, as set forth in his affidavit of defense. At this time there was no subsisting demand or debt due the Bank by Shenk. 'A set-off can only be made of a debt or demand which existed at the time of the commencement of the action, and the defendant must be able to show that it was then his.' Huling v. Hugg, 1 Watts & S. 418.

"And to the same principle, see Roig v. Tim, 103 Pa. 115; 1 Story, Eq. §§ 327, 639; Waterman, Set-Off, 74, 75; Jordan v. Nat. Shoe & L. Bank, 74 N. Y. 467; Bank of Chicago v. Bank of Grand Rapids, 68 Ill. 398, 402.

"Other authorities could be cited.

"The defense here we think is untenable. The court makes the rule absolute, and enters judgment against the defendant for $248.58, with interest to be added from the date of the bringing of this suit to this date, November 14, 1885."

Thereupon the defendant took this writ and assigned as error the action of the court in entering the judgment for the plaintiff.

Mr. Wm. Aug. Atlee, for plaintiff in error, cited and relied upon Dougherty v. Cent. Nat. Bank, 93 Pa. 227.

Messrs. D. G. Eshleman and L. Ellmaker, for defendant in error:

No attempt of the Bank to change its relations with Shenk, after it was informed of the assignment, could be successful. The assignment fixed their relations. At that time it owed Shenk $248.58, and Shenk was not indebted to it. The assignment passed all the money standing to the credit of Shenk to Huver, the assignee.

Will v. Franklin, 1 Binn. 502

This action was commenced by Huver, the assignee, before the note was due. A demand, to be set off, must be a subsisting cause of action at the time of the commencement of the plaintiff's suit, and upon which an action might have been sustained.

Waterman, Set-Off, 74, 75, § 60; Pennell v. Grubb, 13 Pa. 552; Huling v. Hugg, 1 Watts & S. 418; Varney v. Brewster, 14 N. H. 49, 54; Ryan v. Barger, 16 Ill. 28; Re Commercial Bank Co. L. R. 1 Ch. App. 588; Roig v. Tim, 103 Pa. 115, 118; Jordan v. Nat. Shoe & L. Bank, 74 N. Y. 467; Bank of Chicago v. Bank of Grand Rapids, 68 Ill. 398.

In Dougherty v. Cent. Nat. Bank, 93 Pa. 227, the facts are not precisely similar to those in this case. In that case the defendant had discounted the plaintiffs' note and extended their credit for its amount, upon learning of their insolvency before payment to or notice of any checks or assignments by them. Here the Bank changed its account after it had notice of the deed of assignment. This fact takes this case out of the principle of stoppage in transitu.

In Lockwood v. Beckwith, 6 Mich. 168, where a partnership became insolvent and made a general assignment for the benefit of creditors, including therein a note past due, and the maker of the note held the acceptance of the partnership not then due, it was held that the insolvency of the acceptors was not of itself sufficient to authorize a set-off, in equity, of the acceptance against the note in the hands of the assignee, in the absence of evidence that the acceptance was based upon the note, or that the maker of the note trusted to it at the time, as the means of discharging his obligation. A bank has no lien upon money standing to the credit of one of its depositors for the amount of a note of such depositor discounted at the bank, but which has not matured.

Mfrs. Nat. Bank v. Jones, 2 Pennyp. 377.

The mere insolvency of the depositor intervening before the maturity of the note cannot affect the question as against a creditor attaching the fund. Id.

Mr. Justice Paxson delivered the opinion of the court:

This case is ruled by Dougherty v. Cent. Nat. Bank, 93 Pa. 227. The facts of that case are upon all fours with this. There is no substantial difference between them. It is true, in the case in hand there was an assignment for the benefit of creditors, after the discount and before the withdrawal of the credit. But the assignee has no higher standing than his assignor. Had a check been drawn against the fund produced by the discount, prior to the withdrawal of the credit, such check would have been good in the hands of a bona fide holder for value. But there was nothing of the kind here. The rights of third parties have not intervened.

We have the case of a man who procured a discount at a bank one day and makes an assignment for the benefit of his creditors the next morning. He was insolvent when he procured the discount. The note which he gave the Bank was a worthless thing, and he knew it when he offered it to the Bank.

There was an utter failure of the consideration; the Bank received nothing for the credit which it gave him. When it learned next morning of his insolvency, the Bank withdrew the credit and tendered him back the note. It is conceded that if the rights of third parties had intervened, the case would have been different. So it would have been had the Bank paid over the money to Shenk, or upon his order. But as between the parties the Bank had the right to withdraw the credit to Shenk. The cases cited in the opinion of the court below and by the learned counsel for the defendant in error are good law, but they have no application to this case. We need not repeat what was said in Dougherty v. Cent. Nat. Bank.

The judgment is reversed and a venire facias de novo awarded.

John STEWART, Plff. in Err.,

v.

City of PHILADELPHIA, To Use, etc.

1. Municipal claims for paving and curbing in Philadelphia are to be estimated according to frontage, except in the case of rural or suburban land.
2. Prima facie all land within the city limits is subject to the frontage rule, and the burden of proving land rural rests upon the owner.
3. Rural land is land not already so far improved or in the midst of or in such close proximity to city improvements that it can fairly be said that paving and curbing are requisite for the benefit of the land as a part of the City proper.
4. Municipal assessment of land as rural for the purpose of taxation does not estop the City from denying its rural character in a claim for paving and curbing.

(Decided October 4, 1886.)

ERROR to Common Pleas No. 4 of Philadelphia County, to review a judgment on a verdict for the plaintiff in scire facias sur municipal claim. Affirmed, by a divided court.

This was a claim by the City of Philadelphia to the use of Cunningham & McNichol, against John Stewart, owner or reputed owner or whoever may be owner of a lot of ground at the Northwest corner of Forty-Eighth Street and Silverton Avenue, in the twenty-fourth ward of the City, containing 150 feet in front on Forty-Eighth Street, and 100 feet in depth along the North side of Silverton Avenue.

The claim was filed November 20, 1878, and was for work done and materials furnished by the use plaintiffs in curbing and paving Forty-Eighth Street, in front of the premises.

On November 20, 1882, a scire facias issued. The defendant pleaded non assumpt, set-off and payment, with leave, etc., and especially that the work was charged for according to the frontage rule of assessment "and that the ground, etc., against which said claim has been filed, is and was at the time of doing said work, rural and suburban, and assessed as such; and further because said paving and curbing were not called for by any reason save as a general public improvement and conferred no special benefit on defendant's property."

On this plea issue was joined.

At the trial, before WILLSON, J., the following facts appeared:

There were no buildings or improvements of any kind on said lot; Forty-Eighth Street in 1878 was opened only from Haverford Avenue northward to Westminster Avenue, a distance of four squares. The paving claimed for was started at Haverford Avenue and carried to Aspen Street, 150 feet north of defendant's lot, in all a distance of two squares. No streets were opened on the east side of Forty-Eighth Street north from Haverford Avenue.

An open common, through which a creek thirty feet wide ran, faced the east side of Forty-Eighth Street directly opposite defendant's lot, and extended eastward to Forty-Sixth Street; and extended this width a mile northward from Haverford Avenue; said tract lying between defendant's lot and the improved part of the City.

There were no houses on either side of Forty-Eighth Street north of Silverton Avenue excepting one at the N. W. corner of Forty-Eighth and Aspen Streets and three small brick houses built in 1878. Three hundred feet south of defendant's land, at the south end of Forty-Eighth Street, were the insane asylum grounds containing 119 acres. To the westward of defendant's lot, at Fiftieth Street, was open country used for farming purposes only, there being in the intervening space on the north side of Silverton Avenue two houses between Forty-Eighth and Forty-Ninth Streets and only one house between Forty-Ninth and Fiftieth Streets where the farms begin.

The open tract on the east side of Forty-Eighth Street north from Haverford Avenue which was on the other side of the street from defendant's lot, was assessed in large blocks. Morse's estate had a frontage on Forty-Eighth Street of 415 feet and extended in depth a square to Forty-Seventh Street; then came McInne's lot, 860 feet front on Forty-Eighth Street, of same depth below grade; adjoining this to the north was a lot with a 864 feet frontage on Forty-Eighth Street.

Silverton Avenue was not open east of Forty-Eighth Street. It was opened west only two squares to Fiftieth Street on to farming land.

The general character of the place (to use the language of the city assessor) was that of "an isolated neighborhood cut off from the railroads." There were no compact buildings there.

Forty-Eighth Street was out of the line of travel and was not used at all by the general public. Defendant's land and also that surrounding was assessed as rural up to the year 1885, seven years after this paving was laid.

The defendant asked the court to charge as follows:

"First. If the jury is satisfied from the evidence in the case that the land against which this claim is filed was in 1878 rural or suburban, it is its duty to find for the defendant."

"Answer. I affirm this point; adding, however, that [the real test is not whether the property in question could properly be called either rural or suburban, but whether the work done was required or justified by the locality of the property and the character of the surrounding improvements]; in other words, if the locality and character of the property and its surroundings were such that the work done would not properly be considered to have been done for the general public advantage but to have been done for the special benefit of that neighborhood of the City in which the property in question was situated and for the advantage of such property as city lots, then the property should under the law be charged with its share of the expense, and the plaintiff is entitled to a verdict."

"Second. If the jury find that the land against which the lien is filed was at the time of filing the lien beyond the built up section of the City, that land in the immediate vicinity was used for farming purposes and that Forty-Eighth Street was not cut through, then said lot was protected from such a tax as is levied by this lien and the verdict must be for the defendant."

Answer. I do not affirm this point as stated. [I do not regard the near proximity of farm land or the fact that Forty-Eighth Street was not cut through, which is a very indefinite expression, to be of themselves of conclusive importance.] Farm land might be in the immediate vicinity of a closely built city. Such proximity would undoubtedly be an element to be taken into consideration in connection with all the evidence adduced to show that the property in question was rural in the sense to which I have called your attention in my answer to the last point. So, also, would be the incident of being beyond the built up portion of the City. If by this is meant that the property against which the claim is filed was so far separated from the building improvements of the City that the work covered by the claim did not bring to the property the special benefit which such work would ordinarily bring to city lots as such, then the claim should not and cannot be enforced against the property."

"Third. If the jury believe that the paving, the subject of this suit, was not called for by any reason save as a general public improvement and conferred no special benefits on defendant's property, or conferred no benefits equal to the amount of this claim, then said charge is excessive and unlawful, and plaintiff is not entitled to recover for the same."

"Answer. I affirm this point, with the exception that I instruct you that [if you believe from the evidence that the property in question, or the neighborhood of which it was a part, required or justified the work, or that the work was justified or required to be done for the benefit of defendant's land as city lots and as a portion of the City at large] and that the work was not done for general public benefit, then it is not necessary for the plaintiff to show that the amount of the special benefits to the defendant's property was equal to the amount of the claim."

"Fifth. The City, by its assessment, having given the land in question a rural or suburban rating, it is estopped from denying its rural character."

"Answer. [I decline to affirm this.]"

The court charged, inter alia, as follows:

"It is an ordinary rule of the City that the owners of real estate shall pay for paving in front of it according to the number of feet frontage."

"Within a few years, however, it has been settled by repeated decisions of the supreme court that this method of taxation is not constitutional when applied to properties which are rural or suburban, as distinguished from those which would in the ordinary sense of the term be called city properties."

"This ruling of our highest court must be our guide in this case. It is undoubtedly true that the plaintiffs here, the contractors, establish a prima facie case by exhibiting the claim filed, and the authority under which they did the work."

"The effect of this in this case is to throw upon the defendant the burden of establishing that the property against which the claim was filed was exceptional; that is, that though it was situated within the limits of the City, it was not subject to the claim, because it was rural or suburban in the sense to which I have referred, and therefore protected from taxation by the feet frontage rule. The defense here relies upon this ground of contention. [To substantiate it, it is incumbent upon the defendant to satisfy you by evidence that his property, to which the claim filed relates, was not city property in the ordinary meaning of that term; that it was not property already so far improved or in the midst of or in such close proximity to city improvements that it could fairly be said that the paving was requisite for the benefit of that property as a part of the City proper.] Substantially this test is what I understand the supreme court to have laid down. [The fact that some persons or many would use the term rural in connection with a given property, would not settle the question in favor of an exemption from such a tax as is levied in this case.

"Some might describe all West Philadelphia as rural. What you are to consider is the nature of the benefit done by the work in question.] If this work had principally a general advantage, and was not demanded by the wants and interests and for the special benefit of the immediate vicinity of the defendant's property, and of that property as a part of the City proper, then your verdict should be for the defendant. Otherwise your verdict should be for the plaintiffs for the amount claimed."

The verdict was for the plaintiffs for the full amount claimed $742.25, and judgment was entered accordingly; whereupon, the defendant took this writ and assigned as error the portions of answers and charge included in brackets, and also that the court erred in not instructing the jury that the completely rural character of the neighborhood protected the land from the frontage rule.

Mr. Joseph Leedom, for plaintiff in error: Assessments according to the frontage rule are justified only where they provide a just and equal apportionment according to the benefits conferred, and do not impose unfair and unequal burdens, and are practically applied only to cities and large towns when the density of population along the street and the small size of lots make it a reasonably certain mode of arriving at a true result.

Re Washington Ave. 69 Pa. 361.

The facts established at the trial, together with its rural assessment, determined the rural character of the land and the rural character of the neighborhood, and protected defendant's lot from the frontage rule of taxation.

Philadelphia v. Rule, 93 Pa. 18; Hammett v. City, 65 Pa. 146; Seely v. Pittsburgh, 83 Pa. 360.

The case of Craig v. Philadelphia, 89 Pa. 265, practically decided the question raised in this case as to the rural character of the neighborhood of defendant's lot. The lot involved in Craig v. Philadelphia, was situated at Forty-Ninth and Market Streets, on one of the main thoroughfares and on the line of the principal travel. The lot involved in this case is on Forty-Eighth Street, north of Haverford Avenue. Forty-Eighth Street, in 1878, when this paving was done, was not even opened for public travel north of Westminster Avenue. It is in an isolated neighborhood out of the line of travel. The close proximity of defendant's lot to that involved in Craig v. Philadelphia, brings this case directly under the rulings in that case.

It is not incumbent on the defendant to satisfy the jury "that his property is not in close proximity to city improvements," as ruled in the court below.

No paper book filed for defendant in error.

Per Curiam:

This judgment is affirmed by a divided court.

H. C. FRICK, Appt.,

v.

George E. BALDWIN.

1. In case of the refusal or incompetency of all the kindred of a decedent, and no creditor applying, the register of the proper county may grant letters of administration to any fit person, in his discretion.
2. Although letters may not be void when granted to a nonresident who gives the requisite bond, a nonresident has no right to the administration.
3. Generally, it is the duty of the register, in appointing an administrator, to regard the expressed will of the parties entitled to the estate, whether they reside within or without the State; and, if they are incompetent, the trust should be committed to their nominee, if a fit person; and letters may be revoked on their application, when granted without their assent.

(Decided October 4, 1886.)

APPEAL from a decree of the Orphans' Court of Fayette County, revoking letters of administration. Reversed.

This was a petition by George E. Baldwin, to the Register of Wills of Fayette County, for the revocation of letters of administration granted to H. C. Frick upon the estate of William Baldwin, deceased. The facts, as they appeared from the pleadings and the testimony taken before the register, were as follows:

William Baldwin died at Connellsville, Fayette County, Pennsylvania, on the 7th day of January, 1884, intestate, unmarried and without issue. Connellsville was at the time of his death and had been for many years prior thereto his domicile and principal place of residence. The only relatives left by the deceased were a brother residing in Massachusetts, a sister residing in Vermont, and nephews and nieces living in various States of the Union, one, namely: George E. Baldwin, the petitioner, residing at Philadelphia.

Within a few days after Mr. Baldwin's death Daniel Kaine, Esq., of Uniontown, who had been his counsel for many years, wrote to the nephew residing in Philadelphia, telling him that letters should be taken out in Fayette County and suggesting that he (Kaine) being familiar with the estate should act. To this letter George E. Baldwin replied that he did not wish to have anything to do with the matter; that the whole thing was in the hands of Franklin B. Baldwin, the brother, who resided in Massachusetts, and that he had forwarded the letter to said brother.

On the 15th day of January, 1884, Franklin Baldwin, acting for himself and the other relatives of the deceased, applied to the Probate Court of Worcester County, Massachusetts, by petition in which he set forth that William Baldwin, at the time of his death, was a resident of the City of Worcester, in Worcester County, Massachusetts; and he asked for and obtained letters upon that day to be issued to him, as administrator of the estate.

On the 8th of February, 1884, he came into Pennsylvania and filed with the Register of Wills of Allegheny County, in the City of Pittsburgh, a petition in which he reiterated the statement that William Baldwin had died a resident of Massachusetts and asked the Register of Wills for Allegheny County to grant ancillary letters upon said estate to William Bissell, of Pittsburgh, upon the ground that a portion of the estate was in Allegheny County.

The other relatives of the deceased, including George E. Baldwin, the Pennsylvania nephew, joined in this proceeding and renounced all right that they might have to administer upon said estate. Ancillary letters were granted, pursuant to the prayer of the petition, by the Register of Allegheny County, upon the same day.

On the 13th day of February, 1884, the Register of Fayette County, discovering this combination upon the part of the relatives of the deceased to withdraw the estate from his jurisdiction and to deprive the Commonwealth of the collateral inheritance tax upon that portion of the estate not taxable if the domicile of the deceased was beyond the borders of the Commonwealth, issued letters of administration upon said estate to H. C. Frick, and required him to file a bond in the sum of $600,000 to protect the parties in interest. The bulk of the estate consisted of bonds and other obligations for the payment of money, having no situs of their own.

Shortly after Mr. Frick's appointment, finding that he would be hampered and embarrassed in his administration of the estate by the outstanding ancillary letters granted to Mr. Bissell in Allegheny County, he filed a petition with the Register of Allegheny County to revoke the letters ancillary to the Massachusetts administration, improvidently granted upon a misrepresentation of the facts as to decedent's residence.

In this action the Commonwealth intervened and a decree was made by the Register of Allegheny County, revoking the ancillary letters, upon the ground that there had been a misrepresentation made as to the domicile of the deceased.

From this decree Mr. Bissell appealed to the Orphans' Court of Allegheny County. The court sustained the decree of the register and dismissed the appeal. He then appealed to the supreme court, but eventually abandoned the appeal about time of the argument.

George E. Baldwin, at the instance of the foreign administrator, presented this petition to the Register of Fayette County, asking that Mr. Frick's letters be revoked and letters be issued to Mr. Bissell. This proceeding was commenced the 28th day of October, 1884.

The register refused to revoke Mr. Frick's letters and petitioner appealed to the Orphans' Court of Fayette County, which court sustained the appeal and ordered the letters to be revoked. From this decree the present appeal was taken by Mr. Frick.

Subsequent to the appeal, but before certiorari was filed, George E. Baldwin presented his petition to the orphans' court, setting forth that the estate had been settled by Mr. Frick and further litigation and expense was unnecessary, and withdrawing all objections to Mr. Frick's administration.

Messrs. Boyle & Mestresat and Knox & Reed, for appellant:

The exclusive right to grant letters upon this estate belonged to the Register of Fayette County.

Act March 15, 1832, § 6.

The Commonwealth looked to him to see to the collection of the collateral inheritance tax.

Act April 10, 1849, § 16.

Quiescence upon his part would have been negligence, and that would have cost the Commonwealth many thousands of dollars, because the personal estate of the deceased was of a character having no situs of its own; and the tax thereon could not have been collected if the fraudulent claim that the domicile or residence of the deceased was in Massachusetts had been allowed to stand unchallenged.

Whenever letters of administration are by law necessary, the register having jurisdiction shall grant them to the widow, if any, or to such of decedent's relations or kindred as by law may be entitled to his estate. And in case of refusal or incompetency of every such person, to a creditor applying, or to any fit person at his discretion.

Act March 15, 1832, § 22.

It was the duty of the register, there being no widow, to appoint a relative, unless he found such to be incompetent, or refusing the letters at his hands.

All of William Baldwin's relatives and kindred were incompetent to administer, for they were all nonresidents, except George E. Baldwin, the nephew who lived in Philadelphia.

Sharpe's App. 87 Pa. 163; Sarkie's App. 2 Pa. 157.

Upon the part of all of his relatives, including the Philadelphia nephew, there was a refusal to administer. There were no creditors applying. Therefore, that condition of affairs existed when it was the register's duty to appoint a fit person at his discretion.

This he did February 13, 1884, in the person of H. C. Frick, the appellant.

Messrs. T. C. Lazear, Nathaniel Ewing and P. S. Newmyer, for appellee, relied on Brubaker's App. 98 Pa. 21.

Mr. Justice Trunkley delivered the opinion of the court:

William Baldwin, a resident of the County of Fayette, on January 7, 1884, died intestate, leaving no widow or lineal heirs. The only person interested in his estate, residing in Pennsylvania, is George E. Baldwin, who has never wished to administer the estate himself; and he made no move to nominate to the register of the proper county a person to be appointed, until October 28, 1884, when he petitioned for the revocation of the letters which had been granted to Frick. Within a week after the decedent's death, he intrusted the business to Franklin Baldwin of Massachusetts.

On January 15, 1884, Franklin Baldwin represented to the Probate Court of the County of Worcester, Massachusetts, that said decedent last dwelt in said county; whereupon, in due course of procedure, said court on February 5, 1884, issued letters of administration of the estate of said decedent to said Franklin Baldwin.

Upon the petition of Franklin Baldwin to the Register of Allegheny County, representing that William Baldwin of Worcester County, Massachusetts, died leaving personal property in Pennsylvania, the principal part thereof being in Allegheny County, and that letters of administration had been granted to himself in said County of Worcester, the register, on February 8, 1884, granted ancillary letters of administration to William S. Bissell.

All parties interested in the estate who are now seeking the revocation of the letters to Frick were privy to the action of Franklin Baldwin. A glance at the procedure shows that they moved quickly, not in the county and State where the decedent resided when he died, but in another State where they obtained primary administration, and then in another county in this State where they obtained ancillary administration. It was well known that the estate was of considerable magnitude, and subject to the collateral inheritance tax. No creditor has appeared anywhere, to this day, asking for letters or objecting to the appointment of anybody.

The facts coming to the knowledge of the register of the proper county, on February 13, 1884, he granted letters of administration to H. C. Frick. In case of the refusal or incompetency of all the kindred of the decedent, and no creditor applying, by the letter and spirit of the statute, the register may grant letters "to any fit person, at his discretion."

That Frick was a fit person is unquestioned. That it was proper for the Register of the County of Fayette to grant letters of administration is clear; no jurisdiction of the subject was in the register of any other county.

Brubaker's App. 98 Pa. 21, cited by appellee, ruled that it is error to create separate co-ordinate administrations on the same estate. In that case the register who had jurisdiction of the subject granted both letters, the second by order of the orphans' court. Here, the register having jurisdiction rightly granted the letters, and the lawfully appointed administrator took an orderly and legal way to have the ancillary letters, issued in Allegheny County, vacated.

On February 9, 1884, Frick began proceedings for the revocation of Bissell's letters. Those who had been active in procuring Bissell's appointment had knowledge, if not actual notice, of that proceeding. Nearly fifty witnesses were examined, a large number being residents of the New England States. The letters were revoked in October, 1884; Bissell appealed but, on consultation with the heirs, abandoned the appeal, and George E. Baldwin immediately began this proceeding, giving no cause whatever for the revocation of the letters to H. C. Frick, save the following: "A person in nowise related to nor being a creditor of said decedent, and without notice to your petitioner, or to any other relations of the said decedent legally entitled to such administration."

George E. Baldwin has since become satisfied; but if these were otherwise, his own testimony reveals that he has no cause to complain for want of notice. Doubtless, as alleged, the other parties concerned in the attempt to maintain the appointment of Bissell concurred in the petition for removal of Frick. They are incompetent because they are nonresidents. If an administrator removes from this State, on the application of any person interested, the orphans' court may vacate his letters. Although letters may not be void when granted to a non-resident who gives the requisite bond, no non-resident has a right to the administration. Sarkie's App. 2 Pa. 157; Sharpe's App. 87 Pa. 168; Hood, Exrs. 59; Scott, Intest. Laws. 32.

Among the reasons for refusing administration to a nonresident is that he should be within the jurisdiction of the courts of this State. He is a trustee, answerable as such for the conduct of the trust estate; and interested parties, when their rights are withheld, should not be confined to the slow process against sureties.

A stranger has no right to demand letters nor to object to the granting of letters, for he has no interest in the estate. Generally, it is the duty of the register to regard the expressed will of the parties entitled to the estate, whether they reside within or without; and if they are incompetent, the trust should be committed to their nominee, if a fit person. Jones' App. 10 W. N. C. 249.

While a stranger is not in position to be heard objecting, the register ought not to grant letters to a nonresident even if there should be none to object. Cases may arise where letters have been granted to fit persons, without assent of nonresident parties in interest, which should be revoked on their application.

When Frick was appointed to the trust, he was competent, and it was proper that the register should act promptly. All the parties now complaining were active to avoid the tribunal having jurisdiction. In what they represented to the probate court in another State, and in what they did in Allegheny County, they may have acted in good faith; and we say naught to the contrary. The appointment of Frick was lawful and provident. As the case comes, considering the facts and circumstances, there is no reason for the revocation of his letters.

Decree revoking the letters of administration granted to H. C. Frick is reversed, at the cost of the appellee.

READING FIRE INSURANCE & TRUST CO., Guardian, Appt.,

v.
Ellen RIEGEL.

1. Without proof of subsequent actual marriage it will not be presumed, from continued cohabitation and reputation, that a relation illicit in the beginning has been changed to that of husband and wife.
2. When a woman's claim for widow's exemption out of a decedent's estate rests entirely upon cohabitation and reputation, and her prior cohabitation and reputation as the wife of a man still living is proved by evidence of the same general character, no presumption of marriage with the decedent will arise.

(Decided October 4, 1883.)

APPEAL from a decree of the Orphans' Court of Berks County, dismissing the appellant's exceptions to a widow's exemption appraisement, and confirming the appraisement absolutely. Reversed.

After the death of Jacob R. Riegel, leaving a minor child, Charles B. Riegel, Ellen Riegel claimed to be the widow of the decedent; and at her request the appraisers of the decedent's personal estate set apart property to the amount of $300 to her as the widow's exemption.

The Reading Fire Insurance & Trust Company, guardian of the minor child, excepted to the appraisements, but the orphans' court dismissed the exceptions and confirmed the appraisement absolutely.

The facts upon which Ellen Riegel rested her claim are set forth in the opinion.

From this decree the Reading Fire Insurance & Trust Co. guardian, appealed.

Messrs. Bland & Dettra and Isaac Hiester, for appellant:

The claimant cannot be the widow of Jacob R. Riegel, because she is the wife of Jeremiah Ribble, who is still living. The evidence of that marriage is clear and unmistakable.

Marriage is regarded in this State as a civil contract, and is provable in all civil actions by cohabitation, reputation, acknowledgment of the parties, reception by the family, and any other circumstances from which it may be inferred.

R. R. Co. v. Hall, 61 Pa. 361; Senser v. Bower, 1 Penrose & W. 450; Throndehl v. Morrison, 25 Pa. 326; Hanna v. Phillips, 1 Grant, 253; Guardians of the Poor v. Nathans, Physick's Est. and Bicking's App. 2 Brewst. 149, 179 and 202; Chambers v. Dickson, 2 Serg. & R. 475; Vincent's App. 60 Pa. 238.

The cohabitation between Ribble and the claimant was constant and continuous. The house in Wood Street was the house of both; neither lived anywhere else; and no other person lived there.

Cohabitation is to have the same habitation, so that where one dwells, there the other dwells with him. No particular length of time is essential to cohabitation as evidence of marriage.

Yardley's Estate, 75 Pa. 207.

The reputation was general and undoubted in the neighborhood. Reputation consists of the speech of the people who have an opportunity to know the parties, to be proved by them.

Commonwealth v. Stump, 3 Pa. 132.

The best evidence of a reputation is that it never was discussed or questioned in the community.

The acknowledgment of the parties by each other as husband and wife was unequivocal. The admissions of a party to the fact of marriage are entitled to great weight, while denials are entitled to but little consideration.

Greenawalt v. McEnelley, 85 Pa. 352.

The reception by the respective families is conclusively established. General reputation, which the conduct of the parties establishes, may be, with cohabitation, primary evidence of marriage. A fortiori is family reputation of marriage authoritative in such case.

1 Whart. Ev. § 84; Blackburn v. Crawford, 3 Wall. 175 (70 U. S. bk. 18, L. ed. 186); Senser v. Bower, 1 Penrose & W. 450; Physick's Est. 2 Brewst. 179.

Where a man and a woman are shown to be cohabiting in a house, under a general reputation of marriage in the neighborhood, what each said and did and how the family of each received the other, is of the utmost importance and of the greatest value as corroborative and interpretative of facts already independently established. Declarations, part of the res gestæ, are evidence to show the relation of the parties to each other.

1 Whart. Ev. § 259; Potts v. Eberhart, 26 Pa. 493; Kimmel v. McRight, 2 Pa. 38; Jones v. Brownfield, 2 Pa. 55; Rees v. Livingstone, 41 Pa. 118; Ellis v. Guggenheim, 20 Pa. 287; Potens v. Postens, 3 Watts & S. 127; Koch v. Howell, 6 Watts & S. 350.

The fact that a woman cohabited with and spoke of a man as her husband is sufficient to bar her claim to the estate of another man, whom she claimed to have married during the lifetime of the former.

Adose v. Fossit, 1 Pears. 304; Thompson v. Thompson, 10 Phila. 131; Kenley v. Kenley, 2 Yeates 207; Heffner v. Heffner, 28 Pa. 104; Griffith v. Smith, 1 Clark, 479.

The existence of the former marriage with Ribble is the only key to the petitioner's relations with the decedent. She lived with the decedent for a period of seven or eight years preceding his death; her child was recognized by him as his own, and both were treated as members of his family; her companionship was evidently agreeable to him, and the existing arrangement was contemplated by both as a permanent one; and yet it is admitted that no marriage ever took place between them, either by formal ceremony or private contract; no general reputation of marriage was permitted to surround them in the neighborhood, and no seal of legitimacy was in any way placed upon their child.

Such inexplicable conduct presents a problem capable of but one solution, and that solution must be found in an impediment to a legal union, namely: the petitioner's former marriage with Ribble, who was still in full life.

A wife is a competent witness to prove a marriage contract between herself and her deceased husband, in a contest where the legality of the marriage is in question.

Greenanall v. McEnelly, 85 Pa. 352.

The claimant was a competent witness, who was best able, of all the world, to throw light upon the origin of her relation with Riegel, was present in court and giving testimony, and yet said never a word in reference to the subject. This silence, more expressive than words, is morally conclusive proof that there was no marriage relation between the parties.

The only evidence on the subject fully supports the conclusion of the illicit origin of their relations.

A relation between a man and a woman which was illicit at the commencement is presumed to continue so, until proof of change; and a marriage therefore will not be presumed from cohabitation and reputation where the relation between the parties was of an illicit origin, in the absence of proof of a subsequent actual marriage.
PA.

Hunt's App. 86 Pa. 294; Brinckle v. Brinckle, 12 Phila. 234; Rose v. Clark, 8 Paige, 574; Commonwealth v. Stump, 53 Pa. 132; Bicking's App. 2 Brewst. 202.

A man may live with his kept mistress in such a way as to create a kind of repute of marriage among some persons. He may even, to gratify her, allow himself to be held out, or hold himself out, to her friends and acquaintances as her husband; he may recognize the fruit of the connection as his children, and manifest affection and tenderness towards them, and yet the evidence may fall far short of that which ought to satisfy the mind that there was an actual agreement to form the relation of husband and wife.

Bicking's App. 2 Brewst. 202; Yardley's Est. 75 Pa. 207; Hill v. Hill, 82 Pa. 511; Brinckle v. Brinckle, 12 Phila. 232; Tholey's Est. 93 Pa. 36; Clark v. Trinity Church, 5 Watts & S. 266; Blackburn v. Crawford, 3 Wall. 189 (70 U. S. bk. 18, L. ed. 192); Sitler v. Gehr, 105 Pa. 577.

Messrs. H. O. Schrader and Ermentrout & Ruhl, for appellee:

The question passed upon by the court below was a pure question of fact; and, like the decision of an auditor, its decision cannot and ought not to be reversed if there was competent evidence before it deemed sufficient, and its conclusions from that evidence appear to be correct. Like the verdict of a jury, its decision is presumptively right.

The law favors the legality of marriage, and will not uselessly bastardize issue. Public cohabitation of parties as husband and wife is presumptive proof of a valid marriage, and becomes conclusive proof of marriage when not distinctly proved that the parties did not intend to contract matrimony.

Montague v. Montague, 2 Add. 375; Thorndell v. Morrison, 25 Pa. 326.

Cohabitation is presumed to be lawful until the contrary appears.

Senser v. Bower, 1 Penrose & W. 450; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 462.

There is no proof in this case, no evidence that the origin of this intercourse between the appellee and Riegel was illicit. It is true, he paid attentions to her before marriage; but there is nothing illicit in that. They had their season of courtship; there is nothing illicit in that. He made her acquaintance, according to the evidence, at Dreibelbis' Hotel, and in due course of time introduced her to his relatives as his wife; this was followed by cohabitation and the birth of issue.

Even where the relation is shown to have been illicit at its commencement, and therefore raised no presumption of marriage, yet if there is proof of a change in the character of the relation, and a marriage in fact, this marriage in fact can be proven by acts of recognition, continued matrimonial cohabitation, and general reputation from which marriage can be inferred under the decisions.

Physick's Est. 2 Brewst. 179; Hunt's App. 86 Pa. 294; Richard v. Brehm, 73 Pa. 140; Husb. Mar. Wom. p. 11.

For civil purposes, reputation and cohabitation are sufficient evidence of marriage.

Senser v. Bower, 1 Penrose & W. 450; Thorn-dell v. Morrison, 25 Pa. 326; Lehigh Valley R. Co. v. Hall, 61 Pa. 861; Hanna v. Phillips, 1 Grant, 253; Guardians of Poor v. Nathans, Bicking's App. and Physick's Est. 2 Brewst. 149, 202 and 179; Brice's Est. 11 Phila. 98.

In Seibert's Estate, 1 Pa. C. C. Rep. 229, the legal principles governing the case are discussed by Judge Ashman of the Orphans' Court of Philadelphia, and it is held that a presumption of marriage raised by cohabitation and reputation, and fortified by admissions, cannot be rebutted by inconclusive evidence of an existing prior marriage with another. Although, in the language of Vincent's App. 60 Pa. 246, speaking of the sanctity of the contract of marriage, mystery may surround its origin, suspicion may linger in its circumstances, and slight doubt disturb its clearness, the policy of the State demands that this relation should not be lightly discredited and the issue bastardized.

Mr. Chief Justice Mercur delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from a decree setting off $300 worth of property to the alleged widow of Jacob R. Riegel, deceased. Whether the appellee was ever his lawful wife is the question in the case.

It is clearly proved that they lived and cohabited together for several years. She gave birth to a child which he claimed and recognized to be his. There is evidence that at times he declared she was his wife and introduced her as such. On one occasion when he conveyed some real estate, she joined in the deed as his wife. At other times when asked whether he was married to her he would give evasive answers, neither admitting nor denying that he was or was not. At the time the child was born, Rebecca Forney swears they were not married. That witness asked each of them about that time. "He said he was not married, that he would take her for a housekeeper." "He said he would never marry her." "She said she was long ago married."

At other times the appellee spoke of him as her husband. Mrs. Dr. Rhoads however testifies after Riegel and the appellee had lived together for some time that the latter "complained to her that he would not marry her." "She blamed his sister for being opposed to his marrying her." "She said whenever she would ask him to marry her, he would say: 'I cannot, my sisters don't want you in the family.'" Witness further testified that appellee said "she told Jacob Riegel to get himself another housekeeper if he would not marry her."

The whole evidence discloses quite a difference of opinion in the minds of their neighbors, as to whether they were married. It was so uncertain that there appears to have been much talk questioning it, while they were living together. The evidence does not show any actual marriage nor any well recognized general reputation that they were married.

Soon after the death of Riegel and before his funeral, Ressler swears he was at her house and said to her: "You know, there are rumors on the streets that you and Jacob Riegel were not married," and she answered: "If we ain't married, I was true to him all the time we lived together."

She was afterwards called and testified in her own behalf. She denied generally that she had such a conversation with Mrs. Rhoads, and swore that she did not tell her that she said to Jacob: "If you don't want to marry me, then get yourself another housekeeper." She did not specifically deny other portions of Mrs. Rhoads' evidence, equally as strong and expressive, that no marriage existed; nor did she deny having used the language testified to by Ressler. She did not swear that she was ever married to Riegel, or that there was any agreement between them, under which they lived together as husband and wife.

On the argument of the case in the court below, it appears by the opinion of the court that the appellant asked why she was not examined with reference to her marriage with the decedent. The answer was that she was called and testified only in rebuttal. The learned judge says: "The question why she was not called and did not testify in chief still remains unanswered; and I submit that I am not able to answer it."

We think the easy and correct solution of this question is to infer she was not called in chief to testify to an alleged marriage with Riegel, by reason of her known inability to testify to any fact sufficient to prove a marriage.

Undoubtedly they lived together for a long time, under circumstances sufficient to prove intimate sexual relations; but cohabitation and reputation alone are not marriage. They are merely circumstances from which a marriage may sometimes be presumed. It is a presumption, however, that may be rebutted by other facts and circumstances. Hunt's App. 86 Pa. 294.

When the relation between a man and a woman living together is illicit in its commencement, it is presumed to so continue until a changed relation is proved. Without proof of subsequent actual marriage, it will not be presumed from continued cohabitation and reputation of a relation between them which was of illicit origin. Id.

Here the evidence establishes with sufficient certainty that in its inception the relation between the appellee and Riegel was illicit; and there is no sufficient evidence to create a legal presumption of any subsequent marriage. In arriving at this conclusion we do not doubt the correctness of the law as declared in Richard v. Brehm, 78 Pa. 140, and numerous kindred cases. Many times marriage may be proved by acts of recognition, continued matrimonial cohabitation, and general reputation. Here, however, the evidence falls far short of satisfying the mind that there was ever any actual agreement to form the relation of husband and wife.

There is another feature in the case which if proved would establish that she is the wife of another man who is still living.

The appellant gave evidence tending to prove that before the appellee formed any relations with Riegel, she lived and cohabited with one Jeremiah Ribble and was reputed to be his wife, and he is still living. Some eight witnesses testify that Ribble and she were living together, keeping house and reputed to be husband and wife. Four of these witnesses were neighbors living on the same street with them. One was a cousin of the appellee, and three of them were brothers of Ribble. Two of the brothers testify that he told them he and she were married and were living together or keeping house.

The evidence of cohabitation and reputed marriage with Ribble, during the time she lived with him, is of the same general character as that given to prove the subsequent relations between her and Riegel, but that time was of much shorter duration.

She swears she never lived with Ribble as his wife. If in fact she lived and cohabited with him as his mistress, the reputation proved and his declarations would not make her his wife. They would not be sufficient to establish the existence of a valid marriage with him. They do, however, tend to strengthen the probability that she may have formed the same kind of meretricious relation with Riegel. The evidence of any marriage with him is too weak and uncertain to establish that relation; and the learned judge erred in holding otherwise.

Decree reversed, at the costs of the appellee; the confirmation of the appraisement to her is taken off, the exceptions thereto are sustained, and the appraisement is set aside.

Elizabeth SAGER, Guardian, Plff. in Err.,
v.

John GALLOWAY et al.

1. Devises are governed by the intention of the testator, to be ascertained from his words in the will and the circumstances.
2. A devise to a grandson when he arrives at a certain age, and if he dies before that age the devise to pass to another person, indicates an intention that the devise to the former shall be contingent on his arriving at the age designated.
3. The law favors the vesting of estates, and where there is doubt as to the point of time at which it was intended the estate should vest, the earliest will be taken.
4. Where a testator creates a particular estate and disposes of the ulterior interest, especially in an event which will determine the prior estate, the words descriptive of such event, occurring in the later devise, will be construed as referring merely to the period of the determination of the possession or enjoyment under the prior gift.
5. Where the particular age at which the devise shall pass to the devisee is made a constituent part of the description of the object of the devise, the remainder cannot vest before. The person is not ascertained before the given age.
6. When the remainder is limited to a person not in esse, or not ascertained, as when it is limited so as to require the concurrence of some dubious, uncertain event, independent of the determination of the preceding estate and duration of the estate limited in remainder, to give it a capacity of taking effect, the remainder is contingent.

(Decided October 4, 1884.)

ERROR to the Common Pleas of Warren County, to review a judgment of compulsory nonsuit in an action of trespass on the case for waste. Affirmed.

The defendants had bored or sunk oil wells upon lands belonging to the estate of George Ashworth Cobham, deceased, which land plaintiff claimed under the provisions of the will of said Cobham, the material part of which will is set forth in the opinion.

The testator executed the will in question September 28, 1870, and died October 6, 1870, leaving, him surviving, his three daughters: Georgena Catherine, Elizabeth and Alice, and a stepson, Henry Cobham, who was also his nephew. Elizabeth was at that time married to one John Sager, and Alice thereafter married one George Mead.

Georgena Catherine Cobham died without issue. The plaintiff in interest, Cobham Bolton Hargraves Sager, is the oldest son of Elizabeth and John Sager, and at the commencement of this suit in September, 1884, was about eight years of age. On the 29th day of July, 1884, Elizabeth Sager, his mother, was, by the orphans' court, duly appointed his guardian, and brought this suit for damages in the nature of waste committed by the defendants upon the estate of her ward, to which defendants pleaded "not guilty, with leave." She proved that in the summer of 1884, the defendants, claiming under and through Henry Cobham, drilled a number of oil wells of great depth, upon the land described in the narr. and took therefrom about 80,000 barrels of petroleum, of the market value of about $25,000, which belonged to the estate of her ward and was of great value.

At the close of her case the defendants moved for a compulsory nonsuit which was granted; whereupon, the plaintiff moved the court to take off the nonsuit, upon which the court granted a rule to show cause which was the same day discharged by the court.

Plaintiff took this writ of error, assigning as error the action of the court in entering the nonsuit and in discharging the rule to take off the judgment of nonsuit.

Messrs. George A. Jenks, J. H. Donly and S. T. Neill, for plaintiff in error:

For centuries the rule of construction has prevailed, favoring the vesting of estates in remainder, at the earliest possible period.

Boraston's Case, 8 Coke, 19.

A remainder becomes vested as soon as there is anyone in existence capable of taking.

Lantz v. Trustler and Chew's App. 37 Pa. 482, 28; Young v. Stoner, Id. 106; Minnig v. Baidorf, 5 Pa. 503; Manderson v. Lukens, 23 Pa. 81; Letchworth's App. 80 Pa. 75.

It was argued at the trial in the motion for nonsuit, and will doubtless be argued here, that the words of this will: "It is my meaning and intention, that if a son he shall take the same when he arrives at the age of twenty-one years; and if he should die before that age the devise passes," etc., create such a contingency as to destroy the vested and indefeasible character of the estate before given by the words: "I hereby give and devise Cobham Park to the oldest son of my daughter Elizabeth Sager and to his heirs and assigns forever." But the uniform current of authorities, from Boraston's Case to Kerlin's Lessee v. Bull, 1 Dall. 177 (1 U. S. bk. 1, L. ed. 88), on down to McArthur v. Scott, 118 U. S. 340 (Bk. 28, L. ed. 1015), the latest and a very important case upon the question in this suit, are to the contrary.

Goodtitle v. Whitby, 2 Burr. 228; Minnig v. Baldorff, 5 Pa. 503; Kinsey v. Lardiner, 15 Serg. & R. 191. See also 4 Kent, Com. 7th ed. p. 217, *p. 206, note; Fearne, Cont. Rem. 349 et seq.; Doe v. Perry, 3 Term Rep. 484; Doe v. Proctor, 4 Johns. 61; Moore v. Lyons, 25 Wend. 119; Linton v. Laycock, 33 Ohio, 128; Doe v. Consioline, 6 Wall. 458 (73 U. S. bk. 18, L. ed. 869); Cropley v. Cooper, 19 Wall. 167 (86 U. S. bk. 22, L. ed. 109); McArthur v. Scott, 118 U. S. 380 (Bk. 28, L. ed. 1027); Roome v. Phillips, 24 N. Y. 463; Bromfield v. Crowder, 4 Bos. & Pul. 313; Doe v. Moore, 14 East, 600.

Nor do the authorities, Mergenthaler's App. 15 W. N. C. 441, or Dunwoodie v. Reed, 3 Serg. & R. 315, cited on the argument in the court below, in the least qualify this rule when critically examined.

The cases of Roberts' App. 59 Pa. 72; Gülliland v. Bredin, 63 Pa. 893; Provenchere's App. 67 Pa. 466, concern legacies and not devises; and as to the difference see Kinsey v. Lardiner, 15 Serg. & R. 195.

The argument used by Lord Mansfield in Goodtitle v. Whitby, supra, is strikingly applicable here. Suppose the devisee had married and died before he arrived at twenty-one, leaving a son, it will not be pretended that testator meant to disinherit that son.

The estate of the devisee in this case was to him and to his heirs and assigns forever. It was an absolute, indefeasible estate. There are not only words of inheritance, but also the word "assigns," granting full power of alienation. Whether it is a vested equitable remainder or a vested remainder in fee makes no difference. The testator has used technical words having a known legal import, and these in expressing his primary or paramount general intent to devise an indefeasible estate, and the secondary or minor intent to limit this estate by a devise over gives way.

Doebler's App. 64 Pa. 14; Karker's App. 60 Pa. 141; McCarthy v. Dawson, 1 Whart. 4; Williams v. Leech, 28 Pa. 89; Doe v. Consioline, 6 Wall. 458 (73 U. S. bk. 18, L. ed. 869).

Messrs. Brown & Stone, Johnson, Lindsey & Parmlee, Wetmore, Noyes & Hinckley and H. McSweeney, for defendants in error:

Is the interest of the plaintiff's ward vested or contingent? If the latter, this suit cannot be maintained.

Washb. Real Prop. 4th ed. 120.

1 Fearne, Rem. p. 3, defines a contingent remainder as "A remainder limited so as to depend on an event or condition which may never happen or be performed, or which may not happen or be performed till after the determination of the preceding estate."

At page 4 he distinguishes four classes: 1. Where the remainder depends entirely on a contingent determination of the preceding estate. 2. Where the contingency on which the remainder is to take effect is independent of the determination of the preceding estate. 3. Where the condition upon which the remainder is limited is certain in event, but the determination of the particular estate may happen before it. 4. Where the person to whom the remainder is limited is not yet ascertained or not yet in being.

Lord Chief Justice Willes, in Parkhurst v. Smith, Willes, 327, declared there were but two sorts: 1, where the person to whom the remainder was limited was not in esse; 2, where the commencement of the remainder depended on some matter collateral to the determination of the particular estate.

Chancellor Kent, in Volume 4, 207, adopts Fearne's definitions and in note A gives the definition as contained in the New York Revised Statutes, Vol. 1, 723, § 13. A remainder is contingent, while the person to whom or the event upon which it is limited to take effect, remains uncertain.

Smith on Executory Interests (2 Fearne, 189), gives an example which is precisely the case of the one under consideration. He says: "But when the attainment of a certain age forms part of the original description of a devise or legatee, the vesting is suspended till the attainment of that age, even though limitation is only to take effect in case of his death under that age without issue."

So at page 142, where the devise or bequest is to a person when or as soon as he shall attain a given age, or at or upon, or from and after, his attaining such age, the interest will be contingent until he attains the age specified. The present capacity of taking effect in possession, if the possession will need to become vacant, universally distinguishes a vested from a contingent remainder.

2 Washb. Real Prop. 228; 1 Fearne, 216, 217.

There must be no further intervening circumstances, in the nature of a condition precedent, which is to happen before such person can take.

The event may either never happen, or it may not happen until after the particular estate upon which it depended shall have determined, so that the estate in remainder will never take effect.

Washb. Real Prop. 224.

There is no uncertainty about the termination of the life estate in this case; that event will certainly happen, but it may never happen that the plaintiff will reach the age of twenty-one years. If that event never happens, then neither at the revoking of the will nor at this time is the person that is to take ascertained. The plaintiff, when the testator penned his will, was not in esse; and of course the taker in remainder was not then ascertained, nor is he ascertained now, because of the condition precedent which may never happen.

Mergenthaler's App. 15 W. N. C. 441; Dunwoodie v. Reed, 3 Serg. & R. 435; Abbott v. Jenkins, 10 Serg. & R. 296; McBride v. Smyth, 54 Pa. 245. See also Buzby's App. 61 Pa. 111; Fairfax's App. 13 W. N. C. 274; 2 Fearne, Sm. ed. 179.

In all the cases cited by the counsel for the appellant, this distinguishing characteristic exists—that there is no devise over.

Another distinguishing feature is an intermediate disposition of the estate, between the determination of the precedent estate and the time when the devisee attains the requisite age to entitle him to the enjoyment of the estate in remainder. If there be no intermediate disposition of the estate the estate so devised is not vested, but contingent.

4 Kent, Com. 206.

Mr. John G. Hall, for other defendants in error:

The question to be determined is, 'What intention does the testator express in the words: "in all which devises above named * * * it is my meaning and intention that if a son, he shall take the same when he arrives at the age of twenty-one years; and if he dies before that age, the devise passes to the son of my next daughter," and so on.

If this language related to the personal property only, there would be little doubt that the gift would be contingent, in the absence of anything in the interest showing a contrary intention. This seems to be well settled.

See 1 Jarm. Wills, 4th Am. ed. chap. XXVI, pp. 760-767 inclusive. Also Provencher's App. 67 Pa. 466.

In a note to 1 Jarm. Wills, supra, p. 760, to which numerous authorities are cited, the rule is expressed thus:

"If the words 'payable' or 'to be paid' are omitted, and the legacy is given at twenty-one, or if, when, in case, or provided, the legatee attains twenty-one, or any other future definite period, this confers on him a contingent interest, which depends for its vesting, and its transmissibility to his executors or representatives, * * * on his being alive at the period specified."

"It is quite clear that a devise to A, if or when he shall attain the age of twenty-one years, standing isolated and detached from the context, would confer a contingent interest only."

1 Jarm. Wills, 4th Am. ed. chap. XXVI, p. 784.

This doctrine is repeated by the learned author at page 788, thus: "There is no doubt that a devise to a person, if he shall live to attain a particular age, standing alone, would be contingent."

The same doctrine is quite as strongly expressed in Smith, Executory Interests, § 285, p. 142. This author finds that a distinction exists "between devises of real estate and legacies, where, instead of the words 'when,' 'at,' 'upon,' 'from and after,' the words 'if,' 'in case,' 'provided,' are used;" Id. § 290, p. 144; and that the former words more strongly indicate a contingent interest than the latter. The latter words import a condition, but may apply to a condition either precedent or subsequent. "Yet the words 'if,' and 'in case,' are not so directly and necessarily suspensive, in their import and operation, as the words 'when,' 'at,' 'upon,' 'as soon as,' 'from and after,' which are necessarily suspensive."

Id. § 300, p. 146.

Conceding that the courts have been and are disposed to construe a devise as vested rather than as contingent, we next inquire what provisions of the context have been regarded as sufficient to overcome the contingent character prima facie fixed upon the devise by the provision that the devisee shall take "when he arrives at the age of twenty-one years." They may be classed as follows:

1. The form of words in which the precedent particular estate is defined.

2. Whether or not there is a devise over on failure of the death of the devisee before attaining twenty-one.

3. Whether there is any provision for the devisee out of the rents issues and profits during his minority.

4. A fourth class would embrace all other cases where expressions or provisions of the particular will were supposed to have shown a different intention of the testator.

1. As examples of the first class Mr. Jarman in his work on Wills gives two cases. One is Boraston's Case, cited by plaintiff's counsel, in 1 Jarm. Wills, chap. XXVI, p. *805. There "A testator devised land to A and B for eight years, and after the said term, the land to remain to his executors, for the performance of his will, till such time as H should come to his age of twenty-one, then to him, his heirs and assigns forever. * * * The court held it to be vested immediately, the case being, it was said, nothing else in effect than a devise to the executors, till H attained the age of twenty-one, remainder to H in fee."

It is worthy of notice that in this case the devise appeared to be vested, not only because of the limitation on the previous particular estate but also because, there being no devise over, the devisee, his heirs and assigns seemed to be the ultimate beneficiaries of testator's bounty.

The other case is Doe v. Ewart, Id. p. *806 (7 Adol. and Ell. 636), "where a testator devised his real estate to trustees, upon trust for his wife during widowhood, and after her decease or marriage again, upon trust to apply the rents towards the maintenance of his daughter, until she should attain the age of twenty-five years, and from and after her attaining that age, then upon trust for his said daughter, her heirs and assigns forever; but in case his said daughter should depart this life without leaving issue, then the testator devised the real estate over."

In this case in addition to the form of the expression "until she should attain" etc., we find provision made for the daughter during her minority and a devise over in case of her death "without leaving issue."

The case of Doe v. Moore, 14 East, 600, cited by plaintiff's counsel, does hold that the devise over upon failure of the prior devisee to reach the age of twenty justified the court in treating the prior devise as vested.

This ruling was followed in Randoll v. Doe, 5 Dow, 202. In reference to these cases the attention of the court is respectfully requested to the criticism upon them to be found in Smith, Executory Interests, § 357, p. 169. The learned author says: "It is perfectly clear, upon principle, and firmly established by authority, that the expressions used in these cases of Doe v. Moore and Randoll v. Doe, would have amounted to conditions precedent, suspending the vesting, if there had been no devise over. Was then a devise over simply in the event of the prior devisee dying before twenty-one, sufficient entirely to alter the effect of the preceding words? Quite the reverse."

The learned author proceeds to argue that such a devise over, on the contrary, affords a presumption that the devise is contingent, certainly no ground for supposing it to be vested. This reasoning is the view taken by our own courts.

Robert's App. 59 Pa. 72; Colt v. Hubbard, 83 Conn. 286; Gilliland v. Bredin, 63 Pa. 398.

Messrs. W. G. Trunkay and Wilbur & Schnur, also for defendants in error.

Mr. Justice Trunkay delivered the opinion of the court:

Cobham Park is the subject of ten devises, the first, contingent on the birth and living to a certain age of a son of Georgena Catherine Cobham, and each of the others on the failure of the preceding devise or devises, and of the being of a person therein described. In the same paragraph the testator declares:

"In all which devises above named to the sons of my before named daughters and son Henry, and to my said nephew and niece, it is my meaning and intention that if a son, he shall take the same when he arrives at the age of twenty-one years; and if he dies before that age, the devise passes to the son of the next daughter, and so on as before specified. And if a daughter, upon trust that my said trustees shall have the same settled upon such daughter of any of my before named daughters, or of the said Henry Cobham, or of my said niece, who may become entitled thereto by a settlement on her marriage, so that she cannot be deprived of the same, and to her heirs and assigns."

By the terms of the will when the devisee becomes entitled to take at all, he takes the fee. He shall not possess the property or enjoy the rents and income until after the decease of the testator's son and daughters to whom is given the use and income for life. If they die before he arrives at the age of twenty-one years, he shall neither possess the property, nor enjoy the income, until after that age. Should he die before that age, the devise shall pass to another person.

Plainly, the devise operates in favor of a described person, his heirs and assigns. It is equally plain that no son of any of the testator's daughters can possess or enjoy the property in his minority; nor could the estate descend to the heirs of a son who should die before his majority, and it is immaterial whether he were married and left children surviving.

How can the meaning of the testator be doubtful? The property is devised to a person in fee when he is twenty-one years of age; and no person under that age, although answering the description in all other respects, can take anything; and no person can take through or under him.

It is apparent that the testator employed apt words to express his intention. While not of great importance, it is noticeable that in the clause declaring his intention "in all which devises," he refers to the giving, not to the property devised. The devisors' acts of giving are numerous; the property given is the same in each. He means that a son shall take the devise "when he arrives at the age of twenty-one years, and if he dies before that age, the devise passes to the son" of his next daughter.

Devises are governed by the intention of the testator. Kerlin's Lease v. Bull, 1 Dall. 177 [1 U. S. bk. 1, L. ed. 89].

His intention is to be ascertained from his words in the will; and the circumstances may aid in determining their meaning. At the date of this will or of the testator's death, no living person was the object of the devise in fee of Cobham Park. He had no special affection or personal regard for the unborn son or daughter of one of ten persons who might answer the description and take the estate. The first object of his bounty is a son of his oldest daughter who shall have lived a certain number of years. Expressly, if the son dies before the end of that time, the devise passes to the next person designated, and so on until it reaches the oldest son or daughter of his niece, who, at any age, may take the estate in fee.

Instead of devising Cobham Park to a grandson, if one should be born, to take possession at a certain age if the life estate should be then ended, he devised to such grandson when he arrives at that age; and if there be no grandchild as described, the devise passes to a child of his niece. This indicates an intention that the devise should be contingent on the son arriving at the age designated.

The query of Lord Mansfield in Goodtitle v. Whitby, namely: "If the object of the testator's bounty, having married, dies before his age of twenty-one, leaving children, could the testator in such event intend to disinherit him?" has no point where the testator, in case of death before that age, in plain terms devises the land to another person.

That the fee vests in a grandson when he arrives at the age of twenty-one years, although the life estate in the children may not have ended, and he can have no enjoyment during the existence of such life estate, by the very words of the will, indicates an intention that the remainder should not vest before.

"It is a well known rule that a limitation shall, if possible, be construed to be a remainder rather than an executory devise." And the counsel of the respective parties have treated this devise as creating a remainder.

The law favors the vesting of estates; and where there is doubt as to the point of time at which it was intended the estate should vest, the earliest will be taken. Where a testator creates a particular estate, and disposes of the ulterior interest, especially in an event which will determine the prior estate, the words descriptive of such event, occurring in the later devise, will be construed as referring merely to the period of the determination of the possession or enjoyment under the prior gift. This was the controlling principle in Kerlin's Lease v. Bull, supra, and in a number of other cases cited at the argument.

In some instances words seemingly creative of a future interest have been construed as referring to futurity of possession, occasioned by the carrying out of a prior interest, and as pointing to the determination of that interest, when the terms import contingency, and would, unconnected with and unexplained by the prior gift, clearly postpone the vesting. 1 Jarm. Wills, 805.

Boraston's Case, 8 Coke, 19, is cited as a leading authority for this construction. In that case and others following in its wake the construction was deemed in accord with the testator's intention, evidenced by the prior gift. By all authority "a devise to A, if or when he shall attain the age of twenty-one years, standing isolated and detached from the context, would confer a contingent interest only." When the context fails to explain the words creative of a future interest as referring to futurity of possession, the devise must be construed as if isolated.

The recent case of McArthur v. Scott, 118 U. S. 340 [Bk. 28, L. ed. 1015], is unlike the present. In that case the whole will was considered, in order to ascertain the intention of the testator. It is said that the terms in which the testator expressed his intention point to a vesting of the remainder, some of which are referred to; among them, the provision that any mortgage, or pledge, or assignment by any grandchild, shall be void. There was no need of this provision, unless the estate were vested. Moreover, the case came within the settled rule that "Where a remainder is so limited as to take effect in possession, if ever, immediately upon the determination of the particular estate, which estate is to determine by an event that must unavoidably happen by the efflux of time, the remainder vests in interest as soon as the remainderman is in esse and ascertained; provided nothing but his own death before the determination of the particular estate will prevent such remainder from vesting in possession."

This plaintiff does not come within the operation of that rule. Were the life tenants all dead he could not take possession. The remainder is not limited to take effect immediately on the death of the testator's children. It is limited to take effect after their decease, and in favor of a person when he attains a given age. Should he die before arriving at that age, no person claiming under him, by descent or otherwise, would have right of possession or property.

Although the plaintiff's ward is the person who will be entitled to the property if he lives long enough, the devise passes to him when he arrives at the age of twenty-one years. The particular age is made a constituent part of the description of the object of the devise, and the remainder cannot vest before. The person is not ascertained before the given age.

The present capacity of taking possession, if the possession were to become vacant, distinguishes a vested remainder from one that is contingent. Wherever the remainder is limited to a person not in esse or not ascertained, or wherever it is limited so as to require the concurrence of some dubious, uncertain event, independent of the determination of the preceding estate and duration of the estate limited in remainder, to give it a capacity of taking effect, the remainder is contingent. Fearne, Rem. 216, 217.

Having no vested interest the plaintiff has no right of action. Therefore it would be out of place to attempt to dispose of the other points suggested in the assignments of error.

Judgment affirmed.

Elizabeth SAGER, Guardian, Plff. in Err.,
v.

Henry COBHAM et al.

(Decided October 4, 1886.)

Mr. Justice Trunkey delivered the opinion of the court:

For the reasons in the opinion in the case of Sager v. Gallowsay, No. 35, July Term, 1885 [preceding case], the assignments of error cannot be sustained.

Judgment affirmed.

Richard S. HUMPHREY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

John IRVIN et al.

1. In an action for damages for a continuing nuisance (here, the interference with the natural flow of water by the maintenance of a dam), plaintiff may, under the Act of May 2, 1876 (P. L. 95), permitting the recovery of damages up to the day of trial, give in evidence the condition of the obstruction up to the day of trial, including all additions, changes and repairs made after suit brought.
2. If the dam or obstructions maintained by defendants caused back water on plaintiff's land in any degree in the ordinary stages of water or freshets which are to be anticipated, then such dam or obstructions would be illegal, and plaintiff would also be entitled to recover such damages as arose from such dam or obstructions in extraordinary freshets.

(Decided October 4, 1886.)

ERROR to the Common Pleas of Clearfield County, to review a judgment on a verdict for defendants in an action of trespass on the case to recover damages for injuries caused by a mill dam. Reversed.

On July 30, 1881, this suit was brought by R. S. Humphrey against defendants, to recover damages for the backing of water on plaintiff's land. The declaration in the usual form claims both general and special damages. The plea was "Not guilty."

July 28, 1884, defendants were duly notified by plaintiff that he proposed to claim damages up to the trial of the suit. September 23, 1884, the trial came on, and September 27, 1884, a verdict was rendered for the defendants. January 24, 1885, judgment was entered on the verdict.

Plaintiff then took this writ, assigning for error various rulings of the court in the course of the trial, as well as the instructions to the jury contained in the charge and in answer to the plaintiff's points, as follows:

1. The court erred in overruling plaintiff's offer "to show, by the witness on the stand and by other witnesses, that (between the time the suit was brought and the present time) the piers and the dam and the other obstructions in the stream were increased in size and height and strength, by the defendants, whereby the amount of back water was increased, and the damage to the plaintiff was increased, for which he claims to recover in this suit."

2. The court erred in saying to the jury as follows:

"The character of this action is such that to entitle the plaintiff to recover in a case of this kind he must satisfy you, first, that he has sustained injury; then he must next satisfy you that the injury was caused by the unlawful acts of the defendants, and that the injury is the direct result of these unlawful acts."

3. The court erred in charging the jury as follows:

"You will remember that when the plaintiff Humphrey was on the witness stand, he said he did not claim damage for any back water; that the water did not do injury, but that it was the ice floods that did the damage of which he complained in this case."

4. The court erred in charging the jury as follows:

"If the injury to plaintiff was caused by the ice gorging in the natural obstructions in the river, then the plaintiff is not entitled to recover from the defendants in this case, because the defendants are not responsible for the shape of the river, its sharp bends, its narrowness, or its being straight or crooked."

5. The court erred in saying to the jury as follows:

"If this injury complained of by the plaintiff really comes from any other cause than the wrongful acts of the defendants, then the plaintiff is not entitled to recover in this action, because these defendants can only be held responsible for their own acts and for none other."

6. The court erred in charging the jury as follows:

"If you should be of opinion in this case that the ice gorges and this damage were caused by the natural obstructions, the curvature of the banks and the narrowness of the stream at those points, but that, incidentally or remotely, the water coming over this dam would have had something to do with it (that is, with making the jam), then the plaintiff would not be entitled to recover."

7. The court erred in further saying to the jury in connection with what is just quoted:

"If the plaintiff has suffered damage by reason of the wrongful acts of the defendants, then he is entitled to recover in this case; but if he suffered his damage from any other cause, then he is not entitled to recover."

8. The court erred in saying to the jury as follows:

"Now you will remember that he (plaintiff) called no witness to the stand, as I remember, who had worked upon the dam or taken any measurement. They testified that from their observation the dam had been raised over a certain height; that from the appearance of the dam they considered it higher. This, together with the backing of the water farther up the stream, he claims to be sufficient to show that the dam has been raised."

9. The court erred in saying to the jury as follows:

"One of the witnesses, I think it was the engineer for the plaintiff (Mr. Butts), testified that when three feet of water was flowing over the breast of the dam, it would be drowned out, it would have no effect on the stream; when the floods were high enough to flow over the breast of the dam, then it would be drowned out."

10. The court erred in refusing to affirm plaintiff's third point. Said point was as follows:

"If said dam or obstructions which were maintained by the defendants caused back water on plaintiff's land, in any degree, in the ordinary stages of water or freshets which are to be anticipated, then such dam or obstructions would be illegal, and plaintiff would also be entitled to recover from defendants such damages as arose from said dam or obstructions in the extraordinary freshets that sometimes occur."

The court answered as follows: "That point is refused. I do not think that is the law."

11. The charge as a whole was erroneous and calculated to mislead the jury, to the prejudice of the plaintiff.

12. The court erred in refusing to allow plaintiff to examine John Irvine on the subject of the repairs made to the dam after the suit was brought and before the time of trial.

13. The court erred in saying to the jury as follows:

"You will also notice that the injury complained of is the overflowing of the land by the ice, and that the ice comes down stream. It is something coming down from above the plaintiff's land, not from below where the defendant's dam is. Of course the ice is not manufactured by the defendants; neither is the water flood produced there by the defendants."

Messrs. McEnally & McCurdy, for plaintiff in error:

The object of the Act May 2, 1876 (Purd. p. 2002), was to avoid a multiplicity of suits by giving the plaintiff a right to recover damages up to the day of trial.

Under that Act, the cause of action in this case, at the time of trial, was the backing of water by defendants on the land of plaintiff from July 30, 1875, to the day of trial, by means of a dam and other obstructions as they were maintained in the stream by the defendants during that period of time.

The plaintiff, therefore, was entitled to give in evidence the condition of said dam and obstructions during that whole period of time, including all such additions, changes and repairs as were made by the defendants. In any view of the case, these things were material and important in ascertaining the amount of damages which plaintiff might be entitled to recover.

Bisbing v. Third Nat. Bank, 93 Pa. 79.

Plaintiff relies upon the following authorities to support this action for damages:

1 Suth. Dam. pp. 9, 10, 47, 61; 1 Rawle, 27, 28, 29; 2 Rawle, 83; 4 Rawle, 10; 9 Watts, 119, 120, 121; 7 W. & S. 9; 55 Pa. 419; Act May 2, 1876, Purd. p. 2002; Bright. Dig. 837, pl. 379, 381.

This court will reverse the judgment for error in the charge of the court below.

3 Bright. Dig. 3215, pl. 63, 64; 68 Pa. 272; 95 Pa. 376.

Messrs. Orvis & Snyder, for defendants in error:

The plaintiff had a right to recover damages, if he was entitled to recover at all, from July 30, 1875 (being six years before the bringing of this suit), up to the time of trial for the cause of action existing at the time of the bringing of this suit. But he could not, under the Act of 1876, introduce a new cause of action.

Mr. Justice Sterrett delivered the opinion of the court:

This action on the case was brought against the widow and heirs of John Irvin, deceased, defendants in error, to recover damages for injuries alleged to have been done to plaintiff's land by their mill dam.

In the declaration it is averred that on July 30, 1875, and between that time and the bringing of this suit, the defendants wrongfully, injuriously and unlawfully made, kept and continued, and caused to be made, kept and continued, a dam of great length, width, etc., across the river at a point about three miles below plaintiff's land, more or less, by the course of said river, and by reason of said dam, so made, kept and continued by defendants, the water of said stream during the time aforesaid was raised at divers times to a great height, viz.: the height of ten feet upon plaintiff's said land, above what the waters of said stream would have been if left to flow freely in its natural channel, free from such artificial obstructions; whereby a large quantity of plaintiff's land was overflowed, washed and greatly damaged, and the fences and other improvements partly washed away, and in other respects greatly injured and destroyed, the rafting ground of plaintiff on said land greatly damaged, interfered with and depreciated in value, and said plaintiff's business of farming, lumbering, etc., so interfered with and injured that plaintiff was deprived of great profits, and subjected to large outlays, expenses, etc.

The injuries thus complained of being in the nature of a continuing nuisance, plaintiff gave the requisite notice and under the Act of May 2, 1876, P. L. 95, claimed the right to prove and recover damages for maintenance of the alleged unlawful structure. He accordingly made the offer, the rejection of which forms the subject of complaint in the first specification.

When we consider the old law, the mischief and the remedy, it is very evident that the object of the Act last referred to was to avoid multiplicity of suits, by giving the plaintiff in this class of cases the right to recover damages up to the day of trial.

Formerly damages of the kind complained of, suffered between the imputation of the writ and time of trial, could only be recovered in a second suit. This was considered a defect in the law which the Act was intended to remedy. It is a mistake to suppose the offer was to prove a new cause of action not existing when suit was brought. The cause of action then was, and still is, an unlawful interference with the natural flow of the water through plaintiff's land, by means of a dam, theretofore maintained by the defendants.

The offer was to prove that after suit brought they persisted in continuing, increasing and strengthening the obstruction which constituted the alleged nuisance. We think, therefore, the plaintiff was entitled to give in evidence the condition of the dam and obstructions during the whole period of time, including all such additions, changes and repairs as were made by defendants.

It has also been suggested that if there was technical error in excluding the offer, plaintiff was not thereby prejudiced, because the result of the trial shows he had no cause of action at the time suit was brought, and he cannot be permitted to recover for a subsequently accruing cause of action. This position is more plausible than sound. It is predicated on the assumption that there was no error, in the course of the trial, which may have prevented recovery for a good cause of action existing when suit was brought. At least one such error, we think, was committed by the refusal of the court to affirm plaintiff's third point. In that point the learned judge was requested to charge:

"If said dam or obstructions maintained by defendants caused back water on plaintiff's land in any degree in the ordinary stages of water or freshets which are to be anticipated, then such dam or obstructions would be illegal, and plaintiff would also be entitled to recover from defendants such damages as arose from such dam or obstructions in the extraordinary freshets that sometimes occur."

As applicable to the facts of the case this is a correct statement of the law, and the proposition should have been affirmed.

In Pastorius v. Fisher, 1 Rawle, 27, it is said: "In an action for overflowing plaintiff's land by the erection of a dam on defendant's land, in which the nature and extent of the alleged injury are specially described in the declaration, the plaintiff is entitled to a verdict for nominal damages, though he fail to prove the particular injury complained of or any other actual injury."

In delivering the opinion of the court in that case, Gibson, Ch. J., says: "The law implies damages from flooding the ground of another, though it be in the least possible degree and without actual prejudice. * * * But where the law implies the injury it also implies the lowest damages, except in cases of personal injury, where damages are given, not to compensate but to punish. Here, however, it is said the plaintiff undertook to prove special damage and therefore staked his case on the event. But surely an attempt to prove an injury beyond what the law implies is not necessarily a relinquishment of damages for every thing short of the whole case. Where the plaintiff goes for special damage, he must lay it, else he should not give evidence of it. But the converse of the rule does not hold: that having laid it he must prove it or fail altogether. It would be neither reasonable nor just to compel him to elect between real and nominal damages, or to refuse compensation as far as substantial cause of action has been proved. The action may be brought to try the right, and the verdict, being conclusive, would stand in the way of a recovery for a substantial injury, if any were suffered afterwards."

In Casebeer v. Mowry, 55 Pa. 419, the same principle is thus stated: "One man cannot with impunity invade the premises of another by a nuisance, because the damage may be inappreciable. The law allows the recovery of nominal damages, at least, as evidence of plaintiff's right."

In support of plaintiff's proposition other cases may be cited, among which are: Alexander v. Kerr, 2 Rawle, 88; Lehigh Bridge Co. v. Lehigh Coal & Nav. Co. 4 Rawle, 10; Bell v. McClintock, 9 Watts, 119.

The last two cases are authority for the position that where the loss happens exclusively from an act of Providence the defendant is not liable; but where his negligence or fault concurs with the act of Providence, he is answerable for damages.

It follows from what has been said that the first and tenth specifications of error are sustained; and so far as the remaining specifications are involved in either of these errors they are also sustained.

The remarks of the learned judge complained of in the third, ninth and thirteenth specifications were calculated to create an erroneous impression in the minds of the jury; but standing alone they would not warrant reversal of the judgment.

Judgment reversed and a venire facias de novo awarded.

Jacob RIFE, Plff. in Err.,
v.

LEBANON MUTUAL INS. CO. of Jones-town.

1. Actual knowledge on the part of the owner of insured premises, that the neighboring construction of a railroad will increase the risk, must be proved in order to charge him with the duty to give the insurance company notice under the following condition in the policy:

"If, during the insurance, any alterations be made on the premises, buildings be erected, or change made in the use or occupation of the same or neighboring premises, or otherwise, whereby the risk or hazard is increased so as to increase the rate of insurance, it shall be the duty of the insured to give notice thereof to the secretary, pay the additional premium and obtain the consent of the company thereto in writing; otherwise the insured shall not be entitled to recover for any loss or damage by fire originating in consequence of such change; provided, that in case of any alteration and consequent increase of risk, the company may, at their option, terminate the insurance, after notice given to the insured or his representative, of their intention to do so."

2. In an action of covenant against the insurance company on the policy, for a loss originating from sparks of a locomotive passing on the railroad, it is error to submit to the jury a question whether or not according to their judgment, under the evidence, the risk was so increased as to increase the rate. The question should be whether from all the facts in the case the plaintiff knew that it was so increased. (Lebanon Mut. Ins. Co. v. Losch, 42 Legal Int. 416, followed.)

(Decided October 4, 1884.)

ERROR to the Common Pleas of Dauphin County, to review a judgment on a verdict for the defendant in an action of covenant. Reversed.

384

The facts and the substance of those portions of the charge of the court below which were assigned as error are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. H. M. Graydon and B. F. Etter, for plaintiff in error:

This case is ruled by Lebanon Mutual Ins. Co. v. Losch, 42 Legal Int. 416.

Messrs. Mumma & Shopp, for defendant in error:

The case of Lebanon Mutual Ins. Co. v. Losch, relied on by the plaintiff in error, is inapplicable. There the property insured was a hazardous risk, paying high rates of insurance. The change complained of consisted in the erection of a building, a coach maker's shop, fifty feet from it on an adjoining lot, which could only endanger the insured premises by taking fire; and it would be only a remote possibility that the insured premises would take fire from it and burn down.

The ordinary risk of fire necessarily incident to the proper and lawful use of the railroad is to be taken into consideration in estimating the market value of the property, and consequently, the damages sustained.

Where a railroad has been run through a farm, and within a few feet of the dwelling-house, the risk of accidental fire is to be considered by the jury in assessing the damages to the premises.

Settler v. R. R. Co. 17 W. N. C. 301; S. C. 112 Pa. 56; 2 Cent. Rep. 357.

Mr. Justice Clark delivered the opinion of the court:

This action of covenant is upon a perpetual policy of fire insurance, issued by the defendant, April 8, 1871, to the plaintiff, in the sum of $2,400; $1,000 thereof upon his dwelling house, $1,000 upon the barn, and $400 on the corn house. The premiums and assessments had all been promptly paid, and due notice and proofs of loss were given as required by the policy.

Among the printed conditions of the insurance set forth in the policy was the following:

9. "If, during the insurance, any alterations be made on the premises, buildings be erected, or change made in the use or occupation of the same or neighboring premises, or otherwise, whereby the risk or hazard is increased, so as to increase the rate of insurance, it shall be the duty of the insured to give notice thereof to the secretary, pay the additional premium and obtain the consent of the Company thereto in writing; otherwise the insured shall not be entitled to recover for any loss or damage by fire originating in consequence of such change; provided that in case of any alteration and consequent increase of risk, the Company may, at their option, terminate the insurance, after notice, given to the insured or his representative, of their intention to do so."

In the year 1881, Michael Schall, who was the owner and operator of a furnace property on the adjoining land, by the order of the Court of Common Pleas of Dauphin County, under Act of May 5, 1882, constructed a lateral railroad to connect his furnace with the Pennsylvania Railroad, and locomotive engines and cars were placed thereon and used in transporting coal, ore and iron, between the points named, a distance of about 500 yards. This lateral railroad ran within about twelve feet of the corner of the corn house, and the jury has found that the fire, which originated in the corn house, was caused by sparks from the locomotive engines.

The question in the cause arises upon the proper construction of the ninth condition of the policy above quoted. The court submitted to the jury the following questions of fact: first, whether, by the construction of the lateral road, the rate or hazard was increased; and second, if so, Was it increased so as to increase the rate of insurance? and third, Did the fire originate from or in consequence of the change in the occupancy of the neighboring premises?

All of these inquiries were settled in the affirmative, and the verdict, under the instructions of the court, was necessarily for the defendant.

It must be conceded, we think, that the plaintiff was bound only to give notice to the Company of any change of which he had knowledge, and by which he knew the rate of insurance would be increased. He was certainly not obliged to give notice of a change in the use or occupancy of his own or the neighboring premises which, in the fair exercise of his own knowledge and judgment, he believed would not increase the hazard or the rate of insurance; this would be absurd. There may be cases, of course, on which the increase of risk is so palpable and plain that the knowledge of the insured must necessarily be inferred; this inference may be drawn from evidence direct or circumstantial, as in other cases.

But the proper question for the consideration of the jurors was, not as the learned judge of the court below seemed to suppose, whether or not, according to their judgment, under the evidence, the risk was so increased as to increase the rate, but whether from all the facts in the case the plaintiff knew that it was so increased. If he did, he was bound by the express terms of his contract to give notice of the fact to the Company; if he did not, he was not.

The exact question in this case was considered and decided in Lebanon Mut. Ins. Co. v. Losch, 42 Legal Int. 410, where our brother Paxson, in his construction of a policy containing the same clause, says: "Had the conditions of insurance required the insured to give notice to the company of any change in the surroundings, it would have been his duty to give notice of the erection of the carriage factory. Such, however, was not the condition. The notice was only required in case the change was such as to increase the risk or hazard so as to increase the rate of insurance."

"Under this clause it is manifest that the insured must be shown to have knowledge that the building would not only increase the risk, but that it would also enhance the rate of insurance. The conditions of the policy must be construed most strongly against the Company. We are not to assume when the plaintiff below seeks to recover on his policies, for what at least appears to be an honest loss, that he knew the factory building would increase the risk to such an extent as to increase the rate of insurance. There was nothing upon the face of his policy, or in the conditions attached, had he carefully read every word of both, which could have given him this information. It was a fact which must be found outside this policy. There was not a word of evidence to show that the insured knew that the carriage factory would increase the risk to the extent specified in the policy, nor indeed to any extent."

The judgment is reversed and a venire facias de novo awarded.

Hiram F. ANDREWS, Plff. in Err.,
v.

W. A. WADE et ux.

1. In a deed of land a reservation of "all the pine and hemlock timber growing on said land" applies only to living trees of suitable size for use at the date of the deed.
2. A right to cut and remove timber growing on the land of another must be exercised within a reasonable time or it will be presumed to have been forfeited.
3. Where one having a lien on goods sets up a claim hostile to the owner's title and wrongfully sells the goods, he can not set up the lien as a bar to the owner's recovery, in an action of trover, for his illegal act.

(Decided October 4, 1886.)

ERROR to the Common pleas of Warren County, to review a judgment on a verdict for the plaintiffs in an action of trover. Affirmed.

This was an action of trover by W. A. Wade and Ella A., his wife, in the right of the wife, against Hiram F. Andrews for a lot of lumber. The defendant pleaded not guilty.

At the trial before TAYLOR, P. J., the following facts appeared:

In March, 1865, L. D. Wetmore conveyed to Amos R. Ross a tract of land, reserving "all the pine and hemlock timber growing on said land." The plaintiff Ella A. Wade succeeded to Ross' title. In 1877 she took pine logs cut from the land to the defendant to be sawed at his mill.

Before the logs were sawed the defendant received notice from the Great National Petroleum Company forbidding him to deliver the logs or lumber to the plaintiff. The company claimed the logs under a deed of the timber on the tract from Wetmore to its grantor in May, 1865. Between that date and the transfer of Ross' title to the plaintiff, the owners of the timber on the tract had cut and removed all the merchantable timber. The logs in question were "second growth."

The defendant sawed the logs and, ignoring the plaintiff's title, bought the lumber from the company. Upon the defendant's refusal to deliver the lumber the plaintiffs brought this suit.

The court charged, inter alia, as follows:

"[Now as to the character of this timber, under the reservation in the deed, we instruct you that the character of the timber trees which were reserved under that clause in the deed was such trees as were at that time fit for mechanical purposes, for commerce or marketing, or for anything that people used timber for, every tree of pine and hemlock that was large enough at the date of that deed to be used for any mechanical purpose, using as a man usually uses timber or lumber made from timber trees.] The word 'growing,' used in this reservation, we will construe as meaning living trees. And by that reservation the owner of the soil would have the right to take any dead trees that were upon the land, under the construction which we give it, while the word 'growing' meant those trees that were living, in our opinion, and the 'timber trees' were such as were at that time fit for use.

"[Whatever trees were not fit, at the date of the deed of Ross, for timber to be used in some way, and afterwards they grew up to become timber trees, and if you find the defendant converted them to his own use, as there is no controversy here about that, that he did convert them, you should find a verdict for the plaintiff for the value of this lumber] at the time when it was demanded, deducting $2.50 per thousand for sawing the same; to which you might add interest from the time of the demand and refusal.

"The burden of proof is upon the plaintiffs to satisfy you that their theory is the correct one. If you find from the evidence that the trees that he cut there were timber trees at the time when this deed was executed, and not such as had grown into trees during the ten or eleven years, your verdict should be for defendant."

The defendant asked the court to charge "That the logs having been hauled by the plaintiff and delivered to the defendant at his mill for the purpose of being sawed into boards, and the defendant having sawed them into boards at his mill, and the boards being in his possession, he had a lien on the boards for the amount of a reasonable compensation for the sawing, and he had a right to retain possession thereof until paid or tendered the compensation for sawing."

To which the court answered: "As an abstract proposition of law, this point is affirmed; but with reference to the evidence in this case, if the jury find from the evidence that at the time demand was made and a refusal to deliver, the defendant had either sold the lumber or claimed that he had bought the same from another and claimed the property as his own, and without making any claim for compensation for sawing, defends upon a claim of title adversely to the plaintiff and derived from another source, the plaintiff might recover without a tender if the other facts in the case would warrant a recovery."

Verdict and judgment were for the plaintiffs; whereupon, the defendant took this writ, assigning as error the portions of the charge inclosed in brackets and the answer to his point.

Mr. R. Brown, for plaintiff in error:

The defendant had a lien on the lumber for the reasonable price for its manufacture as against the plaintiff, and he can retain the lumber until the amount for which he has a lien is paid or tendered.

Pierce v. Sweet, 33 Pa. 151; Mathias v. Sellers, 86 Pa. 487; Hoover v. Epler, 52 Pa. 524; McIntyre v. Carver, 2 Watts & S. 392.

The reservation kept in the grantors such a right in the soil upon which the timber was growing as to constitute them tenants in common with the grantee. They had not only the right to go upon the land to cut and take away the timber proper for the manufacture of boards, but to select such timber and judge of its fitness for the use intended.

Wheeler v. Carpenter, 107 Pa. 275.

All the timber which is growing upon the land is the grantor's until he has notice to take it off. The plaintiff is not entitled to the growth after the date of the reservation. Such as became timber, before the notice, but was too small at the date of the reservation, did not become the property of the owner of the fee by the subsequent growth. Id.

In the charge quoted in the fourth assignment the learned judge stated as a fact what was not proven and about which there was very much controversy touching the conversion, wherein he says: "There is no controversy here about that, that he did convert it," although the instruction was not perhaps technically binding, it misled the jury on the pivotal point in the case. Such has frequently been ground for reversal.

Bisbing v. Bank, 93 Pa. 82; R. R. Co. v. Berry, 68 Pa. 272; Neiman v. Ward, 1 Watts & S. 63.

Messrs. D. I. Ball and C. C. Thompson, for defendant in error:

The defendant's assertion of a title hostile to the title of the plaintiff is inconsistent with a lien in his favor. His lien could only be on her title. And besides, when he converted the property, by such act he parted with his lien.

A lien may be lost by setting up a claim hostile to the title of the owner of the goods.

Paley, Ag. 147, note; Everett v. Coffin, 6 Wend. 608; Holbrook v. Wright, 24 Wend. 169.

If the transferee sell the goods, the owner is remitted to his original rights, freed from the lien, and may bring trover against him.

Davis v. Bigler, 62 Pa. 251; Story, Ag. § 367; Paley, Ag. p. 145, note, citing Nash v. Mosher, 19 Wend. 481. And see Mucky v. Dillinger, 78 Pa. 85.

The party having a right to timber upon the land of another may be required to take it off after a reasonable time.

Boult v. Mitchell, 15 Pa. 364, 371; Saltonstall v. Little, 90 Pa. 422.

This land had all been cut over before Mrs. Wade purchased it. Having once exercised the right of taking off the timber, it is a fair presumption that the party holding the reservation took all that he regarded as coming within the terms of his reservation.

Per Curiam: T. E.

The learned judge gave due effect to the agreement, reserving the pine and hemlock trees growing on the land. It applied to living trees, then of suitable size for use.

A person having a right to cut and remove timber growing on the land of another may be compelled to take it off after a reasonable time, under all the circumstances, or he will be presumed to have relinquished all right thereto. When one having a lien on goods sets up a claim hostile to the rights of the owner and wrongfully sells the entire property, he cannot set up the lien as a bar to an action against him, for his illegal act. We see no error in the charge nor in the answer to the point.

Judgment affirmed.

PENN IRON CO. (Limited), Plff. in Err.,

Franklin DILLER, To Use, etc.

1. In a lease of a foundry, adjoining the lessor's rolling mill in which the boilers were heated over the furnaces, together with yard space, joint use of pattern shop and engine room adjoining, in which were engine and machinery but no boiler, at a fixed rent and for a definite term, a covenant that the lessee "shall pay fifteen cents per hour for the steam furnished to his engine" does not, without more, impose upon the lessor an obligation to furnish steam to the lessee's engine. It is merely a covenant that if the lessor furnishes steam and the lessee uses it, the lessee shall pay for it at the rate of fifteen cents per hour.
2. It would be otherwise, if furnishing steam were a necessary incident to a lease of the premises.
3. The measure of damages for the breach of a particular covenant in a lease is not the value of the lease or any part of it, but the loss actually resulting from the breach.

(Decided October 4, 1886.)

ERROR to the Common Pleas of Lancaster County, to review a judgment for the plaintiff on a verdict in an action of covenant. Reversed.

This was an action of covenant by Franklin Diller to the use of Rosanna Stehman, etc., against the Penn Iron Company (Limited), a partnership association formed under the Act of June 2, 1874, for alleged breaches of covenants contained in a lease. The defendant pleaded covenants performed absque hoc.

At the trial before PATTERSON, J., the following facts appeared:

The defendant had, adjoining its rolling mill, a foundry fitted up for its own use but not actually used. It contained no boiler or engine. The steam for the defendant's own use was furnished by boilers placed over the puddling and heating furnaces, so that if the furnaces were extinguished there was no steam to be had.

With a full knowledge of all these facts, the plaintiff entered into a contract with the Company to lease the foundry, and about the middle of May, 1880, took possession and commenced operations.

About the middle of July, 1880, the contract was reduced to writing, and executed by the parties.

The material portions of the lease were these: "This indenture made the — day of July, A. D., 1880, between the Penn Iron Company (Limited), of Lancaster, Pa., of the one part, and Franklin Diller of the other part, Witnesseth, that the said party of the first part doth by these presents lease and let unto the said party of the second part all that part of the premises of said Company on Plum Street, Lancaster, and the Pennsylvania Railroad, known as the foundry building, space in the yard for necessary stock and materials, the joint use of the pattern shop with the first party hereto, the engine room adjoining the foundry.

"To have and to hold the premises aforesaid unto the lessee from the 15th day of May, 1880, for the term of one year then next ensuing, he yielding and paying for the same unto the said lessor or its assigns, the rent or sum of $500, payable monthly.

"It is further agreed that the second party hereto shall pay fifteen cents per hour for the steam furnished to his engine by the first party hereto, and he shall have the right to use the tools in the pattern shop; but in consideration thereof, the first party hereto shall have the use without charge, of the power of the engine of the second party whenever they shall require it in the pattern shop."

The declaration charged the defendant with breaches of its covenants: 1, by failing to furnish the plaintiff sufficient steam to do the business of the foundry; and 2, by failing to furnish him the use of the tools in the pattern shop and dismantling the shop of shafting, belting and pulleys.

In the course of the plaintiff's testimony his counsel asked him:

"What was the value of that branch of the lease, meaning of course the pattern shop, for the term you were there?"

Objected to, because not a proper question, particularly when the plaintiff himself was a witness. Objection overruled. First assignment of error.

Again, in the examination of a witness for the plaintiff, the plaintiff's counsel asked:

"Have you any idea of the value of the loss of the pattern shop?"

Objected to. Objection overruled. Second assignment of error.

And again, in the examination of another witness for the plaintiff, his counsel asked:

"What was the value of Mr. Diller's lease of the pattern shop, which was the joint use of the pattern shop during the time he was there, for the period of one year and five months; what is the value of that as a lease, in your judgment?"

Objected to. Objection overruled. Third assignment of error.

The defendant's counsel asked a witness for the defendant:

"Could the Company while they were conducting their own business, and had the means of generating steam as has been stated, furnish steam for the price of fifteen cents an hour in any specific quantity, to any other person?"

Objected to. Objection sustained. Fourth assignment of error.

The defendant's counsel offered to show that Mr. Diller understood the situation of the rolling mill, the boilers and the steam, and all about it, and that the Company understood all that; and that, with all these matters in view and with a desire to accommodate Mr. Diller with the use of the foundry, which had been furnished and fixed up a short time before with the intention of renting it, with the desire of having a foundry there, and with the desire of furnishing Mr. Diller an opportunity to try the experiment of running the foundry, this arrangement was made.

Objected to. Objection sustained. Fifth assignment of error.

The defendant's counsel in examining a witness for the defendant asked the following questions:

"Did Mr. Diller ever do any work with the tools in the pattern shop when all the tools were there?"

"Did he ever ask that the tools should be replaced that were removed?"

"Up to what time, when the first tool was removed in November, did Mr. Diller do any work on the tools in the pattern shop?"

These questions were objected to. Objection sustained. Seventh assignment of error.

The defendant's counsel also offered to prove that the plaintiff suffered no damages by reason of any breach of covenant, if there was a breach made by the defendant.

Objected to. Objection sustained. Eighth assignment of error.

The court charged, inter alia, as follows:

"You cannot entertain in your deliberations any other matters pertaining to this contract of lease, or consider any evidence that has been submitted to you, that does not bear on the inquiries: What are the breaches alleged? Have they been proven to your satisfaction? What damages, if any, have been proven that the plaintiff has sustained? What damages in dollars and cents? [For in this action the judgment is damages for all, or any one of the breaches averred in the complaint of the plaintiff, and which the jury do find, from all the evidence in this case, have been proven.] [The first breach alleged is, as you will remember, that the Company did not furnish the necessary amount of steam required for his, the said Diller's, engine, in carrying on his business, the foundry business; and by that means he suffered damages and losses. Is that breach or failure proven? If so, and if damages by reason of that failure have been shown to your satisfaction, you will allow the damages accordingly.]

"I will not recite in detail the testimony of the witnesses, as it has been so fully referred to and discussed by the able counsel of the parties who addressed you. You will give your careful consideration to the testimony in support of this alleged breach by defendant, and of the damages sustained, if any, and render a verdict accordingly. And under the pleadings in this case the performance by the plaintiff is put in issue, and he is bound to make it appear, by proof, to your satisfaction, that he performed his part of the contract in the lease. * * *

"[The other breach alleged is that the Company deprived the plaintiff of the use of the tools, or some of them, in the pattern shop by removing machinery, the shafting and belting, and that he, the plaintiff, thereby suffered loss or damages. Now this alleged breach you will consider distinct from any other, and find and determine if the breach is proven, and will then find and determine if damages in consequence have been shown, and how much if any. The amount of damages is for the jury, under the evidence in the case; it is exclusively for the jury, under the law and the evidence.

"If you should find that the Company has failed to perform its part of the covenant, or failed in any part of the covenant, agreement, but should find at the same time that no material damages, no damages to any extent are proven, yet the plaintiff Diller would be entitled to your verdict for nominal damages; nominal damages are six cents or some small sum.

"The written agreement or covenant contains all the matters arising in this suit, and hence you will carefully consider the same and the evidence submitted in reference thereto by both the parties to this suit. We say the jury will take all the evidence and look on both sides, and from the whole determine whether the plaintiff has shown a breach of the agreement by the Company; and if so, has the plaintiff shown that he suffered damages, and if so, how much?

"Whether the facts alleged by the plaintiff and denied by the Company are confirmed in the proof, we leave to the jury, whose province it is to determine the facts and draw the proper conclusions under the legal instructions given by the court.

"[Now in conclusion, if the jury believe from the evidence, that the breaches charged of a violation of the written agreement have been made out, and if alleged damages to the plaintiff have been proven to your satisfaction—damages resulting from such breaches, then your verdict should be for the plaintiff, Diller, for such damages in dollars and cents; the amount of damages is for the jury].

"If you find and determine, from all the evidence in the case, that no damages have been suffered by the plaintiff, then your verdict should be for the defendant. Simply say: We find for the defendant."

The portions of the charge inclosed in brackets were respectively the subjects of the ninth, tenth, eleventh and twelfth assignments of error.

The thirteenth error assigned was the court's affirmation of the plaintiff's first point, viz.: "The reasonable meaning of the clause in the lease made by the parties, 'that the second party hereto,' Franklin Diller, 'shall pay fifteen cents per hour, for the steam furnished to his engine by the first party hereto' (Penn Iron Company, Limited), is that the steam thus furnished by defendant and paid for by plaintiff at the rate stipulated, was to be in such sufficient quantity, and at such reasonable times, as would enable Mr. Diller to do the work of the foundry up to its ordinary or reasonable capacity."

The fourteenth assignment of error related to the court's refusal of the defendant's first point, viz.: "There is no provision in the agreement between the parties in this suit that binds the defendant to furnish the plaintiff with all the necessary steam required for his engine to carry on his business."

The fifteenth assignment of error was:

"The court erred in answering defendant's second point, viz.: 'The agreement provides that Mr. Diller shall pay to the Company fifteen cents per hour for steam furnished to his engine by the Company. If they furnished Mr. Diller with steam, and he paid them at the rate of fifteen cents per hour, there is no breach by the Company of that part of the agreement,' by saying: 'We affirm this point with this modification, viz.: provided it is to be understood by the paragraph: 'If they furnished Mr. Diller with steam and he paid them for the same at the rate of fifteen cents per hour' it is to be understood, if they, the Company, furnished Mr. Diller sufficient steam for his engine to carry on his business, his foundry business."

The sixteenth error assigned was the court's refusal of the second division of defendant's fourth point: "This clause of the agreement (in reference to use of tools in pattern shop and use of engine) is independent of the general provision thereof; and the only consideration wherein he was to pay for the use of the tools in the pattern shop was his furnishing the Company with engine power. If, therefore, the jury believe that Mr. Diller cut off the steam of the Company's boilers from his engine, and did not furnish engine power to the Company when they required it in the pattern shop, he cannot recover any damages on account of the removal of the tools."

The seventeenth and last assignment of error was this:

"The court erred in answering the defendant's seventh point, viz.: 'There is no evidence on which the plaintiff can recover damages for the loss of the use of the tools in the pattern shop, if he did lose such use—except the one and a half days' work on the Myers contract,' by saying: 'The jury's province is to hear and decide whether there is not evidence on which the plaintiff can recover damages for the loss of the use of the tools in the pattern shop.'"

The jury returned a verdict for $750 in favor of the plaintiff; whereupon, the defendant took this writ and assigned as error the rulings of the court mentioned.

Messrs. D. G. Eshleman and A. J. Steinman, for plaintiff in error:

In all cases the acts of the parties are received to give their common interpretation of ambiguous words.

2 Whart. Ev. § 941.

Covenants, like all other contracts, are to be construed according to the intentions of the parties as nearly as the words will permit; and there is no surer guide to the understanding and intentions of the parties, when words are equivocal, than their acts and declarations under the agreement, called commonly its contemporaneous construction.

Lehigh Coal & Nav. Co. v. Harlan, 27 Pa. 439.

As to the admission of evidence and the instructions of the court in reference to damages for the alleged breach of that part of the agreement which refers to the furnishing of steam and to that part thereof which refers to the use of the tools in the pattern shop; to recover damages for the loss of profits resulting from the breach of a contract, the plaintiff must prove not only that he had been prevented from performing it by default of the defendant, but also that he has sustained actual loss thereby.

Lentz v. Choteau, 42 Pa. 435, 438; McKnight v. Ratcliff, 44 Pa. 156, 169; Haak v. Wise, 2 W. N. C. 689; Sedgw. Dam. 78.

Mr. William R. Wilson, for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Green delivered the opinion of the court:

We are quite unable to agree with the learned court below in the interpretation it gave to the written contract of the parties. There was no PA.

agreement by the defendant to furnish any steam whatever to the plaintiff; and there was no leasing of any property or granting of any privilege which makes it necessary for the law to imply a contract by the defendant to furnish steam enough to the plaintiff to enable him to carry on the work of the foundry up to its ordinary capacity.

The things leased to the plaintiff are: 1, certain premises known as the foundry building; 2, yard space for necessary stock and materials; 3, the joint use of the pattern shop; and 4, the engine room adjoining the foundry. There is certainly nothing here to indicate any obligation by the lessor to furnish any steam to the lessee for any purpose. Ordinarily a foundry building and an engine room contain their own motive power; and if they do not, such an extraordinary omission, if it is intended that the lessor shall supply the power, would be provided for by express terms in the lease. But certainly there is no implication in the mere lease of a foundry building that the lessor shall furnish the steam to run it.

In the lease, next after the subjects of the demise are defined, follows the complete obligation of the lessee to pay the lessor $500 rent for one year, payable monthly. The rent therefore was to be paid as the consideration of the things demised, and these did not include any steam, either expressly or by implication.

Then another term is added to the contract by which it is provided that the lessee "shall pay fifteen cents per hour for the steam furnished to his engine" by the lessor; "and he shall have the right to use the tools in the pattern shop, but in consideration therefor" the lessor "shall have the use, without charge, of the power of the engine" of the lessee whenever they shall require it in the pattern shop.

The plain and obvious meaning of these words is that for whatever steam may be furnished by the lessor to the lessee's engine, the lessee shall pay fifteen cents an hour; but the lessor does not agree to furnish any steam and the lessee does not agree to take any. But if steam is actually furnished to the engine, which means necessarily also if it is used, the lessee agrees that he will pay fifteen cents an hour for it. If the furnishing of steam by the lessor was a necessary incident to his lease of the premises, there would be an implied obligation to furnish it, and the case would be parallel to Watson v. O'Hern, and Koch and Balliet's App. 98 Pa. 484, and the kindred cases. But it is too manifest to require discussion that there is no such implied obligation. This being the case, when the lessee simply agrees to pay for steam furnished without requiring the lessor to furnish any, and without the lessor agreeing to furnish any, there is no other obligation than that which appears in the words employed.

When the owner of a stone quarry or an ore mine leases his premises to one who is to pay a fixed price per ton for all stone or ore taken out, the very purpose of the lease is that stone or ore shall be taken out; and hence there is an implied obligation to do so. But that obligation arises from a consideration of the necessary object and purpose of the contract. Without it the contract is a practical nullity. But no such situation arises out of the contract we are considering and hence no obligation larger than its terms impose arises from it. These views require us to sustain as we do the fourth, fifth, tenth, thirteenth, fourteenth and fifteenth assignments of error.

We sustain the first, second and third, because the value of the lease or any part of it is not the measure of the damages to which the plaintiff is entitled for a breach of a particular covenant contained in it. If such a covenant was broken, the actual damage which resulted from the actual breach can be and should be shown. To ask, What was the value of the lease? lets in the wildest and most speculative conjectures which the friendly zeal of the party's witness may choose to indulge in. If there was an injury done, let the witness state what it was and how it was done; and if he can express the value of that particular injury in figures, let him do so.

We think the questions covered by the seventh and eighth assignments should have been allowed, as they bore directly upon the allegation of damages from loss of the use of the tools; and that subject being an open one, presented by the plaintiff, the defendant was as much entitled to give evidence in reply as the plaintiff was in support of it.

We do not sustain the ninth assignment, as it is only a general statement of the law, applicable to any finding of damages and we see no objection to it. The same is true of the twelfth assignment.

The sixteenth and seventeenth assignments are not sustained.

Judgment reversed and venire de novo awarded.

Sarah BOMBERGER, Exrx., Plff. in Err.,
v.

UNITED BRETHREN MUTUAL AID SOCIETY of Pennsylvania.

The personal representative of the insured, in a life insurance policy for the benefit of one without an insurable interest, has no right of action on the policy against the insurance company.

(Decided October 4, 1886.)

ERROR to the Common Pleas of Dauphin County, to review a judgment of compulsory nonsuit in an action of assumpsit on a policy of life insurance. Affirmed.

At the trial it appeared from the testimony for the plaintiff that the certificate of membership in a beneficial society, upon which the suit was brought, was issued by the defendant April 18, 1873, and entitled Mrs. Catharine Barnhart, her heirs or assigns, upon the death of Lewis Bomberger, to $1,000.

Catharine Barnhart had no insurable interest in the life of the assured, by relation in blood, connection by marriage, or as a creditor.

Lewis Bomberger died December 13, 1879. The plaintiff, who was his widow, discovered the existence of the certificate within a few days after his death and by her son and by her attorney caused the following notices to be sent to the defendant:

"Middletown, December 17, 1879.

"To Secretary U. B. Society:

"Do not pay claim of Mrs. Kate Linn, on the policy of Lewis Bomberger, who died on the 13th of December, as there is something wrong with it, until you hear from me or my attorney.

(Signed) Michael Bomberger."

"B. F. Etter's Law Office,

Harrisburg, Pa. December 29, 1879.

George A. Marks, Esq.,

Sec. U. B. Mutual Aid Society, Lebanon, Pa.:

Dear Sir: The widow and heirs of Lewis Bomberger, late of Middletown, of this county, deceased, have requested me to write you respecting a policy of insurance effected in your Company on the life of said deceased for $1,000.

It seems the policy on its face is for the benefit of a certain Catharine Linn, who, I understand, holds and claims under it. As the said Catharine Linn never had any insurable interest in the life of Mr. B., I do not think she is entitled to any benefit or advantage under said policy; but all advantage and benefit that can be rightfully and legally claimed under it belongs to his widow and children.

You will please, therefore, not pay any money on account of said policy to said Catharine Linn, or to anyone else, until the matter can be investigated and the right of the parties properly determined.

Please acknowledge receipt, and let me know whether I am rightly informed as to the facts in the case, and what the practice of the Company has been heretofore in similar cases.

And oblige,

Very Truly Yours, etc.,

B. F. Etter, "

Attorney for widow and heirs."

Notwithstanding such notices, defendant thereafter paid the money to Catharine Barnhart; whereupon, the plaintiff, as executrix of Lewis Bomberger's estate, brought this suit. At the close of the plaintiff's testimony the court, on motion of the defendant's attorney, entered a compulsory nonsuit and subsequently refused plaintiff's motion to take off the nonsuit; and she took this writ of error. The assignments of error were as follows:

1. The court erred in granting a compulsory nonsuit and, in doing so, in making the following decision: "The policy given in evidence shows upon its face that there was no contract on the part of the Company defendant to pay the amount of the insurance therein contained to the estate of Lewis Bomberger, the plaintiff in this case. We think the sound rule of public policy applicable to a case of this kind, where a wagering policy was brought into existence by the decedent, whose estate is now plaintiff, is to say that his estate has no right to recover the amount thereof from the Company, at least after it has paid the amount to the person to whom it contracted to pay it in the policy; and we therefore grant the motion for a compulsory nonsuit. The nonsuit is entered accordingly."

2. The court erred in refusing the motion to take off the compulsory nonsuit.

Messrs. H. L. Nissley and George H. Irwin, for plaintiff in error:

This policy, so far as the beneficiary is concerned, was a wagering policy.

Warnock v. Davis, 104 U. S. 779 (Bk. 26, L. ed. 924); Cammack v. Lewis, 15 Wall. 643 (82 U. S. bk. 21, L. ed. 244); Gilbert v. Moose, 104 Pa. 74.

The estate of the assured may recover the proceeds of a policy from one named as the beneficiary, who has no insurable interest but who has received such proceeds.

Gilbert v. Moose, 104 Pa. 74.

Messrs. Weiss & Gilbert, for defendant in error:

The fact that the beneficiary has no insurable interest in the life of Bomberger does not create any privity of contract between Bomberger's executrix and the defendant.

Gilbert v. Moose, 104 Pa. 78.

Per Curiam:

There was no error in holding that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover. The defendant paid the money according to the terms of its contract, and to the person named in the certificate of membership. The Company did not agree to pay the amount of the insurance to the estate of the person on whose life the risk was taken; nor did the plaintiff, as executrix, notify the Company not to pay the money to the beneficiary mentioned in the certificate. There was no contract with the widow and heirs, and no right of action or legal capacity existed in them as such, to collect the money or to forbid its payment to the beneficiary.

Judgment affirmed.

George W. KIEHL et al., Plffs. in Err.,
v.

COMMONWEALTH of Pennsylvania, to Use of Lizzie A. Kiehl.

1. Where suit is brought upon a bond to the Commonwealth, conditioned for the payment of certain sums at different periods to another, judgment should be entered in favor of the Commonwealth for the amount of the penalty. This is an essential prerequisite to liquidation in favor of the use plaintiff.
2. Where judgment is improperly entered, in the first instance, for the amount due the use plaintiff, it may be treated as a nullity or be stricken from the record; but if the court mistakenly treats this liquidation as a judgment and opens it and subsequently enters judgment for the amount of the penalty, the proceedings although irregular will not be reversed.
3. Suit was brought on such a bond and judgment entered for the amount due, which was paid and satisfaction entered. Subsequent sums accruing, a second suit was brought on the bond. The court refused to allow judgment to be entered, but, on application, struck off the satisfaction, opened the judgment and ordered that judgment should be entered for the penalty, on discontinuance of the second suit and payment of its costs. Judgment affirmed.

(Decided October 4, 1886.)

ERROR to the Common Pleas of Lancaster County, to review the action of the Court in striking off the entry of satisfaction of a judgment, opening the judgment and entering a second judgment. Affirmed.
PA.

The facts appear by the opinion of the court below. LIVINGSTON, P. J.:

On November 22, 1884, George Wm. Kiehl was, in the Court of Quarter Session of the Peace of Lancaster County, convicted of having willfully deserted his wife, Lizzie A. Kiehl, and was sentenced by the court to pay to said Lizzie A. Kiehl the sum of $4 per week for the maintenance of herself and child, and to give bond with sufficient sureties to the Commonwealth in the sum of $300 for the faithful performance of said order; and on the same day George Wm. Kiehl and George A. Kiehl, in pursuance of said order, entered into a bond to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania in the sum of $300, for the performance of the said order of court by George Wm. Kiehl. The sum of $4 per week first ordered to be paid, was on a subsequent hearing changed by the court to $2 per week, no new bond being asked for or entered.

George Wm. Kiehl having failed for some time to pay his wife Lizzie A. Kiehl the weekly sum directed to be paid, suit was brought upon the bond to May Term 1885, No. 19, and, in said suit, on June 20, 1885, judgment was asked by plaintiff's counsel, and entered, for want of an affidavit of defense, against the defendant, for the sum of $34.30, which was, on June 22, 1885, paid to plaintiff's counsel, who entered satisfaction and released the judgment on the record.

By reason of the continuing failure of George W. Kiehl to pay his wife the money he was directed by the court to pay her, another suit was brought upon the same bond to August Term 1885, No. 33, and upon this second suit, judgment was asked to be entered for want of a sufficient affidavit of defense, which the court declined to enter, one judgment having already been entered in a suit upon the bond. Plaintiff's counsel then presented a petition, asking the court to strike off the entry of satisfaction on the judgment to May Term, 1885, No. 19, open the said judgment, and enter judgment for $300, being the penalty of said bond; the aforesaid judgment having been erroneously entered for less than the penalty of the bond.

In Troubat & Haly's Practice, § 461, it is said that upon a bond of indemnity there can be but one judgment against the same party, and that must be for the amount of the penalty, with an assessment of damages upon the breaches assigned.

The defendant, however, is accountable only to the extent of the penalty; and as soon as that is recovered, or, if the defendant choose to pay it into court, the plaintiff can proceed no further, but, on the contrary, may be compelled to enter satisfaction on the record. Id. § 456; 1 Saund. 58, a.

In Adams v. Bush, 5 Watts, 289, it was held, that a bond in a certain penalty, conditioned for the performance of a certain act, at different periods, and with a warrant of attorney to confess a judgment or judgments, after filing one or more declarations, will not authorize the entry of more than one judgment; and no execution can issue until a scire facias shall have issued, and it shall have been ascertained that the act has not been performed, and what damage has resulted from its nonperformance.

In Arrison v. Commonwealth, 1 Watts, 874, where a bond given by executors, conditioned for the faithful discharge of their duties, in pursuance or an order of the orphans' court, was sued on by one legatee, in the name of the Commonwealth, for his own use, and a judgment was obtained for the amount of the penalty, with the right to take out execution for the amount of his damages, and these damages were paid by the defendant, and the legatee entered satisfaction on the judgment, it was held that such satisfaction extended only to the interest of that legatee, and that a scire facias may be issued upon the judgment, to enable any other of the legatees to recover their legacy, and that a legatee whose legacy did not become due until after the date of the judgment may also maintain a scire facias upon it.

In Duffy v. Lytle, 5 Watts, 130, Kennedy, J., says: "According to the course of common law, no rule seems to be better established than that but one judgment can be had on the same bond, against the same party." Seeing, therefore, that but one judgment can be entered on the same bond against the same party, and that must be for the amount of the penalty, it is very evident that the plaintiff made a mistake and committed an error, in asking and having judgment entered for an amount less than the penalty of the bond; and as no innocent third party can be affected by having the error corrected, as it of right ought to be, and as a correction will not require the obligors to pay more than by the terms of the bond they were bound to pay, we have decided to strike off the entry of satisfaction, on the docket of the judgment to May Term 1885, No. 19, and to open said judgment, with permission to plaintiff, when the costs in the suit to August Term 1885, No. 33, shall have been paid, and said suit discontinued on the record, to move the court for judgment for the amount of the penalty of the bond, from which when obtained, shall be deducted the amount paid on the erroneous judgment when satisfaction was entered and a receipt for the amount so deducted placed on record.

The assignments of error specified the action of the court:

1. In striking off the entry of satisfaction on the docket of the judgment to May Term 1885, No. 19, and in opening of said judgment, with permission to defendant in error when the costs in the suit to August Term 1885, No. 33, shall have been paid, and said suit discontinued on the record, to move the court for judgment for the amount of the penalty of the bond.

2. In subsequently entering a second judgment on the suit of May Term 1885, No. 19, for the amount of the penalty of the bond, viz.: $300.

Messrs. B. Frank Eshleman and William T. Brown, for plaintiffs in error:

The first judgment was regularly entered as a judgment and afterwards satisfied on the record, long before any application was made to the court to strike off the satisfaction. The power of the court, therefore, over this judgment was exhausted.

Ulery v. Clark, 18 Pa. 148.

After the end of a term in which the court has rendered judgment on a case stated on a general or special verdict, from which an appeal may be taken, by writ of error or otherwise, it cannot alter or change it, with a view to correct what the court on the further reflection may consider error therein.

Stephens v. Cowan, 6 Watts, 511; Smith v. Hood, 25 Pa. 218.

A party who has received the fruits of a judgment cannot reverse it on a writ of error.

Smith v. Jack, 2 Watts & S. 101.

Mr. Benj. F. Davis, for defendant in error: "The old notion, that the record remains in the breast of the court only till the end of the term, has yielded to necessity, convenience and common sense." "The power of the court to amend being established, the conclusiveness of the record as amended follows of course."

Rhoads v. Commonwealth, 15 Pa. 276.

A court of record has power over its own records and proceedings, whether before or after judgment, or to the same or a subsequent term, it being a matter of discretion with the court.

R. R. Co. v. Burrell, 81 Pa. 420.

In Crutcher v. Commonwealth, 6 Whart. 340, where a judgment by mistake was entered for $1,231.50, when it should have been for $4,609.50, the supreme court says: "Since the trial and after writ of error, the district court has amended the record. We do not doubt their power to do so, as between the parties themselves."

There can be no doubt as to the right of the court to strike off entry of satisfaction.

Murphy v. Flood, 2 Grant, Cas. 411; McKinney v. Fritz, 2 W. N. C. 173.

Mr. Justice Sterrett delivered the opinion of the court:

All that need be said in justification of the orders complained of in this case may be found in the opinion of the learned president of the common pleas.

The suit was necessarily in the name of the Commonwealth, the payee named in the bonds to the use of the deserted wife; and if she was entitled to anything under the conditions of the bond, the only judgment that could be legally entered was one in favor of the Commonwealth, as legal plaintiff, for the precise penalty named in the bond, neither more nor less, with a liquidation of the amount then due the use plaintiff.

Judgment in favor of the Commonwealth for the penalty was an essential prerequisite to a liquidation in favor of the use plaintiff. Without it the liquidation was premature, a mere nullity, and might have been treated as such; or it might have been stricken from the record as wholly unauthorized. The court, however, treated the liquidation as a judgment, and opened it for the purpose of enabling the plaintiff to move for judgment in favor of the Commonwealth for the penalty of the bond. This was not strictly correct, but plaintiffs in error were not prejudiced thereby, and hence they have no reason to complain. The court, out of abundance of caution, adopted that mode of expunging from the record an entry that never should have been made.

It is not pretended that there ever was any but one judgment in favor of the Commonwealth; and the entry of that is the only subject of complaint in the second specification. The Commonwealth was entitled to judgment for the penalty of the bond, to be followed by liquidation in favor of the deserted wife, and hence there is no merit in the second specification.

The only irregularity in the proceedings was the unauthorized entry of what purported to be a judgment in favor of the use plaintiff for the amount then due her. This was corrected and then the proper judgment was entered. Neither of the plaintiffs in error has been in any manner prejudiced thereby. They can safely pay all that is due or may become due to the use plaintiff under the sentence of the court of quarter sessions, without fear of being required to pay any part thereof a second time. The court below will take care that they are not harmed, either in person or estate.

Judgment affirmed.

Florence M. BUCK, Exrx., Plff. in Err.,
v.

Charles R. HENDERSON et ux.

1. Declarations when receiving money, or afterward, clearly evincing an intent to take it in trust at the time of its reduction into possession, repel the presumption of personal acquisition and fix a trust upon the fund.
2. Where the guardian of the estate, descended to a minor daughter from her mother, pays over the accumulated income to her father who is entitled to it as tenant by the courtesy, and the father, upon receiving it and often afterward until his death, declares to the guardian and others that the money is the daughter's, his declarations are competent to prove an executed gift of the money to the daughter, in an action of assumpsit brought by her after attaining her majority to recover it from his executrix.

(Decided October 4, 1886.)

ERROR to the Common Pleas of Warren County, to review a judgment on a verdict for the plaintiffs in an action of assumpsit. Affirmed.

This was an action of assumpsit by Charles R. Henderson and Anna M., his wife, in right of the wife, against Florence M. Buck, executrix of E. E. James.

At the trial before Brown, P. J., the following facts appeared:

Susanna E. James died in 1860, intestate, leaving one child, the plaintiff Anna, then a minor, and a husband, E. E. James, the defendant's testator. The real estate which Mrs. James owned at her death was sold by order of court. The proceeds were given to the guardian of the plaintiff Anna and were by him invested, in 1865. Before investing the money he went to Mr. James and asked him if he thought government bonds a safe investment. According to the guardian's testimony Mr. James said "He did not care what I put it into; he was not going to have anything to do with it; that he never would touch the money; it was for Anna. He said he had plenty to live on himself and he did not care for it; that it was Anna's money. I might do what I pleased with it." He never thereafter claimed an interest in the money, nor did he exercise any control over it while it remained in the hands of the guardian. He nearly always stopped to see the guardian when in the neighborhood and asked how he was getting along with Anna's money.

The guardian offered the interest of the money to Mr. James twice, but he said he would not take it, that it was Anna's money. The interest accumulated until 1879 when Mr. James wrote to the guardian as follows:

"My Dear Sir: Your favor received. While I was much pleased to hear from you and my old Honeybrook friends, you did not give me a definite answer to my inquiry as to how much money was due Anna. I had hoped (and having unlimited confidence in your honor and integrity) that you would annually apply interest to principal, thus compounding the interest. This was perhaps, asking too much, and there may have been times when there may have been difficulties in getting 6 per cent. I would say of this accumulated interest, I could invest all or a part for Anna, with good and safe security, to realize 10 per cent, either on the first of April or May. Please give me a definite and full statement of the account, and whether I may secure an investment for all or part of said interest."

In pursuance of this letter the guardian turned over to Mr. James the whole of the accumulations—according to his testimony—to invest for Anna.

Afterward, in July, 1879, Mr. James visited his daughter at her uncle's and said the guardian did not appear to want to put her money out, and he did not want it to lie idle. At the time of this visit he told neighbors that he had given the money to Anna, and it was at the same visit he told his brother that he would invest this money for Anna; that he could get 10 or 12 per cent interest for her, and after receiving the last of the money he wrote to his brother: "I have nearly $2,000 of Anna's money that I got from Morton (the guardian) last August." This was one month before his death in January, 1880.

In 1881 the plaintiff Anna became of age, received the principal from her guardian, gave him a release, and brought this suit against her father's executrix to recover the accumulation of interest, on the ground that he had given it to her.

The court charged inter alia as follows:

"In order to make a valid gift it must go into immediate effect. There must not only be the purpose and intention to give, but that intention must be carried into effect by Mr. James in his lifetime parting with all dominion and control over the subject matter, and vesting the same in his daughter, the alleged donee. It makes no difference how strong or how fixed was the purpose of Mr. James to give this money to his daughter at some future time, or how many times he had declared to third persons he had so given it, provided you find, from all the evidence, that there never was a time in his life when he did actually consummate the gift by surrendering all dominion and control over the money. You come to that single question of fact, which you are to determine from the whole evidence, and upon which we can throw no particular light. * * *

"[It is for you to take all the evidence and say whether there was a time, in the lifetime of Mr. James, when he consummated a gift of this money to his daughter, parted absolutely with all control and dominion over it, with intention to vest the dominion and control, as against himself, absolutely in his daughter. If there was, then his estate ought to respond, and you ought to give a verdict for the amount claimed with the interest.] If there was not, then your verdict ought to be in favor of the defendant."

Verdict and judgment were for the plaintiff; whereupon, the defendant took this writ, assigning as error: the part of the charge included in brackets; the refusal of the court to give binding instructions for the defendant, and the refusal of the court to charge that the release of the plaintiff Anna to her guardian was, in the absence of fraud, accident or mistake, a bar to the action.

Messrs. D. I. Ball and C. C. Thompson, for plaintiff in error:

There is in the case no sufficient evidence of an executed gift.

A gift is not executed so long as the donor retains any control over it.

Withers v. Weaver, 10 Pa. 391; Linsendigler v. Gourley, 56 Pa. 166; Pringle v. Pringle, 59 Pa. 281; Fross' App. 105 Pa. 267.

The declarations to establish a husband's disclaimer of his wife's chattels must "be deliberate, positive, precise, clear, and consistent with each other; not inconsiderate, vague, or discrepant."

Re Gray's Est. 1 Pa. 829.

In Madeira's App. 2 Cent. Rep. 318, it is said: "The legal requisition is that the intention of the donor be established by clear and precise evidence, and that the delivery be secundum subjectam materiam."

See also Herr's App. 5 Watts & S. 494; Fross' App. 105 Pa. 258; Bond v. Bunting, 78 Pa. 210; Scott v. Lauman, 104 Pa. 593; Williams' App. 15 W. N. C. 89.

Mr. James could not give his estate in the money in the guardian's hands except by a writing. The Act of April 18, 1853, Purd. Dig. p. 1460, § 7, makes the proceeds of the sale of the real estate by the trustee real estate.

Holmes' App. 53 Pa. 339.

There must be a consideration besides love and affection to support a trust.

Trough's Est. 75 Pa. 118.

Equity carries the doctrine of nudum pactum farther than even the law does.

Dennison v. Goehring, 7 Pa. 178.

Where there has been no deceit or unfair practice, and the party may with a good conscience retain the money, he cannot in an action of assumpsit on the common counts be compelled to pay it back, even where he could not at law have recovered it originally.

Deysner v. Triebel, 64 Pa. 386; Irvine v. Hanlin, 10 Serg. & R. 218; Mann's App. 1 Pa. 29; Hinkle v. Eichelberger, 2 Pa. 484.

Messrs. A. E. Sisson, and Johnson, Lindsey & Parmlee, for defendants in error:

374

It is not a question whether the father might not have adopted some other mode of renouncing all dominion and control which would have furnished better evidence against himself, but whether all these circumstances are not sufficient to go to the jury and to justify their verdict.

But suppose the jury did not find that the sum of all these circumstances, acts and declarations, quite fulfilled the requirements of the law. They at least had the right to them as lights, by the aid of which they could examine subsequent acts of the father, all in the same general line, to see whether, as thus illuminated, the evidence satisfied them that he afterwards made another and more successful effort to give to his daughter the fruit of her mother's estate.

Madeira's App. 17 W. N. C. 202; S. C. 2 Cent. Rep. 313.

Our evidence was sufficient to go to the jury, even had we not shown that the donor and donee were together.

Grangiac v. Arden, 10 Johns. 293.

To make a valid gift inter vivos there must be a delivery with the intention of making a gift, but no form of words is necessary to be observed at the time to constitute a good gift. If the circumstances clearly evince the intention it is sufficient; and if these are equivocal, an explicit declaration afterward of that intention is competent.

Minchin v. Merrill, 2 Edw. Ch. 333; Doty v. Willson, 47 N. Y. 580; Trow v. Shannon, 76 N. Y. 446.

Declarations of the husband when receiving the wife's money or choses in action, or afterwards, clearly evincive of his intent at the reduction into possession, are sufficient to repel the presumption of personal acquisitions and establish the relation of trustee for the wife.

Moyer's App. 77 Pa. 482; Malone's Est. 37 Leg. Int. 63; 88 Id. 308. See Hackney v. Vrooman, 62 Barb. 666; Re Gray's Est. 1 Pa. 327; Wesco's App. 52 Pa. 195.

It is not necessary that witnesses shall have seen actual delivery take place. The bond or the note or the policy may have been, at the time, already in the custody of the donee; and in such case, words indicating that the donor renounced all ownership would undoubtedly be sufficient.

Malone's Est. 37 Leg. Int. 63; 88 Id. 308; Wing v. Merchant, 57 Maine, 387.

So, as was said by Lord Romilly, in Morgan v. Malleson, L. R. 10 Eq. Cas. 475, cited by Judge Hare, in Bond v. Bunting, 78 Pa. 210: "If the donor had said, I undertake to hold the bond for you, that would have been a declaration of trust, though there had been no delivery."

See also Helfenstein's Est. 77 Pa. 331.

The delivery may be proved by the declarations of the donor, just as the gift itself may be; and when the donor declares that he had given at a previous time, and that the donee had then become the owner, it is implied that the delivery, and indeed every other formality necessary to create a complete gift, had taken place. The law always presumes knowledge of its requirements.

Malone's App. 38 Leg. Int. 303.

Per Curiam:

We discover no error in this record. Declarations accompanied with acts clearly proving the intent of the donor to execute the gift were given in evidence. The dealings of the donor with the guardian of the ward were tantamount to dealing directly with the ward. Declarations, when receiving the money or afterwards, clearly evincing an intent to take it in trust, at the time of its reduction into his possession, are sufficient to repel the presumption of personal acquisition and stamp the relation of trustee upon him.

Judgment affirmed.

William NESLIE et ux., Plffs. in Err.,
v.

SECOND & THIRD STREETS PASSENGER R. CO.

In an action of trespass on the case against a street railway company for personal injuries, evidence on the part of the plaintiff that she, while alighting from one of the defendant's cars and carrying a child on her left arm, tried to reach with her right hand the handle of the rear dasher, but that as another passenger, though there were empty seats in the car, was standing in the way, she missed the handle and, slipping on ice which remained on the step from the previous day, fell, receiving severe injuries, makes out a case for a jury; and a nonsuit is error, although it appears that the plaintiff knew there was ice on the step and might, by changing the child to the other arm, have grasped with her left hand the handle on the end of the car.

(Decided October 4, 1886.)

ERROR to Common Pleas No. 4 of Philadelphia County, to review a judgment of nonsuit in an action of trespass on the case. Reversed.

This action was brought by William Neslie and Margaret, his wife, in the right of the wife, against the Second and Third Streets Passenger Railway Co. to recover damages for injuries alleged to have been received by the wife through the defendant's negligence.

At the trial, the testimony in behalf of the plaintiffs was substantially as follows: The plaintiff, Margaret Neslie, with her child about two years old, and accompanied by her mother, was a passenger on one of the cars of the Second & Third Streets Passenger Railway Company, in the City of Philadelphia, on the evening of February 3, 1885. When the car reached Second and Market Streets, she started to leave it, carrying her sleeping child on her left arm.

The car was heading down Second Street, being towards the south, and she attempted to get off on the west side, as she wished to go up Market Street. Her right arm being the free one was, therefore, next the car dasher, and she reached it out for the purpose of grasping the handle on the end of the dasher to assist her in alighting. She was unable to reach the handle, owing to the presence of a passenger on the platform, who stood against the dasher and barred her from it. She then stepped down, not having hold of either the handle on the dasher or the handle on the rear end of the car, slipped on some ice on the car step and fell.

The presence of the ice was proved as being "more than would be caused by persons getting in and out;" and it was also proved that on the day of the accident it had not stormed, while on the day previous it had.

Plaintiff testified that when she first stepped on the car her foot slipped on the ice. She also testified that at the time of the accident there were but four or five persons inside the car.

The extent of the plaintiff's injuries was testified to by several witnesses, including the physicians who attended her.

The trial judge, on motion of the counsel for the defendant, entered a nonsuit, which the court in banc subsequently refused to take off; whereupon, the plaintiffs took this writ, assigning as error the action of the court in entering the nonsuit, and in refusing to take it off.

Messrs. James P. Dolman and John Dolman, for plaintiffs in error:

The plaintiff being a passenger, the defendant was bound to transport her safely. By showing a failure to do this the plaintiff established a prima facie case, without affirmative proof of any negligence on the part of the defendant. The burden of showing a state of facts which relieved it from liability was upon the latter.

R. R. Co. v. Goodman, 62 Pa. 329; Meier v. R. R. Co. 64 Pa. 225; Laing v. Colder, 8 Pa. 482; Sullivan v. R. R. Co. 30 Pa. 234; Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 280; Redf. Railways, § 1760 and notes.

The testimony on the part of the plaintiffs, however, contained sufficient evidence of negligence in the defendant to send the case to the jury. The duty of a carrier of passengers is to exercise the highest possible degree of care, diligence and foresight.

Meier v. R. R. Co. 64 Pa. 225; 2 Redf. Railways, 170-190; Laing v. Colder, 8 Pa. 482; Gillis v. R. R. Co. 59 Pa. 129; Sullivan v. R. R. Co. 30 Pa. 234; R. R. Co. v. Boyer, 97 Pa. 91; Boas v. R. R. Co. 1 New Eng. Rep. 89.

It has been laid down in many cases that the obligation of a common carrier of passengers extends to furnishing a safe and convenient means of exit.

See R. R. Co. v. White, 6 W. N. C. 516.

The defendant was chargeable with negligence, for unnecessarily allowing its platform to be occupied in such a way as to interfere with the safe exit of passengers. If, under any circumstances, permitting an unnecessary occupation of the car platform would amount to negligence, unless it would under all circumstances, the jury alone can determine whether in a particular case it was justifiable.

If the case was decided in the court below on the ground of contributory negligence, it should have been submitted to the jury. To hold as the court below did was to establish plaintiff's negligence as matter of law. Negligence in law is when the standard is fixed, when the measure of duty is defined by the law and is the same under all circumstances; R. R. Co. v. McElwhee, 87 Pa. 311; or where the precise measure of duty is determinate and the same under all circumstances; McCully v.

Clark, 40 Pa. 406; or the violation of a fixed rule, the same under all circumstances.

R. Co. v. Henrice, 92 Pa. 431.

There is no evidence that plaintiff knew that there was ice on the step in such quantities as to render the exit perilous. Where pressure of circumstances requires an act to be done in a way which does not permit of much time for deliberation, the law will not presume that a previously acquired knowledge of a fact which rendered the act more or less dangerous was present to the mind at the time.

Whart. Neg. § 219; Lee v. Woolsey, 16 W. N. C. 337.

Plaintiff had a right to rely upon the assumption that the defendant would perform its clear duty of keeping its steps in a fit condition for use, or of restraining passengers from using them.

Erie City v. Schwingler, 22 Pa. 384; Humphreys v. Armstrong Co. 56 Pa. 204.

Plaintiff having been, without her own fault, unexpectedly placed in a position which required her to act promptly, her conduct is not to be scrutinized from the standpoint of one who can coolly look back upon the occurrence and think of various things which the result indicates it might have been more prudent to do.

R. R. Co. v. Kilgore, 32 Pa. 292; R. R. Co. v. Ogter, 35 Pa. 60; R. R. Co. v. Aspell, 23 Pa. 147; R. R. Co. v. Hummell, 44 Pa. 875; R. R. Co. v. Werner, 89 Pa. 59.

Plaintiff's duty was to exercise ordinary and reasonable care; and there is a long and unbroken line of authorities in this State that in such a case the question is always for the jury.

Payne v. Reese, 100 Pa. 301; Johnson v. Bruner, 61 Pa. 58; Railway Co. v. Walling, 97 Pa. 55; R. R. Co. v. McElree, 67 Pa. 311; R. R. Co. v. White, 6 W. N. C. 516; McKee v. Bidwell, 74 Pa. 218; Johnson v. R. R. Co. 70 Pa. 357; Crissey v. R. Co. 75 Pa. 88; McCully v. Clarke, 40 Pa. 406; Born v. Plank Road Co. 101 Pa. 334; R. Co. v. Henrice, 92 Pa. 431; Railway Co. v. Whipple, 5 W. N. C. 68; R. R. Co. v. Findley, 4 W. N. C. 438; Borough v. Warne, 16 W. N. C. 44; Schum v. R. R. Co. Id. 305.

Mr. George W. Thorn, for defendant in error:

When in the opinion of the court the contradicted evidence does not warrant the jury in inferring negligence by the defendant as the proximate cause of an injury, the court should direct a verdict for him.

Goshorn v. Smith, 92 Pa. 435; R. R. Co. v. Yerger, 73 Pa. 121.

When there is no evidence from which negligence could reasonably be inferred, it is settled law that the jury shall not be permitted, arbitrarily and without evidence, to infer that there was negligence.

Baker v. Fehr and R. R. Co. v. Schertle, 97 Pa. 70, 450.

A municipality is not liable for injuries which are the result of nothing more than the ordinary slipperiness caused by recent snow and ice.

Mauch Chunk v. Kline, 100 Pa. 119; City of Erie v. Magill, 101 Pa. 616; Denhart v. City of Phila. 15 W. N. C. 214; Fleming v. City of Lock Haven, 15 W. N. C. 216.

378

Mr. Chief Justice Mercur delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an action on the case to recover damages for an injury to the person of the plaintiff. When her evidence was closed, the learned judge ordered a nonsuit which the court refused to take off. The question therefore now is, Should the case have been submitted to the jury?

The plaintiff was a passenger in a car of the defendant. In alighting therefrom she fell and received an injury. Her complaint is that the defendant did not furnish her safe and convenient means of exit as it was bound to provide. If there was no doubt of the existence of the facts complained of, yet if there be substantial doubts as to the reasonable and natural inferences to be drawn from those facts, they should be submitted to the jury. McKee v. Bidwell, 74 Pa. 218; Crissey v. Pass. R. Co. 75 Pa. 83.

What is or is not negligence in a particular case is generally a question for the jury. Fritch v. Allegheny, 91 Pa. 226.

The defendant is a carrier of passengers for hire. As such it was its duty not only to transport them safely, but also to provide reasonably safe means for their getting on and off the car. Did it do so in this case? Under all the evidence was that a question of fact for the jury to find, or was it to be determined by the court as matter of law?

This accident occurred on an evening in the month of February. The plaintiff testified substantially that when she got out of the car she was carrying her child on her left arm; she tried to get hold of the dasher with the other hand; she could not do so as a passenger standing on the platform was leaning against it. There were two passengers on the platform, one on each side of the conductor, and some four or five passengers in the inside of the car. In getting down, her foot slipped on the step by reason of ice thereon, and she fell and was injured.

It appears that there had been a storm on the previous day, but none on this day. It is alleged that this ice had been suffered to remain on the step from the previous day. It was there when she got on the car and she slipped in getting in.

Thus there are two specific causes of complaint. The first is that when there was ample room for all the passengers to ride in the car, the defendant permitted one to stand on the platform in such a position that plaintiff could not avail herself of the security and protection which she otherwise would have enjoyed; the other, the omission to remove from the step the ice formed during the storm of the previous day.

Under the evidence we do not think the plaintiff was so clearly guilty of contributory negligence, in the manner in which she got down from the platform, as to authorize the court to declare it to be such as matter of law. Her previous knowledge of the condition of the step, and whether it was reasonably prudent for her to attempt to alight in the way and manner she did, are questions of fact for the jury.

The other contention relates to the alleged negligence of the defendant.

It may not be negligence per se to permit passengers to stand on the platform; yet it is frequently very annoying to all persons in getting in and out of the cars, and to ladies especially offensive. If, in this case, the defendant permitted a passenger to remain standing on the platform in such a position as to deprive the plaintiff of that reasonable support which would have protected her from injury, and did not furnish other suitable protection, we think the jury is the proper tribunal to find whether the defendant was thereby guilty of negligence.

If the ice on the step caused the plaintiff to fall, or contributed thereto, it is proper for the jury to consider whether, under all the circumstances proved, it was suffered to remain thereon for an unreasonable length of time. It may be impossible in the winter to prevent deposits on the step by falling snow, or from the feet of persons entering the car, and which in either case may result in the formation of ice. The main question in regard to this is whether it remained there for such time and in such form as to establish the negligence of the defendant, and whether this negligence contributed to the injury of the plaintiff.

The evidence is sufficient to send the case to a jury with proper instructions and the court erred in not taking off the nonsuit.

Judgment reversed and a procedendo awarded.

A. E. BURR, Plff. in Err.,

v.

John CATTNACH.

A landlord's entry upon demised premises, by forcing the door during the tenant's absence, removing the tenant's signs, locks and goods, and using the room thereafter for storage, amounts to an eviction and is a good defense to an action for rent for the balance of the term.

(Decided October 4, 1886.)

ERROR to the Common Pleas of Lackawanna County, to review a judgment for the plaintiff in an action of debt. Reversed.

This was an action of debt by John Cattnach, against A. E. Burr, to recover rent reserved in a lease.

By consent of the parties the case was referred to S. B. Price, Esq., in accordance with the Act of April 6, 1869, P. L. 725, authorizing the reference of civil actions, and its supplements: the Acts of March 28, 1870, P. L. 540; and June 22, 1871, Pl. 1363.

The facts as found by the referee are fully stated in the opinion.

The referee reported that the plaintiff had no cause of action, and directed the prothonotary to enter judgment for the defendant.

The court below reversed the judgment and entered judgment for the plaintiff; whereupon, the defendant took this writ.

Messrs. Fred. W. Gunster, and Charles H. Welles, for plaintiff in error:

The referee's findings of fact must be considered as a special verdict.

Butterfield v. Lathrop, 71 Pa. 225; Thornton v. Enterprise Ins. Co. 71 Pa. 234.

An eviction is "Any act of the landlord which deprives the tenant of that beneficial enjoyment of the premises to which he is entitled under the lease."

Hoeverler v. Fleming, 91 Pa. 322.

"If the tenant be deprived of the thing letten, the obligation to pay rent ceases, because such obligation has its force only from the consideration which was the enjoyment of the thing demised."

Gilbert, Rents, 145.

If a landlord takes possession of the premises without the consent of the tenant, it is an eviction; if with his consent, it is a rescission of the lease, and in either case the rent is suspended.

Magaw v. Lambert, 3 Pa. 444; Briggs v. Thompson, 9 Pa. 338.

When the landlord enters without the consent of the tenant, and such entry is followed by a continuous possession inconsistent with the possessory title assured to the tenant under the lease, that possession amounts to an eviction.

Day v. Watson, 8 Mich. 535.

The mere locking of a door of a pew, thereby preventing one who had the right to use it, has been held to be equivalent to an eviction.

Tayl. Land. & T. 6th ed. § 378; Lloyd v. Tomkies, 1 T. R. 671.

And ralling off a part of the demised premises is an eviction.

Smith v. Raleigh, 3 Camp. 513.

A landlord's refusal to allow an under tenant to enter the premises under threats of suit, whereby the lessee is deprived of under letting, is such an interruption of the latter's rights as amounts to an eviction.

Doran v. Chase, 2 W. N. C. 609.

Messrs. Ranck & Smith, for defendant in error:

Where a party abandons the house with his goods, and locks it up, and it is not known where he has gone, it is a clear case of vacant possession.

Tayl. Land. & T. 609; Jackson & Gross on Land. & T. 218; McKinney v. Reader, 7 Watts. 128.

Request by the landlord for the keys followed by an acceptance of them will constitute a surrender of the term.

Raney v. Fannassy, 14 W. N. C. 91.

Taking possession, repairing, advertising the house to rent, are all acts in the interest and for the benefit of the tenant and do not discharge him from his covenant to pay rent.

Breuckmann v. Toibill, 89 Pa. 58; Mureilles v. Kerr, 6 Whart. 409.

A removal of the tenant from the premises and an unaccepted offer to deliver up the keys is not evidence of the existence of an agreement for the termination of the lease.

Kiester v. Miller, 25 Pa. 481.

In an action upon a lease to recover rent, an affidavit of defense is insufficient which simply avers that before the time the rent sued for accrued, defendant gave up and left the premises, and plaintiff entered upon and used the same.

Phila. Fire Extinguisher Co. v. Brainerd, 2 W. N. C. 473.

A landlord may receive the key of premises without interfering with the occupancy by the tenant. He is not bound to let the premises suffer, but may take possession for the purpose of caring for them.

Bradley v. Brown, 6 W. N. C. 282.

A surrender of demised premises by the tenant during a term, in order to be effectual so as to release the lessee from liability to pay rent, must be accepted by the lessor; and the burden of proof is upon the lessee to prove such acceptance.

Auer v. Penn., 99 Pa. 370.

Any entry by the landlord on the premises demised, against the will or wishes of the tenant, is not an eviction in point of law which will suspend the rent.

Bennet v. Bittle, 4 Rawle, 389; Noble v. Warren, 88 Pa. 840.

An eviction such as will suspend rent is an actual expulsion of the lessee out of all or some part of the demised premises. The rent already accrued and overdue is not forfeited by the eviction; but in an action for such rent the tenant may defalcate the damages caused by it.

Tiley v. Moyers, 48 Pa. 404.

Mr. Justice Sterrett delivered the opinion of the court:

After considering the exceptions filed by plaintiff below to the report of the referee, the learned judge of the common pleas in the concluding paragraph of his opinion says: "It follows that the plaintiff's second conclusion of law should have been affirmed and defendant's fourth conclusion of law denied, and that upon the facts found by the referee the plaintiff is entitled to recover. The corresponding exceptions of plaintiff are accordingly sustained, and the judgment of the referee reversed." And thereupon he directed judgment to be entered in favor of plaintiff below for $221.76.

The plaintiff's second conclusion of law, referred to above, was "That the temporary occupancy, testified to by plaintiff's witnesses, is not such an occupancy as would create an eviction, or a surrender of the term, unless there was an acceptance by the plaintiff."

Defendant's fourth conclusion was "That the plaintiff cannot recover."

The learned referee refused the former and affirmed the latter, and he accordingly directed judgment in favor of defendant below; but, upon the same facts found by the referee, the learned judge reversed these legal conclusions, and judgment was accordingly entered in favor of plaintiff below, as above stated. These rulings are the subjects of complaint in the several assignments of error respectively.

It will be observed that the referee's findings of fact are accepted as substantially correct. It is only as to the legal conclusions drawn therefrom that the court overruled the referee on the controlling questions in the case.

Among other things, the referee found in substance that in November, 1879, plaintiff in error leased from plaintiff below two second story front rooms on Broadway, New York, for five months, from first of December following at $55 per month, took possession of the same accordingly and paid the rent until February 1, following; that in the early part of February, plaintiff below took possession of the rooms, removed locks, signs and goods left there by plaintiff in error, and thence until the expiration of the lease used the rooms for storing trunks; that at the time he thus re-entered the premises, plaintiff in error was in possession of the same as tenant under said lease, although not personally present, and had goods and chattels at the same; that defendant in error broke, removed or opened the plaintiff in error's lock on the door of the demised premises, took down his signs, re-entered and took possession of the premises, and used the same for his own purposes in his own business; that at the time he so re-entered, the demised premises were not vacant, nor had the lease expired, and from the time he so re-entered in the early part of February, 1880, until May 1 of that year, he continued in possession; and during that time plaintiff in error was not in possession of any part of the demised premises.

Having found the foregoing and other corroborating facts, the referee rightly concluded as matter of law that plaintiff below having re-entered and taken possession of the demised premises and used the same for his purposes without the consent of plaintiff in error, the latter was evicted and therefore relieved from further payment. The facts found by the referee clearly warranted each of the four conclusions of law claimed by defendant below, the last of which was "that the plaintiff cannot recover."

The first conclusion of law submitted by plaintiff below was "That the lease in evidence was for an entire term of five months and defendant is liable for the rent unless there was an eviction or surrender of the term and an acceptance by plaintiff."

The second as before stated was "That the temporary occupancy, testified to by plaintiff's witnesses, is not such an occupancy as would create an eviction or a surrender of the term unless there was an acceptance by plaintiff." This was rightly refused for the reason that it was not warranted by the testimony nor by the referee's findings of fact.

As to all the controlling points in the case the findings of the referee, as well as his conclusions of law, are substantially correct, and, in accordance with his report, judgment should have been entered in favor of defendant below.

Judgment reversed, and now judgment in favor of defendant and against plaintiff below.

APPEAL of the RIDDLESBURG COAL & IRON CO.

1. The claim of wages for labor, under the Acts of April 9, 1872, and June 12, 1878, is preferred, in distribution of the proceeds of the lessee's property, to the landlord's claim for rent.
2. Where the property is levied on and sold by the sheriff, on an execution issuing out of the court of common pleas, notice of the wages claim, under the Act of June 12, 1878, need not be given to the landlord, but if given to the sheriff it is sufficient.

(Decided October 4, 1880.)

APPPEAL from a decree of the Common Pleas of Bedford County, distributing the proceeds of a sheriff's sale. Affirmed.
Reported below, 2 Pa. C. C. R. 197.

On August 8, 1884, Nimick & Co. obtained a judgment against the Kemble Coal & Iron Company, a corporation engaged in the manufacture of iron, mining ore, coal, etc., and issued execution and levied on the personal property of the defendant on the same day. The property was sold on August 20, 1884, and on succeeding days. The fund was claimed by three classes of claimants: 1, the holders of assigned labor claims; 2, landlords, for rents; and 3, the execution creditor.

Wight, the secretary and treasurer of the company, and Lauder, the business manager, had a store at which the employees of the company dealt largely. The wages of the employees were paid by deducting the store bill from each man's wages for the month and paying him the balance of his wages in cash, he giving a receipt, transfer and assignment to Wight & Lauder.

On August 1, $87,000 of these claims for labor, earned within six months prior to the levy, were assigned to the Bedford County Bank and the Union Bank of Huntingdon, on account of indebtedness of Wight & Lauder to these banks. These constituted the assigned labor claims. The auditor found as a fact that these claims were assigned for a valuable consideration and were not extinguished.

The Huntingdon & Broad Top Railroad Company claimed, under a lease, for royalty on coal mined on the lands of its railroad, within a year preceding the date of levy. The Riddlesburg Coal & Iron Company claimed, under a lease to Lauder, for rent of houses and royalty and trackage on coal, within a year preceding the date of levy.

Lauder did not sublet the premises to the Company defendant, but it occupied them the same as if the lease had been made to the Company. Notice of the above claim for rent was given to the sheriff, prior to the sale of the personal property. John W. Fink, another landlord, gave notice after the sale. The property of the defendant, on the premises of the respective lessors, sold for enough to pay these claims in full, if preferred to the claims for wages, but not otherwise.

It appeared from evidence before the auditor that notice of the labor claims was served on the sheriff August 19, and notice of the claims for rent subsequently.

The auditor, Frank Fletcher, Esq., reported, on the question of distribution, inter alia, as follows:

"The landlords contend that no notice was served by the banks on the landlords or their bailiff, as the Act of June 12, 1878, requires, and that, therefore, they are preferred to the banks. The banks, on the other hand, contend that the sheriff was the bailiff of the landlords, and that a service of the notice on the sheriff was a compliance with the requirements of said Act of 1878, and that they are entitled to the fund in preference to the rents.

"Is the sheriff the bailiff of the landlord? In England the powers and duties of the sheriff were numerous. He was the King's bailiff, and as his bailiff it was his duty to collect the King's rents within the county, if commanded by process from the exchequer. Sheriff's deputies, appointed by the sheriff to collect fines, make arrests, etc., were also called bailiffs. There is no such officer as bailiff in Pennsylvania. 'In American law the term "bailiff" is seldom used except sometimes to signify a sheriff's officer or constable, or a party liable to account to another for the rents and profits of real estate.'

"In this case was the sheriff a party liable to account to these landlords for rent? If so, he was, in the opinion of your auditor their bailiff, and the notices served on him by the banks were sufficient, under the Act of 1878, to entitle them to receive the money. That the sheriff was liable to account to these landlords there is no doubt. Under the law he is bound to account to them at his peril. Had the landlord issued warrants to the sheriff, and had notice been served, as in this case, then there could not be any doubt as to which is preferred. When the execution creditor issues his execution and places it in the hands of the sheriff, the right of distress is thus taken away, and the landlord must look to the sheriff to account to him for his rent from the proceeds of sale. The landlords in this case who gave notice to the sheriff to retain and pay over to them the amount of rent due them, thereby, as well as by the act of the law, constituted and made the sheriff their bailiff.

"The Kemble Coal & Iron Company was not the lessee of the Riddlesburg Coal & Iron Company, and notice, as required by the Act of 1878, does not apply to the rent of said Riddlesburg Coal & Iron Company, for the reason that the Kemble Coal & Iron Company did not hold under a lease, and the lessee was not the party employing the miners, mechanics, laborers and clerks.

"As to whether the claim of the Riddlesburg Coal & Iron Company is preferred to wages must be decided irrespective of the Act of 1878. This question has never been decided by the supreme court in any reported case, but has been decided both ways by lower courts. Your auditor, after having examined a number of opinions, adopts as his views in this case the opinion of Judge Finletter in the case of O'Brien v. Hamilton, 12 Phila. 387, decided in February, 1878, in which it was held that claims of laborers for wages are entitled to preference over claims of landlords for rents."

The auditor accordingly distributed the fund to the banks. The landlords filed exceptions which were dismissed by the court in the following opinion by BAER, P. J.:

"Our concurring with the auditor in the conclusions arrived at does not necessarily hold us as indorsing the reasoning, etc. As Wight & Lauder procured and paid for the assigned claims as a mercantile firm, and not as secretary and treasurer, or manager, the cases cited by exceptants (viz.: 22 Pa. 320, and 51 Pa. 483) do not apply as we read the cases and the evidence; and approving of his finding that the labor claims were not extinguished, the right of priority follows under the several Acts of Assembly, as there is no dispute that notice was in due form given the sheriff and time.

"Whether the sheriff was the bailiff of the landlord is, as we view the case, immaterial.

"The Act of 9th of April, 1872, required laborers, miners, etc., to give notice in writing, of their claims, to the officer executing an execution, landlord's warrant, attachment, or writ of a similar nature, at any time before the actual sale of the property levied on. The first section of the Act of June 12, 1878, declares the true intent of the Act of April 9, 1872, to be that laborers shall have a preference over landlords * * * provided that any person claiming a preference, as in the Act provided, shall give notice to the landlord or his bailiff of the amount of his claim. * * * There is no such officer as a bailiff in the State of Pennsylvania. When the landlord deposes another to execute a landlord's warrant, he constitutes such other person a bailiff, but not an officer; and under the Act of 1878 either the landlord or his bailiff executing a landlord's warrant must have the required notice. But where the property is levied on by the sheriff on an execution issuing out of the common pleas, the writ is being executed by an officer, and such a case requires the notice to be given to the officer.

"If the meaning of the Act of 1872, as declared by that of 1878, was that wages for labor had priority over rents, then, as provided by the Act of 1872, the only notice necessary was that required to be given to the officer executing the writ. The Act of 1878 provides for notice when the landlord himself, or by a bailiff, executes a landlord's warrant, which had not been provided for by the Act of 1872.

"To require laborers to notify the landlord when the sheriff levies on an execution to which the landlord is a stranger would be to require, in some instances, an impossibility. For the landlord need not necessarily have notified the sheriff that he claimed a priority for rent in arrear before the sale; then how could the laborer in all cases know that there was a landlord claiming?

"Although the labor claimant must strictly observe the requirements of the law giving him priority, we fail to find them negligent of anything required of them in these cases, as we read and understand the several acts.

"The exceptions are dismissed and the report of the auditor is confirmed."

This appeal was thereupon taken.

The assignments of error specified were, inter alia, the action of the court in dismissing the exceptions and confirming the report.

Messrs. Russell & Longenecker, for appellant:

The Act of 1836, 1 Purd. 645, makes rent a first lien on goods liable to distress. Such a law cannot be repealed by implication.

Wood's App. 30 Pa. 274; Vastine's App. 88 Pa. 165-6.

It was held by Clayton, P. J., of Delaware County, that the Act of 1872 did not give wages priority over rent.

Maloy's Est. 1 Del. Co. R. 331.

The Act of June 12, 1878, P. L. 207, provided a statutory remedy by which the rent will be preferred, namely, notice to the landlord before the sale. The evident intent of the Legislature was to furnish to landlords information of the amount of claims ahead of them, so that they might protect themselves by attending the sale and bidding the property to a sum which would cover their claims also.

The Common Pleas of Cumberland County recognized that the notice should be given to the sheriff and the lessors before the sale.

Nogle v. Cumberland Ore Bank Co. 1 Ches. Co. R. 491; S. C. 1 Del. Co. R. 335.

How can it be alleged that the notice was given to the sheriff as our bailiff when it was served on him on August 19, and our notice that we claimed rent was not given the sheriff until August 20?

The Act of 1872, § 2, provided for notice in case of landlord's warrants. The Act of 1878 could not have been intended, therefore, for such cases alone.

Messrs. John Cessna, R. M. Speer and J. M. Reynolds, for appellee:

The construction contended for by the exceptants would make the law a trap and snare for labor claimants.

The laborers may not know that there is a landlord or that he claims rent. The landlord is not required to give notice of his claim until the return day of the writ. And yet the laborers must give him notice whether they can find him or not, at the risk of his leaving the country to avoid notice, or whether he has rent coming to him or not.

The reasonable view of the law is that all notices shall be given to the officer executing the writ, who is the person to distribute the proceeds; and this is notice to every party interested. The landlord is fully protected as, by such notice, he must know, before the sale, to what sum the property should be bid.

The Act of 1878 declared the intent of the Act of 1872 to give wages a preference over rent. The provision as to notice to the landlord or his bailiff was intended to apply to landlords' warrants or distress for rent. But, if meant to apply to other processes as well, the person executing the writ became the bailiff or receiver for the landlord, for he was bound to account to the landlord at his peril.

Maloy's Est. 1 Del. Co. R. 331, was ruled by the peculiar agreement made in that case. But when Judge Clayton put his ruling on section 2 of the Act of 1872, he overlooked the fact that section 1 provided that wages should be preferred and first paid out of the proceeds, and that the Act further contained an express provision repealing "all laws or parts of laws inconsistent therewith."

The Act of 1849, construed in Wood's App. 30 Pa. 280, contained no provision concerning the order of payment.

The weight of reason and authority appears to be with Judge Finletter's opinion in O'Brien v. Hamilton, 12 Phila. 387. See also Livingood's App. 17 W. N. C. 420, 3 Cent. Rep. 392, where our position seems to be acquiesced in and conceded.

Mr. Justice Sterrett delivered the opinion of the court:

The fund in controversy, part proceeds of execution against the Kemble Coal & Iron Company, was claimed on the one hand by the Union Bank of Huntingdon and the Bedford County Bank, assignees, respectively, of certain labor claims, and, on the other hand, by the respective landlords of premises on which portions of the property sold was located. It is virtually conceded that the Company appellant is entitled to its demand, $2,129.38, unless its claim is postponed to the assigned labor claims held by the two banks.

The firm of Wight & Lauder, merchants at Riddlesburg, where the Kemble Coal & Iron Company was located, paid in cash and merchandise a large sum to laborers, employed by that Company, and took assignments of their respective claims. Some of these were subsequently assigned by Wight & Lauder to each of the banks above named. Upon the facts found by the learned auditor and approved by the court, the two banks respectively stand in the shoes of the laborers, whose claims they thus acquired by assignment, and are clearly entitled to the sums awarded to them, unless the claim of appellant for rent is superior to theirs.

It is conceded that the assignments, through which the banks claim, gave them a preference over ordinary execution creditors, but it is contended by appellant that under the eighty-fourth section of the Act of 1836, rent is a preferred claim and must be first paid out of the proceeds of such sale, etc. This was formerly the case, but it was competent for the Legislature to give wages a preference over rent, and this we think was accomplished by the Act of April 9, 1872, Purd. 1464, pl. 1, and the supplement of June 12, 1878.

The former declares that claims for wages, therein specified, "shall be preferred and first paid out of the proceeds of the sale of such mine, manufactory, business or other property as aforesaid;" and the latter, for the purpose of removing all doubt as to the intention of the Legislature and more fully protecting labor claims, declares: "It is the true intent and meaning of the provisions of the Act of Assembly, entitled 'An Act for the Better Protection of the Wages of Mechanics, Laborers and Others,' passed the 9th day of April, 1872, that the several classes of laborers in said Act mentioned shall have a preference over landlords in all claims for rent of any mines, manufactories or other real estate held under lease, where the lessee or lessees are the parties employing the miners, mechanics, laborers or clerks; Provided, That any person or persons claiming a preference as above provided, shall give notice of the nature and amount of his claims to the landlord or his bailiff before the actual sale of the property levied upon." P. L. 207.

It is conceded that notice in due form of the labor claims in question was given to the sheriff before the sale; but it is contended by appellant that it should have been given to the landlord and not to the sheriff, and hence there was a failure to comply with the provisions of the supplement. This would doubtless be correct, if the landlord had been proceeding by warrant of distress for the collection of rent; but such was not the case. The sheriff as an officer of the court of common pleas was executing a writ directed to him by that court.

Construing the Acts together, we have no doubt the notice in such cases is properly given to the sheriff. In some cases, indeed, it would be impossible to notify the landlord before sale of the property.

The conclusions reached by the learned auditor and court below, as to the sufficiency of the notice, are correct.

It follows from what has been said that neither of the specifications is sustained.

Decrees affirmed and appeal dismissed, at the costs of appellant.

APPEAL of the CAMBRIA IRON CO.

The receipt and acceptance of drafts for rent due, held, under the evidence in this case, to be an acceptance as payment of the rent, by means of which the right to distrain is lost.

(Decided October 4, 1886.)

A PPEAL from a decree of the Common Pleas of Bedford County, distributing the proceeds of a sheriff's sale. Affirmed.

The facts upon which the case arose are stated in the preceding case, Riddlesburg Coal & Iron Co's. App.

William S. Robinson, called by the Cambria Iron Company, testified before the auditor: "I reside in Philadelphia; am secretary of Cambria Iron Company. There was a lease between Kemble Coal & Iron Company and Cambria Iron Company for certain ore lands. I have the lease here. (Lease produced.) There is due from the Kemble Coal & Iron Company to the Cambria Iron Company, for rent within one year preceding the 8th of August, 1884, the sum of $3,091.11. This sum is the rent due from the first day of January, 1884, to August 8, 1884. No part of this rent has been paid.

"For the months of January, February and March, 1884, a draft was given in settlement for royalty for those months, dated April 17, at four months, due August 17 and 20; protested for nonpayment; amount, $1,275. And for the royalty for the months of April, May, June, and July a draft was given, dated July 15, at four months, which will be due November 15 and 18, for $1,705. The balance is the royalty for eight days of August, $111.11. The drafts were drawn by the Cambria Iron Company upon the Kemble Coal & Iron Company and accepted by R. A. Wight, treasurer. The drafts were for the seven months stated, and were for the rents then due."

Cross examined: "These drafts do not represent any other business transaction. They are all for royalty. The royalty was payable on the 15th of each month for the months preceding. On the 8th of August the royalty for July would not be due. The royalty for July would be $416.66, and for the eight days of August, $111.11. These drafts were given in settlement of royalty up to the dates of the drafts. Receipts, I suppose, were given by the Cambria Iron Company. These receipts were in full for royalty settled for. The treasurer, Mr. John T. Kille, settled with the Kemble Company on behalf of the Cambria Iron Company and signed the receipts. I have not a blank form of the receipts. The receipts must have been sent to R. A. Wight, treasurer. Those receipts, so far as I know, are still in the possession of the Kemble Coal & Iron Company. I cannot say whether the receipts were given on the days the drafts were drawn or not, but they must have been given when we received the accepted draft from the Kemble Company. The books of the Cambria Iron Company show this account for royalty paid and closed. * * * For a number of years they paid us in cash and after that they began to pay by drafts. From the time they began to pay by drafts our books show the account settled and paid when the accepted drafts were received."

The auditor found as follows, from the above testimony:

"All the rent of the Cambria Iron Company except for the eight days of August, amounting to $111.11, has been paid by accepted drafts on the Kemble Coal & Iron Company. When the accepted drafts were received by the Cambria Iron Company, the account was marked settled and paid on the books of the Company, and receipts were sent to the Kemble Coal & Iron Company for the rent represented by each of the said drafts when it was received. The right to claim rent out of the proceeds of a judicial sale depends on the landlord's right to distrain. It is true that the landlord may distrain, even if he has taken a note for the rent, as decided in Snyder v. Kunkleman, 8 Pen. & Watts, 487.

"In this case, however, it does not appear that any receipt was taken. In the case in hand the evidence shows that the accepted drafts were received in satisfaction of the rent. The drafts were payable four months after date. They contained interest for four months. The accounts were closed and receipts given. This clearly establishes, to the satisfaction of your auditor, that the drafts were accepted as payment; and the right of distress as to the rent settled and paid by these accepted drafts is taken away and it cannot participate in this distribution.

"As to the $111.11, that should be paid out of the fund in court, provided the rents are preferred to the wages of labor."

The auditor awarded the whole fund to the assignees of the wages claims, upon the ground that they were preferred claims.

The plaintiff in error filed the following exceptions, inter alia, which were dismissed by the court.

The auditor erred in finding that the drafts received by the Cambria Iron Company from the Kemble Coal & Iron Company were accepted as payment of the rent owing by the Kemble Coal & Iron Company to the Cambria Iron Company, and that by taking said drafts the said Cambria Iron Company lost the right to distrain.

The auditor erred in excluding the claims of the landlords and giving the fund or money in the sheriff's hands to the assignees of the labor claims.

The assignments of error specified, inter alia, the action of the court in dismissing the above exceptions.

Messrs. Russell & Longenecker, and Cyrus Elder, for appellant:

Although a judgment be obtained and special bail entered for stay of execution, the landlord may legally distrain upon the tenant for the same rent for which the judgment was entered.

Shetline v. Keemle, 2 Ashm. 29.

The recovery of judgment on a covenant for the payment of rent is not, without actual satisfaction, an extinguishment of the rent; and the lessor may, notwithstanding such recovery, distrain for the rent in arrears. The judgment can only be considered as additional security and not as satisfaction for the rent. Nor does it alter the case that the plaintiff has issued a fi.

fa. or a ca. sa. Still, the landlord has not received satisfaction.

Snyder v. Kunkleman, 8 Penr. & W. 487; Banbleon v. Smith, 2 Binn. 146; Jackson and Gross' Landlord & T. p. 127.

"Taking the note of a third person, when it was not to be taken in satisfaction of the rent" will not estop the landlord from distraining.

Kreiter v. Hammer, 1 Pears. 559.

Messrs. John Cessna, R. M. Speer and J. M. Reynolds, for appellees:

In Silver v. Williams, 17 Serg. & R. 292, it was ruled that the right of preference, as servants claiming their wages, supposing them even to have once had such right, had been waived and extinguished by their taking from the intestate single bills, payable at a future day with interest.

In Jones v. Shaohan, 4 Watts & Serg. 257, it was ruled that the acceptance of a note for the amount of the account of the mechanic if a receipt be given at the foot of the bill for a note "in full of the above," is evidence of satisfaction which should be left to the jury; and in Kreiter v. Hammer, 1 Pears. 559, it was ruled that the taking of a note would not debar the landlord from distraining unless accepted as satisfaction. See also Warren v. Forney, 13 Serg. & R. 52.

Mr. Justice Sterrett delivered the opinion of the court:

The subject of complaint in the first specification is the approval by the court of the learned auditor's finding, that the drafts received by appellant from the Kemble Coal & Iron Company were accepted as payment of the rent owing by the latter, and that by so taking said drafts appellant lost its right to distrain.

If this finding is correct, and presumptively it is so until the contrary clearly appears, it is conclusive of appellant's right to participate in the fund for distribution; and, hence the subordinate questions involved in the remaining specifications become immaterial. An examination of the testimony satisfies us that the learned auditor was fully warranted in finding as he did. Indeed, it is difficult to see how, with due regard to the evidence, he could have found otherwise. There was no error, therefore, in rejecting appellant's claim for rent upon the ground that it had been paid. But if the fact had been found otherwise, still appellant would not have been entitled to participate in the distribution, for the reason that the labor claims represented by the appellees were preferred claims and as such entitled to the whole fund, as has been determined in Riddlesburg Coal & Iron Company's Appeal from same decree [the preceding case].

Decree affirmed and appeal dismissed, at costs of appellant.

APPEAL of the HUNTINGDON & BROAD TOP R. R. Co.

The secretary, treasurer and business manager of an iron manufacturing company were jointly engaged in the management of a store not connected with the iron company. Held, that assignments of wages claims by the employees of the iron company in consideration of store bills and cash were valid assignments and did not extinguish the claims.

(Decided October 4, 1886.)

A PPEAL from a decree of the Common Pleas of Bedford County, to review the action of the court in distributing the proceeds of a sheriff's sale. Affirmed.

The facts upon which the case arose are stated in the Appeal of the Riddlesburg Coal & Iron Company, ante, 702.

On the point passed upon by the court in this case, the auditor reported:

"The landlords contend that the purchase of the wages of the laborers, by Wight & Lauder and by Lauder, was an extinguishment of them, and that the banks have nothing upon which to base their claims: that Wight & Lauder were the Kemble Coal & Iron Company. The evidence taken by your auditor clearly shows that Wight & Lauder were separate and distinct from the Kemble Coal & Iron Company; that they were a firm engaged in the mercantile business, while the Kemble Coal & Iron Company was a corporation engaged in the manufacture of iron, mining ore, coal, etc.

"Wight & Lauder purchased these labor claims against the company, paying full value for them. It is a well established rule that the assignment of a debt or claim carries with it all securities and remedies for its collection. Your auditor is of the opinion that Wight & Lauder having purchased these labor claims for full value, that the said Wight & Lauder thereby acquired all the securities and remedies for their collection that the laborers themselves had or would have had in this distribution, and that Wight & Lauder having assigned these labor claims to the banks for full value, the said banks have all the remedies for their collection that the laborers themselves would have had."

The auditor awarded the whole fund to the banks, upon the ground that they were preferred claims.

The appellant filed, inter alia, the following exceptions:

The auditor erred in not sustaining the position of this exceptant, to the effect that payment of wages by Wight & Lauder and W. A. Lauder was in fact, under the evidence, payment by the Kemble Coal & Iron Company and an extinguishment of the labor claims so paid.

The auditor erred in rejecting the claim of the Huntingdon & Broad Top Railroad Company for rent, and in appropriating the fund to the Union Bank and the Bedford County Bank.

The court below dismissed the exceptions, saying as to the first:

"As Wight & Lauder procured and paid for the assigned claims as a mercantile firm, and not as secretary and treasurer, or manager, the cases cited by exceptants, viz.: 22 Pa. 320, and 51 Pa. 483, do not apply as we read the cases and the evidence; and approving of his finding that the labor claims were not extinguished, the right of priority follows under the several Acts of Assembly, as there is no dispute but notice was in due form given the sheriff and in time."

The assignments of error specified, inter alia, the action of the court in dismissing the exceptions and confirming the report.

PA.

The evidence upon which the above facts were found was not printed by the appellant in its paper book.

Mr. Samuel T. Brown, for appellant:

A director, officer or confidential agent cannot create relations which place him in hostility to his principal. A purchase of such a debt is an extinguishment of it as against the corporation.

Hill v. Frazier, 22 Pa. 320.

An act innocent in itself becomes a fraud in law on the part of one holding a confidential relation.

Kisterbock's App. 51 Pa. 433.

On the question as to preference between rent and wages claims, substantially the same argument was made as that in the Riddlesburg Coal & Iron Company, ante, 704.

Messrs. John Cessna, R. M. Speer and J. M. Reynolds, for appellees:

No question having been raised as to the regularity of the assignment, our legal right to claim as assignees cannot be disputed.

2 Trickett, Liens, 571; Phila. Trust Co's. Appeal, 2 W. N. C. 593.

None of the evidence being printed by the plaintiff in error this court should disregard any assignment of error based thereon.

McCandless v. Young, 96 Pa. 289; Allen v. Laird, 101 Pa. 70; Brindle v. Brindle, 50 Pa. 387.

Mr. Justice Sterrett delivered the opinion of the court:

There was no error in refusing to hold, as complained of in the first specification, that payment of wages by Wight & Lauder and by W. A. Lauder, to the employees of the Kemble Coal & Iron Company, was in fact, under the evidence, payment by that company, and an extinguishment of the labor claims so paid. On the contrary, as has been held in other appeals from the same decree, the court below rightly held that the assignment of the labor claims, first to Wight & Lauder and subsequently by them to the two banks, appellees, invested the latter, respectively, with all the rights the labor claimants themselves would have had, if their respective claims had not been so sold and assigned.

The questions intended to be raised by the remaining specifications have been passed upon, adversely to appellant, in the appeals above referred to, and therefore do not require further comment.

Decree affirmed and appeal dismissed, at the costs of appellant.

APPEAL OF John W. FINK.

(Decided October 4, 1886.)

A PPEAL from a judgment of the Common Pleas of Bedford County, distributing the proceeds of a sheriff's sale. Affirmed.

Messrs. Kerr & McNamara, for appellant.

Messrs. John Cessna, R. M. Speer, and J. M. Reynolds, for appellees.

Mr. Justice Sterrett delivered the opinion of the court.

The questions raised by the specifications of error in this case are substantially the same as those involved in other appeals from same decree, viz.: Nos. 23, 24 and 48 of July Term 1886 [the three preceeding cases].

Without repeating what has been said in those cases, it is sufficient to say that neither of the specifications is sustained and the decree should be affirmed.

Decree affirmed and appeal dismissed, at the costs of appellant.

A. T. HAMILTON, Exr., Plff. in Err.,

John BAUM, Admr.

1. A married woman's judgment note for the purchase money of land is valid, although it contains no recital of the consideration.
2. Parol evidence is admissible to prove the consideration.
3. In a feigned issue to establish the consideration of a married woman's judgment note, evidence that, on the day the note was given by the defendant to the plaintiff, the plaintiff executed to her a deed of land, in which he recited a consideration for a greater sum than the judgment note, raises a presumption that the note was for the purchase money of the land; and this presumption, in the absence of evidence tending to connect the note with any other transaction, is sufficient to sustain a verdict for the plaintiff.

(Decided October 4, 1886.)

ERROR to the Common Pleas of Mifflin County, to review a judgment on a verdict for the plaintiff in a feigned issue. Affirmed.

This was a feigned issue in which John Baum, administrator d. b. n. c. t. a. of David Bloom was plaintiff, and A. T. Hamilton, executor of Margaret G. Hamilton, deceased, who survived John Hamilton, deceased, to ascertain the consideration of a judgment entered in 1865 upon a note signed by Margaret Hamilton and John Hamilton. The judgment was duly revived by sci. fa. in 1880.

In 1884, at the instance of A. T. Hamilton, executor, the judgment was opened and this issue was awarded. The order of the court was as follows:

"It being admitted that Margaret G. Hamilton was a feme covert when the judgment was confessed, the court makes the rule absolute and opens the judgment and directs an issue to ascertain whether the consideration of the judgment was the conveyance of a house and lot by the original plaintiff to Margaret G. Hamilton; the judgment to stand for a narr. and the defendant to plead non assumpsit."

At the trial the plaintiff's counsel offered in evidence the judgment and the note on which the judgment was entered, dated the 6th day of March, 1865, drawn by Margaret G. Hamilton and John Hamilton to David Bloom for $1,200, payable $500 on the first day of July, 1866, $500 on the first day of July, 1867, $200 on the first day of July, 1868, with interest on the whole from the first day of March, 1865; to be followed by evidence that a deed was executed by David Bloom and wife bearing date the date of the judgment for a house and lot on Dorcas Street, in the Borough of Lewistown, to Margaret Hamilton, for the consideration of $2,200.

Defendant's counsel objected: first, that the judgment note did not set out that it was for purchase money; second, that the judgment itself bears interest from a date prior to the conveyance mentioned in the offer of the plaintiff; third, that the prothonotary had no authority to enter judgment in this case against a married woman, unless the paper itself showed her liability; and that it is void as to the defendant, a married woman.

The court admitted the evidence, saying: "It is conceded that the maker of the note, Margaret Hamilton, was a feme covert at the time it was executed. We are trying a feigned issue to ascertain simply what the consideration of the judgment was, it being conceded that unless the consideration of the judgment was the purchase money of real estate conveyed by the payee in the note to the wife, the maker, that it would be void.

"The plaintiff offers in evidence a deed for real estate conveyed by plaintiff to the defendant, bearing the same date as does the disputed judgment; and we think that is a circumstance to go to the jury to enable them to determine whether the consideration of the judgment was for part purchase money of this property, as the case now stands. Of course if the defendant can show that the consideration is referred to some other transaction outside of the conveyance of the real estate, the proof would amount to nothing; but we take it that it is our duty to submit it to the jury in order to enable them to determine the question; and for that reason we overrule the objection and admit the evidence."

The evidence adduced at the trial is sufficiently set forth in the charge of the court to the jury, which was as follows:

"This is a feigned issue to try the consideration of a certain judgment entered in this court to number 33, April Term, 1865. The plaintiff alleges that the judgment was given to secure a part of the purchase money of certain real estate conveyed by David Bloom, the payee in the judgment, to Margaret Hamilton, one of the defendants.

"It is the settled law that a married woman cannot execute a valid obligation for the payment of money for any consideration under the sun, other than for the purchase money of real estate sold to her. Equity will sustain a judgment given by her to secure the purchase money of real estate conveyed to her, because it would be wrong to permit her to acquire the title to real estate sold to her without the payment of the purchase money. But even in such a case the obligation cannot be enforced against any other property she may have. Its collection must be enforced against the real estate alone that the obligation was given to secure.

"It is not denied but admitted that Margaret Hamilton, the defendant, was a feme covert when she executed the judgment note in dispute. The burden of proof is therefore upon the plaintiff, to satisfy the conscience of the jury affirmatively by the evidence that the disputed note was given in part payment of real estate conveyed to her by the payee. She denies this, and if the judgment was not given for this purpose plaintiff cannot recover.

["I decline to instruct you, as the learned counsel for the defendant has requested me to do, that the judgment is void because it was given by a married woman and fails to disclose on its face that it was given for purchase money. The sole question in the issue is the consideration of the judgment. It may be that if the judgment disclosed on its face that it was given by a married woman, it would be void because the consideration was not expressed on it. Such is not the case here. The judgment on its face is apparently valid. Parol evidence that the defendant was a feme covert when it was executed is invoked to defeat it; and for that reason the same kind of evidence is to be received to sustain it and establish a valid consideration. I charge you that the judgment is good, although it does not show on its face that it was given for purchase money, inasmuch as it does not appear to be against a married woman on its face, provided the evidence satisfies you that such was the fact. If you find from the evidence that such was the consideration, you will find for the plaintiff.] I have already told you that if it was given for anything else whatever, it is void, and you ought to find for the defendant.

["The plaintiff gave in evidence a deed from Bloom, the payee in the note, to the defendant, by which he conveyed to her a house and lot of ground situate on Dorcas Street, in this town. The deed is dated March 6, 1865, the very day the note in dispute was executed. The consideration in the deed is $2,200, and it is receipted for in the deed. Nevertheless the contention of the plaintiff is that the consideration money was not actually paid at the time, but that the disputed note was given to secure $1,200 of the purchase money that remained unpaid. It is insisted that you ought to find this, in the absence of evidence that the note was given for some other consideration. The only evidence that we have of any transaction between these parties is the giving of the conveyance, and the execution of the disputed note.

"The principle on which the plaintiff relies for your verdict is that he has given evidence of a transaction to which the consideration of the note can be referred; and that you ought to do so in the absence of evidence indicating that it referred to some other transaction. It is for you to say under all the evidence whether the note was given for the purchase money of real estate. The defendant has given no evidence to show that the note was given for some other consideration, or that it grew out of a different transaction. This is the only transaction in which the parties are brought together by the evidence. It is true the defendant contends that the receipt in the deed shows that the consideration money was fully paid at the time of its execution. On the other hand, the plaintiff contends that the experience of every day life tells us that a receipt for the purchase money is contained in every deed; yet the truth is that obligations are often taken for the payment of the purchase money recited in the deed either in whole or in part.]

P.A.

"The whole evidence is for the jury. The plaintiff must satisfy you affirmatively by the evidence that the consideration of the judgment was the purchase money of the land conveyed. If he has done this to your satisfaction, you will find for him. If he has not, and you believe that the judgment was given for any other consideration whatsoever, you will find for the defendant."

The verdict was for the plaintiff; whereupon, the defendant took this writ and assigned as error the admission of the plaintiff's evidence and the portions of the charge inclosed in brackets.

Mr. J. A. McKee, for plaintiff in error: The deed from David Bloom and wife to Margaret G. Hamilton contained a receipt in full of the consideration money therein mentioned, signed by David Bloom, and was prima facie evidence that the property was paid for at the time of its delivery, and would have warranted the court in striking the judgment off as void.

Gibson v. Winslow, 46 Pa. 384.

The court threw the burden of proof upon the defendant, to show what the judgment was given for, and substantially held that unless the defendant could show some other business dealings between the parties to which this judgment could refer, it would properly be referable to this purchase from David Bloom. This was error.

But this judgment on its face shows that it could not have reference to the purchase money of the house and lot mentioned in the deed, for it provides for interest from a time before the conveyance was made. It is error to submit to the jury a fact of which there is no evidence.

Calvert v. Good, 95 Pa. 65.

There was no allegation of fraud, accident or mistake in making the judgment bond to draw interest from March 1, 1865, or in dating the deed on the 6th day of March, 1865; and the law declares the writings to be not only the best but the only evidence.

Martin v. Berens, 67 Pa. 459.

Every judgment against a married woman which does not show her liability on its face is void.

Sheayne v. Lyon, 87 Pa. 486; Caldwell v. Walters, 18 Pa. 79; Keiper v. Helfricker, 42 Pa. 325; Steinman v. Ewing, 43 Pa. 63; Glyde v. Keister, 32 Pa. 85; Mahon v. Gormley, 24 Pa. 88; Dorrance v. Scott, 3 Whart. 309.

The plaintiff must set out such facts in his pleadings as bring the case within some of the exceptions contained in the Act of April 11, 1848, in order to charge the real estate of a feme covert.

Parke v. Kleeber, 37 Pa. 251; Murray v. Keyes, 35 Pa. 384; Loomis v. Fry, 91 Pa. 396; Huqus v. Dithridge Glass Co. 96 Pa. 163.

It was only necessary for us to deny our liability, until it was shown affirmatively (either by the instrument itself or by an admission on our part) that this obligation was given for purchase money, in order to defeat this claim.

Hecker v. Haak, 88 Pa. 288; Gould v. McFall, 1 Cent. Rep. 853; Quinn's App. 86 Pa. 447; Berger v. Clark, 79 Pa. 340.

This judgment is not simply voidable. It is absolutely void.

Quinn's App. and Dorrance v. Scott, supra; Shwayne v. Lyon, 67 Pa. 436.

Messrs. D. W. Woods & Son, for defendant in error:

Cited and relied upon Romborger's Admr. v. Ingraham, 38 Pa. 146.

Per Curiam:

The evidence was sufficient to carry this case to the jury. It was submitted in a clear and correct charge. The law was correctly declared. There was more than a scintilla of evidence to justify the verdict. The presumption arising from clearly established facts was not rebutted by any evidence whatever.

Judgment affirmed.

COMMONWEALTH of Pennsylvania, Plff.
in Err.,
v.

William COOK.

SAME v. SAME.

1. Upon conviction of fornication and bastardy, a defendant may be sentenced to pay a fine of $100, to pay the costs of prosecution, to give bond for the performance of any subsequent order of maintenance, and to stand committed until compliance.
2. Payment of lying-in expenses and an order of maintenance are not required to be imposed as part of the sentence; or at least it is not error to refuse to impose them after the defendant has been discharged from custody under the insolvent laws.
3. A defendant so convicted, sentenced and in custody may, after three months' imprisonment, obtain his discharge under the insolvent laws, without complying with any part of the sentence.

(Decided October 4, 1886.)

CERTIORARI to the Quarter Sessions of Warren County, to review a judgment discharging a rule to show cause why an additional sentence should not be imposed. Affirmed.

Certiorari sur appeal from a decree of the Common Pleas of Warren County, discharging an insolvent debtor. Affirmed.

The facts out of which these cases arose, as they appeared by the records were as follows:

William Cook, the defendant in error and appellee, was on December 3, 1884, indicted for fornication and bastardy, was convicted December 6, 1884, and sentenced, on December 13, 1884, to pay a fine of $100 to the overseers of the poor of Warren County, or the commissioners of the Rouse estate, and the costs of the prosecution, to give bond with one or more sufficient sureties to said overseers, in the sum of $500, to perform such order for the maintenance of said bastard child as the court should direct, and to stand committed and in custody until the sentence should be complied with.

The prisoner was accordingly committed and remained in custody until March 16, 1885, 886 when he was discharged upon giving bond to apply for the benefit of the insolvent laws.

June 1, 1885, he presented his petition in the Common Pleas of Warren County setting forth: "That he was arrested and detained in the custody of E. A. Allen, Sheriff of Warren County, by sentence of the Court of Quarter Sessions of Warren County, and that he was discharged from such custody by order of the court of common pleas, upon giving bond to the Commonwealth, with security approved by said court, conditioned to appear at this term of said court and present his petition for the benefit of the insolvent laws of the Commonwealth; * * * that he has resided within the Commonwealth for six months immediately preceding this application; * * * that he is willing to deliver up all his property for the use of his creditors, etc.; that his petition is accompanied with a statement of all his estate, effects and property, and also a statement of debts due by him, with a statement of the causes of his insolvency."

This petition and statements were duly verified. The petition was ordered to be filed, a day was fixed for a hearing, of which notice for three successive weeks was ordered to be given, and on July 27, 1885, upon proof of publication of notice of hearing for two consecutive weeks, the petitioner applied for a final order of discharge.

The Commonwealth thereupon filed an objection to the discharge "For the reason that the said William Cook has not been in actual confinement, in pursuance of sentence for fornication and bastardy, for a period not less than three months, the prisoner never having been sentenced for same according to law."

The court overruled the objection and, after the petitioner had taken the required oath and assigned to trustees, entered a decree discharging him.

On the same day and immediately after this decree was entered the Commonwealth moved the court of quarter sessions "To pronounce sentence upon the prisoner, by directing him to pay the expenses, if any, incurred at the birth of the bastard child, and by making such order for the maintenance of the said child as the court shall direct and appoint in addition to giving bond to comply with said order to pay the fine provided by law."

A rule to show cause was granted, and afterward discharged; whereupon, the Commonwealth obtained these two writs; and upon the certiorari to the quarter sessions assigned as error the action of the court in discharging the rule. Upon the certiorari sur appeal from the common pleas, the Commonwealth assigned as error that the court had no jurisdiction, under the insolvent laws, to discharge or give relief to a person confined by sentence or order of a criminal court, save for the causes specified in the forty-seventh section of the Act of June 16, 1836, and that the petition did not set forth such a cause.

Messrs. Geo. H. Higgins, Dist. Atty., H. H. Goucher and J. H. Donly, for Commonwealth, plaintiff in error and appellant:

It was the plain duty of the court of quarter sessions to sentence the defendant in accordance with the directions of the thirty-seventh section of the Act of March 31, 1860, which is mandatory and demands a compliance therewith in four essential particulars, viz.: a fine not exceeding $100, payment of the expenses incurred at the birth of such child, an order for maintenance, and a bond, with sureties, for the performance of such order.

Fornication and bastardy are, so far as the punishment is concerned, two separate and distinct offenses; for the sequent offense of bastardy may or may not follow the act of fornication; hence, the Legislature prescribed a fine for fornication, and an additional punishment for bastardy. The defendant was found guilty of both of these offenses on this indictment, and he is therefore subject to the punishment prescribed for each and both. The court below imposed a fine for fornication only.

The costs, and the lying-in expenses, and the maintenance of the child, are essential parts of the sentence in such cases.

Commonwealth v. Ahl, 43 Pa. 62; Commonwealth v. Gurley, 45 Pa. 392.

The sentence of the court must conform to the statute.

Daniels v. Commonwealth, 7 Pa. 371.

Security may be ordered for the performance of all the sentence, except the fine and costs.

Goddard v. Commonwealth, 6 Serg. & R. 282.

The errors appearing in the sentence upon the record in this case are manifest; and this court has ample power, under the first section of the Act of June 16, 1836, to either reverse, correct or remit to the court below, with directions that the same be corrected, and the sentence pronounced according to law.

Daniels v. Commonwealth, 7 Pa. 371; Mills v. Commonwealth, 18 Pa. 631; Commonwealth v. Gurley, 45 Pa. 392.

As the prisoner was confined under a defective and illegal sentence, that sentence afforded him no ground for seeking relief under the insolvent laws.

Messrs. Brown & Stone, for William Cook, defendant in error and appellee:

The defendant was sentenced to pay the fine and costs prescribed as a punishment for the crime, and to give the bond required by law as indemnity against the expense incurred or likely to be incurred as a consequence of his crime. This bond may be for the performance of all the sentence except the fine and costs.

Goddard v. Commonwealth, 6 Serg. & R. 282.

The court was correct in refusing to resentence the prisoner, as he was not then in custody and the term at which sentence was pronounced had expired; and hence, the time within which the sentence could be changed had passed.

The common pleas had jurisdiction of the petition for the benefit of the insolvent laws and the proceedings were legal.

By the Act of June 16, 1836, the court of common pleas of any county "in which any person may be confined for nonpayment of any fine, or of the costs of prosecution, or upon conviction of fornication or bastardy, and for no other cause, shall have power to discharge such person from such confinement on his making application and conforming to the provisions herein before directed in the case of insolvent debtors; Provided, That when such person shall have been sentenced to the payment of a fine, or after a conviction of fornication and bastardy, he shall not be entitled to make such application until after he shall have been in actual confinement in pursuance of such sentence for a period not less than three months."

Purd. Digest, p. 784.

By the Act of January 24, 1849, it was provided that "Any applicant for the benefit of the insolvent laws, who is or may hereafter be in confinement under sentence of any criminal court and who shall be entitled to be released from such confinement, on a compliance with existing Acts of Assembly, shall be released on giving bond as in civil cases."

Id.

And in civil cases any judge of the court of common pleas or the prothonotary of such court may make an order for the discharge of any debtor on his giving bond to appear at the next term of the court of common pleas of said county and present his petition for the benefit of the insolvent laws, etc.

Id. 778.

Per Curiam:

These two cases were argued together. They arise out of the same transaction and are somewhat blended. Some slight errors and irregularities do appear, but they are not of such magnitude as to demand a reversal of either judgment or decree. Therefore,

Judgment and decree each affirmed and the appeal dismissed, at the costs of the appellant.

John F. DAVIS, Plff. in Err.,
v.

COMMONWEALTH of Pennsylvania.

1. An indictment for adultery which charges that the defendant, being a married man and having a lawful wife living, did have carnal connection with a woman, naming her, not his lawful wife, is sufficient, without setting out the name of the defendant's wife. Act of March 31, 1860.
2. A conviction will not be reversed for a mere formal defect in the indictment which might have been amended in the court below or might be amended in this court.

(Decided October 18, 1886.)

ERROR to the Court of Quarter Sessions of Jefferson County, to review a judgment on conviction of defendant of the crime of adultery. Affirmed.

On the 20th day of May, 1885, one John B. Haugh made an information before J. W. Walker, Esq., a justice of the peace, in which John F. Davis was charged with adultery with a certain Celesta Hawk, "not his lawful wife." In pursuance therewith a warrant was issued and the defendant arrested.

On September 17, 1885, a true bill was found. On September 18, 1885, a jury was called and before the jury was sworn, a motion was made by defendant's attorneys, to quash the indictment for the reason that the name of the alleged wife of the defendant was not set forth in the said indictment.

The motion was overruled by the court, and defendant pleaded not guilty. The jury was sworn and found defendant guilty in manner and form as indicted. A motion was made for a new trial and was overruled, and on November 12, 1885, defendant was sentenced.

Defendant took this writ, assigning as error the action of the court in overruling his motion to quash the indictment.

Messrs. White & Scott, for plaintiff in error:

"Every offense, of course, must consist of certain facts and circumstances. And the general rule of pleading is that all the material facts and circumstances comprised in the definition of the offense must be stated."

Arch. Cr. Pr. & Pl. 8th ed. p. 265; Ree v. Horne, Cowp. 683.

"If any one fact or circumstance which is a material ingredient in the offense, as defined by the statute, be omitted, the indictment will be bad."

Arch. Cr. Pr. & Pl. p. 267.

"The omission of any fact or circumstance necessary to constitute the offense will be fatal."

Whart. Cr. Pl. & Pr. § 153.

"In the indictment nothing material shall be taken by intendment or implication."

2 Hawk, P. C. p. 314.

No material fact could be left out, to be supplied by evidence; for the law requires "that the indictment should state the facts of the crime with as much certainty as the nature of the case will admit."

1 Chitty, 140.

In the case of Commonwealth v. Corson, 4 Clark, 315, it was held that an indictment for adultery, against a married woman, must set forth upon the record the name of her husband.

"It is not sufficient, in an indictment for a statutory offense, to lay it in the words of the statute, unless they expressly serve to allege the act, with all the necessary additions, and without the least uncertainty or ambiguity."

Commonwealth v. Miller, 2 Pars. 480.

Offenses created by statute, as well as offenses at common law must be accurately and clearly described in an indictment, and if the offense cannot be so described without expanding the allegations beyond the mere words of the statute, then it is clear that the allegations of the indictment must be expanded to that extent; as it is universally true that no indictment is sufficient which does not accurately and clearly allege all the ingredients of which the offense is composed, so as to bring the accused within the true intent and meaning of the statute defining the offense.

Justice Clifford, in U. S. v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 562 (Bk. 23, L. ed. 595); citing 2 East, P. C. 1124; Dord v. People, 9 Barb. 675; Ike v. State, 23 Miss. 525; State v. Eldridge, 7 Eng. (Ark.) 608.

"In an indictment upon a statute, it is not sufficient to set forth the offense in the words of the statute, unless those words of themselves fully, directly and expressly, without any uncertainty or ambiguity, set forth all the elements necessary to constitute the offense intended to be punished."

Justice Gray, in U. S. v. Carl, 105 U. S. 612 (Bk. 26, L. ed. 1135); citing U. S. v. Cruikshank.

hank, above referred to: U. S. v. Simmons, 96 U. S. 360 (Bk. 24, L. ed. 819); Commonwealth v. Clifford, 8 Cush. 215; Commonwealth v. Bean, 11 Cush. 414; Commonwealth v. Bean, 14 Gray, 52; Commonwealth v. Filburn, 119 Mass. 297.

Mr. C. C. Benschoter, Dist.-Atty., for the Commonwealth.

Per Curiam:

The indictment before us charges that the defendant "then and there being a married man, and having a lawful wife living, did have carnal connection with a woman, Celesta Hawk, not his lawful wife." As the charge here recited strictly follows the definition of the crime of adultery as found in the thirty-sixth section of the Act of March 31, 1860, we think it was sufficient without setting out the name of the defendant's wife. In fact the eleventh section of the same Act so prescribes.

And without this, if it be admitted that the omission was a defect, it was but formal, and might, therefore, have been amended in the court below, or might be so amended even here now in this court.

The judgment is affirmed, and it is ordered that the record be returned to the Quarter Sessions, for the purpose of execution.

LAKE SHORE & MICHIGAN SOUTHERN R. CO., Pff. in Err.,

v.

Louis ROSENZWEIG.

1. The legal presumption of knowledge of the law does not extend to the by-laws and regulations of private corporations.
2. There is no legal presumption that a person about to become a passenger on a railway knows the rules and regulations of the railway company.
3. While a passenger is bound by reasonable rules and regulations not appearing on his ticket, his ignorance of regulations may excuse his acts done in violation of regulations unknown to him, so as not to constitute him a trespasser.
4. A passenger who enters a car by mistake is not a trespasser; and while the railway company may eject him, it must not put him off at an improper place.
5. Where a conductor ejects a passenger at an improper place, the company is liable for proximate injuries, or those which were the natural and probable consequence of the act of the conductor, such as under the circumstances of the case might and should have been foreseen by the conductor as likely to flow from his act.
6. In a proper case the jury may so find that the injury was the natural consequence of the conductor's act, although the plaintiff is unable to tell what caused his injuries.

7. The question of contributory negligence is for the jury where the evidence is conflicting.
8. Where an injury is inflicted willfully, or with reckless indifference to the rights of others, exemplary damages may be recovered.
9. In determining whether a conductor on a railway acted in reckless disregard of the rights of a passenger, the jury may consider that in ejecting the passenger the conductor violated an express rule of the company, calculated to promote the safety of passengers.
10. The declarations as to the location of pain and suffering, made to his physician by a party injured, are competent evidence in an action to recover damages for the injuries. (Lichtenwallner v. Laubach, 105 Pa. 866.)
11. Where the claims of each party are stated with equal fairness, it is not error for the court to state that the plaintiff claimed that his ejection was wrongful, wanton and inhuman.
12. A judgment will not be reversed on an assignment of a single sentence of a charge of the court as error when from the context it is plain there was no error and that the jury could not have been misled.
13. A technical defect in the pleadings which did not and could not mislead is not ground for reversal after a trial on the merits. The declaration, if it does not set forth the case with accuracy, is amendable.
14. Evidence testing the recollection and credibility, or showing the bias of a witness, is admissible as cross examination.
15. The exclusion of evidence is no cause for reversal where it is admitted at a later stage of the trial.

(Decided October 4, 1886.)

ERROR to the Common Pleas of Erie County, to review a judgment on a verdict for plaintiff for $48,750, in an action on the case. Affirmed.

The declaration recited that the defendant, a common carrier, etc., sold the plaintiff a ticket worded as follows: "The Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railway, Erie to Cleveland and return; good only for thirty days from the date of sale, and for one continuous passage each way;" that the plaintiff paid for the same and was carried to the City of Cleveland, on November 25, 1883, on said ticket; and that the defendant, on November 26, 1883, received the plaintiff into its passenger car, as a passenger, to be safely carried to the City of Erie; that after having carried him a short distance, the defendant, by its conductor and agent, refused to accept the ticket and ordered the plaintiff to get off; that the plaintiff, objecting, tendered the fare for a passage from Cleveland to Erie, which the defendant refused; and the plaintiff then and there objecting and protesting against being ejected and put off, and urging, asking and insisting that he be carried at least to the first or nearest station and place of safety, the defendant wrongfully and unlawfully compelled the plaintiff to leave his seat in said car and train, it being in the night time and the place a dangerous one; it being upon and in the midst of many railway tracks, switches, rails, where many cars, engines, locomotives and trains pass and repass, and where freight trains were and are made up, and a place strange and unknown to the plaintiff; and being, against his will and protest, by the defendant negligently, carelessly and unlawfully placed and left in a dangerous and unsafe place, while endeavoring to seek a place of safety, was struck, etc., by moving trains, etc., and tripped, thrown and felled by rails and other implements and railway tools and machinery, and cut and bruised, etc.; and that the said plaintiff was further damaged and injured by the indignities to which he was subjected, in being driven, ejected and expelled from the said public highway, train and car.

The second count alleged that on November 26, 1883, the plaintiff was accepted, admitted and received into a passenger car, as a passenger, to be carried to the City of Erie, and, being so received, tendered the lawful fare, which the defendant refused, etc.

This count then proceeded substantially as the first count, claiming damages for bodily harm, pain, medical attendance, etc. The damages were laid in $100,000.

On the trial before Galbraith, P. J., the plaintiff offered evidence in support of the averments of his narr. The defendant showed that numerous posters had been placed in the depots at Erie and Cleveland, giving notice that mileage and round trip tickets would not be accepted for passage on limited express train No. 20, the one from which the plaintiff was ejected.

The assistant ticket agent at Erie, Williams, testified that he had a conversation with the plaintiff before he took the train, in which he read the rules to him and discussed the posters.

Jacob Loesch testified in substance that the plaintiff got on the train surreptitiously, after it was in motion. The plaintiff contradicted these witnesses in his testimony, and alleged that he had no knowledge that his ticket was not good on the train which he took, and that he had previously used a round trip ticket on this train.

The further facts appear from the opinion of the supreme court or are recited in the assignments of error.

The court charged the jury, inter alia, as follows:

The duties and obligations and rights of the public and railroad companies are reciprocal, and arise from the necessities and public convenience involved; these companies have the right to adopt and enforce such reasonable rules and regulations as are suggested and required for the proper management of their business, and the convenient, safe and proper running of their trains; the public, on the other hand, have a right to be accommodated and fairly treated.

The rules and regulations for the government of the passengers traveling on these great thoroughfares must be reasonable and just. The passenger who purchases a ticket takes it subject to these reasonable rules and regulations; and it is his duty when he purchases a ticket, to inform himself as to the train he proposes to enter, and to ascertain what his ticket entitles him to.

[If he fails to do this, and without any fault or neglect or violation of their own rules on the part of the railroad company by which such error is brought about, he takes a train on which his ticket is not good, he may be obliged to leave such train, he not being subjected to unnecessary force or being put off at a dangerous or improper place.] [The forcible ejection of a passenger from a train, especially at a point away from a station, or even at a station, is such an exercise of authority as should only be undertaken in a clear case; much more when the place is not at a station, and they have no right to eject a passenger at a place of danger, or where injury is liable to result.] Sixteenth and seventeenth assignments of error.

[Where a person knowingly violates the rules of a railroad by intruding upon a train without a ticket, or with a ticket that he knows does not entitle him to travel on such train, such person becomes a mere trespasser and is not entitled to the same care or consideration that should be given to one who unwittingly and ignorantly and innocently gets upon a train upon which his ticket does not entitle him to ride.] Eighteenth assignment of error.

[You are instructed, as a matter of law in this case, that it was Mr. Rosenzweig's duty to ascertain whether his ticket entitled him to a passage on the train in question before going upon it; and if he failed to do so the Company would have a right to carry out its rule and to eject him from the car, using no more force than was necessary, and putting him off at a safe place, in accordance with its own rule, which prohibited conductors from ejecting a passenger except at a station or near a dwelling house.] Nineteenth assignment of error.

[If the plaintiff, knowing that he was not entitled to ride on No. 20, and in willful violation of the rules of the Company, entered the train, then he would, I take it, be entitled to less consideration than he otherwise could claim: he would be a mere trespasser; the law would not hold the Company or its officers to so careful a line of conduct as in the case of a merely negligent but well meaning person who had ignorantly or carelessly entered the wrong train;] [but if he had been carried before on this train, on the same kind of ticket, and having no knowledge or notice that his round trip ticket was not good, he entered the car without any objection being made by the employees of the Company, whose duty it was to see that the door of the car was kept locked, and that persons not having the proper ticket were not allowed to enter, he could not afterwards be treated as a wrong doer and mere trespasser, and summarily ejected at such place as suited the caprice or temper of the conductor, and in violation of the rule of the Company which requires that passengers should not be put off except at a station, or near a dwelling house; and such ejection would be wrongful.] Twentieth and twenty-first assignments of error.

[It was the duty of the conductor to use discrimination, and not to treat as a mere trespasser and tramp and wrong doer, a passenger who was merely guilty at most of an error of judgment or neglect to make the inquiries he ought legally to have made.] Twenty-second assignment of error.

The duty of the conductor was to comply with the rules of the Company and, if the plaintiff was without a proper ticket, to put him off at a station or dwelling house; and if he chose to treat the plaintiff as a mere wanton, wrong doer and willful trespasser, by ejecting him in the Company's yard, at a distance from the station and away from dwelling houses, and at a dangerous place, he took the risk for his employer of such ejection at such improper place, afterwards turning out to be a mistake.

[In this view of the case it becomes important for you to consider and determine as to the conflicting evidence of the plaintiff and Williams, and the plaintiff and Jacob Loesch; for, if their evidence is credited, the plaintiff must stand in a somewhat different position from that which he will occupy in case you find their evidence is unreliable, and that the plaintiff was merely ignorantly and innocently on the train, instead of being there surreptitiously and knowing him to be there without right.] Twenty-third assignment of error.

The plaintiff requested the court to charge, inter alia, as follows:

1. If the jury find from the evidence that the plaintiff purchased a first class ticket entitling him to ride from Erie to Cleveland and return; that he had no notice from the defendant that his ticket so purchased did not entitle him to ride on train No. 20; that the servants of the defendant, in violation of the rule of defendant, omitted to lock the doors of the car when in Cleveland, or to notify the plaintiff that he had no right to take a seat in said car; that they permitted him to take a seat in said car; that the servants of defendant ejected plaintiff from said car after the train had left the depot, when it was passing through the yard of defendant's railway; that said yard was considered by defendant to be a dangerous place; that plaintiff, when endeavoring with care to walk through said yard back to the depot, was hurt by a car or by falling into or over some obstruction, then, and in that case, your verdict should be for the plaintiff.

Answer. This cannot be affirmed as an entirety; the plaintiff was not entitled to notice that the ticket he held did not allow him to ride on the train in question; but if he had been previously carried on the train on the same kind of a ticket, and in good faith, without notice or knowledge on his part that he had no right to a passage on the particular train mentioned, and with permission and acquiescence of the employees of defendant, the plaintiff took a seat in a car of said train, and the employees of the defendant Corporation afterwards ejected him at a dangerous place, and the plaintiff, while using ordinary care and caution, in endeavoring to make his way through the yard back to the depot, received injuries such as should have been foreseen by the conductor of the train as the natural or probable consequence of leaving the plaintiff in such a place in the night time, the plaintiff is entitled to recover. First assignment of error.

2. That if the jury find from the evidence that the servants of the defendant ejected the plaintiff from its cars, not at a regular station nor at a dwelling house, as required by the rules of the Company, but at a place known to the defendant to be dangerous and unsafe, then, and in that case, if they find for the plaintiff their verdict should be for punitive damages.

Answer. This is affirmed, with the single qualification that while the jury may, under such circumstances, find punitive or exemplary damages in favor of plaintiff, they are at liberty to find compensatory damages only, if they see proper. Second assignment of error.

The defendant requested the court to charge, inter alia, as follows:

1. That plaintiff was bound to ascertain and know the rules and regulations prescribed by the defendant Company, under which passengers could ride upon that train, and that the law presumes he did know them.

Answer. The first part of this point is affirmed; but the last is refused. It is true that the plaintiff was bound to ascertain the rules of the Company as to the train on which he took passage, but there is no legal presumption that he did so ascertain them. Third assignment of error.

3. The plaintiff in this action admits and testifies that he did not know and made no effort to ascertain whether, under the rules of the Company, his ticket entitled him to ride on the train from which he was ejected; if, therefore, the jury shall find from the evidence in this case that (under the established rules of defendant Company) the ticket that the plaintiff had purchased did not entitle him to ride on that particular train, then the court is requested to charge, as a matter of law, that, no special contract being averred or proved, the plaintiff became and was a trespasser on that particular train, and defendant had a perfect legal right to eject him therefrom, using no more force than was necessary for that purpose.

Answer. This is for the jury. Instructions should be asked for on a hypothetical case, and not by requiring the court to affirm or negative alleged facts as having been proven. The legal proposition included in this point is covered by the answer to the next point. Fourth assignment of error.

4. If the jury shall find, from the evidence in this case and within the law as it shall be given them by the court, that under established rules of defendant Company the plaintiff had no legal right to be on the particular train of defendant Company from which he was ejected, and was a trespasser thereon, then the court is requested to charge you as a matter of law that defendant Company was "not required to put him off at one place rather than another; while the law will not permit a person to be exposed wantonly to peril, there is no rule which requires any consideration to be shown for the mere convenience of a wrong doer" or trespasser; and if the jury shall find from the evidence in this case that plaintiff was a wrong doer and trespasser on said train, then plaintiff cannot recover in this action without averring and proving that the act was willful and wanton, which he has not done.

Answer. This is refused. It is for the jury to find from the evidence whether the plaintiff was a mere trespasser, wantonly and knowingly intruding on the train, aware of his having no right to be there, or whether he was there innocently and ignorantly, in good faith, and through the negligence of the servants of the Company (defendant) in omitting to obey the rule which required them to take precaution against persons without proper tickets getting upon said train. The mere fact that the ticket held by plaintiff did not entitle him to be carried on that particular train, under the rules and regulations of the Company (defendant), would not, as assumed in this point, entitle the defendant's servants to treat him as a wrong doer or relieve the Company from treating him with care and humanity. Fifth assignment of error.

5. Plaintiff's right to recover in this action must be measured by the averments contained in his declaration; plaintiff has, in legal effect, alleged a right to recover based upon a contract which entitled him to a ride from Cleveland to Erie on the particular train from which he was ejected. The burden of proof is upon the plaintiff to show this. The court is requested to charge as a matter of law that plaintiff has wholly failed to prove such a contract, and therefore cannot recover in this action.

Answer. This is refused. The right of the plaintiff to recover in this action does not depend entirely upon his showing a right to ride upon the train in question. Sixth assignment of error.

7. That if the jury find from the evidence in this case that under the rules of the defendant Company the conductor could not receive a round trip ticket nor money from the plaintiff for a ride from Cleveland to Erie upon said train, the conductor had a legal right to put him off the train when he saw fit; and unless in doing so he used more force than was necessary, and that plaintiff was injured by the use of such unnecessary force, he cannot recover.

Answer. This is refused. The conductor had no right to put the plaintiff off the train except at a proper and safe place; and it is for the jury to say from the evidence whether the place where plaintiff was ejected was a proper and safe place or otherwise. Seventh assignment of error.

8. That under the evidence in this case the plaintiff was unlawfully upon the train, and therefore a trespasser, and the conductor had a perfect legal right to expel him from the train at any time he saw fit, and the defendant is not liable for any injuries that he received as the result of such legal expulsion; therefore the jury cannot consider the question of whether the plaintiff was in fact injured on his way back to the depot from the place where he was so put off said train, or the question in what manner such injury occurred, if it did occur. Refused. Eighth assignment of error.

9. Persons about to walk upon a railroad track, whether voluntarily or involuntarily, are bound to recognize all the natural and usual hazards of the undertaking, and make use of their sense of hearing as well as sight; and if either cannot be rendered available, the obligation to use the other is stronger, to ascertain while they are on or about the tracks whether a train is in dangerous proximity, or injury from any cause is to be apprehended; and if they attempt to walk in such a place without this precaution, it will be at their own peril and responsibility, for the consequences cannot be shifted upon the defendant. Affirmed.

10. If the jury believe, from the evidence, that the plaintiff was left by the conductor in a reasonably safe place between the tracks of the defendant Company's road, he was bound as a prudent and careful man not to leave such place until he could find another equally safe, if such another could be found with reasonable diligence and care on his part; and if he failed to use such reasonable diligence and care, he was guilty of contributory negligence, and cannot recover. Affirmed.

11. If the jury find, from the evidence, that the tracks in the defendant Company's yard were lighted, artificially or otherwise, at the time and place when and where plaintiff was put off the car, so that a man of ordinary observation could see all the surroundings with reasonable clearness, and with reasonable care and prudence in observing his surroundings could have found the safe means of escape from the tracks of the Company's road; which the evidence shows existed, and did not use such reasonable care and prudence in seeking such means of escape from any dangers that may have then existed, he was guilty of contributory negligence, and cannot recover. Affirmed.

12. That if the jury find, from the evidence, that plaintiff was put off the cars without violence, and without any personal injury to him up to the time he was so put off, but that the injuries of which he complains were all received after he was so put off the cars, and in an attempt to reach the city or the depot, the plaintiff cannot recover, unless the jury find from the same evidence that the injury he did receive was the natural and probable consequence of the act of the conductor, such a consequence as under the surrounding circumstances of the case might and ought to have been foreseen by the conductor as likely to flow from his act. Affirmed.

13. That even if the conductor had no right to put the plaintiff off the car as he did, if he put him off without violence or immediate injury, and under an honest belief that he had a right to do so, and the alleged personal injury was received after he was so put off the cars, plaintiff cannot recover for the injury so received unless such injuries were the natural and probable consequence of the act of the conductor; such a consequence as under the surrounding circumstances of the case might and should have been foreseen by the conductor as likely to flow from his act. Affirmed.

14. If the jury believe from the evidence in this case that at Erie Street bridge there were two safe ways by which plaintiff could have traveled south to the city, one by the platform and stairway, on the south side of defendant's tracks, and another by the well defined pathway on the north side of the defendant's tracks, then it will not do for plaintiff to say that he did not know of them, for the law made it his duty to look around and know for himself that there were such places of safe travel; and if he neglected this obvious duty and pursued his way down the tracks and yard of the defendant Company, in consequence of which an injury resulted, then he was guilty of negligence contributing to the injury, and he cannot recover in this action.

Answer. This is affirmed, with the qualification that the jury should examine the evidence carefully, plaintiff being a stranger at the place, and his evidence being that the conductor pointed towards the depot as a place of safety towards which he should make his way by the tracks. Ninth assignment of error.

15. If the jury shall find, from the evidence in this case, that on the north side of defendant's tracks at Erie Street there was a platform and stairway ascending therefrom to a bridge from which there was a safe way to escape from the tracks and all dangers incident thereto, and that on the south side of defendant's right of way there was a well defined pathway leading to other steps ascending to Erie Street, over and by either of which plaintiff could travel in safety southward to the city, and by the exercise of ordinary care and prudence on his part he might have discovered these safe methods of travel, then he was guilty of negligence contributing to the injury, and he cannot recover in this action. Affirmed.

16. The plaintiff has testified in this action that after being ejected from the train he walked down the tracks and towards the depot, without looking for a safe way of travel by way of the platform and stairway leading to the bridge at Erie Street. His admitted neglect in this regard was a violation of the duty that the law imposed, and was contributory negligence, and the plaintiff cannot recover.

Answer. I decline to affirm the matter of fact claimed in this point. It was the duty of the plaintiff to make every effort to secure his own safety; and if by this neglect to do so he sustained injury, he cannot recover. It is not for the court to affirm alleged points of evidence; that is for the jury. The proper way is to put a hypothetical case. Tenth assignment of error.

17. If the jury shall find from the evidence in this case that after plaintiff was ejected from the car he walked down the tracks of the defendant Company and negligently or otherwise placed himself in front of a moving car or train, or heedlessly ran into or on to something, in consequence of which an injury resulted, then the court is requested to charge, as a matter of law, that the plaintiff was guilty of negligence contributing to the injury, and cannot recover in this action. Affirmed.

18. If the plaintiff himself cannot tell how he received his alleged injuries, whether by a blow from a moving car or engine, or by a fall over some obstacle in his path, the jury cannot guess, speculate or infer how his alleged injuries were received, nor that they were the natural and probable consequence of the act of the conductor, such a consequence as under the surrounding circumstances of the case might and ought to have been foreseen by the conductor as likely to occur; and the verdict should be for the defendant.

Answer. While it is true that the jury cannot guess, speculate or infer as to how the plaintiff's injuries were received, yet if they believe from the evidence that such injuries were received by the plaintiff as the direct consequence of his expulsion from the train, and were such injuries as might have been foreseen by the conductor as the natural or probable consequence of leaving the plaintiff at such a place, and that the inability of the plaintiff to testify as to the manner in which he was hurt, results from his having been rendered insensible at the time from such injuries, the fact that he is unable to give an account of the manner of his being so hurt should not of itself have the effect of defeating his claim. The point is therefore refused. Eleventh assignment of error.

19. The plaintiff having testified in answer to the following question to wit:

Q. Now, in your direct examination, as I understand you, you didn't know how you were hurt?

A. I have so stated, that I didn't know the exact cause. It was a blow from the rear, or I was struck from the rear; whether it was by a car or locomotive, or whether by the projection or whether from the shove I got, or whether a trip and a fall and falling and doing it; I don't know whether it was from the rear; I don't know what did it.

Q. You don't know whether you was hit by an engine or car, or whether you were sand-bagged?

A. No sir.

Q. Then it is altogether probable that the blow was the cause of the fall?

A. It may have been. I haven't any means of knowing.

Q. What is your best impression?

A. I couldn't say; I don't know.

Q. You haven't any impressions about it?

A. No sir.

And the foregoing being the uncontradicted evidence of the plaintiff himself, the court is requested to charge the jury that there is no evidence that the expulsion from the cars was the direct cause of the injury, and that therefore the plaintiff cannot recover for any injuries sustained after he was put off the cars.

Answer. This is refused for the reason just stated in answer to the eighteenth point of defendant, and for the further reason that it is not proper to require the court to read to the jury particular portions of the evidence in a case, and thus to give it undue prominence, besides affirming its correctness. The proper method is to put a hypothetical case. Twelfth assignment of error.

20. It being an undisputed fact that the plaintiff did not receive the injuries complained of in the act of his ejection from the car, but afterwards, he must satisfy the jury by the evidence how he received his alleged injuries; and unless he has done so he cannot recover.

Answer. This is affirmed, but not in the narrow sense of requiring the plaintiff to show the exact manner of his being hurt, if he is unable to do so. It is sufficient if the jury find from the evidence that the injuries were such as resulted and might have been foreseen as the natural or probable consequence of ejecting the plaintiff at night at the place where he was put off. Thirteenth assignment of error.

21. That under all the evidence in this case the plaintiff cannot recover and the verdict must be for the defendant.

Answer. This is refused. The case is for the jury under all the evidence. Fourteenth assignment of error.

The court admitted the following evidence of Dr. Brandes, the plaintiff's physician:

Q. What, if anything, during the time you were treating him, was said by him in relation to his feet?

A. He complained of coldness in his feet.

Objected to—that the statements of the plaintiff to his physician are not competent unless against his interest; and also objects to this testimony of what the plaintiff said to him; that the doctor is called as a medical expert, and that he is not to state the statements of the witness.

The court: The exclamations of pain and the statements of the patient to his physician, as to his suffering and the locality from which the suffering came, is competent evidence, and the objection is overruled. Twenty-fourth assignment of error.

The court excluded the following question and offer on the part of the defendant:

Q. Do you know of your own knowledge where Collin's puller was when No. 20 pulled out of the Union Depot going east?

Objected to as leading.

The court: That is leading and excluded.

Defendant's counsel offers this to find out whether the witness does know where the train was, to be followed by asking him, if he answers that he does know, where it was.

The court: It is a leading question and overruled because it admits of a yes or no answer. Twenty-fifth assignment of error.

The court allowed the following question to be asked defendant's witness:

Q. The fare from Cleveland to Erie was the same on all express trains for one through ticket from Cleveland to Erie, as on this Limited Express?

Objected to by the defense, as incompetent testimony and not cross examination.

The court: He has testified that this ticket was not good on that train; now that opens the door for you to cross examine him as to what trains it would be good on; and I don't know but what it would as to what the fare was on other trains, as testing his recollection and credibility as to that point; the question is allowed. Twenty-sixth assignment of error.

The court also allowed the following question to be asked defendant's witness:

Q. Didn't you say to Policemen Shaffer and Sandusky that Dr. Brandes was in "cohoos" with him?

A. No sir.

Objected to by the defense, that Dr. Brandes isn't on trial and that it is not cross examination.

The court: It is strictly cross examination. Any question that will show the bias or prejudice of the witness is always admitted. Twenty-seventh assignment of error.

Messrs. Rasselas Brown, John P. Vincent, C. D. Roys and S. M. Brainerd, for plaintiff in error:

A railroad company has a right to make and enforce all needful and reasonable rules and regulations for the management and operation of its road and trains.

Johnson v. R. R. Corp. 46 N. H. 213 and cases there cited; State v. Overton, 14 Neb. 485; R. R. Co. v. Bartram, 11 Ohio St. 457; Cheney v. R. R. Co. 11 Met. 121.

It is the duty of persons doing business with the company to inform themselves of the rules and regulations and to conform to them.

Dietrich v. R. R. Co. 71 Pa. 432; R. Co. v. Clark, 72 Pa. 231; R. R. Co. v. Green, 86 Pa. 421; Oranford v. R. R. Co. 26 Ohio St. 580; R. R. Co. v. Whittemore, 43 Ill. 421.

In case of purchasing a ticket it is the duty of a person to know on what train it can be used; the ticket is but a part of the contract for passage, the rules and regulations being the other part.

Dietrich v. R. R. Co., R. Co. v. Clark, Crawford v. R. R. Co., and R. R. Co. v. Whittemore, supra.

The law imposing the duty of knowledge upon the passenger, there is a conclusive legal presumption that he had the knowledge.

Horan v. Weiler, 41 Pa. 470.

There can be no recovery unless there is negligence; and there can be no negligence without a breach of duty.

R. R. Co. v. Schwindling, 101 Pa. 258; Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Reed, 75 Ill. 125.

A railroad company has the right to forcibly eject those who refuse to comply with reasonable regulations.

Hibbard v. R. R. Co. 15 N. Y. 455; Townsend v. R. R. Co. 56 N. Y. 295; R. R. Co. v. Fleming, 18 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 347; R. Co. v. Griffin, 68 Ill. 499; Frederick v. R. R. Co. 87 Mich. 342.

It is always a question of law for the court, whether the admitted or uncontroverted facts, as they stand upon the record, constitute a legal cause of action.

Paddon v. People's Ins. Co. 107 Ill. 195; R. Co. v. Lewis, 109 Ill. 128; Grooms v. R. R. Co. 67 Me. 100; Hoag v. R. R. Co. 85 Pa. 293; R. R. Co. v. Schwindling, 101 Pa. 258.

To permit a jury to pass upon a fact admitted or unquestioned is to permit it to find a fact not admitted, and therefore to find a condition of things which is denied by both parties to the suit.

Hoag v. R. R. Co. 85 Pa. 297; King v. Thompson, 87 Pa. 369; R. R. Co. v. Fries, 87 Pa. 284; Harrisburg v. Saylor, 87 Pa. 216; Goshorn v. Smith, 92 Pa. 435; Jennings v. R. R. Co. 93 Pa. 337; R. Co. v. Lewis, 109 Ill. 128; Paddon v. People's Ins. Co. 107 Ill. 198; Pleasants v. Fant, 22 Wall. 116 (89 U. S. bk. 22, L. ed. 780).

The court assumed that the acts were willful and wanton. It should have been left to the jury.

R. R. Co. v. Harwood, 80 Ill. 88; Payne v. Reese, 100 Pa. 306; Gramlich v. Wurst, 86 Pa. 78; Baker v. Fehr, 97 Pa. 72; Goshorn v. Smith, 92 Pa. 435; R. R. Co. v. Kirk, 90 Pa. 15; Harrisburg v. Saylor, 87 Pa. 216.

It has never been judicially determined that the acts specified in the instruction constituted negligence.

R. R. v. Co. Kirk, 90 Pa. 19.

There was no cause of action made out under the declaration.

Frederick v. R. R. Co. 87 Mich. 342; Hunter v. McHoe, 100 Pa. 38, 41; R. R. Co. v. Marcott, 41 Mich. 433; R. Co. v. Stark, 88 Mich. 714; R. Co. v. Robinson, 106 Ill. 142; East St. Louis Packing, etc. Co. v. Hightower, 92 Ill. 140.

The plaintiff is bound by his pleading and cannot enlarge the issue. The rule is "That if the pleader, though needlessly, describe the tort and the means effecting it, with minuteness and particularity, and the proof substantially vary from the statement, there will be a fatal variance which will occasion a nonsuit."

1 Chitty, Pl. 15th Am. ed. p. 362; Bloomington v. Goodrich, 88 Ill. 558.

Plaintiff's right of recovery must be confined to the particular negligence charged in the declaration.

R. R. Co. v. Mock, 72 Ill. 141; R. R. Co. v. Robinson, 106 Ill. 142; R. R. Co. v. McKee, 43 Ill. 119.

An allegation in a petition that a railway company carelessly, negligently, wrongfully and unlawfully ran its car over and killed the plaintiff's intestate does not amount to an allegation that the carelessness and negligence were willful; and the recovery must be confined to compensatory damages only.

Jacobs v. R. R. Co. 10 Bush (Ky.) 263; Robinson v. Stokely, 3 Watts, 270; Stanfield v. Phillips, 78 Pa. 73; Johnson v. C. P. R. Co. 51 Iowa, 25.

"Unlawfully" states only a conclusion of law and is mere surplussage.

R. R. Co. v. Dodge, 72 Ill. 253; Kilgore v. Furgeason, 77 Ill. 218; People v. Village of Crotty, 93 Ill. 180.

In some of the States, as in New Hampshire, exemplary damages, ultra compensation, are denied, changing the rule previously existing in that State.

Fay v. Parker, 53 N. H. 342.

Where there has been no oppression, fraud, wantonness or other circumstance to call for exemplary damages, these large verdicts are a violation of the rule of compensation.

Nagle v. Mullison, 84 Pa. 48; P. R. Co. v. Kelly, 81 Pa. 372; R. R. Co. v. Schwindling, 101 Pa. 258; Cutler v. Smith, 57 Ill. 252; Pullman Car Co. v. Reed, 75 Ill. 125; R. Co. v. Beggs, 85 Ill. 80.

Unless the injury has been wantonly inflicted, exemplary damages cannot be given and the jury must be confined to damages strictly compensatory.

R. R. Co. v. Books, 57 Pa. 389.

The act complained of must be the proximate and not the remote cause of the injury, to entitle the injured party to recover.

R. R. Co. v. Kerr, 62 Pa. 353; Morrison v. Davis, 20 Pa. 171; R. R. Co. v. Keighron, 74 Pa. 816; Fairbanks v. Kerr, 70 Pa. 90; McGrew v. Stone, 53 Pa. 436; Hoag v. R. R. Co. 85 Pa. 293; Ryan v. R. R. Co. 35 N. Y. 210; R. Co. v. Valley, 82 Ohio, 345; Henry v. R. Co. 76 Mo. 288.

If this conductor or any other, on a prior occasion, in violation of the rules of the Company and in neglect of duty, allowed the plaintiff or anyone else to ride on this train without being provided with the proper ticket, it gives to the plaintiff no rights, and cannot be made available by the court or jury to justify the conduct of the plaintiff or establish his right to recover against the Company.

R. R. Co. v. Miller, 40 Miss. 45; R. R. Co. v. Kendrick, 40 Miss. 374.

Messrs. S. A. Davenport, G. A. Allen and J. Ross Thompson, for defendant in error:

It is the duty of all to know the law, but when did it become a legal duty to know the rules of a railroad company? The case of Horan v. Weiler, 41 Pa. 470, has reference to statutory law.

Under the facts the plaintiff was entitled to a special notice of this regulation.

R. R. Co. v. Spiker, 105 Pa. 142; R. R. Co. v. Greenwood, 79 Pa. 373; Maroney v. R. R. Co. 106 Mass. 160.

Corporations, like natural persons, are liable in exemplary damages, when the facts of the case are of a character to warrant them.

Malecek v. R. Co. 57 Mo. 17.

The master is liable for the willful and even the malicious acts of his servants in the line of his duty, and exemplary damages may be given against the corporation for injuries inflicted by its servants, willfully or maliciously, and whether authorized or ratified by it or not.

Goddard v. R. R. Co. 57 Maine, 202; Hopkins v. R. R. Co. 36 N. H. 9; R. R. Co. v. Slusser, 19 Ohio St. 157; R. R. Co. v. Larkin, 47 Md. 155; R. R. Co. v. Arms, 91 U. S. 489 (Bk. 23, L. ed. 874); R. R. Co. v. Bryan, 90 Ill. 126, R. R. Co. v. Donahue, 70 Pa. 119.

It is proper to submit to the jury the question whether the conductor in putting plaintiff off was wanton, reckless and oppressive, and therefore the proper subject of exemplary damages.

Evans v. R. R. Co. 11 Mo. App. 468.

Conceding that the defendant had a right to eject the plaintiff from the train, we think it had no right to do it elsewhere than at some regular station on the road. Any rule or regulation of the defendant that requires or allows such an act to be done between stations, to a person in the condition of the plaintiff, thus subjecting him to the trouble and expense of going a number of miles in order to take another train, savors too much of vindictiveness to be reasonable.

Maples v. R. R. Co. 38 Conn. 561.

"It is a principle too well settled to require further elucidation that a person who, by mistake, gets on a passenger train other than the one which he intended to take, is, nevertheless, a passenger upon the train he is on, and the relation of passenger and carrier exists between him and the company."

R. R. Co. v. Gilbert, The Reporter, No 14, April 7, 1886; R. R. Co. v. Powell, 40 Ind. 37; Baker v. R. R. Co. 24 N. Y. 599.

When it is alleged that an injury arose from negligence, the question of the proximate cause is to be decided by the jury.

Hoag v. R. R. Co. 85 Pa. 293; R. R. Co. v. McKeen, 90 Pa. 123; R. R. Co. v. Lacey, 89 Pa. 453; Drake v. Kiely, 93 Pa. 492; R. R. Co. v. Hope, 80 Pa. 373; Brown v. R. Co. 3 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 444; Scott v. Hunter, 46 Pa. 192; R. R. Co. v. Brannen, 1 W. N. C. 227.

Our case is parallel with Allen v. Willard, 57 Pa. 374.

Mr. Justice Trunkey delivered the opinion of the court:

On the 25th of November, 1883, the plaintiff purchased a ticket at defendant's station in Erie, good only for thirty days, for one continuous passage each way, from Erie to Cleveland and return. The next morning, between 1 and 2 o'clock, when he was about to take the limited express train to return to Erie, an employee of the defendant directed him to the day coach; he stepped in, sat down and quickly curled up and went to sleep. After the train had started he was awakened by the conductor's call for tickets, and instantly took from his pocket the ticket and a roll of money.

The conductor reached for the ticket, immediately said: "My orders are to put you off," grabbed the bell cord, pushed the ticket back, and said: "Your ticket is no good."

Then the plaintiff vainly endeavored to show the conductor that he was mistaken, offered money in payment of the fare, which was refused, and begged not to be put off at that place but to be carried to the next station; the conductor answered: "My orders are to put you off, and off you must get. I obey orders if I break owners. Come."

Thereupon the plaintiff followed the conductor out of the car, and on reaching the ground the conductor pointed to a light and said: "That will take you to the depot." The plaintiff started towards the light, soon saw it was on a locomotive, which ran by him. He then tried to get off the tracks; came against what he supposed was a freight train which he believed was just in motion; turned to pass around the train and in doing so passed another train back of it; then believed it was safer to go northward, and as he started he noticed a light to his left, a train of cars backing, and a single car moving; about the same time another engine passed him; and when he had crossed some tracks he was struck in the rear and fell, unconscious.

The condition on the face of the ticket, that it was good only for thirty days, was the only one of which the plaintiff had knowledge. He believed it was good on every train; had used that kind of tickets on the defendant's road for five or six years; never knew there was any discrimination in its use between trains, and had traveled on the limited express from Cleveland to Erie on such ticket, in March or April preceding the date of the injury. When he purchased this ticket and attempted to use it, he did not know there was any difference, as to the right to use it, between the limited express and other trains. Neither the ticket agent nor anybody else informed him that it was not good on the limited express.

Among the facts in this case the foregoing are testified by the plaintiff; and however much in some particulars his testimony may conflict with opposing testimony, and however strange it may appear that the plaintiff knew nothing of the regulations respecting the limited express trains, his credibility and the truth of his statements were for determination by the jury. All facts which the jury were warranted in finding must be kept in view in considering the alleged errors in the rulings of the learned judge of the common pleas.

If believed, the testimony of the plaintiff shows that he entered the day coach of the limited express, in good faith, by direction and apparent assent of the defendant's employees, without notice or actual knowledge that his ticket was not good on that train, until so informed by the conductor, and that he was put off the train in the midst of railway tracks on which were moving and standing cars and locomotives, as soon as the conductor could stop, after seeing the ticket.

The plaintiff's ticket was evidence of the payment of his fare and of his right to be carried according to its terms. It did not express the whole contract. What it does set forth may be ascertained from the reasonable rules and regulations of the defendant; and the holder of the ticket is bound to inform himself of such regulations, respecting the conduct of trains and the rights of passengers. Dietrich v. R. R. Co. 71 Pa. 492.

The jury were instructed that the rules adopted by the defendant, limiting the passengers on the limited express to such as purchased special tickets, were reasonable; that it was the plaintiff's duty to ascertain whether his ticket entitled him to a passage on that train before going upon it; and that if he went on without a proper ticket the Company had the right to eject him, at a safe place, using no more force than necessary.

This was substantially repeated in response to the defendant's first, second and seventh points, with addition that it was not incumbent on the defendant to bring home to the plaintiff a knowledge of its rules and regulations. But the court refused to charge that the law presumes that the plaintiff did know the regulations and that therefore the conductor, if he saw fit, had the right to eject the plaintiff at an improper and unsafe place. Whether there is a legal presumption of such knowledge is the chief question raised by the assignments of error.

At the outset the defendant supports the proposition that the law presumes that the plaintiff knew of the regulations, by a most specious and ingenious argument. It is clear that an irrebuttable presumption is meant. The result of affirmance of the proposition is indicated in the brief thus:

"The law made it the duty of the plaintiff to ascertain, before taking a seat in the car, whether his ticket entitled him to ride on that particular train. * * * But whether as a matter of fact he knew this cuts no figure in this case. In legal contemplation he did know it. The law made it his duty to know it and being a duty which the law imposed, there is a conclusive legal presumption that he did know it."

The only case cited in support of such doctrine is Horan v. Weiler, 41 Pa. 470, where the rule was recognized that a breach of the laws of the State is not to be presumed against anyone, and the presumption is the contrary until proof overcomes it. That case gives no sanction to the proposition claimed; and the proposition is at variance with the decision in R. R. Co. v. Greenwood, 79 Pa. 373.

There, a rule was adopted and published that after February 1, 1873, passengers would not be carried on freight trains, except way freight, and not on way freight trains, unless they had tickets. Mrs. Greenwood got on the train without a ticket, and offered to pay the fare to the conductor; he refused to receive it and put her off about a mile from a station. She had been accustomed to ride on that train and to pay her fare to the conductor. She had no actual knowledge of the rule. Held, that the rule was reasonable; but the plaintiff having ridden in the car before and after the making of the rule, without a ticket and without objection, the company should not turn her out at a distance from the station, without proof of express notice or actual knowledge of the rule forbidding anyone to enter the car without a ticket. Under the circumstances, putting up a notice at the station house was not sufficient. The question of legal presumption of knowledge by the plaintiff of the rule was not raised, and probably was not then conceived.

"Ingrance of the law which everyone is bound to know excuseth no one." Every person in a country must be conclusively presumed to know its laws sufficiently to be able to regulate his conduct by them; for this is indispensably necessary in order to prevent greater evils. Knowledge of the laws of the State is in all cases presumed, though in no case it perfectly exists, and in multitudes of cases does not exist at all in the concrete. To a presumption of law probability is not necessary; but probability is necessary to a presumption of fact. Whart. Ev. § 1237.

But this legal presumption of knowledge has never been extended to the by-laws and regulations of private corporations. No necessity has been shown for judicial enunciation that there is a legal presumption, or a fiction of law that a person about to become a passenger or who has become a passenger on a railway knows the rules and regulations of the railway company.

A contract was made between the parties when the plaintiff purchased the ticket. Although he neglected to inform himself of all its terms, he was bound by them unless waived by the defendant. He cannot set up ignorance of them in order to establish rights not therein stipulated and implied. If he could, the defendant had no right at all to eject him from the train. Hence, in a proper sense, he was bound to ascertain and know the regulations of the defendant entering into the contract, and he had no greater rights thereunder than if he had acquired actual knowledge of its terms. As his contract gave him no right to ride on the limited express, the Company could lawfully eject him.

But under the facts which the jury were warranted in finding, the defendant was bound to treat the plaintiff as a passenger who by mistake had got on a train not included in the contract. He was entitled to the rights and privileges of a passenger, except as to limited express trains. He promptly exhibited his ticket, the evidence of his contract, to the conductor. As a passenger he was rightfully at the station waiting for a train to take him to the place named in the ticket, and entered the car designated to him by an official as the coach for passengers to Erie. There was neither gate nor closed door nor employee, to warn him that his ticket was not good on that train.

The plaintiff was at the station, a passenger. His entering the car was not like the case of a man entering the dwelling house of another unbidden. One is a public conveyance; the other is private and the occupant's home. A passenger who enters a car by mistake is not a trespasser who may be sued as such when he commits no actual injury; he has rights other than those of a trespasser. He may so conduct himself as to become a trespasser, after being informed of his mistake.

The defendant is a carrier, and its cars are for the accommodation of travelers. It owes a duty to every passenger who, in good faith, purchases a ticket and enters any of its conveyances. If the conveyance is not going in the direction the passenger wants to go, or is one which by the contract the passenger has no right to take, its duty is to inform the passenger and put him off at a proper place. This principle was recognized in R. R. Co. v. Schwindling, 101 Pa. 258.

In that case the plaintiff was a child, went on the platform of the station and was injured, but was not there as a passenger, and had no business of any kind with the defendant or any of its agents or employees. The defendant was not liable because it owed no duty to the plaintiff. In the opinion it is remarked, as conceded, that when a person goes on the platform at a railway station as a passenger, or on business connected with the company, the company owes him a duty; and if he be injured by the negligent act of the company, he may recover damages.

There is no evidence of collusion or conspiracy between the plaintiff and any of the defendant's servants, to the end that he might wrongfully ride on the limited express. As regards the plaintiff, the acts of the persons in charge of the train were the acts of the defendant. As respects his rights, it is immaterial whether the servants of the defendant violated its rules by omitting to lock the doors of the car or to give him notice that he had no right to enter and take a seat; the doors were not locked and the plaintiff was not notified; and it was submitted to the jury to find whether he entered with the consent or acquiescence of the employees of the defendant.

A passenger who has an open way to an open car, going to the place to which he bought and holds a ticket, without knowledge that the ticket is not good on such car, is not to be treated as a wrong doer endeavoring to ride without payment of fare, or to ride on a car which he knows his ticket gives no right to enter.

If the plaintiff knew that his ticket was not good on that car, and that he had no right to enter without a special ticket, he was a trespasser, otherwise he was not; and the determination of this was fairly submitted to the jury.

For the reasons stated, the third, fourth, fifth, seventh and eighth specifications of error are not sustained. Nor need much be added with reference to the first specification. The plaintiff's first point was not affirmed as an entirety; but instead, the court gave full instruction on the matters suggested in the point. What the court said in the answer was the instruction, and was free of error. That instruction did not submit whether the defendant considered the place dangerous when the plaintiff was put off, but did submit whether he was ejected at a dangerous place.

If it be true that the plaintiff was ejected a little west of the bridge, the conductor pointing to a light, remarking that would take him to the depot, it is by no means singular that the plaintiff did not see the bridge, or that the jury found that amid the numerous railway tracks and moving cars and locomotives, in the night time, it was a dangerous place for a stranger. And if he was ejected east of the bridge, there is testimony that it was amidst railway tracks, moving trains and locomotives, and of the efforts of the plaintiff to reach a place of safety.

All the defendant's points, from the ninth to the seventeenth, except the sixteenth, both inclusive, were affirmed. These need not be repeated. The jury in that way was fully instructed respecting the requisite care and duty of the plaintiff after he was ejected, and that any negligence on his part in looking out for his safety would defeat his claim for damages. These points are referred to as aiding to understand the instructions of which complaint is made. For instance, the fourteenth point sharply defines the duty of the plaintiff with respect to the safe ways at the bridge, and instructed the jury that if he neglected his duty he could not recover. But in the sixteenth point the court is asked to determine the fact of neglect and to direct a verdict for defendant. The fourteenth point was pertinent with reference to the testimony.

The plaintiff, since he was hurt, has learned the location of the bridge, and he thinks he was put off the car east of it; he has no recollection of passing under it; did not look for it; could have seen it had he looked for it; did not then know a bridge was there, and there was nothing to call his attention to a bridge. To have affirmed the defendant's sixteenth point would have been palpable error.

The defendant's eighteenth, nineteenth and twentieth points were rightly refused, with proper instructions on the subject suggested. If he was knocked down by a blow in his rear which rendered him unconscious, it does not follow that because he cannot tell what struck him, the jury may not find the fact that his injury was the direct consequence of a particular act. It was unnecessary to find whether he was struck by a locomotive or by a car; but it was essential that the jury should find that his injuries were the natural and probable consequence of the act of the conductor; such a consequence as, under the surrounding circumstances of the case, might and should have been foreseen by the conductor as likely to flow from his act.

It is said that these points were intended to squarely present the question of remote and probable cause. If the plaintiff was put off at a safe place and he wandered to a dangerous one, the cause was remote. So would it be, had he remained in the place of safety and some agency had brought his hurt. Was the place dangerous—not alone because of the railway tracks and switches, but of their use by trains, cars, locomotives and for the making up of trains? These were the conditions present which made the place dangerous, especially dangerous for a stranger in the night time.

While the plaintiff was trying to get out of that place he received the injury. There is as little reason for inference that he was hurt by a sand bag as there would have been had the blow killed him. It is probable that the jury inferred that one of the things which made the place dangerous struck him. There is where the defendant put him, and where he was hurt; the cause and effect were closely connected, and by prudent circumspection and ordinary thoughtfulness the conductor could have foreseen that the plaintiff's injury was likely to happen.

Under the facts and circumstances which the jury could properly find, had the court ruled that the defendant was not liable by reason of remoteness of the cause of injury, it would have been equivalent to saying that it was wholly immaterial whether the plaintiff was ejected at a safe or a dangerous place, for in either case he could not recover.

The questions raised by the numerous alleged errors in the general charge have already been considered and only two of the specifications, the fifteenth and twenty-second, will be noted. The fifteenth complains of the following sentence: "The plaintiff further claims that the place where he was put off was a dangerous and improper place for putting off a passenger, and that his ejection was a wrongful, wanton and inhuman act on the part of the conductor and wholly unjustified by the circumstances."

The defendant characterizes this as unwarranted, unjust and unfair; that there is no such averment in the declaration, nor was evidence thereof introduced at the trial; and that the statement was calculated to poison the minds of the jury. It is true that the phrase "wanton and inhuman" is not in the declaration; but each count avers that in the night time, the plaintiff urging, asking and insisting that he be carried at least to the nearest station and place of safety, the conductor compelled him to get off at a dangerous place, "it being upon and in the midst of many railway tracks, switches, trains, cars, engines, locomotives, and where trains of freight were and are made up, and where trains, cars, engines and locomotives pass and repass, and at a place strange and unknown to the plaintiff."

The plaintiff claimed that there was testimony tending to prove that averment; and very likely orally, at the trial, spoke of the act of ejecting him at such a place as wanton and inhuman. But whether he did so qualify the act or not, the court merely stated the claim, without alleging or asserting anything, or indicating that it was sustained by proof. With equal fairness the claims of each party were stated. If the averment in the declaration be true, was not the act of the conductor inhuman?

The twenty-second specification complains of the following:

"It was the duty of the conductor to use discrimination, and not to treat as a mere trespasser and tramp and wrong doer, a passenger who was merely guilty at most of an error of judgment or neglect to make inquiries he ought legally to have made."

That proposition is sound. If the jury found that the plaintiff was a passenger, merely guilty of error of judgment and neglect to make the inquiries he ought to have made, then he was not to be treated as a trespasser and wrong doer. In exercising discrimination the conductor would note his conduct, whether he had or had not a ticket, or whether he was able and willing immediately to pay the fare. If he acted as a trespasser and wrong doer, and not as a passenger who had made a mistake, he could not complain of the treatment he thus invited.

With the context, it is plain that the jury could not have understood that sentence as an instruction that the plaintiff was a passenger only guilty of error of judgment and neglect. In the sentence immediately preceding, the court charged that if the plaintiff, knowing that he was not entitled to ride on that train and in willful violation of the rules of the Company, entered the train, he was a mere trespasser. And the jury were repeatedly told they were to determine every question of fact.

There was no error in the refusal of defendant's fifth point. The second count alleges no contract other than is implied by accepting the plaintiff as a passenger, without his having a ticket, and charges that his tender of the fare was refused and that he was wrongfully ejected at a dangerous place. His right to recover, under the pleadings, did not depend on showing a right to ride on the limited express. He was bound to show and did show that he was a passenger, and as such if, by the omission of the defendant's employees to warn him that he could not rightfully enter that train without a special ticket, he entered it by mistake, he was entitled to the treatment due to a passenger, though not entitled to ride on that train. It is clear that the cause was tried on its merits; and if it be that the declaration does not set forth the case with accuracy, it is amendable. A mere technical defect, that did not and could not mislead, is no ground for reversal.

The twenty-fourth specification is not sustained, for reasons stated in Lichtenwallner v. Laubach, 105 Pa. 366.

Were it conceded that it was error to exclude the question made the subject of the twenty-fifth specification, there is now no cause for complaint; for, at a later stage in the trial, the defendant recalled the witness, who corrected the alleged mistake and was examined and testified fully on the very point to which the overruled question was directed.

Manifestly, there is no error in the rulings made the subjects of the last two specifications.

The remaining specification which will be remarked alleges error in the qualified affirmation of the plaintiff's second point: "That if the jury find from the evidence that the servants of the defendant ejected the plaintiff from its cars, not at a regular station nor at a dwelling house, as required by the rules of the Company, but at a place known to the defendant to be dangerous and unsafe, then and in that case, if they find for the plaintiff, their verdict should be for punitive damages."

The jury were instructed that under such circumstances they could find punitive damages or only compensatory damages. In considering other points, reference has been made to the averments and evidence touching the time, place and circumstances of the plaintiff's ejection.

It is uncontroverted that the rules referred to in the point existed, and respecting them the defendant well says: "But the rules of the Company were not established for the benefit of trespassers; they were established for the protection of the public and for the benefit of those with whom they stand in contractual relation." It is unnecessary now to consider whether the Company may put off a trespasser to whom it owes no duty, at a place where there is probability that he will be killed.

Very little stress need be put on the existence of said rules, reasonable as they are, directing only such treatment as ought to be given to passengers were no such rules expressly adopted. That they are for guidance of the employees, in the putting off passengers who have no right to ride on the trains which they have entered, is obvious. If they had a right on the train there would be no occasion to put them off. But in determining whether the conductor acted in reckless disregard of the plaintiff's rights, the jury ought to have kept in view the fact that he violated an express rule calculated to promote the safety of passengers and those having contractual relations with the defendant.

This conductor committed no battery. He made no threats. He acted quickly. A glance at the ticket, a pull of the bell rope, the stopping of the train, a deaf ear to the plaintiff's entreaties to be carried to a place of safety, a few significant words, and the plaintiff followed him to the ground, there to be pointed to a light towards the depot, but not to a bridge or any safe way out of his peril. If there was no willful misconduct by the conductor, how can it be said that he was not recklessly indifferent to the consequences likely to befall the plaintiff? If the suit were against him there could be little question that the jury would be permitted to give exemplary damages.

The liability of railway and other corporations to exemplary damages for gross negligence is well settled. The general rule in cases for negligence is that only compensatory damages can be given. Juries are not at liberty to go farther than compensation, unless the injury was done willfully or was the result of that reckless indifference to the rights of others which is equivalent to a violation of them. There must be willful misconduct, or that entire want of care which would raise a presumption of conscious indifference to consequences. R. Co. v. Arms, 91 U. S. 489 [Bk. 23, L. ed. 374].

The Corporation is liable for exemplary damages for the act of its servant done within the scope of his authority, under circumstances which would give such right to the plaintiff, as against the servant, were the suit against him instead of the Corporation.

Judgment affirmed.

An application for reargument was subsequently made herein and refused.

William WHITE, Plff. in Err.,
v.

WESTERN ASSURANCE CO. of Toronto, Canada.

Keeping a barrel of crude petroleum in a shed adjoining a foundry, to supply, through a connecting pipe, fuel to a steam boiler within the foundry, is a breach of a condition in the fire insurance policy on machinery, tools, etc., in the foundry which stipulates that the policy shall become void "if in said premises there be kept gunpowder, fireworks, nitroglycerine, phosphorus, saltpeter, nitrate of soda, petroleum, naphtha, gasoline, benzine, benzole or benzine varnish, or there be kept or used therein camphene, spirit gas, or any burning fluid, or any chemical oils, without written permission in this policy (except the use of refined coal, kerosene or other carbon oil for lights, if the same be drawn and the lamps filled by daylight)."

(Decided October 4, 1886.)

ERROR to the Common Pleas of Warren County, to review a judgment on a verdict for the defendant in an action of covenant upon a policy of fire insurance. Affirmed.

The facts, as they appeared at the trial before BROWN, P. J., are stated in the charge as follows:

"On the 12th day of April, 1883, the plaintiff, William White, obtained a policy of insurance from the defendant, insuring property that belonged to him, consisting of patterns, tools, shafting, machinery, etc., belonging to a foundry, against loss by fire. About a month after the insurance was effected the premises burned, and the property of plaintiff was destroyed. A portion of it, at least, was destroyed or injured. By an arrangement between the plaintiff and the defendant, which had reference only to the actual amount of the loss, it was determined that the amount was $448.

"The defendant now makes defense, alleging that under the terms of the policy of insurance this contract of insurance was void. That is based upon this provision in the policy, which we say to you was part of the contract between the plaintiff and the defendant: 'If in said premises there be kept gunpowder, fireworks, nitroglycerine, phosphorus, saltpeter, nitrate of soda, petroleum, naphtha, gasoline, benzine, benzole or benzine varnish, or there be kept or used therein camphene, spirit gas, or any burning fluid, or any chemical oils, without the written permission in this policy (except the use of refined coal, kerosene or other carbon oil for lights, if the same is drawn and the lamps filled by daylight), then and in every such case this policy shall become void.'

"Parties who come into court basing their rights upon a contract have a right to recover only upon the strength of that contract. And if it be that the facts in this case show that the plaintiff, in violation of the terms of the policy of insurance, has kept petroleum upon the premises in which the property insured was contained, then the policy is void.

"The evidence is that, from the making of the policy of insurance down to the time of the fire, a barrel of petroleum was kept within a distance of from five feet to six feet of the boiler that propelled the engine used in the foundry; that it was kept outside of the building itself, in a shed adjoining the building, the wall or side of which formed one side of the shed; that, by a pipe connected with the barrel, the oil was conducted to the fire pan under the boiler.

"This use appears from the evidence to have been habitual.

"[It seems to us that the storing of this oil, although it may have been outside of the building, it being in a shed adjoining and connected with the building, is to be taken as a part of the building itself, and so made by the insured; but whether this be so or not according to the undisputed evidence, there was a continuous and habitual use of the oil, and the habitual keeping of it in the pipe at least, that led from the barrel to the fire box and upon these premises.]

"While it would please us much better to have before us a case where the plaintiff would be entitled to indemnity for his misfortune, it is our duty to lay down the law to you as we consider it to be.

"[Taking the stipulation contained in this policy, we cannot regard it as anything other than an agreement on the part of the plaintiff that if in said premises there be kept petroleum, then this policy shall be void; and we cannot, under the evidence, come to any other conclusion than that the plaintiff did keep petroleum in the premises. Although we are reluctant to take this view of it, we deem it our duty to say to you that the plaintiff is not entitled to a verdict.]"

The verdict and judgment were for the defendant; whereupon, the plaintiff took this writ and assigned as error the portions of the charge enclosed in brackets.

Messrs. Wilbur & Schnur, for plaintiff in error:

The first clause of the condition prohibits certain articles to be kept in the premises, among which is petroleum. The second clause prohibits certain articles to be kept or used. The use of petroleum is not prohibited in the terms of the second clause. Having used the term "petroleum" in the first clause, if it had been intended to include petroleum in the second clause, as one of the articles the use of which was prohibited, the term "petroleum" would have been used.

Mears v. Humboldt Ins. Co. 92 Pa. 15.

Not being prohibited, its use was permitted for such purposes as were incident and necessary to carry on the business insured; and the storage in a barrel outside the building, with a pipe leading into the building, under the boiler, to hold and conduct the oil to the fire, was absolutely necessary and incident to its use, and not a keeping of petroleum in the premises, within the prohibitory terms of the policy.

Birmingham Fire Ins. Co. v. Kroegher, 83 Pa. 66; Grandin v. Rochester G. Ins. Co. 107 Pa. 26; Citizens Ins. Co. v. McLaughlin, 53 Pa. 485; Harper v. N. Y. Ins. Co. 22 N. Y. 443.

Mr. R. Brown, for defendant in error:

The prohibition being general that petroleum shall not be kept on the premises, the exception for its use should be equally broad. There is no clause which permits it to be used as fuel; and the use of it for light is coupled with stringent restrictions.

Birmingham Fire Ins. Co. v. Kroegher, 83 Pa. 64, rules this case. The assured kept a barrel of petroleum on the premises for use in lighting his store and for retail sale; and it was held that the policy was void and that the knowledge of the agent of the insurer at the time of the insurance did not affect the condition in the policy. The fact that carbon oil was usually kept in a country store for sale did not avoid the prohibition.

To the same effect are Lancaster Fire Ins. Co. v. Lenheim, 89 Pa. 497; Steinbach v. Fire Ins. Co. 13 Wall. 183 (80 U. S. bk. 20, L. ed. 615); Whitmarsh v. Charter Oak Fire Ins. Co. 2 Allen, 581; and Westfall v. Hud. Riv. Fire Ins. Co. 12 N. Y. 289.

Mr. Justice Gordon delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an action of covenant on a policy of insurance dated April 12, 1883, by which the defendant undertook to insure against loss by fire, the machinery, tools, patterns, etc., belonging to the plaintiff, in and about an iron foundry which was held under a lease from one James Lighty. The assured property, together with the foundry, was destroyed by fire on the 12th of May, just one month after the date of the policy.

The defense was that this policy became and was made null and void in consequence of a breach, by the assured, of the following condition: "If in said premises there be kept gunpowder, fireworks, nitroglycerine, phosphorus, saltpeter, nitrate of soda, petroleum," etc., "then and in every such case this policy shall become void."

The admitted facts are that petroleum was used as fuel for the engine by which the machinery of the foundry was driven, which fuel was drawn from a tank or barrel kept in a shed united with and so made to form part of the main building, and, as one of the witnesses says, some five or six feet from the furnace. The oil was conducted from the barrel by a half inch pipe to the place of consumption, an iron pan in or under the boiler; and as this fuel was drawn from the barrel, a fresh supply was furnished as necessity required.

We may here observe, obiter, that while there are devices by which petroleum can be and is used as a fuel for raising steam, with perfect safety, that above described is certainly not one of them. Nevertheless, it is not for us to determine whether a fuel of this kind, and so used, was more or less dangerous than wood or coal.

The only question for us is whether the keeping of a barrel of petroleum in the insured premises was such a breach of the condition in the policy as released the Company from its obligation. We are always unwilling to enforce a forfeiture when such result can be avoided; nevertheless, when the intention of the parties is plainly expressed, that intention must be regarded as the law of the contract; and we cannot lawfully ignore it, even to prevent a forfeiture. But as to the parties before us, the unequivocal agreement, as found in the policy, is that the keeping of petroleum in the premises insured shall render that policy null and void.

That petroleum was so kept is not denied; and this, not as in the case of Mears v. Humboldt Ins. Co. 92 Pa. 15, temporarily and for casual use, but habitually and for constant use.

Nor was it, as in the Citizens Ins. Co. v. McLaughlin, 53 Pa. 485, an article of such vital necessity in the conduct of the business of the insured that its use could not be ignored, and, therefore, must have been recognized as a matter not subject to the condition.

Petroleum, however convenient and economical, was certainly not a fuel without which the foundry could not have been run, since its place could well have been supplied by wood or coal. What shall we say then? That the contract of the parties shall not stand? But on what ground can we justify a conclusion such as this? The parties were ex jure; no fraud is alleged, nor is the condition even unreasonable. The Company was not willing to insure against so dangerous a commodity as petroleum, and therefore expressly forbade, not only its use but even its presence on the property, and under and subject to this condition the plaintiff accepted the policy.

Under such circumstances were we to reverse the court below we must not only disregard the contract of the parties, but also overrule our own cases of Birmingham Fire Ins. Co. v. Kroehler, 88 Pa. 64, and Lancaster Fire Ins. Co. v. Lenheim, 89 Pa. 497, which in principle rule the case in hand.

The judgment is affirmed.

John W. RHOADS, Plff. in Err.,

v.

COMMONWEALTH of Pennsylvania.

1. While a general verdict of guilty under an indictment will presume that all the elements of the offense have been found, a special verdict must find all the facts essential to support the charge.

2. And while a verdict of guilty of selling liquor without a license is sufficient where the indictment charges the defendant with selling liquor without a license, generally, and as an ordinary person, it is not sufficient where the defendant is indicted specifically as a druggist for selling liquor without a license, to be used as a beverage; and sentence on such a verdict will be set aside.

3. Where the defendant is in jeopardy under the indictment and evidence, he cannot be again tried under the same indictment; and he will be discharged without day in such case, where the original proceedings are reversed.

4. The defendant in this case was sentenced by the court below under the Act of April 12, 1875.

(Decided October 4, 1886.)

ERROR to the Quarter Sessions of Clearfield County, to review a judgment on a verdict

NOTE.—It is an interesting question how far the Act of 1875 has modified the previous legislation in regard to the imposition of penalties.

The decisions on this point are few and the discussions of the question meager. The point was presented in Flack v. Commonwealth, 2 Chest. Co. Rep. 386; S. C. 3 Pennyp. 406.

In that case the defendant, who was a bottler of beer, was convicted of selling malt and brewed liquor without a license, and sentenced to a fine of $200, under the Act of April 12, 1875. The supreme court, in a per curiam opinion, affirmed the judgment on the opinion of the court below. The question of the penalty, however, was not discussed in the opinion below and not referred to by the supreme court; and the point does not seem to have been discussed by counsel, although made one of the assignments of error.

The question came up again in Seifried v. Commonwealth, 101 Pa. 200; Judge Trunkley there says: "The penalty [of the Act of 1875] is expressly denounced against those who violate this law; and the indictment may properly charge that the offender sold without license." The Act of 1875 declares that none of its provisions shall authorize the sale of intoxicating liquors in any municipality having special prohibitory laws, and in the entire Act there is no sign of intentment to repeal vindictory parts of such laws.

Sifred v. Commonwealth, 104 Pa. 179, decides that the Act of 1875 did not repeal the penalty under the Act of February 26, 1855, prohibiting the sale of liquor on Sunday. Mercur, C. J., says: "The Act clearly indicates an intention to present separately the different requirements of the law and to provide a specific penalty for the violation of each. Thus the punishment prescribed in section 4 was designed to apply to violations of the law under previous sections of the Act. Section 6 made certain Acts a crime and immediately provided a specific penalty therefor. In like manner section 7 created an offense and prescribed the penalty to be imposed on the offender."

"No section prior to section 11 in any manner refers to any of the offenses therein stated. We are satisfied there was no intention to subject a person guilty of the act mentioned in the 11th section to the penalties prescribed in the fourth section. The reasonable conclusion is that section 11 was added through abundance of caution to negative any presumption that the licenses granted under sections 2 and 3 would authorize the sale of liquor on any of the days mentioned in section 11."

"The Act of 1887 is not repealed by the Act of 1875. While it does repeal the Act of 1872, it does not refer to the Act of 1867. And since the Act of PA.

1867 expressly forbids the sale of liquors without license, it seems there would be no necessity of implying a prohibition in the first three sections of the Act of 1875. This Act does forbid sales on Sunday, sales to minors, sales by nonresidents, etc., but it does not forbid sales without license. If the punishment pronounced on offenders in the fourth section extends to those who offend against the eighth and eleventh sections, the fourth section has sufficient operation. And that it cannot refer to the preceding sections only, seems to follow upon these considerations, viz.: that the preceding sections could only be violated by a sale without a license. Then the penalty would be solely and only for sales without licenses.

"Now, remembering that we are endeavoring to ascertain the intention of the law maker, we see at a glance that there is a different punishment for a second offense, for those who sell with a license and those who sell without a license, for the latter class is to be imprisoned, while the former class forfeits the license. The section then intends to punish as well licensed as unlicensed offenders. But if it intends to punish licensed offenders, how can its operation be restricted to violations of the preceding sections only, which certainly do no more than, even if they do as much as, forbid sales without licenses? Druggist, too, selling as a beverage, are to be punished as unlicensed offenders. They are simply 'unlicensed offenders,' and are not to be liable to 'conviction and punishment as aforesaid,' which is the language of the twenty-eighth section of the Act of 1866, P. L. 206, which was the model for the fourth section of the Act of 1875. This departure has some significance."

In Commonwealth v. Speck, 1 Pa. C. C. Rep. 633; Rowe, P. J., of the Thirty-Ninth Judicial District says: "The Act of 1875, repealing the Local Option Law, did not contemplate a complete system of provisions regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors. It does not seem to be a complete system, upon a general view of it; it does not, in terms, repeal any former law, and the tenth section which prescribes the condition of the bond to be given, makes it cover not only violations of the Act itself, but of 'any other law relating to selling or furnishing intoxicating drinks.' The Act of 1875 concerns itself only with sales."

Butler, P. J. of the Fifteenth Judicial District of Pennsylvania, now U. S. District Judge for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania, held that the Act of 1875 repealed the provisions of the Act of 1867 as to penalties.

Commonwealth v. Lovett, 2 Pa. C. C. Rep. 800. See also the penalties recited in Chester Co. Law Library v. Chester Co. 1 Ches. Co. Rep. 181. [J. M.]

of guilty, on an indictment for violation of the liquor laws. Reversed.

Reported below, 1 Pa. C. C. Rep. 639.

The first count of the indictment set forth "that John W. Rhoads, druggist, * * * did keep a tipling house, without any license so to do first had and obtained according to law; and then and there, without such license, commonly, willfully, unlawfully and publicly did sell, utter, trade and furnish and caused to be sold, uttered, traded and furnished to (parties named) and to sundry other persons, divers quantities of whisky, brandy, rum, gin and other spirituous and intoxicating liquors to be used as a beverage, to the evil example of all persons in like manner offending, contrary to the form of the Act of the General Assembly in such case made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania."

The second count of the indictment charged a similar selling to minors. On the trial the court instructed the jury that the evidence was not sufficient to warrant a conviction on this count.

The jury found the following verdict: "We find the defendant guilty of selling liquor without license."

The defendant moved in arrest of judgment and for a new trial. Afterwards, by leave of court, the motion for a new trial was withdrawn. The court overruled the motion in arrest of judgment and proceeded to judgment on the verdict and pronounced the verdict as follows: "And now, March 8, 1886, sentence of the court is that you, Dr. J. W. Rhoads, pay a fine of $300 and cost of prosecution, or give bail to do so within thirty days; and that you are in the custody of the sheriff until sentence is complied with."

The assignments of error were as follows:

1. The court erred in proceeding to judgment on the verdict, and pronouncing sentence upon the defendant as above.

2. The court erred in not discharging the defendant as having been tried and acquitted of all the offenses legally alleged against him in the indictment.

Messrs. McEnally & McCurdy, for plaintiff in error:

The Act of 1856, P. L. 200, comprises a general license law. It gives a full exemption from its provisions to a certain class of druggists and apothecaries.

Section 5 of the Act of 1856 provided "That the provisions of this Act shall not extend to druggists and apothecaries who shall sell unmixed alcohol, or compound or sell any admixtures of wine, alcohol, spirituous or brewed liquors in the preparation of medicines, or upon the written prescription of a regular practicing physician; Provided, That no druggist or apothecary shall sell or keep for sale any preparation or admixtures as aforesaid that may be used as a beverage; and any violation of this section shall be punished in the manner prescribed in the twenty-eighth section of this Act."

The twenty-eighth section contained this provision: "And any keeper of any drug or apothecary store, confectionery, or mineral or other fountain, who shall sell any spirituous, vinous, malt or brewed liquors, mixed or pure, to be used as a beverage, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and liable to conviction and punishment as aforesaid."

The Act of 1858, P. L. 367, repealed expressly section 28 of the Act of 1856. This repeal, however, did not affect section 5 of the Act of 1856 or the punishment prescribed therein.

Lackawazen Turnpike Co. v. Commonwealth, 9 Pa. 20.

The Act of 1867, P. L. 41, expressly provides that it shall not be construed to repeal the provisions of the Act of 1856 relating to sales by druggists and apothecaries.

The Act of 1875 which repealed the Local Option Law of 1872, P. L. 49, re-enacted section 28 of the Act of 1856, as follows: "And any keeper of any drug or apothecary store, confectionery, or mineral or other fountain, who shall sell any spirituous, vinous, malt or brewed liquors, mixed or pure, to be used as a beverage, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and liable to the same conviction and punishment as unlicensed offenders."

In our view, the object of the law in respect to druggists and apothecaries was to prohibit them from selling spirituous or intoxicating liquors of any kind, to be used as a beverage or common drink, but, at the same time, to allow them to furnish such things to the public as fully as they were needed for mechanical or medicinal purposes.

There are two ways in which such druggists or apothecaries might abuse their privileges: the one was, under the false pretense of furnishing medicine, to furnish admixtures of spirituous liquors as a beverage, under the name of tonics and bitters, etc. The proviso in section 5 of the Act is intended to forbid such conduct and to provide the remedy and punishment.

The other way would be by selling intoxicating and spirituous liquors to be used as a beverage. This is forbidden by section 28 of the Act, and it also provides the remedy for its violation. We think that this provision of the law would be violated whenever the druggist sold spirituous or intoxicating liquors for the purpose of being used as a beverage or common drink, even if there was some pretense used to cover up that purpose. But under this section it would be necessary to prove beyond a reasonable doubt the purpose or intention of the druggist when he sold it; that is, that he sold it to be used as a beverage.

Section 5 of the Act of 1856 is not affected by the Act of 1875. The penalty prescribed for its violation is not to be found in the Act of 1875. This latter Act only provides for the punishment of sales that are contrary to its own provision. The only offense of the keeper of a drug store or apothecary store that could be against that law would be the sale of spirituous, vinous, malt or brewed liquors, to be used as a beverage. Under both the Acts of 1856 and 1858, the fine for the first offense is not less than $10 nor more than $100.

When a defendant has been once tried for an offense, upon an indictment on which he could have been legally convicted and sentenced, he cannot be legally tried again, at least where the defendant has done nothing to set aside the verdict.

Sharff v. Commonwealth, 2 Binn. 514; Girts v. Commonwealth, 22 Pa. 351; Heikes v. Commonwealth, 26 Pa. 514; Commonwealth v. Trim- mer, 84 Pa. 65; People v. Barrett, 1 Johns. 66.

The court, under its view of the law, held that the defendant could not be convicted of selling liquor without license, if he sold without the prescription of a physician, no matter whether he did or did not sell it to be used as a beverage. If this construction was right, the count might be considered as including two offenses: 1, the offense charged, of selling liquor to be used as a beverage; and 2, the offense of simply selling without license.

The jury found the defendant guilty of selling without license. The silence of the jury in regard to the other charges is equivalent to a verdict of not guilty as to them.

An indictment for a statutory offense must pursue the words of the Act.

1 Purd. Dig. 485, pl. 11; Updegraff v. Commonwealth, 6 Serg. & R. 5.

It must appear that the sale of liquor by a druggist was for use as a beverage, to constitute a violation of the law.

Commonwealth v. Porter, 10 Phila. 217, and Commonwealth v. Patterson, 16 W. N. C. 193.

Mr. S. V. Wilson, District Attorney, for defendant in error:

Under the Act of 1875 defendant is liable as an unlicensed offender; and it matters not whether he sells in a drug store or any other place.

Under section 5 of the Act of 1856, even the mere keeping, though he does not sell, is a violation, if this law has any meaning or is capable of being understood by its words "shall sell or keep for sale."

The defendant here was indicted under the Act of 1875 for selling without license. He is to be punished under the Act of 1875, as an "unlicensed offender." The very terms used go to prove the right to indict him as selling without license. The only way that the evil recognized by the settled customs and habits of the people in buying without a prescription may be abated, is to punish the druggist as an unlicensed offender. The Act of 1856 is fully supplied by the Act of 1875.

The defendant here alleges an erroneous ruling of a judge; by setting up this position he is afterwards estopped. He affirms by his action that he never was in legal jeopardy, and that the ruling of the judge against putting him in jeopardy was not law. When he gains his point he cannot afterward plead jeopardy.

Whart. Cr. Pl. & Pr. p. 354, § 510.

When there are two good counts in the indictment and the court gives erroneous instructions to the jury as to one of the counts, and there is a general verdict against the defendant and judgment thereon, a venire facias de novo will be awarded;

Id. § 800; State v. McCauless, 9 Ired. 375.

Assuming it to be law in all cases when the application comes from the defendant, it is discretionary in the court to grant new trials in the cases in which that discretion may be exercised.

Whart. Cr. Pl. & Pr. § 792.

When there has been an acquittal on one count and a conviction on another, and the counts are for distinct offenses, a new trial can only be granted on the count on which there has been conviction.

Id. § 895.

PA.

If this is an imperfect judgment on which no judgment could be entered a venire facias de novo will be awarded.

1 Chitty, Cr. L. p. 646.

Even if there be a discharge in a misdemeanor, by reason of an imperfect verdict, it would be no bar to another prosecution or to reindictment.

Mr. Justice Green delivered the opinion of the court:

If the defendant had been indicted generally and as an ordinary person, for selling liquor without license, the verdict would have sustained the sentence and there would have been no error in the judgment. But he was not so charged. He was indicted specifically as a druggist for selling liquor, without license, to be used as a beverage. The verdict found him guilty of selling liquor without license simply, saying nothing about its being used as a beverage. The difficulty in the case is that as a druggist he was not necessarily guilty of any offense in the mere selling of liquor without license. He might sell without license, if he sold it in the preparation of medicine or on the prescription of a physician.

Had the jury found a general verdict of guilty there could have been no exception to it. But for some reason they did not do that but found only a certain fact, and that fact against such a person is not of itself sufficient to convict of any crime. If the jury wished to find the facts specially, of course it was their duty to find all the facts which composed the crime charged. It is clear that under this indictment the defendant, being charged with selling liquor as a druggist, must be found to have sold it, not in the preparation of medicines and without the prescription of a physician, or at least that he sold it to be used as a beverage. Any one or all of these facts would have been presumed to be found had the verdict been generally guilty. But that not being the case and only a part of the facts being found which are necessary to make out a crime against a person charged as this defendant was, it follows that the verdict is insufficient to sustain the sentence. Of course, if the indictment had been general and the defendant pleaded that he sold as a druggist, the burden of proof would have been upon him to show all the facts which gave him exemption. But as it was, the Commonwealth, conceding the defendant to be a druggist, assumed the burden not only of charging but of proving his technical guilt as such. Failing to obtain either a general verdict of guilty or a special verdict which found all the facts essential to establish the charge, the judgment should have been arrested.

As the defendant was certainly in jeopardy under the indictment and the evidence, we do not see how he can be again tried under the same indictment.

The judgment of the court below is reversed, the sentence is set aside and the defendant discharged without day.

Appeal of Farnum T. FISH and Wife, in the Right of the Wife.

1. A surety on a guardian's bond may, on his petition for review alleging, on oath, errors in such guardian's account, have a rehearing, within the five years mentioned in the Act of October 13, 1840, of so much of the account as in such petition is alleged to be error.

2. Where a person is both executor of a will and guardian of a minor entitled to a portion of the estate under the will, he holds such minor's portion as executor and not as guardian, until he has settled his account as executor in the probate court; until which time his sureties on his guardianship bond are not liable thereon for his neglect to pay such portion.
3. The fact that one undertakes to act in the dual capacity of executor and testamentary guardian does not lessen his duty as either. Where the funds of the estate were lost through his dereliction of duty as executor and thus never came into his hands as guardian, this does not excuse his neglect as guardian; and compensation for his time and trouble in the latter capacity cannot be allowed.

(Decided October 4, 1886.)

APPEAL from a decree of the Orphans' Court of Northumberland County, vacating a decree of confirmation of the final account of appellant's guardian and allowing a bill of review and confirming the report of the auditor to restate said account. Reversed.

Abraham Shipman was appointed by the last will and testament of Jesse M. Simpson as executor of the will, and guardian of Mary V. Simpson, the only child of the testator. By the terms of the codicil to his will, the guardian was required to enter into a bond, on taking letters of guardianship, in the sum of $10,000 with one or more approved sureties. The will was probated November 3, 1871, and letters testamentary granted to the executor therein named. On March 12, 1873, Ira T. Clement became surety on the guardian's bond.

Abraham Shipman died August 8, 1878, without having filed an account either as executor or guardian under said will. August 14, 1878, Ira Shipman was appointed his administrator, and December 4, 1878, he filed the first and final account of Abraham Shipman, executor of Jesse M. Simpson, deceased, which was confirmed nisi January 8, 1879, and absolutely March 12, 1879. This account shows a balance on its face of $3,517.90 in the hands of the guardian at the time of filing the same.

November 14, 1879, Ira T. Clement, surety on the guardian's bond, filed a petition in the orphans' court for a bill of review of the guardian's account, alleging the facts in the first six paragraphs of his petition substantially as above set forth, and further that he did not know that said account had been filed; that there were manifest errors in the account which ought to be corrected; that under the terms of the will of the testator no funds came into the hands of his executor for which he was bound to account as guardian.

To this petition an answer was filed by George Hill, the guardian of Mary V. Simpson, and Ira Shipman, administrator of Abraham Shipman, deceased, setting forth that the said account had been duly filed and regularly confirmed by the court, with actual and legal notice to the said Ira T. Clement, surety, and that there was no new evidence or matter since the filing and confirmation of the said account that could not have been had by the use of due diligence before the absolute confirmation of the same, and denying that the said Ira T. Clement had any right whatever, as a matter of law or ex gratia, to a bill of review.

The Honorable Franklin Bound was appointed master pro hac vice to take evidence, etc. He found the facts as alleged in the first six paragraphs of the petition substantially as set out above, and further reported, inter alia, as follows:

The matters contained in the seventh paragraph of the petition of Ira T. Clement for a review are denied by Ira Shipman and Geo. Hill, Esq., in their answer. Paragraph seven is as follows to wit:

"Seventh. Your petitioner represents that he knew nothing of the filing of the above stated account of the guardianship of Abraham Shipman until after its final confirmation; and further represents that there are manifest errors in said pretended guardian's account, which he specifically sets forth as follows:

"A. The said account is incorrect, in that the said executor as guardian is charged with the whole balance in the account of the said Abraham Shipman, as the executor of said Jesse M. Simpson, deceased, $6,390.11; while said Abraham Shipman, executor, is charged with $2,200.69, being for rent received during the life time of the said executor as executor of said Jesse M. Simpson, in his executor's account.

"And also the further sum of $2,954.86, the proceeds of sale of the real estate made by the said Abraham Shipman, after the death of the testator, as executor of said testator, and which came into and remained in his hands as executor and not as guardian, until the death of Abraham Shipman, executor.

"B. For that the said account is incorrect in that the said accountant has assumed to charge in the said account, as guardian, in said balance, the sum of $550.08, being for rents received by the said executor prior to the 12th day of March, 1873, the date of the bond upon which your petitioner is surety.

"C. For that the said account is incorrect in that the said accountant has assumed to charge in the said balance of executor's account of $6,390.11, the sum of $2,507.06, being the proceeds of the real estate sold by the said executor and received by him prior to the 12th day of March, 1873, the date of the bond upon which your petitioner is surety.

"D. For that the said account of Abraham Shipman, guardian, is incorrect in that his administrator, Ira Shipman, charges in the said guardian's account the sum of $6,390.11, the balance found due from him as executor, as having been paid to himself as guardian of Mary V. Simpson, said account never having been paid, when in fact not one dollar was ever paid by Abraham Shipman, executor of the last will and testament of Jesse M. Simpson, deceased, to him as guardian under said will.

"E. The filing of the account of Abraham Shipman, executor of Jesse M. Simpson, and the filing of the account of Abraham Shipman, guardian of Mary V. Simpson, upon the same day, to wit: the 5th day of December, 1878, is illegal and improper, the same person being executor and guardian.

"The account as executor should have been first filed and the balance in his hands as executor liquidated and determined before the account as guardian could be properly considered by the court.

"F. The account of Abraham Shipman, guardian of Mary V. Simpson, is incorrect in that the said accountant is charged with the sum of $6,890.11, as having been received by him from the executor of Jesse M. Simpson, deceased, when no part of the same had ever been received by him as such guardian. The said Abraham Shipman, being executor and guardian under the will, could not be considered as holding any part of the assets in the capacity of guardian until his account as executor had been settled at the probate office in which he has been credited as executor with the balance which he held as guardian.

"G. For that the will of the said Jesse M. Simpson, deceased, makes the said Abraham Shipman, as his executor, a trustee under his said will, directing him in the event of the death of Mary V. Simpson, his daughter, to convert his whole estate, real, personal and mixed, into money, and to distribute the same among the legatees named in his said will; that the trust so created continues until the said Mary V. Simpson should arrive at the age of twenty-one years, or until her death; that at the time of the filing of the account of Abraham Shipman, executor, by his administrator, Ira Shipman, the said daughter was neither deceased nor of the age of twenty-one years, and that it was error in the said Ira Shipman, administrator of the said Abraham Shipman, executor, to undertake to break the said trust or to undertake to turn over money from the hands of Abraham Shipman, the executor, then deceased, into the hands of the said executor as guardian, in violation of the will of the said testator, or to assume that any money ever had been turned over by the said executor to himself as guardian under the said will.

"Your petitioner, therefore, charges and avers that there are manifest errors in the said first and final account of Abraham Shipman, guardian of Mary V. Simpson, minor child of Jesse M. Simpson, by Ira Shipman, administrator, filed and confirmed, in the above estate, and which if allowed to remain great injustice will be done to your petitioner, surety as before stated; and he further states that it was not until after the confirmation that your petitioner became aware of the existence of said errors, and therefore was not in a position to except thereto; for all of which errors and imperfections in said account and the said decree of confirmation, your petitioner has brought this his petition for a review, and humbly conceives that he should be relieved therein; to the end therefore that the petitioner may have the privilege of a rehearing of so much of said account as is hereinbefore alleged to be in error, and may have such relief as equity and justice may require," etc., etc.

Then follows a prayer for a citation upon Ira Shipman, administrator, etc., and upon all PA.

persons interested to appear in court, etc. In accordance with the prayer of the petition, November 14, 1879, a citation was awarded against said Ira Shipman, administrator, etc., of Abraham Shipman, who was the guardian of Mary V. Simpson, minor, and against Lloyd T. Rohrbach, administrator de bonis non cum testamento annexo of Jesse M. Simpson, deceased, and against Geo. Hill, Esq., guardian of Mary V. Simpson, etc., commanding them to appear at an orphans' court to be held at Sunbury, etc., January 5, 1880, to answer the above bill or petition, or show cause, etc. All the parties named were regularly served with notice of the citation, etc.

An answer to the petition, as already stated, was filed September 7, 1880, by Ira Shipman, administrator, and George Hill, Esq., guardian, etc. The answer admits the truth of the matters of fact averred in the six paragraphs of the petition, and goes on to say, among other things, as follows:

"First. That the said Jesse M. Simpson died on the—day of October, 1871, and that his said daughter is his only issue that survived him, and was at the time of his death and still is his only heir and next of kin, and that she was born on the second day of August, A. D. 1862, and that, after the death of the said Abraham Shipman, to wit: on the 8th day of August, A. D. 1878, your honorable court appointed the said George Hill guardian of her person and estate.

"Second. Your respondents each deny that the said Ira T. Clement knew nothing of the filing of the account of the guardianship of the said Abraham Shipman, until after its final confirmation, as is stated by the said Ira T. Clement in the seventh paragraph of said petition; but on the contrary each says that notice of the filing of the said account was duly given by advertisement, according to law, and that they have been informed, and each verily believes that he can prove if it shall be necessary or important, that he, the said Ira T. Clement, had had actual notice of the filing of the said account in sufficient time to enable him to file any exceptions thereto that he wished, before the said final confirmation of the said account; and they each also say that they are advised, by their respective counsel learned in the law, that the several pretended errors in the said account alleged in the seventh paragraph of the said petition, and respectively therein specified as A, B, C, D, E, F and G, or any of them, are not errors or mistakes of either law or of fact.

"And your respondents, further answering, each say that upon the probate of the last will and testament of the said Jesse M. Simpson on the third day of November, A. D. 1871, the said Abraham Shipman became the testamentary guardian of the said Mary V. Simpson, then between nine and ten years of age, and that the needs and duties of this trust were immediate; and there being no question as to the sufficiency of the testator's estate for both trusts, the performance by Abraham Shipman of his duties as guardian were not, by the provisions of the said will or by the law of the land, postponed to his performance of his duties as executor; and that he, the said Abraham Shipman, immediately before his death was liable as guardian, as aforesaid, to account for all the estate of the said Jesse M. Simpson which he then had in his hands or possession, or which he ought then to have had in his hands or possession; and also that the said Abraham Shipman, on the 18th day of January, A. D. 1878, presented his petition to your honorable court as testamentary guardian of the said Mary V. Simpson, setting forth his appointment as such guardian by the said will of the said Jesse M. Simpson, and stating that the value of the estate willed to the said Mary V. Simpson was then about $10,000, and praying the court to direct a suitable periodical allowance out of the said estate for her support and education, as directed in the said will, and that the truth of the facts set forth in the petition was verified by the affidavit underwritten the same; that your honorable court thereupon directed that he, the said guardian, should not expend more than the sum of $500 for the purpose mentioned in said petition, unless otherwise directed by your honorable court—a copy of which said petition of the said Abraham Shipman, and of the order of the court, aforesaid, is attached to this answer; and each of your respondents pray that the same may be considered a part of his answer; and each of your said respondents deny that there is any other matter, cause or thing in the said petition of the said Ira T. Clement contained, material or necessary to be answered by the respondents, and which is not herein and hereby answered, confessed, traversed and avoided or denied, is true to his knowledge and belief; and they each respectfully pray, etc., that the said petition of the said Ira T. Clement be refused and dismissed," etc., etc.

The foregoing answer raises several important issues of fact and law, questions of law which have never yet been authoritatively passed upon nor decided by the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania or any subordinate court of this State, so far as we have been able to learn after careful investigation. In the seventh paragraph of his petition for a review Ira T. Clement avers "that he knew nothing of the filing of the above stated account of the guardianship of Abraham Shipman until after its final confirmation," etc., and gives this as one of the reasons for failing to file exceptions to said account," etc.

This statement is denied by Ira Shipman and George Hill, Esq., under oath, in their answer filed to said petition. In the second paragraph of their answer above quoted, they each "deny that the said Ira T. Clement knew nothing of the filing of the account of the said Abraham Shipman until after confirmation, as is stated by the said Ira T. Clement in the seventh paragraph of his said petition; but, on the contrary each says that notice of the filing of the said account was duly given by advertisement according to law, and that they have been informed and each verily believes that he can prove, if it shall be necessary or important, that he, the said Ira T. Clement, had also actual notice of the filing of the said account in sufficient time to enable him to file any exceptions thereto that he wished before the said final confirmation of the said account," etc.

Here is a square denial and a direct challenge to the proof, and if this branch of the case rested upon the petition and answer alone, the weight of testimony would be against the petitioner. But witnesses are called; George Hill, Esq., a high minded, intelligent man, an honorable member of this bar, one of the respondents, and Ira T. Clement, the petitioner, are both examined as witnesses in regard to the fact of notice. Mr. Hill, in his testimony, after narrating the fact that Ira T. Clement and he, on at least two occasions prior to his death, went to see Abraham Shipman in regard to Mary V. Simpson's interests, and Mr. Clement's liability on Shipman's bail bond as guardian of Miss Simpson, rumors of Shipman's insolvency being afloat, testified as follows:

"Shipman died shortly afterwards and I, through the solicitation of Mary, and Judge Jordan, and others of her friends, agreed to take the appointment as her guardian. I shortly afterwards called upon Mr. Clement and urged the necessity of having an account stated by the administrator Shipman, he knowing as I did that the estate of Shipman was entirely insolvent at that time; and at various interviews I had with Clement before the filing of the account he invariably admitted his liability and agreed to settle with me as soon as the balance could be ascertained. I urged Mr. Reimensnyder, who was of counsel for the administrator to have an account filed of Shipman's guardianship, so that I might close up the matter with Mr. Clement as Shipman's bail. The account was filed. I am not sure whether it was submitted to me before filing or not. I discovered a balance according to the guardian's account in the hands of Shipman, as guardian, of $3,517.90. After filing of this account I spoke to Mr. Clement on several occasions and urged him to settle this balance and he invariably told me that he would. The last conversation that I had with him that I recollect of was in the hall of the court house where we accidentally met, and I called his attention to the necessity of having this matter closed up. He asked me the question, how I wanted it closed. I told him that the interest on the amount would be all that would be required as long as I was her guardian, and suggested that he should give me a judgment for the purpose of closing the thing up. I am not sure whether this last conversation took place between the date of filing the account and confirmation nisi or between the date of the nisi confirmation and the confirmation absolute; but I am certain that it was before the confirmation absolute."

The testimony of Mr. Hill is objected to by counsel for petitioner, because the witness is incompetent and because irrelevant.

Your master is of opinion and so rules that the testimony of Mr. Hill is both competent and relevant to the issue before him. This testimony, therefore, standing uncontradicted in any material respect, must be accepted as the facts in regard to the question of notice. It is true that Ira T. Clement in his testimony says: "I don't recollect of any conversation with Mr. Hill in the hall of the court house; I recollect of having a talk with Mr. Hill in front of his office, etc." Mr. Hill's office is on the opposite side of the street, across the public square from the court house in Sunbury.

Surely the fact that Mr. Clement "has no recollection" of the conversation so succinctly detailed by Mr. Hill is not such a contradiction as the law requires in so important a matter. Your master finds as facts, therefore, that Ira T. Clement, who lived within a stone's throw of the register's office at the time had not only had such legal notice of the filing of the account in question as the law contemplates by publication, but also had actual notice of the same from George Hill, Esq., the then guardian of Mary V. Simpson, at least before the final confirmation of said account and the decree of the orphans' court thereon.

In view of all the foregoing findings of fact and some others which will be noted hereafter, it is learnedly contended by counsel for respondent, on the authority of Green's App. 59 Pa. 235; Hartman's App. 86 Pa. 70, and Stevenson's Exrs.' App. 32 Pa. 318, that a bill of review is not allowable in this case; that a bill of review as a matter of right can be had only:

1. For errors of law appearing in the body of the decree.

2. For new matter which has arisen after the decree; and,

3. It may be allowed ex gratia for new evidence as to facts subsequently discovered which could not have been procured by due diligence before.

It is contended that neither of these conditions exists in this case; that there is no error appearing in the body of the decree nor on the face of the account; that the debtor side of the account consists of but two items, to the first of which there is no objection in the petition for a bill of review. The second is objected to in the whole. This is stated to be the balance of the executor's account of the estate remaining after the payment of all the debts, legacies and expenses of administration.

It becomes important therefore to know all the facts in the case including those already found upon which these contentions are predicated. The debtor side of the guardian account in controversy the master finds is as follows:

"The first and final account of Abraham Shipman, guardian of Mary V. Simpson, minor child of Jesse M. Simpson, deceased, by Ira Shipman, his administrator."

The accountant charges Abraham Shipman, guardian of Mary V. Simpson, minor child of Jesse M. Simpson, deceased, as follows:

Dr:

1878, July 14, to cash received from S. P. Wolverton, administrator of Mary Simpson, deceased, Mary V. Simpson's share of said estate.....	$250.00
1878, to amount received from the executor of the estate of Jesse M. Simpson, deceased,.....	6,890.11
Total	$6,640.11

That the foregoing is neither a very accurate nor satisfactory statement of account, whereby to charge the petitioner, Ira T. Clement, surety of Abraham Shipman in his guardian bond, with so large a sum of money, can hardly be questioned. Was Mr. Clement in duty bound to file exceptions to this account; and, having failed and neglected to do so, is he deprived of the right to a bill of review as prayed for by him? If he is, as contended for by counsel for respondent, both as matter of law and fact, then no matter how great a hardship to Mr. Clement, this case is at an end.

The Act of Assembly of October 18, 1840, which authorizes a bill of review in cases of this kind, provides that "Upon petition of review being presented by such executor, administrator or guardian, or their legal representatives, or by any person interested therein, within five years, etc., alleging errors in such account which errors shall be specifically set forth in said petition of review, and said petition and errors being verified by oath or affirmation, said orphans' court shall grant a rehearing of so much of said account as is alleged to be error in said petition of review, and give such relief as equity and justice may require, by reference to auditors, or otherwise, except in cases where the balance found due shall have been actually paid or discharged."

In the case of Bishop's Est. 10 Pa. 469, Judge C. Ulter gave this Act a literal, strict and stringent construction, considering the Act peremptory on the court to grant the bill of review, without the exercise of judicial discretion.

It has since then been decided by the supreme court in a number of cases, among others, Hartman's Appeal, 36 Pa. 70, that the decision in that case went too far; of course it was harmless in that case "because the mistake and errors in the case were apparent on the face of the account."

It was held in Bishop's Est. that "Sureties for administrator may have a bill of review where the administrator has charged himself in his account with rents and profits, and the proceeds of realty; and it is no objection that the accounts have been settled by auditors, and a distribution awarded, and action brought by the creditors of the estate against the sureties."

Your master is of opinion that the case in hand is much stronger than that of Bishop's Est., and that Ira T. Clement, in point of law and in justice and equity, is entitled to his bill of review. No unreasonable time elapsed from the confirmation of the account, March 12, 1879, to the time of filing his petition for a review, November 14, 1879. No person was or could have been injured by the delay in this matter. Indeed, there may have been good reasons for Mr. Clement's failure or refusal to file exceptions to the account. It cannot be doubted under the evidence, that for some time prior to Mr. Shipman's death rumors of his insolvency were afloat in the community, and that Mr. Clement was aware of these rumors, and that by the advice of counsel he endeavored to obtain some sort of security from Shipman on account of his supposed liability on the guardian bond of $10,000, given by Shipman as testamentary guardian of Mary V. Simpson.

In fact it is in evidence, under objection by counsel for Mr. Clement, that he, Clement, in Shipman's lifetime, obtained a judgment note from Shipman dated the 9th day of July, A. D. 1878, for $3,500 as collateral security. Mr. Clement, who is called as a witness by counsel for respondent, in speaking of this judgment note, entered in the Court of Common Pleas of Northumberland County, to No. 149 August Term, 1878 for $3,500, testifies as follows:

"It was given for security that I had gone for him. It may have been in the Conrad matter, and it may also have been on this Simpson matter. I can't state now exactly. I was security for both for Shipman."

Abraham Shipman died on the — day of —, 1878. After his death, at least, it was well known that his estate was hopelessly insolvent. His estate was in progress of settlement, and it may have been considered by Mr. Clement very important to Mary V. Simpson's interests, or to those interested in Simpson's estate, that the balance due from Shipman to Simpson's estate should be ascertained and secured if possible as per the guardian's account filed by Ira Shipman, administrator of Abraham Shipman.

So far as Abraham Shipman is concerned there can be no question that the balance of $3,517.90 as ascertained by the guardian's account filed, is justly due and owing to Mary V. Simpson, or in the event of her death before reaching the age of twenty-one years would have been due and owing to the residuary legatees named in the will. However, as it turned out, it proved to be a matter of no importance, for Mr. Clement never realized a farthing upon his judgment of $3,500 against Shipman, and in all human probability never will.

It is evident, however, that this was not due to any fault or neglect on the part of Ira T. Clement to save himself harmless, and at the same time, if possible, to secure Simpson's estate against loss. For his vigilance in this regard Mr. Clement is to be commended, rather than censured for supineness. That Abraham Simpson's estate was utterly insolvent at the time these accounts as executor of Jesse M. Simpson, deceased, and as testamentary guardian of Mary V. Simpson, were filed by his administrator, Ira Shipman, cannot be questioned.

What is meant then by the charge on the debtor side of the guardian account, to wit: "1878, to amount received from the executor of the estate of Jesse M. Simpson, deceased, $6,390.11?" Who received this money? Surely, Ira Shipman, the accountant, does not wish it to be understood that he received it. If he does, then he and his bail on his administration bond are liable, and not Mr. Clement. Or does Ira Shipman, the accountant, wish it to be understood that his father, Abraham Shipman, as testamentary guardian of Mary V. Simpson, received this money from Abraham Shipman, as executor or trustee for the residuary legatee? If this is meant then where is the evidence of it? No book nor account nor memorandum kept by Abraham Shipman in his lifetime, or by any person for him, has been given in evidence before the master, tending to prove the fact.

Nor is there any evidence produced of an account of moneys kept by Shipman, in his lifetime, to the credit of his ward, Mary V. Simpson. And there is no evidence going to show that any moneys belonging to the estate of Jesse M. Simpson was ever deposited by Abraham Shipman to the credit of said estate, or to the credit of his ward, Mary, or to his own credit as trustee, in any public depository, bank, or saving institution of any description. In the absence of some such proof it is fair to presume that no such account was ever kept by him, either as executor or guardian.

In this connection it is but fair to add, however, that on the 18th day of January, 1878, Abraham Shipman presented the following petition in the Orphans' Court of Northumberland County, to wit:

The petition of Abraham Shipman, testamentary guardian of Mary V. Simpson, a minor, and only child of Jesse M. Simpson, late of Sunbury, Pa., respectfully represents: That the said Jesse M. Simpson died on or about the — day of —, A. D. 1871, leaving the said Mary V. Simpson to survive him, and having first made his last will and testament, wherein he directed that, after his funeral expenses and just debts and the several bequests therein contained had been settled, the remainder of his estate, real, personal and mixed, shall go to the said minor, Mary V. Simpson. That by said will your petitioner was appointed testamentary guardian of said Mary V. Simpson. That the testator in said mentioned will made the following provisions for the support and education of his said minor child, to wit:

"Seventh. I appoint Abraham Shipman guardian of my said daughter Mary until she arrives at the age of twenty-one years, and I intrust to him her moral and religious training and education. It is my will, and I desire that my said daughter receive such an education as is fitting in her circumstances, and if the interest of the money coming into the hands of my executor and the rents of my real estate are insufficient for that purpose, it is my will and desire that as much of the principal in addition as may be necessary be expended.

"That said will has been duly proved in the register's office before the register of said county, and entered of record on the third day of November, A. D. 1871.

"That the value of the estate willed to said minor is about $10,000.

"That the said minor is about fifteen years of age. Your petitioner therefore prays Your Honor to direct a suitable periodical allowance out of the said estate for her support and education as directed in said will, etc."

Your master finds that in accordance with the prayer of the petition, a periodical annual allowance of $500 was decreed. There is no account stated or made part of the petition, and nothing therein contained goes to show how much, if any, money or effects were in his hands as guardian at that time. The petition simply recites that Mary is an only child, and "that the value of the estate willed to said minor is about $10,000." Is that such a statement of account, in the absence of a decree of the orphan's court after account stated and filed in the register's office, as will fix the bail of Shipman in his guardian bond? We think not. Something more than this is required. In brief, does the petition furnish any satisfactory evidence that there was a single dollar of funds in Shipman's hands as testamentary guardian, at the time his petition was presented in court? If it does we have failed to discover it.

In the absence of an inventory of his ward's estate filed in the register's office by Abraham Shipman, in his lifetime, charging himself with moneys or effects belonging to his ward, and in the absence of any proof of an account kept by him of any money or effects belonging to his ward (except the $250 paid to him by S. P.

Wolverton, for his said ward), and in view of the fact that no account was ever filed by Abraham Shipman in his lifetime, as executor of Jesse M. Simpson, deceased, in the register's office, showing a balance of funds, if any, in his hands as such executor, your master cannot see how his surety, Ira T. Clement, can be held in the bail bond of Shipman, testamentary guardian, etc.

That Abraham Shipman had funds in his hands as executor of Jesse M. Simpson's estate is not to the purpose. A certain portion was realized from the sale of testator's real estate, and certain other portions from the rents, issues and profits of real estate that he was not empowered to sell.

In the seventh clause of the will provision is made for the "moral and religious training and education" of his daughter, and recites that "if the interest of the money coming into the hands of my executor," not into the hands of the testamentary guardian, "and the rents of my real estate are insufficient for that purpose, it is my will and desire that as much of the principal, in addition, as may be necessary, be expended." If, then, the funds were received by Shipman, as executor, in his lifetime, in the absence of satisfactory proof that they ever passed into his hands as guardian, the presumption is a strong one that they were wasted and squandered by him as executor, and not as guardian. How then can Mr. Clement be held liable for the same as surety on Shipman's guardian bond of $10,000?

It must be borne in mind that the account of Abraham Shipman, as executor of Simpson's estate and his account as testamentary guardian of Mary V. Simpson were both filed by Ira Shipman, his administrator, on the same day, to wit: December 5, 1878, and were both confirmed absolutely on the same day, to wit: March 12, 1879; that the balance ascertained from the executor account, to wit: "Balance paid to the guardian, $6,390.11," as therein stated, was transferred bodily to the debtor side of the guardian account. When this was done, in point of fact, there wasn't a dollar of funds in the hands of Abraham Shipman, nor of his administrator, who stated the account belonging to the estate of Jesse M. Simpson, deceased. It had all been wasted or misappropriated by Shipman in his lifetime.

Again; it must be remembered that under the terms of Jesse M. Simpson's will his daughter, Mary, was not to come into the enjoyment of the corpus of her father's estate until she arrived at the age of twenty-one years; that if she died before that period, the entire estate then left was to go to certain residuary legatees named in the will; that at the date of the confirmation absolute of said account, March 12, 1879, and the decree of the orphans' court thereon, finding a balance of $3,517.90 due to Mary V. Simpson from Abraham Shipman as testamentary guardian, the said Mary had not attained the age of twenty-one years by four years and five months, and if she had died in the meantime would not have been entitled to any portion of the corpus of the estate, if it had not been previously squandered. Was she entitled to such a decree, then, any more than the residuary legatees would have been?

But now it is argued that Miss Simpson is of full age and the decree of the court is all right. That is not the question that Mr. Clement is interested in. In view of such a decree at the time it was made, was Ira T. Clement entitled to his bill of review? If he was so then, he is just as much entitled now. Your master is of the opinion that the account of Abraham Shipman, as executor, should have first been filed in the register's office and the balance in his hands, as executor, if any, liquidated and determined before the guardian's account could be properly considered by the court. Without, therefore, passing upon the question raised as to the surety's liability on the guardian bond for the price of the real estate sold, and the rents, issues and profits thereof received by the executor before the guardian bond was executed and filed, your master proceeds to consider the legal status of the case as affected by our own and the decisions of neighboring courts. Was it necessary that an account should have been first stated and filed by Abraham Shipman, as executor, and a balance ascertained by a decree of the orphans' court, before the liability of Ira T. Clement became fixed as surety in the bond given by Shipman as testamentary guardian of Mary V. Simpson?

As before remarked there is no authoritative utterance by our supreme court on the subject. The nearest approach to it that we can find is a dictum of His Honor, Judge Paxson, in Muscelman's App. 18 W. N. C. 71.

"No personal action will lie against the executor of William P. Waugh, for any portion of the residuary estate or for a legacy charged thereon, until it be first shown that there is a residuary estate and that the same passed into the hands of John Waugh as trustee thereof. That John Waugh received assets of the estate of William P. Waugh is not to the purpose; he received them as executor; his responsibility for said estate is as executor and not as trustee of the residuary estate."

In Van Dyke's App. 31 Legal Int. 69, it is ruled that "A trustee of a portion of a residuary and unsettled estate cannot be held to account or be sued for the same by the cestui que trust until the estate has been sold and the fund has been set apart and received by him as trustee."

See also 2 Wms. Exrs. pp. 1506, 1507 and note M.

This whole subject has been frequently adjudicated by the Supreme Court of Massachusetts and the law well settled in that State, by a long train of decisions. The first case that we call the court's attention to is Conkey v. Dickinson, 13 Met. 54 et seq. and others. The syllabus of the case is as follows:

"When the same person is executor of a will and guardian of a minor to whom a legacy is given by the will, he holds the amount of the legacy in his capacity of executor and not as guardian, until he settles an account of his administration in the probate court, crediting himself as executor with the legacy, and charging himself therewith as guardian. Until such account is allowed by a decree of the probate court, an action cannot be maintained against him and his sureties on his guardianship bond, for neglect to pay the legacy; but an action may be maintained against him and his sureties on the bond given by him as executor."

The parties submitted the case to the court upon an agreed statement of facts in substance as follows:

"Aaron Dickinson in 1884 was duly appointed guardian of Medad D. Smith, who was then twelve years old and who came of age in 1848. The bond declared on was duly executed by the defendants. In 1839, while the guardianship duties of the said Aaron continued, Sally S. Dickinson died, leaving a will in which, after certain legacies to divers persons, said Medad D. Smith, the ward, was made the residuary legatee; and said Aaron Dickinson, was made executor of said will, which was duly proved and allowed. Letters testamentary were issued to said Aaron, and he gave bond for the faithful discharge of his duties as such executor. On the first Tuesday of July, 1840, said executor returned his first and only account as executor of said will, from which there appeared to be a balance in his hands, as executor, of $451.50. After this action was commenced, to wit: on the 25th of September, 1846, said Aaron filed his account of guardianship, in which he did not charge himself with said legacy; and a hearing and examination of the guardian were had, and the judge of probate passed a decree thereon, from which said guardian appealed. At this hearing and examination Sylvester Maxwell, Esq., testified in substance as follows: that he, as attorney of said Medad D., called on said Aaron, in the spring of 1845, for payment of what was due from him to said Medad D., and for his account; that said Aaron soon after presented to the witness a paper as his account of guardianship, in which he charged himself with the legacy given by Sally S. Dickinson to said Medad D., amounting to $365.64 and interest thereon for five years, $109.65. These sums with other items, of credit to said Medad D., in this account amounted to $1,275.98 and the charges against him were $624.68, leaving a balance against said Aaron of $651.25. That the witness and said Aaron compared this account with one which the said Medad D. had made out, in which said Aaron was charged with said legacy, as $424, and in which the balance against said Aaron was $722.86. That said Aaron in looking at this account made out by said Medad D., said it was correct, as taken from his (said Aaron's) book. That the witness drew off the said account in proper form, and said Aaron afterwards looked at it and signed it as guardian, and took it away for the purpose of presenting it to the probate court, without suggesting that he held the funds as executor and not as guardian."

Upon this statement of facts, which are certainly much stronger in every respect than the case in hand, the court held as follows:

"It was argued in the present case for the legatee that the guardian is to be held liable to account for the legacy because it was included in a paper intended to be his account of guardianship. This intention is denied by the guardian; but we do not consider the fact material. There could be no transmutation of the assets, until the account was allowed by the probate court so as to charge the guardianship sureties. If such an account had been rendered, it may well be doubted if it ought to be allowed, unless the guardian would give a new bond. If his sureties, on his bond as executor, were liable, it was not competent for him to transfer that liability to his sureties on the guardianship bond. And it seems clear that the former sureties were liable. The executor had a right to retain the assets for four years (R. S. chap. 66, § 3); and while he thus held them he appropriated them to his own use, which certainly made him and his sureties on his bond as executor liable. The assets have never been in possession of the guardian, and this was caused by the misapplication of them by the executor. Nor are we aware of any means by which the guardian, as such, could have obtained possession. He could not sue himself, and he is not chargeable on the ground that an executor or administrator is chargeable for a private debt which he owes the estate. [That principle is grounded on the necessity of the case, and no such necessity exists in the present instance]. The legatee might have proceeded against the executor and his sureties; and there seems to be no necessity nor reason for proceeding against the sureties of the guardian."

In Hall v. Crushing, 9 Pick. 395, the same court holds as follows:

"It has been argued that when the testator's debts were all paid, the duties of the executor terminated; and that thereupon, by operation of law there was a transmutation of property in the assets to the executor in his capacity as trustee to the minor children. This trust, however, was confined to the support and education of the children, and the income of the funds was alone appropriated for these purposes. The executor had a right to retain the funds for the purpose of distributing them among the children, when they should respectively become of age. If another person, therefore, had been appointed trustee, he could only have a right to demand the income of the funds from the executor."

"And again; before there could be any transmutation of property, as contended for by the defendant's counsel, the executor must have settled his final account of administration in the court of probate, in which the balance due from him as executor should be allowed to his credit, as being retained by him in his capacity as trustee for the minor children. And such an allowance would not, it is to be presumed, be made by the judge of probate, without first requiring him to give bond for the faithful performance of his duties as trustee. The case of Wyman v. Hubbard, 13 Mass. 232, may be considered, perhaps, as somewhat opposed to this reasoning, but nothing in opposition was expressly decided in that case."

The only departure from the rule requiring an administration account to be first filed, and a decree of the probate court thereon, in order to fix the liability of sureties in cases like the present, recognized by the courts of Massachusetts, is stated in Newcomb v. Williams, 9 Met. 584, as follows:

"What would amount to such change of capacity when the same persons are executors and trustees, so as to exonerate the sureties on the executorship bond, would depend on circumstances. If by the constitution of the trust they were exempted from giving bonds,

* * * it would probably be held sufficient, as no actual payment can be made to one's self, to show by any authoritative and notorious act that they had elected to act in the capacity of trustee; as, for instance, if they claim a credit in their executorship account filed in the probate office for a sum held by themselves as trustees, and also file an inventory or account charging themselves with the like sum as trustees."

As already stated by the master, no such authoritative and notorious acts can be found by him under the evidence, going to show that there was a transmutation of assets from Abraham Shipman, executor to Abraham Shipman, testamentary guardian, etc., in his lifetime. In the absence of such proof of transmutation of assets, can the account of guardianship, as stated by Ira Shipman, administrator of Abraham Shipman, after his father's death, be regarded as anything more than a declaration of what he supposed was his father's intention in regard to a matter of which he is not supposed to have any personal knowledge?

In Müller v. Congdon, 14 Gray, 114, the same court held: "The mere determination of the executor in his own mind to appropriate property or securities in his hands as such to himself as trustee under the will, is not such a setting apart as will discharge him as executor and charge him as trustee."

Under all the circumstances of the case your master is of the opinion that Ira T. Clement, the petitioner, is entitled to his bill of review as prayed for by him.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

On exceptions by Mary V. Simpson to this report the case was heard before ROCKEFELLER, J., who delivered the following opinion:

"The learned master's report of the facts found by him and what he has said in his very able opinion, is perhaps sufficient. There was no account filed by Judge Shipman, in his lifetime, as executor of Jesse M. Simpson, deceased, showing a balance in his hands after administering the estate and payment of legacies; nor was there any evidence before the master, of any facts tending to show that he had appropriated any of the funds to himself in the capacity of guardian. Indeed, except for the purpose of education, he could not have done so, for at the time of his death Miss Simpson was only about seventeen years of age, and the absolute right to any part of her father's estate, real, personal or mixed, except so much thereof as was necessary for her education, depended wholly upon her living to attain the age of twenty-one years.

"As was said in the case of Hall v. Cushing, 9 Pick. 395. 'If another person, therefore, had been appointed trustee, he could only have a right to demand the income (or in this case so much of the principal in addition as was necessary for educational purposes under the will) of the funds from the executor.' It is true under the facts in the present case it was necessary to allege and show that the error complained of was apparent on the body of the decree or on the face of the account, as there was no new matter that had arisen after the decree, nor new evidence as to facts subsequently discovered, which could not have been discovered by due diligence before. The item complained of reads as follows:

1878, to amount received from the executor of the estate of Jesse M.

Simpson, deceased..... $6,390.11

"The learned master had before him the will of Jesse M. Simpson, deceased, which showed him that the minor was not entitled to any part of the estate unless she lived to be twenty-one years of age. He also had before him the two accounts filed by Ira Shipman, administrator of Abraham Shipman, deceased, who was the executor and also testamentary guardian. Those accounts were filed on the same day. The account as executor showed a balance in the hands of Abraham Shipman of $6,390. This balance was simply transferred by the above stated item in the debtor side of the account as guardian.

"Doubtless the administrator, who was attempting to file both the accounts of Abraham Shipman, as executor of Jesse M. Simpson, deceased, and as guardian of Mary V. Simpson, was under the impression that the latter was entitled at the time to the corpus of the estate, and that that was the proper way to do it. Upon the face of all these records the error was apparent, and the master treated it as appearing upon the face of the account. I am of opinion that if there was an error committed by him it was in this branch of the case. If the court can look no further than to the charge itself, then perhaps an error was committed. Looking at the whole transaction the mistake is so obvious that we are disposed to take the master's view of it. It would be against justice and equity not to rectify such a plain mistake.

"The case of Stevenson's Errs. Appeal, 32 Pa. 318, was decided six years after Riddle's Estate, 19 Pa. 431. That case was in some of its features similar to the present. John Stevenson, the guardian, had died and the account was stated and filed by his executors. It was confirmed on the 24th of March, 1856, and on the 18th of September the petitioners filed their petition for a review. They did not allege the discovery of new matter which they could not by due diligence have produced before the decree, but, inter alia, that certain amounts had been charged to Susan and Mary Jane Newell, two of the wards; and it having been shown that they had not received them, the supreme court struck them out. The syllabus of that case is misleading. A careful examination of the facts of the case and what was done by the supreme court, will show that in order to do justice facts alunde were received to show that the account was incorrect on its face. There is nothing appearing on the face of the account to show that the items complained of were erroneous, but it being apparent from the vouchers in evidence and records that the executors, who are not supposed to have been familiar with the transaction, but who, as in the present case, had been obliged to file the account, had made a mistake. In the present case the error is manifest from the will and the simultaneous accounts filed by the administrator, though, perhaps not in the item alone constituting the charge complained of as errors, nor in the formal decree of the absolute confirmation of the account by the court.

"We deeply sympathize with Miss Simpson. Doubtless her father intended, by requiring security of her guardian, to protect her interests.

The mistake was in not requiring security of the executor as such; but this was not done and it cannot be helped. Mr. Clement was only security as guardian, and can only be held responsible for money that came into the hands of the guardian as such. A word for Judge Shipman, the guardian. There was no evidence that he wasted or squandered the money of his ward in the offensive sense in which those terms are generally understood. He was a kind hearted and genial man and doubtless the ward's father esteemed him as such. He would go bail and lend his money to those who asked him. The inventory and accounts in evidence filed by his administrator show that at the time of his death he held notes, judgments and other securities against individuals who had become insolvent, and which were uncollectible, to the amount of about $13,000. His available personal estate was only about $1,600, and his real estate realized $4,330. It is possible that up to the time of his death he thought himself solvent. Of course this has nothing to do with the case in hand, but may for the sake of his credit throw some light upon the subject, as relating to the allegation of his intentionally wasting or squandering his ward's funds.

"[The exceptions to the report of the master are dismissed, the report confirmed, and the account referred back to Franklin Bound, Esq., as auditor, to restate and correct the same in accordance with the report, with power to take and hear evidence and report the facts as to any, and if any what, amount of funds actually came into the hands of the guardian as such.]"

This appeal was taken by Mary V. Fish, neé Simpson, who assigned as error that portion of the foregoing decree of the court embraced in brackets.

The case came up for argument in the supreme court at January Term, 1885. When called, it appearing from the record that the auditor to whom the court below had referred the master's report for an account to be restated in accordance therewith, had not yet reported, this court refused to hear the argument until the auditor had reported, and a final decree had been made by the court.

The auditor thereafter reported, inter alia, as follows:

"The decree of the court sustaining the original report of the master (to which this report is merely supplementary), and dismissing the exceptions filed thereto imposes but a single duty upon the master, to wit: 'To report the facts as to any, and if any what, amount of funds actually came into the hands of the guardian as such.'

"No new facts have been produced and no additional evidence offered at the present hearing. The whole case then rests upon the facts as found by the master in his original report and evidence as disclosed in the notes of testimony accompanying the same. The only evidence before your master that any moneys charged in the accounts filed were received by Abraham Shipman, testamentary guardian of Mary V. Simpson in his capacity as guardian of said Mary V. Simpson, is the single item to wit: '1878, July 14, to cash received from S. P. Wolverton, administrator of Mary Simpson, deceased, Mary V. Simpson, share of said estate, $250.'

"The fact of this payment to Abraham Shipman is not disputed. It was no part of the estate he represented as executor. It was the share or interest of his ward in the estate of a deceased aunt, and he received and receipted for it as such, as her guardian. The facts found and stated in the master's report substantially show that the money received by Abraham Shipman from the testator's estate came into his hands as executor, and that the payments and disbursements made by him and credited on the credit side of the guardian account filed by his administrator, Ira Shipman, were made with money received in his capacity of executor. If your master is correct in his findings of facts and rulings in the master's report, then the item of $250 is the only item or sum of money with which Abraham Shipman can be charged in his capacity of guardian.

"The auditor finds the following facts:

"First. That Abraham Shipman received on the 14th day of July, A. D. 1878, as the guardian of Mary V. Simpson, the sum of $250, it being his ward's interest or share in the estate of Mary Simpson, deceased.

"Second. That the said Abraham Shipman did not receive any other item or sum of money set out in said guardian's account in his capacity as guardian; nor did he in his lifetime legally account for the item or sum of money received by him as guardian aforesaid, or any part thereof, unless the credits claimed in the guardian account filed by his administrator, Ira Shipman, viz.:

A. Shipman, guardian, time, trouble, etc.	$300 00
Ira Shipman, administrator of guardian	25 00
Geo. B. Reimensnyder, attorney,	20 00
Lemuel Shipman, register, etc.	10 00

can be recognized as legal credits or payments out of said item or sum of money.

"Third. That the sum of $250 was the only money or sum of money received by the said Abraham Shipman in his capacity of guardian of the said Mary V. Simpson.

"Your auditor therefore restates the said guardian's account, in accordance with the foregoing facts, as follows:

"Abraham Shipman, guardian of Mary V. Simpson, a minor child of Jesse M. Simpson, deceased, by Ira Shipman, administrator.

DR.
To amount received from estate of Mary Simpson, deceased	$250 00
Interest from July 14, 1878, to date of audit	115 00
	<hr/> $365 00

By credits claimed in account filed by Ira Shipman, administrator, as follows, to wit:

A. Shipman, guardian, time, trouble, etc.	$300 00
Ira Shipman, administrator of guardian	25 00
Geo. B. Reimensnyder, attorney, etc.	20 00
Lemuel Shipman, register	10 00

$355 00

Cost of Audit.

Franklin Bound, auditor.....	$ 25 00
Urias Bloom, recording report....	5 00
Urias Bloom, certificate, etc.....	8 25
	<hr/>
	$ 38 25"

On the hearing in the court below, the exceptions of Mary V. Simpson to the above report were dismissed and appellant alleged as additional error:

1. The action of the court in making the following decree: "The principal question intended to be raised by the parties in this case has been determined in the report of the master, and the opinion of the court filed November 10, 1884, deciding that the account filed by Ira Shipman, administrator, being the guardian's account, should be reviewed and restated;—the present account being restated in accordance with the said report of the master and opinion of the court, the exceptions are dismissed and the report of the auditor confirmed."

2. The action of the court in dismissing the exceptions to the report of the auditor and the account as restated, and in confirming the same.

Messrs. J. Nevin Hill, L. H. Kase, for appellants:

A bill of review as a matter of right can be had only: 1, for error of law appearing in the body of the decree; 2, for new matter which has arisen after the decree; and 3, it may be allowed ex gratia for new evidence as to facts subsequently discovered, which could not have been procured by due diligence before; the plaintiff must show that he has been diligent and not negligent.

Green's App. 59 Pa. 235; Hartman's App. 36 Pa. 70; Stevenson's Exrs.' App. 32 Pa. 318.

Plaintiff's bond in evidence before the master can have no effect whatever in this cause, except to show his right to a bill of review in the proper case. This is what is decided by the case of Bishop's Est. 10 Pa. 469, and Hartz's App. 2 Grant, 83.

A guardian or executor must use the same care and management that a prudent man would exercise in his own affairs; he must act for his ward, not for himself.

Hughes' Minors' App. 53 Pa. 500; Finney's App. 37 Pa. 323; Will's App. 22 Pa. 325; Jack's App. 94 Pa. 367.

Mr. S. P. Wolverton, for appellee.

Mr. Justice Sterrett delivered the opinion of the court:

For reasons given in the report of the learned master, and which it is unnecessary here to repeat or further elaborate, there was no error in entertaining the petition for review, nor in referring the account to an auditor to restate and correct the same, and report what amount of funds, if any, actually came into the hands of the testamentary guardian.

The auditor found as a fact that in July, 1873, the guardian received $250, his ward's share or interest in the estate of Mary Simpson, deceased, and that this was all that ever came into his hands as guardian. Charging him with interest on that sum made the entire debit side of the account $365. There is no evidence tending to show that he should have been charged with any other or greater sum.

The only question is: What should be deducted from the fund so found to be in his hands? The credits of $25, to the administrator by whom the deceased guardian's account was filed, $20, to his attorney for stating account, etc., and $10, register's fees, amounting in all to $55, appear to be properly chargeable on the fund; but we see nothing to justify the allowance of $300, as compensation for time, trouble, etc., of the deceased guardian. If a person other than the guardian had been executor, it would have been the duty of the guardian to see that the estate was properly settled and the share, to which his ward was entitled, securely invested. The fact that he undertook to act in the dual capacity of executor and testamentary guardian did not lessen his duty as either. True, it was through his dereliction of duty as executor that the funds of the estate were lost and thus never came into his hands as guardian, but that does not excuse his supineness as guardian. To allow compensation for time, trouble, etc., as guardian, would under the circumstances be rewarding palpable neglect of duty.

Decree reversed, and it is now adjudged and decreed that there is due from the estate of Abraham Shipman, late guardian of Mary V. Simpson $310, with interest from March 18, 1886, and that the same be paid to said Mary V. Simpson, now Fish; and it is further ordered that the costs, including costs of audit be paid by the appellee.

Edward B. ORNE et al., Heirs of Benjamin Orne, Deceased, Piffs. in Err.,
v.

KITTANNING COAL CO.

1. Fraud, which the legal owner of land might have alleged as a defense to the specific performance of a contract in relation to the land, may be set up by the privies in his estate as a defense in an action of ejectment brought by the successors of one claiming an equitable title by virtue of the contract but never in possession.
2. Where the possession of the vendor of land is lawful, his vendee cannot maintain ejectment against him, without proof of a previous tender of the purchase money; and he must maintain that tender by producing the money in court.
3. When an agreement for sale of land is fully executed in writing, the vendor thereby assumes the character of a trustee and holds the legal title in trust for the vendee, under the terms and conditions of the contract. The trust thus implied is of the same character as if it had been expressed in the agreement.

(Decided October 4, 1886.)

ERROR to the Common Pleas of Blair County, to review a judgment on a verdict for the defendant in an action of ejectment. Affirmed.

This was an action of ejectment, begun in 1864, by Benjamin Orne against the Kittanning Coal Company for the undivided seven sixteenths of two certain tracts of land principally in Allegheny Township, Blair County, and partly in Washington Township, Cambria County, warranted in the names of John Gray and William McDougal, and containing together 800 acres.

The death of the plaintiff was subsequently suggested of record, and Edward B. Orne and his other heirs were substituted as plaintiffs. At the trial the following facts appeared:

There were three titles to the land in controversy, the oldest of which was called the Proctor title, and was the title of the heirs of Colonel Thomas Proctor and their vendees, under application for survey, warrant, survey thereunder, and return thereof, and payment by him of the purchase money to the Commonwealth before 1789. Of this title both the plaintiffs and the defendant held a part; but it was invalid as against the next title.

The next was called the Blair title; it originated in a sale and conveyance in 1806 to John Blair for unpaid taxes due the Commonwealth. Both the plaintiffs and the defendant claimed under it, and its validity and due proof were undisputed.

The youngest was called the Jackson title, but was really the mere possession of Thomas Jackson which began within twenty-one years of the suit.

On July 3, 1854, Theodore G. Pomeroy and John F. Cottrell obtained a conveyance of one fourth of the Jackson title; and on September 12, 1855, they conveyed their right, title and interest, with special warranty only, to the Allegheny Railroad & Coal Company, taking from the company on September 12, 1855, a mortgage of the land to them and to the vendors of the remaining three fourths of the title, to secure the notes given for the purchase money.

Afterward the company, discovering the worthlessness of the title, refused to pay the notes, and three suits were brought in Philadelphia County upon the notes against the company. Judgment was recovered in one suit and a testatum execution issued to Blair County. Thereupon, in October, 1860, Pomeroy entered into an agreement with the other holders of the notes to unite in the purchase of the tracts under the testatum execution, in such proportions that Pomeroy should be the owner of one undivided half and the other holders should be the owners of the other undivided half; and that Pomeroy should release and surrender to the other parties, or to the trustee taking for them, all his right, title and interest in said lands in excess of one half.

On November 26, 1860, James McCormick, Jr., bought in the land for the parties to this agreement at the sale under the testatum execution. In June, 1862, he conveyed his title to one Burroughs in fee, and in September, 1863, Burroughs conveyed to the defendant.

The defendant showed an undisputed title to an undivided eighth part of this Blair tax title, through H. N. Burroughs' purchase thereof, June 21, 1862, under due proceedings, from the guardian of the estate of one of John Blair's heirs, and also to one half of the remaining undivided seven eighths part thereof, the other half of which, namely: seven sixteenths part of the whole, the plaintiffs claimed in the present ejectment, which claim the defendant disputed.

The seven eighths part of that title had passed to Pomeroy in fee as follows: one eighth by deed dated October 4, 1856, from J. Blair Walker; one fourth by deed dated November 25, 1856, from E. B. Walker and M. B. Hetherington; one fourth by deed dated October 6, 1857, from J. C. Blair; one fourth by deed dated October 7, 1857, from Thomas J. Blair, all heirs of John Blair.

On October 9, 1856, Theodore G. Pomeroy and John C. Heylman had executed the following agreement, which was recorded September 23, 1858:

"Articles of agreement made and entered into between T. G. Pomeroy, of Cresson, in the County of Cambria and State of Pennsylvania, of the one part, and John C. Heylman, of the Borough of Harrisburg, County of Dauphin, and State aforesaid, of the other part, witnesseth: That the said T. G. Pomeroy and J. C. Heylman hereby mutually covenants and agrees that they will purchase from the heirs of Thomas Proctor, of Revolutionary memory, and others, if necessary, the title to two tracts of land surveyed in the names of John Gray and William McDougal, located in the Counties of Cambria and Blair; also any other tracts that may belong to the said heirs of Thomas Proctor, deceased, located within the State of Pennsylvania.

"It is hereby understood that all title relative to the said tracts mentioned, shall belong equally to the said T. G. Pomeroy and the said John C. Heylman, and that all the moneys paid for the same by either party, and the expenses incurred by obtaining the title to the same shall be equally borne by the said T. G. Pomeroy and John C. Heylman; and in the event of one party advancing more money than the other party for the purpose of securing the title to said lands, the party advancing the said money shall firmly hold the party advancing his proportion for one half of the money so advanced, and in the event of the title thus purchased not proving good, then each of the parties shall bear the loss consequent upon the purchase equally; and in the event of the title proving good, then each party is to share alike in the profits.

"It is mutually agreed, between the said T. G. Pomeroy and J. C. Heylman, that the said T. G. Pomeroy shall hold the entire title obtained to the said premises, one half in trust for the use of the said John C. Heylman. And the said T. G. Pomeroy hereby agrees to convey the said one half in trust to such party as he, the said J. C. Heylman, may elect, providing the purchase money for the said J. C. Heylman's interest is paid to the said T. G. Pomeroy, his heirs or assigns, at the cost of the same, with interest from the date of payment, before the execution of said deed.

"The foregoing articles of agreement shall be binding upon our heirs and assigns."

Heylman obtained the said conveyances of seven eighths of the Blair tax title to Pomeroy, receiving the purchase money therefor from him, and giving him for his, Heylman's share thereof, and other indebtedness, his, Heylman's, and his father-in-law's three judgment notes, together amounting to $2,898.64, all dated September 22, 1858, which were entered up in the Court of Common Pleas of Dauphin County, November 24, 1858; upon the first whereof Pomeroy made the money by execution, and the other two were assigned by him to W. N. Wiley, September 23, 1858, and the money due thereon made partly by payment and partly by execution, in Dauphin County, and the residue, upon a transcript of the last of said judgments filed in the Court of Common Pleas of Blair County, by execution and sheriff's sale and conveyance in 1862, of all Heylman's interest in said tracts; and that title of the sheriff's vendee duly passed to the plaintiffs.

Burroughs, through whom the defendant claimed, while holding Pomeroy's right, title and interest, being an undivided half part of said tracts, on February 26, 1863, before distribution of the proceeds of said sheriff's sale of Heylman's interest in said tracts, purchased, and by writing filed had assigned to himself by Wiley the said judgment whereon said sale was had, and also the proceeds thereof in the sheriff's hands, distributable to the holder of that judgment in satisfaction of it, and subsequently received those proceeds.

Before Heylman and Pomeroy's agreement of October, 1856, Heylman had defrauded Pomeroy, as follows: on January 1, 1856, Heylman, under a letter of attorney to him, dated December 20, 1855, purporting to be executed by an heir of Proctor, named Z. P. Lea, and his wife, but whose signatures thereto were not genuine, made in consideration of $2,000, a conveyance of the interest of said Lea and wife in the tracts to Pomeroy in fee.

Heylman afterward negotiated and obtained conveyances from the other heirs of Proctor for $750, and these titles Heylman caused to be conveyed to Pomeroy in fee.

The judgment notes given upon the accounts settled between Heylman and Pomeroy, September 23, 1858, covered not only Heylman's half of what was furnished by Pomeroy and paid for the Blair tax titles and Proctor titles obtained subsequent to and under their agreement of October, 1856, but also $1,051.67 as Heylman's half of what Pomeroy had previously furnished to pay Z. P. Lea, with interest, and an excess over one half of the amounts previously really paid the other heirs of Proctor as Heylman's share, indicating that Heylman had before the agreement of October, 1856, obtained from Pomeroy money as for purchase money for parts of the Proctor title previously conveyed to Pomeroy in fee, which Heylman, however, did not pay for.

There was no evidence of any written agreement between them before October, 1856, or of any oral agreement except the account settled in September 23, 1858, and Heylman's negotiating the said purchases made prior to October, 1856.

Pomeroy died in 1864. His vendees, the Allegheny Railroad & Coal Company and the defendant, had been in possession since 1855. The plaintiffs had therefore never been in possession. They brought the action, however, on the ground that Heylman's fraud, being before the agreement, did not affect his equitable title to one half the seven eighths under which, by the sheriff's sale in 1862, they claimed; and that Pomeroy's vendees between 1860 and 1863 had mined and sold more than enough coal from the tract to pay Heylman's debt for the fraud. The defendant contended that his fraud deprived him and the plaintiffs of recourse to an equitable title to sustain the action.

The court charged, inter alia, as follows:

"This case, in our view of the law on this point, stands the same as if Heylman were living and in court now, asking a conveyance from Pomeroy for the half of this land under the agreement. If the conduct of Heylman was such that a court of equity would not permit him to have the half of the lands because of frauds on Pomeroy, then we instruct you that the present plaintiffs, claiming under Heylman by the sheriff's sale of his interest, stand in no better relation to the parties defending here than he would have done; and [if you find that his conduct in reference to these purchases was fraudulent towards Pomeroy, as to the amounts he alleged that these titles cost; if he made this deed as attorney in fact of Lea, knowing that the power of attorney under which he pretended to act was a forgery; if he didn't have a power of attorney; or if in any respect he acted in bad faith and fraudulently towards his partner, Pomeroy, then he could not have a court of equity decree him a conveyance of the half of these lands; and in that event your verdict should be for the defendant generally.] But if the defendant has failed to satisfy you that the conduct of Heylman was fraudulent in these respects, then the plaintiffs, having shown that their purchase money was paid in the collection of these notes, would be entitled to recover seven sixteenths of the land described in the writ, subject to the opinion of the court on the several questions of law which have been submitted by the counsel on the one side or the other. As you find this one fact, so your verdict will be, either for the defendant or for the plaintiffs for the seven sixteenths of the land described in the writ."

The court refused, inter alia, the following points presented by the plaintiffs:

"6. But even if you should find that Heylman was a party to or cognizant of those alleged forgeries, and did not pay over the moneys he obtained from Pomeroy, on account of these titles, to other parties, although acts highly censurable and punishable, yet they related only to the titles of those Proctor heirs, and the conveyances thereof being consummated to Pomeroy before his agreement of October, 1856, the agreement giving Heylman any interest therein, whereto these acts of Heylman had relation, must have existed at the time of those conveyances, and the defendant claims it was the same agreement in terms, in parol, as that which they subsequently executed in writing in October, 1856; but that written agreement of October, 1856, however similar in terms to their previous oral understanding (which was in law of no obligation, as it related to realty), was a subsequent, distinct agreement, so that Heylman's said alleged misconduct was in relation to a different subject matter from the Blair tax titles, and under another agreement than that of October, 1856, under which the Blair tax titles were acquired, which the taint of that alleged misconduct cannot affect, and the defense to the plaintiffs' claim upon that ground fails."

"7. That the bringing of the moneys obtained by Heylman from Pomeroy, on account of these Proctor titles, into the subsequent account made between them of their transactions as to the Blair tax titles under the agreement of October, 1856, to fix the whole amount of Heylman's then indebtedness to Pomeroy, on all accounts for settlement, does not affect Heylman's equity to the Blair tax titles, obtained under his agreement of October, 1856, with the taint of his said alleged misconduct; and the defense to the plaintiffs' claim upon that ground fails."

Verdict and judgment were for the defendant; whereupon, the plaintiffs took this writ, assigning as error the bracketed portion of the charge, and the refusal of their points.

The case was twice argued in the supreme court. Upon ordering the second argument the court specially invited the attention of counsel to the consideration whether the defendant could avail itself of the alleged fraud of Heylman upon Pomeroy, to defeat the plaintiffs' recovery.

Messrs. George L. Crawford, H. M. Baldridge and Benjamin Harris Brewster, for plaintiffs in error:

The fraud here was not in the making, but in the performance only of a previous agreement, in respect to other parts of an invalid title to the same lands; and the fraud, to defeat the specific performance of a contract, must reach the bond of the contract itself.

Fraud, to vitiate a contract, must be dans locum contractus, or dans causam contractus; that is, such a fraud as occasioned the contract, not collateral to it, as in a security accompanying a debt.

Smith v. Kay, 7 H. L. C. 750-775; Fry, Spec. Perf. § 434; Nat. Exchange Co. v. Drew, 2 Macq. 103; Phipps v. Child, 8 Drewry, 714; Dart, Vend. 5th ed. p. 1042; Groen v. Lou, 22 Beav. 625.

Fraud, to invalidate an assignment, must be at the time of making it, so as to have attached to it, and not in a prior transaction affecting the property passing under it.

Wilson v. Berg, 88 Pa. 167.

An unsuccessful effort at fraud will not avoid a title.

Abbey v. Dewey, 25 Pa. 416.

The rule that he who comes into equity must do equity, applies only to equities arising out of the same transaction, the same contract.

Whitaker v. Hall, 1 Glyn. & J. Bankr. 215, 216; Hanson v. Keating, 4 Hare, 4, 5; Gibson v. Goldsmid, 5 De G. M. & G. 763.

Heylman performed his part of the agreement and consideration by obtaining the Blair tax titles, as well as the other titles, and causing them to be conveyed to Pomeroy as legal holder, and also paying his half of the whole purchase money; and the remaining half thereof was more than repaid by Heylman's half of the proceeds of the lands soon after received by Pomeroy's vendees.

The plaintiffs paid their money on the faith of Heylman's recorded equitable title in the express declaration of trust in the agreement, without notice of any fraud or counter equity.

Fraud makes a contract voidable at the option of the defrauded party. There can be no rescission, so long as he retains anything under the contract which he ought to return.

2 Pars. Cont. 680, note.

To retain is incompatible with rescission. He must put the other party in statu quo, so far as can be done, as soon as practicable after the fraud is discovered. It is not sufficient to offer to do so at the trial.

Pearson v. Chapin, 44 Pa. 9; Byard v. Holmes, 4 Vroom, 125, 127; 2 Pars. Cont. 680, note a; Filby v. Miller, 25 Pa. 267; Beaupland v. McKeen, 28 Pa. 180; Whitney v. Allaire, 4 Denio, 554.

A purchaser for value is protected against prior equities of which there has been no notice.

Hoffman v. Strohecker, 9 Watts, 189; Lazarus v. Bryson, 3 Binn. 84; Stewart v. Reed, 91 Pa. 287.

An innocent purchaser of the legal title, without notice of trust or fraud, is peculiarly protected in equity, and chancery never lends its aid to enforce a claim for the land against him.

Price v. Junkin, 4 Watts, 87.

In Pennsylvania there is now no distinction as to this between legal and equitable title.

Cobert v. Irwin, 8 Serg. & R. 239; Lane v. Reynard, 2 Serg. & R. 65.

In ejectment a plaintiff must recover on the strength of his own title and not on the weakness of the defendant's. But a defendant cannot avail himself of this rule against a plaintiff whom he has fraudulently induced to purchase a weak title.

Fraud is personal and individual in its nature, and only the party injured can claim advantage of it.

An assignee of a contract cannot insist upon fraud used in the making of the contract on the party under whom he claims.

Carroll v. Potter, Walker, Ch. (Mich.) 355; Harding v. Commercial Loan Co. 84 Ill. 253; Clarke v. Dickson, Ellis, Bl. & Ellis, 148 (96 E. C. L. R. 148-154); Urguhart v. Macpherson, L. R. 8 App. Cas. 831-833.

A plea of fraud (as fraud does not per se avoid a contract but only gives an option to the defrauded party to disaffirm) includes an allegation of disaffirmance, which is traversed by traverse of the plea, and must be proved.

Daves v. Harness, L. R. 10 C. P. 166.

If any innocent third party has acquired an interest in the property, or if by delay the position even of the wrong doer is affected, it will preclude a party defrauded from exercising his right to rescind.

Morrison v. Universal Marine Ins. Co. L. R. 8 Exch. 197-204.

Mr. Samuel S. Blair, for defendant in error:

The reargument of plaintiffs in error denies the right of the defendant to avail itself of Heylman's admitted fraud on Pomeroy, and places this inability on the ground that fraud is not a merchantable commodity. But this is a total misapplication of that principle; that is the rule where no thing or estate is assigned, where nothing passes by the assignment but a bare right of action, as, the right merely to file a bill for fraud committed on the assignor. Such an assignment is void as against public policy, being champertous, as a mere right to sue for a tort is not assignable; but wherever a substantial interest passes, the assignee and those claiming under him stand in the right of the assignor.

Story, Eq. Jur. 1041 and note.

Mr. Justice Clark delivered the opinion of the court:

By the terms of the contract of October 9, 1856, it was agreed between T. G. Pomeroy and J. C. Heylman that they would purchase together the Proctor title and such other titles as might be necessary to secure to them the lands in controversy; that the legal title to said lands should be vested in Pomeroy, one half for his own use and the other half for the use of Heylman; Pomeroy, to convey the one half held in trust to such person as Heylman might designate, "providing the purchase money for said J. C. Heylman's interest is paid to the said T. G. Pomeroy, his heirs and assigns, at the cost of the same, with interest from the date of payment, before the execution of said deed."

The plaintiffs claim title to an undivided part, as purchasers of the interest of Heylman under the contract; the defendant claims as the holder of the title of Pomeroy.

The Kittanning Coal Company is admittedly invested, not only with the absolute title to Pomeroy's half interest in the lands purchased under the agreement, but with the legal title of Heylman's half, according to the terms and conditions of the contract. It is plain, then, that the Kittanning Coal Company, holding the full title of Pomeroy, is a privy in estate with him, and in this controversy stands in his stead.

It is not pretended, much less shown, that Heylman or any of those claiming under him were at any time in the possession of the premises; the Allegheny Railroad Company, and its successor in title, the Kittanning Coal Company, from the date of and indeed long prior to the inception of Heylman's equity, have admittedly held the exclusive actual occupancy of all the lands covered by this dispute.

This ejectment is one, therefore, by the holder of a merely equitable title, out of possession, against the holder of the legal title in the admitted peaceful, actual and adverse occupancy of the land. In such a case it is clear that an ejectment will not lie, to turn the trustee out of the possession, until one half of the purchase money advanced and one half of the expenses incurred by Pomeroy have been paid or tendered, in compliance with the contract.

The general rule is that in an ejectment founded on an equity only, the plaintiff, to be entitled to recover, must not only tender the money before suit brought, but to show his readiness to perform, he must also have it in court ready to be paid in the event of a verdict in his favor. Minaker v. Morrison, 2 Yeates, 346; Gore v. Kinney, 10 Watts, 139; Eberly v. Lehman, 100 Pa. 546.

If, however, the equitable owner by the terms of his contract is entitled to, or by consent is once fairly put into the possession under his title, and by force, fraud or other illegal means is ousted therefrom, the rule as stated does not apply. Harris v. Bell, 10 Serg. & R. 39; Gregg v. Patterson, 9 Watts & S. 197; D'Arras v. Keyser, 26 Pa. 252; Chase v. Irwin, 87 Pa. 288.

In the very recent case of Bell v. Clark, 17 W. N. C. 44 [S. C. 1 Cent. Rep. 852], the rule is thus stated: "Where the possession of the vendor is lawful, his vendee cannot maintain ejectment against him, without proof of a previous tender of the purchase money; and he must also maintain that tender by producing the money in court."

These cases have been followed by the still more recent case of McGrew v. Foster, in the eastern district, not yet reported [post].

It is contended, however, on the part of plaintiffs, that the purchase money has been fully paid in accordance with the contract; that three certain notes which Heylman gave to Pomeroy on September 22, 1856 (one for $997.58, at two months; one for $950.58, at four months and one for $950.58, at six months), were for the purchase money and expenses of this joint purchase, and for reimbursement of Pomeroy for the money advanced on the contract; that all of these notes were before the institution of this suit, fully paid, and that the contract was, on Heylman's part, thus fully complied with, by means whereof he was entitled to a conveyance and, therefore, to the possession as incident to his title.

On the other hand, however, it is alleged and the jury has so found that Heylman, in the settlement which resulted in the execution and delivery of these notes, perpetrated upon Pomeroy a most gross and glaring fraud; that by falsehood and forgery he deceived Pomeroy as to the amount he actually applied to the purchase of these titles; and that in consequence the notes did not, in fact, represent the sums which Heylman owed Pomeroy, under his contract.

In that settlement Heylman received credit for $2,000 which he alleged he had paid for the interest of one Z. P. Lea. This money Pomeroy had advanced to Heylman upon the faith of a conveyance to him by Heylman, under authority of a letter of attorney from Lea which Heylman himself had forged. He also received credit for $850 more than he paid, of Pomeroy's money, for the interests of Miller, Myers and Bachelor, having falsely and fraudulently altered the true consideration mentioned in the respective deeds, to accomplish this purpose.

These fraudulent transactions of Heylman are not denied; they are frankly admitted and in addition, as we have already said, they have been found by the jury. The several sums of money of which Pomeroy was thus defrauded, with the interest thereon, actually exceed the amount covered by the obligations taken at the settlement of September 22, 1878; and although the obligations were accepted as securing the full amount of Heylman's half of the purchase money, in no proper sense can it be said that the purchase money has been paid; indeed the entire amount of it remains unpaid.

It is of little consequence, we think, that some of the transactions complained of occurred prior to the agreement of October 9, 1856; for it is plain, from the subsequent settlement, either that the agreement was made upon the faith of and embracing these previous purchases, or they were afterwards brought into it, and accepted by Pomeroy as part performance thereof; and if it be assumed that the fraud of Heylman was not in the making of the contract itself, but in the performance of it only, the result is the same in this case; as, without a full and fair performance on part of the plaintiffs or a tender thereof, there can be no recovery.

The case in either event is to be determined as if the parties to the suit were the original parties to the contract; the Kittanning Coal Company stands in Pomeroy's place, as the holder of the legal title in possession; and the plaintiffs by setting up the equity of Heylman cannot deprive it of that possession, except upon showing that they are in no default under their contract. It is one of the elementary and fundamental principles of equity, that "He who seeks equity must do equity;" and another, that "He who cometh into equity must come with clean hands." The doors are shut against one who, in his prior conduct in the very subject matter at issue, has violated good conscience, good faith or fair dealing.

Therefore, if the fraud of Heylman may be considered as having entered into the contract itself, at its execution, a court of equity will not afford a remedy for its enforcement in his favor; if it affected only the performance, as the plaintiffs assume, the defendant cannot be compelled to yield the possession until the purchase money has been paid.

Fraud, it is true, is not a marketable commodity; the right to avoid or to invalidate a contract, upon the ground of fraud, unless the fraud be of such a character as to render it absolutely void, is in some sense personal. Fraud will not form the substance of an assignment so as to constitute a cause of action in the hands of the assignee. It may pass, however, as incident to a proper subject of assignment. It can only be pleaded by him whose option it is to affirm or disaffirm the contract, or by his representatives, or for his interest, or in his right; as here, by his privies in estate. Waterman, Cont.; Story, Eq. Jur. 1041, note.

Nor can we make any distinction in principle, in this respect, between the ordinary case (arising upon articles between vendor and vendee) and this case, which is said to arise out of an agreement containing an express super-added declaration of trust. When an agreement for sale of land is fully executed in writing, the vendor thereby at once assumes the character of a trustee, and holds the legal title as trust for the vendee, under the terms and conditions of the contract. The trust which in equity is implied is of precisely the same character as if it had been fully expressed on the face of the paper.

Upon a careful examination of the whole case we are of opinion that the judgment must be affirmed.

Judgment affirmed.

David SHANK and Wife, To Use, Plffs.
in Err.,
v.

William A. SIMPSON.

1. If plaintiff's case, as exhibited by the testimony and the rejected offers of evidence, is fatally deficient in the requisite kind or degree of proof, there is no error in the court's directing a verdict for defendant.
2. When the interest of a judgment debtor in land is regularly divested by judi- cial sale, on a valid bona fide judgment against him, the purchaser at such sale may lawfully subsequently sell and convey such land to the judgment debtor's wife; and her title cannot be overthrown as in fraud of his creditors, without affirmative proof of such fraud.

(Decided October 4, 1886.)

ERROR to the Common Pleas of Clinton County, to review a judgment on a verdict directed for defendant in an action of assumption on an alleged special contract. Affirmed.

The case was tried before MAYER, P. J., who charged the jury inter alia as follows:

"On the 28d day of July, 1866, David Shank gave his judgment note to W. A. Simpson, the defendant, payable one day after date, for the sum of $3,900. On the 19th day of February, 1867, judgment was entered on said note in the court of common pleas of this county to No. 22, May Term, 1867.

"On the 23d day of March, 1869, a writ of fiert facias was issued on the judgment, and the real estate of David Shank, the defendant in the judgment, was levied upon. This real estate consisted of a lot of ground situate in the City of Lock Haven, upon which were erected a dwelling house and other buildings.

"On the 26th day of April, 1869, the sheriff sold said real estate to William A. Simpson, for the sum of $2,500, to whom a deed was executed and delivered by the sheriff on the third day of August, 1869. At the time of the levy and sale by the sheriff, David Shank was insolvent and had filed his petition in bankruptcy. On the 14th day of May, 1880, W. A. Simpson sold the real estate purchased by him at sheriff's sale to Mrs. Candor, for the sum of $1,800.

"This suit has been brought by David Shank and Margaret A., his wife, for the use of said Margaret, to enforce an agreement alleged to have been made by David Shank with William A. Simpson, at the time said judgment note was given.

"The narr. filed in the case sets forth as follows: 'On or about the 23d day of July, 1866, William A. Simpson, the defendant, and brother of Margaret, proposed to said David that in order that a home might be secured to her, the said Margaret and her children, in case misfortune should occur in the business of said David, he execute to him a judgment note in such sum as would probably cover the amount such property would bring at a judicial sale; and said Shank thereupon executed and delivered to said defendant a judgment note in the sum of $3,900, upon the specific agreement that said Simpson would hold the judgment for the use of said Margaret; and that if said above described real estate should be sold, then said Simpson would buy the same, and hold it for the same use and purposes for which he held the judgment.'

"David Shank in his testimony says: 'The purpose of that note was, Mr. Simpson thought that something might happen to me—that I might lose my property. He asked me if I would give him a judgment note on my property, and says he: "If you do give me the note I will sell the house on it, and then I will convey the title over to Margaret and you have the title for it, and a title nobody can dispute, and the best way you can convey that house to Margaret"—that is my wife. Then I signed the note, and the agreement was that he was to convey that title over to my wife.

"Q. Was there any other consideration? A. All the consideration.

"On his cross examination he says:

"Q. When was Mr. Simpson to enter up this judgment that you gave him? A. No specified time when he was to enter it.

"Q. There was no agreement that he was to hold this until you became embarrassed, in embarrassed circumstances? A. No agreement about that.

"Q. You did not testify before the arbitrators, then, that Mr. Simpson was to hold this until you became embarrassed, and that he entered it up before you were embarrassed, and broke you up? A. I said that.

"Q. Did you testify before the arbitrators, in another case of David Shank against W. A. Simpson, that Mr. Simpson entered this judgment before you became embarrassed, and broke you up by doing so, and that his agreement was to hold it until you became embarrassed financially? A. The agreement was that.

"Q. When was he to sell the property on it? A. Why, if I failed in business, anything went wrong with me, he was to sell the property on that judgment; and I was in good circumstances when I gave him the judgment; I owed nobody.

"Q. You say he was only to sell it providing you became embarrassed? A. Well, he said 'something might happen you in your business;' said 'something might happen you, Dave.'

"Q. Were there any judgments against you at the time that he sold the property on his judgment? A. Yes, sir, there were judgments at that time.

"Q. Was this property sold on his judgment after you had filed your petition in bankruptcy? A. Yes, sir. I filed my petition in bankruptcy before the house was sold.

"Q. Did you testify that you were to notify him if you should become embarrassed, and he would hold it until then, and that you never notified him, and that he entered it up and broke you up by entering it? A. Yes, sir, I said that.

"Q. Was your testimony before the arbitrators in that respect true? A. Yes, sir, that was true.

"From this evidence of the plaintiff himself, it is clear and unmistakable that the express purpose for which this judgment note was given, was to hinder, delay and defraud the creditors of David Shank. The plaintiff swears the agreement was that the judgment note was to be held until he became embarrassed, and then to be entered and the property sold, so as to secure it for his wife and family. That such an agreement is in itself a fraud and cannot be enforced is fully settled by the authorities. Nor is it material that the defendant was not indebted at the time the judgment note was given, if, when given, the purpose of it was as stated by plaintiff, that defendant was to hold it, and use it in case of financial embarrassment. Such a device cannot be resorted to and the courts called upon to carry it into execution."

PA.

The plaintiffs took this writ, assigning as error the action of the court:

1. In sustaining defendant's objections to plaintiffs' offer to prove by Margaret Shank and other witnesses (for the purpose of showing an acknowledgment of the trust and establishing, in connection with the testimony of David Shank, the trust alleged in the narr.) that shortly after the sale by the sheriff of the property described in the deed offered in evidence, she, witness, went to Mr. Simpson at the instance of Mr. Shank, to procure a conveyance of the property to her; that she suggested the conveyance to Mr. Simpson, and also that she was afraid if the deed were made to her and she should sign papers to get money to start Mr. Shank in business, she might lose the property. He replied he thought it better not to convey it now, she could live in it all the same; that subsequently, in the spring of 1880, witness with her husband and daughter proposed to go to St. Paul, Minn., where they had three sons then living, and before starting West called upon Mr. Simpson with reference to the property. It was proposed to rent it. To this objection was made, and Mr. Simpson proposed to sell it, when witness and her husband went to see Joseph Candor, for the purpose of making sale of the property to him; that a sale was consummated and the property afterwards conveyed to the wife of said Joseph Candor, but not until after witness had gone West; that when at the cars and about to start on the journey West, Mr. Simpson said to witness that he would send the money for the house to her at St. Paul.

Defendant objected to plaintiffs' offer, on the grounds:

1. The plaintiffs have already proved by David Shank, one of the plaintiffs, that the judgment note in question was given for a fraudulent purpose.

2. It already appears from plaintiffs' testimony that the judgment note in question was entered in fraud of David Shank's creditors.

3. It has already been shown by plaintiffs that David Shank, at the time of the sheriff's sale, was largely indebted and had applied for the benefit of the United States Bankrupt Law.

4. From the whole testimony now in, and the present offer, it fully appears that the sheriff's sale, under which plaintiffs claim, was fraudulent and void as to the creditors of David Shank, and that neither David Shank nor his wife Margaret can claim anything thereunder; but the trust, if any, is for the assignee in bankruptcy of David Shank.

5. The plaintiffs have already shown by the records and papers offered in evidence that William A. Simpson, the defendant, paid in money the bid for the real estate in question, and holds the same free from any trust whatever, and therefore there was no consideration for the alleged promise to Margaret Shank contained in the last part of the offer.

6. Under the testimony now in and that offered, the judgment and the title acquired thereunder are valid between the parties to the judgment, and also as to Margaret Shank, wife of the defendant therein.

7. The plaintiffs attempt, by the evidence now in and the present offer, to establish a parol trust in land in violation of the Act relating to parol trusts.

8. In sustaining defendant's objections to plaintiffs' offer to renew the previous offer to be followed by evidence that at the time the note or single bill already in evidence was given, plaintiff (David Shank) was not, nor about to embark, in any hazardous business; nor did he anticipate any indebtedness, but the purpose was to make a provision for his wife.

Defendant's counsel objects on previous grounds, and also:

1. Because it contradicts the evidence already in.

2. It is insufficient because it does not offer to prove that David Shank was not indebted at the time the judgment of W. A. Simpson was entered, and at the time the property was sold by the sheriff.

8. It contradicts the statement of special matter furnished us by plaintiffs of what they propose to offer in evidence at this trial.

4. In charging the jury as follows: "The jury are directed to render their verdict for the defendant."

Messrs. C. G. Furst and C. S. McCormick, for plaintiffs in error:

The law permits a husband to settle property on his wife; and the settlement will be good, although he may afterwards become insolvent. The question for the jury in such case will not be: Are subsequent creditors unpaid? but, Was the purpose of such voluntary settlement to defraud them?

Harlan v. Maglaughlin, 90 Pa. 289; Monroe v. Smith, 79 Pa. 461; Snyder v. Christ, 89 Pa. 507; Byrod's App. 81 Pa. 242; Zuver v. Clark, 104 Pa. 220.

Messrs. W. C. Kress and Charles Coraes, for defendant in error:

The transaction between the parties as claimed by plaintiffs would be fraudulent towards creditors, and equity will not lend its aid to enforce such an agreement.

Troyne's Case, 3 Coke, 80; Bump. Fraud. Conv. p. 81; Williams' Admrx. v. Williams, 84 Pa. 314; Serfoss v. Fisher, 10 Pa. 184; Guggenheimer's App. (Pa.) 2 Cent. Rep. 526; Gill v. Henry, 95 Pa. 398; Rowand v. Pinney, 96 Pa. 192; Salter v. Bird, 14 W. N. C. 154.

Mr. Justice Sterrett delivered the opinion of the court:

If there is anything in the testimony admitted, or in the offers of evidence rejected by the court, that would have presented a material question of fact for the jury, it follows that the learned judge erred in withdrawing the case from their consideration and directing a verdict for defendant; but on the other hand, if plaintiffs' case, as exhibited by the testimony and the rejected offers of evidence, is fatally deficient either in the requisite kind or degree of proof, there was of course no error in either of the rulings complained of.

It appears from the record evidence admitted by the court that in July, 1866, David Shank, husband of the beneficial plaintiff, gave his judgment note to defendant for $3,900, at one day after date, on which judgment was entered about six months thereafter. By virtue of an execution issued thereon in March, 1869, Shank's real estate was levied on and sold to defendant for $2,500, which appears to have been paid by him and subsequently distributed by an auditor.

In May, 1880, defendant conveyed the same property to Mrs. Candor for $1,800. We thus have, on the face of this transaction, a judgment, presumptively bona fide and for a full consideration, a judicial sale of real estate to defendant, and subsequently a private sale and conveyance of the same by him to Mrs. Candor. Instead of even tending to show that either of the plaintiffs has any interest in the property so sold or in the proceeds thereof, the record evidence referred to proves the contrary, and that whatever interest either of them may have had in the land was regularly divested by judicial sale.

The substance, however, of plaintiffs' contention is that the judgment did not represent any indebtedness by Shank to Simpson, but was given for the sole benefit of Mrs. Shank, to be held in trust for her by Simpson; and when the property on which the judgment was a lien was sold, it was purchased and afterwards disposed of at her instance and for her benefit; that the object of thus giving the judgment was to make suitable provision for Mrs. Shank at a time when her husband was not indebted nor about to embark in any hazardous business, and therefore not in fraud of creditors.

If plaintiffs had introduced or offered testimony that would have warranted the jury in finding the truth of their contention, they might have some reason to complain of the adverse rulings of the court; but they did neither, and, as the learned president of the common pleas has shown in his charge, it would have been error to submit the case to the jury on any evidence that was admitted or offered. In any view that can be taken of the evidence it would not have warranted the submission of plaintiffs' case to the jury.

Upon the testimony introduced in connection with the testimony embraced in the offers of evidence rejected by the court, the case of the plaintiffs is fatally defective, both in the kind and degree of proof that was necessary to sustain their contention. There was therefore no error in giving binding instructions to the jury to find for the defendant.

Judgment affirmed.

COUNTY OF LEHIGH, Plff. in Err.,

v.

Emerson F. SCHOCK.

1. The word "crime" is properly applicable both to a felony and to a misdemeanor.
2. The thirteenth section of the Act of September 23, 1791, which makes the costs of justices of the peace in unfounded charges of "having committed a crime" payable "out of the county stock," refers not only to felonies but to misdemeanors, such as cruelty to animals, assault and battery, malicious trespass, larceny and false pretenses.
3. In a suit against a county for costs, the docket of a justice of the peace is conclusive evidence that the prosecution for which costs are claimed was discharged as unfounded for want of evidence.

(Decided October 4, 1886.)

ERROR to the Common Pleas of Lehigh County, to review a judgment on a verdict for the plaintiff in an action of assumpsit.

Affirmed.

At the trial before Albright, P. J., the following facts appeared from the testimony for the plaintiff:

The plaintiff was an alderman of the City of Allentown and County of Lehigh. Informations for the following criminal charges were laid before him: cruelty to animals, assault and battery, malicious trespass, larceny, false pretense, peddling without license, surety of the peace and common scold.

A day of hearing was fixed, when testimony was heard for the Commonwealth and for the defendants, and an entry was made in the official docket "Discharged for want of evidence." The plaintiff claimed his fees from the County and brought suit under the Act of September 23, 1791.

"Where any person shall be brought before a court, justice of the peace or other magistrate of any city or county of this Commonwealth, having jurisdiction in the case, on the charge of being a runaway servant or slave, or of having committed a crime, and such charge upon examination shall appear to be unfounded, no costs shall be paid by such innocent person; but the same shall be chargeable to and paid out of the county stock, by such city or county." Purd. Dig. 491.

The defendant offered no evidence, but requested the court to charge: "Under all the evidence the verdict must be for the defendant." Ans. "Negatived." First assignment of error.

"The justice had no authority to try cases and hear testimony and then dismiss them for want of evidence." Ans. "Negatived." Second assignment of error.

"The City of Allentown, whereof plaintiff is an alderman, is liable for plaintiff's claim." Ans. "Negatived." Third assignment of error.

"The docket of plaintiff is not conclusive that the cases were dismissed as unfounded." Ans. "Negatived." Fourth assignment of error.

The charge of the court was as follows:

"This is an action brought by Emerson F. Schock against the County of Lehigh. It appears in this case that the plaintiff is an alderman of the City of Allentown and, by virtue of his office, a justice of the peace. The claim is for certain fees of the justice in criminal cases brought before him, where he discharged the accused for want of sufficient evidence. He claims that the County is liable for those fees.

Under an Act of Assembly, approved September 23, 1791, and which was excepted from a repealing provision of an Act of 1860, known as the Criminal Procedure Act, in the opinion of the court the County is liable for these costs. That Act of Assembly provides that where a person is charged with crime and such charge upon examination shall appear to be unfounded, no costs shall be paid by the innocent person, but the same shall be chargeable to and paid out of the county stock, by such city or county.

"[As to whether the charge brought before the justice of the peace is unfounded or not, in the opinion of the court the determination of the justice is to govern; and where he held the charge as unfounded, as he did in all these cases or charges, there it is to be taken as correct. It is not for the jury to find whether or not they were unfounded.] The cases heard by the plaintiff included two surety of the peace cases. In these cases the costs of the justice were respectively $1.80 and $1.95. The question has been raised whether a surety of the peace case is within the Act. The Act says: 'Where a party is charged with having committed a crime.'

"A surety of the peace proceeding is brought where a person swears before a magistrate that another has threatened him, and that in consequence of such threats he is afraid that harm will be done to his person or property. The Act says where such a complaint is made, the justice of the peace shall bind over the accused to the court. The Act does not say that he may hear the case and either bind over or discharge him; but in the opinion of the court that is implied. The committing magistrate is to exercise his own judgment, even where the charge is surety of the peace. The Act says he shall bind over. The court holds he still has discretion. If upon examination he finds the charge to be unfounded, it is his duty to discharge the accused and not send the case to court.

"The further question arises whether the charge of surety of the peace is a crime. It is not one of those charges that are prosecuted before a jury. No bill of indictment is drawn, and it is not submitted to a grand or other jury, but it is for the judge to hear. A threat is a crime at common law and is indictable; and the court is of the opinion that a charge of surety of the peace is within the meaning of the Act of 1791, and that there can be a recovery for fees in surety of the peace cases, when the accused is discharged by the magistrate. The court admits that there is a little doubt in its mind, on this matter of surety of the peace, and very probably will look into it hereafter.

"The defendant has asked the court to instruct the jury that under all the evidence the plaintiff is not entitled to recover. We decline to give such instruction, and answer that prayer for instructions in the negative.

"The only question for you is to say whether these fees are in fact owing. [The record of the justice of the peace, which is in evidence, says, in all the cases, that the accused were discharged for want of evidence. That is to be taken by you as conclusive of the fact that the charge was not sustained.]

"Before a county can be sued there must be a demand made of the county to pay. The plaintiff testified that before he brought this suit he made a demand of the commissioners, and that is not gainsaid by the County. Was a demand made before suit was brought, and are these the proper fees? That they are the fees to which the justice is entitled, if he is entitled at all, is not disputed. The whole amount of the fees of the justice is $37.90. [If you believe the testimony: that these are the proper fees and that a demand was made, the docket showing that such cases were heard, you will return a verdict for the plaintiff for $37.90.] There is also evidence of $11.54 due in some of these cases to several constables. The court is of the opinion that the plaintiff cannot recover for the constable fees. I know of no law saying that the constables' fees are to be paid to the justice. The constables themselves would have to sue."

Verdict and judgment were for the plaintiff; whereupon, the defendant took this writ. Four of the assignments of error are mentioned above. The fifth, sixth and seventh referred respectively to the three portions of the charge included in brackets.

Upon a rule for a new trial the court ruled out the claim in cases of surety of the peace and peddling without license, and plaintiff remitted for them.

Mr. C. J. Erdman, for plaintiff in error: Bouvier defines crime as "an act committed or omitted in violation of a public law forbidding or commanding it."

Bishop, as "a wrong which the government notices as injurious to the public, and punishes in what is called a criminal proceeding in its own name."

Blackstone says "the word 'crime' generally denotes an offense of a deep and atrocious dye. When the act is of an inferior degree of guilt, it is called a misdemeanor."

Webster defines crime as a "gross offense or violation of law, in distinction from a misdemeanor or trespass or other slight offense."

In the fifteenth section of this Act we find the following language used: "And although it is just and reasonable that in cases of convictions of capital offenses or where imprisonment at hard labor for a length of time is the punishment for the offense, the public should, in case of the defendant's insolvency, be at the charge of the prosecution," the county "where the crime hath been or shall be committed shall pay the costs of prosecution."

The word "crime" is used to denote an offense of graver character than malicious trespass, common scold, cruelty to animals, etc.

Under the Act of May 1, 1861, the alderman could have assumed jurisdiction of the offense enumerated and with the aid of a jury disposed of them. But in no event could the County have become liable for costs. He arrogated unto himself all the powers of the court of quarter sessions. He tried and acquitted the defendant and directed the County to pay the costs.

On a preliminary hearing the defendant is not entitled to call witnesses, and the magistrate is to hold the defendant for trial in every case where there is a probable case of guilt made out.

Whart. Crim. Law, § 2979.

The City of Allentown is liable, for these costs.

By "county stock" is not meant the county treasury, for it would not do to give cities the privilege of putting their hands into county treasuries.

By holding that by "county stock" is meant "public fund or treasury" the Act would thus read: "shall be chargeable to and paid out of the treasury by such city or county."

The docket of the alderman is not conclusive of the fact that the charges were unfounded, and that the defendants were discharged for want of evidence.

Lancaster Co. v. Mishler, 100 Pa. 624.

Messrs. Levi Smoyer and Jas. L. Schaadt, for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Trunkley delivered the opinion of the court:

It is highly improbable that a magistrate would so conduct himself at the hearing and discharge of persons accused of crime that his docket would not be conclusive that the cases were dismissed as unfounded. No evidence was offered by the defendant; nothing impeaches the good faith of the plaintiff in the performance of his official duty; and therefore the fourth, fifth and sixth assignments are not well taken. Nor is there anything in the case to require notice of the third assignment.

The eleventh section of the Act of 1791 provided that cost on bills returned ignoramus by the grand jury should be paid out of the county stock, and not by the party charged with any felony, breach of the peace or other indictable offense.

Section 13 of that Act, still in force, provides that when any person shall be brought before a court, justice of the peace or other magistrate, on the charge of having committed a crime, if such charge shall appear unfounded, the cost shall be paid out of the county stock, and not by such innocent person. The word "crime" is used in its general sense and means all indictable offenses, just as it is used and means in section 64 in the Criminal Procedure Act of 1860.

The context in the Act of 1791, as well as in the Act of 1860, shows that the word "crime" includes indictable misdemeanors. Properly speaking, "crimes" and "misdemeanors" are synonymous terms; in common usage the word "crimes" is made to denote such offenses as are of a deeper and more atrocious dye, while smaller faults are comprised under the gentler names of "misdemeanors." 4 Blackstone, Com. 5.

The word "crime" is not a synonym of "felony." In the Criminal Procedure Act some provisions are made respecting costs in all prosecutions, except felony. Some crimes are felonies, others are commonly called misdemeanors; and often infamous crimes—as forgery and perjury—are called misdemeanors, thereby distinguishing them from felonies in our statutes relating to costs in criminal cases. The provision respecting costs "in all cases of conviction of any crime" applies to felonies and misdemeanors.

Section 13 of the Act of 1791 applies to every case where a person is before a magistrate on a charge of having committed a crime, and the charge appears unfounded. No difference is made between crimes that are felonious and those that are not felonious, or by reason of some being infamous and others not, or because some are of a deeper dye than others. The innocent person shall not pay costs.

Prosecutions made in good faith are not discouraged by permitting the magistrate to impose the costs on the party who made complaint. This statute has stood for nearly a century and still seems in accord with the wise policy of the Commonwealth.

If it be true, as alleged, that the justices of the peace in Lehigh County, until recently, imposed the costs of unfounded prosecutions upon the complainant, or some other private person, it is well that they have at last learned not to violate the statute.

Judgment affirmed.

Joseph CULLMANS et al., Piffs. in Err.,
v.

James LINDSAY et al.

1. A written agreement may be modified, explained, reformed or altogether set aside, by parol evidence of an oral promise or undertaking material to the subject matter of the contract, made by one of the parties at the time of the execution of the writing and which induced the other party to put his name to it.
2. The fact whether or not the parol promise was the inducing cause of the execution of the written contract, especially when the mental purpose is not at the time expressed, is in general an inference to be drawn from the facts by the jury.
3. A defendant who, in an action upon a written contract of sale, alleges as a defense a contemporaneous parol contract which contradicts the terms of the written contract can not, for the purpose of proving that the parol contract was an inducement to the written contract, testify to the influence of the parol contract upon his mind in inducing him to enter into the written contract.

(Decided October 4, 1886.)

ERROR to the Common Pleas of Lancaster County, to review a judgment on a verdict for the plaintiffs in an action of assumpsit. Reversed.

The facts, and the only assignment of error upon which stress was laid, are fully set forth in the opinion of the court.

Mr. J. L. Steinmetz, for plaintiffs in error:

On the trial plaintiffs endeavored to materially vary and contradict the written or printed contract, by evidence of a contemporaneous parol agreement. There is no allegation in the narr. that the written contract was executed on the faith of the parol agreement; and it is, therefore, doubtful whether the terms and conditions of the written contract could be attacked at all.

Callan v. Lukens, 89 Pa. 184; Parsons v. Adler, 8 W. N. C. 72.

If plaintiffs will insist on the benefit of a contemporaneous parol agreement, they must declare on it.

Hunter v. McHose, 100 Pa. 88.

Before plaintiffs can recover in this action they must set aside the written contract and show a delivery. To set aside the written contract there must be clear, precise and indubitable evidence of fraud or mistake; and it is error to submit the question of fraud to the jury upon slight, trivial parol evidence.
PA.

Stine v. Sherk, 1 Watts & S. 195; Miller v. Smith, 33 Pa. 386.

When parties without fraud or mistake have put their engagements in writing, that is not only the best but the sole evidence of their agreement.

Martin v. Berens, 67 Pa. 459.

It was incompetent for Mr. Lindsay to testify what was the inducement that led him to sign the written contract. The jury is to determine what induced the parties to sign the instrument from what was said and done before the time of signing; and it is improper to allow the witness to state the intention or purpose that was in his mind at the time of the execution.

Spencer v. Colt, 89 Pa. 314.

Mr. George Nauman, for defendants in error:

"That a written agreement may be modified, explained, reformed or altogether set aside, by parol evidence of an oral promise or undertaking material to the subject matter of the contract, made by one of the parties at the time of the execution of the writing, and which induced the other party to put his name to it, must now be regarded as a principle of law so well settled as to preclude discussion."

Walker v. France, 17 W. N. C. 313; S. C. 2 Cent. Rep. 781; Moore v. R. R. Co. 94 Pa. 324.

Mr. Justice Clark delivered the opinion of the court:

This suit was brought to recover the contract price of a certain lot of tobacco, sold by the plaintiffs to the defendants. At the time of the purchase an agreement, partly printed and partly written, was executed as follows:

"April 18, 1883."

"This is to certify that I have this day sold my interest in two acres of tobacco to A. S. Rosenbaum & Co.

First Wrappers at 14 cents.

Second " " 4 " Seconds " " 4 "

Fillers " " 8 "

To be well selected and free of all damage, such as hail cut, shed burnt, fat stems, ragged tobacco, or water casing; and to be delivered in merchantable order, not before the 24th day of April next, at their warehouse.

"N. S. Lindsay."

In the making of this contract, Robert K. Lindsay represented the plaintiffs, and William Morin the defendants. It is alleged, and at the trial evidence was introduced to show, that this instrument did not contain the precise agreement of the parties.

It is contended on the part of the plaintiffs that the written agreement was made by filling up a printed form, generally used in the purchase of tobacco upon the poles, in the process of curing; whereas, the transaction in hand was in fact a purchase of cured tobacco, stored in a cellar, where every facility was afforded for inspection of the article, as to its quality and condition; that the whole lot was thrown open to examination, and was actually purchased upon inspection; that the clause in the contract relating to its quality and condition was objected to, on the part of the plaintiffs' agent, and the contract was subsequently signed upon the express promise and agreement of the defendants' agent that the clause in question should not affect the transaction, but that upon delivery of the tobacco, as it then was, the money would be paid at the prices expressed in the contract.

"No principle is better settled," as we said in Juniata Building Assn. v. Hetzel, 103 Pa. 507, "than that parol evidence is admissible to show a verbal contemporaneous agreement, which induced the execution of a written obligation, though it may vary or change the terms of the written contract."

"That a written agreement may be modified, explained, reformed or altogether set aside, by parol evidence of an oral promise or undertaking material to the subject matter of the contract, made by one of the parties at the time of the execution of the writing, and which induced the other party to put his name to it, must now be regarded as a principle of law so well settled as to preclude discussion. Walker v. France, 17 W. N. C. 818; [S. C. 2 Cent. Rep. 781]. See Greenwalt v. Kohne, 85 Pa. 389; Barclay v. Wainwright, 86 Pa. 191.

It was competent, therefore, for the plaintiffs in this case to introduce evidence to show that it was the parol promise referred to which induced Robert K. Lindsay, their agent, to put his name to the contract; although the effect of the evidence undoubtedly is, by parol proof, to alter the terms of a written instrument. For although the original design of the defendants' agent may have been honest, it is a fraud in the defendants, in order to procure an unfair advantage, subsequently to deny the parol qualification, upon the faith of which the contract was made. Evidence as to the real intent of the parties at the time, therefore, becomes admissible. Lippincott v. Whitman, 83 Pa. 244.

The parol evidence, however, which will be effective to reform a written instrument in such a case must, it is said, be clear, precise and indubitable; that is to say, it must carry clear conviction to the minds of the jurors that the witnesses are credible, that the facts are distinctly remembered and are truly and accurately stated, and to the mind of the court that, if the facts alleged are true, the matters in issue are definitely and distinctly established. Spencer v. Colt, 89 Pa. 314.

The testimony in this case was certainly such as justified the submission; if the facts are as they are stated by Robert K. Lindsay and James Lindsay, it is clear that the written paper did not contain the contract of the parties, and that the writing was signed under the inducement of the accompanying parol promise. The veracity and accuracy of the witnesses and the conflict in the evidence were, of course, wholly for the jury.

But the fact, whether or not the parol promise was the inducing cause of the execution of the written contract, especially when the mental purpose is not at the time expressed, is, in general, an inference to be drawn from the facts. These facts are to be exhibited in the proofs; and the work of inference is for the jury. Where a party is charged with the commission of an act with a particular intent, he may testify what his intention was; but he cannot testify to the undisclosed purpose of his mind, or declare a mental reservation to nullify the express words of his contract. Juniata Build. Assn. v. Hetzel, 103 Pa. 507.

Or, as was said in substance in Spencer v. Colt, 89 Pa. 314, the unexpressed intent, motive or belief existing in one party's mind at the execution of a contract cannot aid the jury in ascertaining whether the language or conduct of the other party had been such as to create that intent, motive or belief. The parties may often have different impressions as to its effect upon their respective interests, and therefore the thoughts of one cannot be proved to bind the other.

At the trial, the following question was propounded by the plaintiffs, to Robert K. Lindsay, their own witness.

Q. Were his declarations, that this contract amounted to nothing and meant nothing and that the tobacco would be paid for as he bought it on sight—was that an inducement to you to sign the contract?

Objected to; objection overruled, and exceptions.

Q. The witness said that he would accept nothing under that contract; and Morin said: this contract means nothing; I bought this tobacco on sight, and you will be paid for it; was that an inducement to you to sign the contract?

A. That was the only inducement he could have bought it on, or anyone else; no other way.

The answer to this question may have had but little effect on the determination of the cause by the jury; we cannot know certainly what did influence the jury in the finding; but, as it was received against the objection of the defendant, and is assigned for error here, we cannot disregard it, upon the mere supposition or conjecture that it did no harm.

The admission of this answer was clear error, and upon this ground the judgment must be reversed. We find no other error upon this record, but upon the second assignment the judgment is reversed, and a venire facias de novo awarded.

John FERNAU et al., Plffs. in Err.,
v.

Henry C. BUTCHER et al.

1. Where, in an attachment under the Act of March 17, 1869, the defendant gives a bond according to section 3 of the Act for the release of the goods attached, and subsequently the attachment is dissolved for want of sufficient evidence of fraud, the plaintiff cannot, after proceeding in personam to judgment and ineffectual execution, maintain an action of debt on the bond.
2. The bond does not dissolve the attachment. It is superadded security, and falls with the attachment.

NOTE.—To the same effect is Dienelt v. Aronia Fabric Co. 2 Pa. C. C. R. 206, where Common Pleas No. 4 of Philadelphia, in dissolving on its merits an attachment under the Act of 1869, entered an exoneretur on the bond which the defendant had given in accordance with section 3 of the Act. (J. M.)

3. Query, whether attachment under the Act lies when the affidavit for the writ charges fraud as to only part of the debt for which the writ issues.

(Decided October 4, 1886.)

ERROR to the Common Pleas of Luzerne County, to review a judgment for the plaintiffs in an action of debt. Reversed.

This was an action of debt by Henry C. Butcher and others trading as Washington Butcher's Sons, against John Fernau, Charles Thomas and three others, on a bond for $1,100 given by Fernau and Thomas as principals, and the other defendants as sureties, to the plaintiffs, to release, according to section 3 of the Act of March 17, 1869, goods which had been attached in a suit under the Act, in which the plaintiffs were the plaintiffs in this suit and the defendants were Fernau and Thomas.

By agreement the case was referred to L. H. Bennett, Esq., in accordance with the Act of April 6, 1869 and its supplements.

The facts found by the referee are stated in the opinion.

The referee directed judgment for the plaintiffs for $665.23. The court below overruled the defendants' exceptions, and confirmed the report; whereupon, the defendants took this writ and assigned as error the action of the court in overruling their exceptions and confirming the report.

Mr. John Lynch, for plaintiffs in error:

The giving of the bond to retain the property attached does not preclude defendants from subsequently moving to dissolve the writ.

Garbutt v. Hanff, 15 Abb. Pr. 189; Bowen v. First Nat. Bank, 34 How. Pr. 408; Aet. v. Albo, 21 La. Ann. 849; Kneeland, Attach. 524; Perry v. Somerby, 57 Me. 552; Tyler v. Safford, 24 Kan. 580.

The attachment having been dissolved on motion, all the proceedings in attachment become of no effect; and the condition in the delivery bond in this case was not forfeited.

Sedgwick's App. 7 Watts & S. 263; Hastings v. Quigley, 2 Clark, 431; Lantz v. Worthington, 4 Pa. 153; Bain v. Lyle, 68 Pa. 60; Hagan v. Lucas, 10 Pet. 400 (85 U. S. bk. 9, L. ed. 471); Rowles v. Hoare, 61 Barb. 266; Excelsior Cork Co. v. Lukens, 38 Ind. 488; Guss v. Williams, 46 Ind. 253; Lehman v. Berdin, 6 Rep. 611.

The judgment against Fernau and Thomas, in the action upon which the execution issued, was not a judgment in the attachment, that having been dissolved by the court.

The appearance of Fernau and Thomas made the suit, in addition to the attachment proceedings, a personal suit. Suppose the defendants Fernau and Thomas died after the seizure and before judgment, the judgment could be taken in rem on the attachment. Could a personal judgment then be entered against the defendants?

Holman v. Fisher, 49 Miss. 478, 479; Erwin v. Heath, 50 Miss. 795, 801.

In Mississippi, attachments may be obtained in the same manner and upon the same grounds as are provided in our Act of 1869.

Kneeland, Attachment, 531.

PA.

Messrs. F. C. Sturges and George K. Powell, for defendants in error:

The mere order of the court, either in sustaining or dissolving the attachment, is not a judgment. It is a mere interlocutory order.

Sharpless v. Ziegler, 92 Pa. 470; Wetherald v. Shupe, 42 Legal Int. 426; Blystone v. Blystone, 51 Pa. 375.

Giving the bond dissolves the attachment, and from that time the proceeding was a mere personal action against the defendants, with a right to bring an action on the bond taken by the sheriff, if the goods were not returned according to the condition of the bond.

Brenner v. Moyer, 98 Pa. 278; Dallett v. Feltus, 7 Phila. 627; Hildeburn v. Watch Co. 7 Phila. 450; Conway v. Butcher, 8 Phila. 272; 1 Trickett, Liens, p. 497; Kneeland, Attachments, pp. 468, 545; People v. Cameron, 7 Ill. 470; Dierolf v. Winterfield, 24 Wis. p. 143; Haggart v. Morgan, 5 N. Y. 422; Bildersee v. Aden, 62 Barb. 175.

The bond was good as a common-law obligation, regardless of the statute.

Olaasen v. Shaw, 5 Watts, 468; Koons v. Seward, 8 Watts, 888; Stroop v. Gross, 1 Watts & S. 139; Wright v. Keyes, 15 W. N. C. 75.

A defendant may in all cases apply to the court to dissolve the attachment; but he may waive that right, as by delay or by some other proceeding, as in this case, which will be an estoppel.

Poor v. Colburn, 57 Pa. 415; R. R. Co. v. Wilcox, 48 Pa. 161; Loewenstein v. Sheetz, 7 Phila. 361.

Mr. Chief Justice Mercur delivered the opinion of the court:

This suit was against the principals and sureties in a bond given under the Act of March 17, 1869, which provides for the commencement of actions by attachment.

On the first of March, 1881, the defendants in error made and filed an affidavit under that Act setting forth that Fernau and Thomas (two of the plaintiffs in error) were indebted to them in the sum of $509.74, and that a portion thereof, to wit: $279.78, had been fraudulently contracted. They gave bond and caused an attachment to be issued for the whole sum, against Fernau and Thomas. By virtue thereof the sheriff attached certain goods, which had already been levied on by former executions, and also attached some book accounts and other claims.

On the 10th of March the defendants in the attachment filed their affidavit denying that they had fraudulently contracted any part of said debt, and obtained a rule to show cause why the attachment should not be dissolved. On the hearing thereof the court thought the fraud averred was not sufficiently proved, and made the rule absolute on the 25th of April. This action of the court has never been reversed. It stands as a conclusive judgment that the attachment was improperly issued.

On the aforesaid 10th of March the bond in suit was executed by the defendants in the attachment as principals, and by the other plaintiffs in error as sureties. It recites the attachment suit instituted and the action of the sheriff on the writ. It then proceeds to declare: "Now the condition of this obligation is such that if the plaintiffs in said attachment recover judgment in the same; and if the said Fernau and Thomas, defendants in said attachment, will pay the debt and costs at the expiration of the stay of executions on sums of like amount given to freeholders, or surrender up the said property in as good condition as when attached, to any officer having an execution against said party defendant, on any judgment rendered in said attachment in favor of the said plaintiffs, then and in such event the said obligation to be void, otherwise to be in full force and virtue."

The legal arbitrator, by whom the present case was decided, found as a fact, that the existence of this bond was not known to the court when it dissolved the attachment.

A personal service of the writ having been made, the dissolving of the attachment did not operate as a discontinuance of the whole suit. Sharpless v. Ziegler, 92 Pa. 487; Biddle v. Black, 99 Pa. 380; White v. Thielen, 106 Pa. 173.

Relieved from all the security acquired under and by virtue of the attachment the suit, in the words of the statute, shall proceed "as in a case of summons for debt regularly issued and duly served." The plaintiffs did proceed and obtain a judgment against the defendants for the whole amount of their claim. Failing to collect it, they brought suit on this bond. The contention now is whether the dissolution of the attachment destroyed the vitality of the bond.

This leads us to consider the design of the Act and the language of the bond.

1. The manifest purpose of the statute was not to supersede the usual forms of action for the recovery of debts. It provides a mode of proceeding only when the debtor has committed or is about to commit some fraudulent act. Then and then only does it give a creditor the right to forthwith seize the property of his debtor and to hold the same as security for the payment of a judgment to be thereafter recovered. Without fraud of the debtor his property cannot be thus seized nor held for the security of the creditor. When seized under the allegation of fraud its release may be procured, either by dissolving the attachment or by giving security conditioned for the payment of the judgment which may be recovered "in said attachment," or for the return of the property attached.

Under the view we take of this case it is not necessary to decide now whether an attachment under this Act will lie, when the affidavit charges fraud as applicable to only a part of the debt for a recovery of which the suit is brought. The writ goes out claiming the whole debt as an entirety. If it can be so used as to obtain possession of property to pay a debt, concerning a large portion of which no fraud is alleged, the whole purpose and spirit of the statute will be perverted.

The intent of the Act is not to take from an unfortunate but honest debtor his property, before judgment rendered against him. If the fraud averred is not sufficiently proved, the attachment falls. When it does fall the plaintiff loses all the security which he temporarily held thereunder. Whether that security existed by virtue of the writ of attachment alone or by the superadded bond of the defendant and his sureties based thereon, a dissolution of the attachment strikes down the security. Without fraud of the defendants the plaintiffs were not entitled to demand either form of security. When the attaching power was stricken down, the bond of the defendants fell with it.

2. The language in the condition of the bond strengthens the conclusion at which we have arrived. It is to secure the payment of a judgment to be recovered "in said attachment."

It is based on the fact that property is held under the attachment, and assumes that it may legally be so held. It promises to surrender "the property attached" to an officer having an execution against said defendants on any judgment rendered "in said attachment" in favor of said plaintiffs.

The judgment for the payment of which the obligors bound themselves was to be one that should be rendered in and by virtue of the attachment, and not one that might be obtained "as in the case of a summons for debt regularly issued and duly served." That language does not indicate any enlarged right flowing from the issuing of an attachment and the seizure of property thereunder. On the contrary it clearly imports a summons in the usual and ordinary form. When the attachment was dissolved, the suit was stripped of all the properties and incidents applicable to the attachment.

We think the bond was not intended to cover and does not cover the case of a judgment recovered on an ordinary summons for debt.

The learned judge therefore erred in confirming the report of the referee and in entering judgment in favor of the plaintiffs below.

Judgment reversed, the report of the referee set aside, and judgment in favor of the plaintiffs in error.

Merrill R. SKINNER, Plff. in Err.,
v.

David McALLISTER.

1. If land is seated when assessed and sold for taxes as unseated land, the sale is void.
2. If land is seated when assessed, after the collector's return it is the commissioner's duty to cause it to be sold as seated.
3. When a jury is misled by the charge of the court, the verdict will be reversed.

(Decided October 4, 1886.)

ERROR to the Common Pleas of Erie County, to review a judgment on a verdict for defendant in an action of ejectment. Reversed.

The facts of the case as they appeared in the court below are sufficiently stated in the charge to the jury by GALBRAITH, P. J.:

Gentlemen of the Jury:

The plaintiff claims to be the owner and entitled to the possession of the land described in the writ in this case, which land is in the occupancy of the defendant, David McAllister, who claims on the other hand that he is the lawful owner and entitled to remain in possession as such.

The evidence shows that this land was originally owned by Mr. Huidecooper, who, on the 18th of July, 1853, agreed to sell it to Isaac Babbitt by article. Babbitt thus became the owner of the equitable title and entitled to a deed of the same from Mr. Huidecooper when he had paid for it.

For the purposes of this case Babbitt may be treated as the legal owner at the time he took possession under the purchase by him for Mr. Huidecooper. On the 8d of January, 1857, Isaac Babbitt assigned his article, the article between him and Huidecooper, to Lucy B. Lillie, who by her will devised the land to Juliette Irene Babbitt, the devise being conditioned, but for our present purpose to be treated as an absolute devise, as the question of law arising upon this condition will be reserved for argument and decision hereafter, in case you should find for the plaintiff.

The whole case rests, as you will perceive, upon the validity of the treasurer's title acquired by Caleb Thompson under the deeds executed to him by the county treasurer in 1862.

It is claimed on part of the plaintiff that the land was not the subject of sale by the treasurer, and that the sale was therefore void, and that no title therefor vested in Caleb Thompson, and that the defendant, in consequence, had no ownership.

Your close attention must be given to the rule of law governing treasurers' sales, as well as the evidence on part of the plaintiff and defendant as to the question as to the character of the land in dispute; that is, whether seated or unseated, and whether it became unseated by abandonment after having been seated. If the land was actually seated in 1860, that being the year for the tax of which the land was sold, then the sale by the treasurer would be void; and the sale by the treasurer would give no title, and the case for the plaintiff must fail.

Lucy B. Lillie died in 1884. The claim of the plaintiff, as you see, rests upon the one hand upon the title acquired of Babbitt from Huidecooper and by him assigned to Lucy B. Lillie and by her devised to Juliette I. Babbitt, to whose rights the plaintiff succeeded by his marriage to her.

The claim of the defendant, David McAllister, to the ownership of the land rests upon two deeds of the treasurer of Erie County, by which the land in controversy was conveyed to Caleb Thompson, who bought it at treasurer's sale for taxes, in 1862. Thompson died in 1868, having made his will by which he empowered his executors, C. L. Thompson and David Wilson, to sell and convey any land of which he was seized, by deed dated. The executors, C. L. Thompson and David Wilson, conveyed the land to the defendant, David McAllister, who went upon the land and still occupies it.

That the land became seated after Babbitt's purchase is shown by the evidence. It is not a fact in dispute. There was a small clearing, a dwelling house was put up, and a log stable; and there was some ground cultivated and some crops raised. Babbitt resided on the place from 1854 until 1856, when he moved away and the place was unoccupied until 1859 when Calvin Snow went into the house and, according to some of the evidence, was there until the following winter; that would be the winter of 1859 or the spring of 1860. There is some evidence that he was there later than the spring of 1860, but about that there is controversy.

There is a good deal of controversy as to the length of time that Snow was there, some of the witnesses putting it a very short time and others having him there from some time in 1859 until the following winter.

In 1860 the collector of the township made return to the commissioners of the county that the land was unseated, and that there was no personal property on the premises out of which the taxes could be collected. The book kept in the commissioner's office shows that the land was put on the unseated list and so reported to the treasurer, and he proceeded in due time to sell the same as unseated land.

Now the whole case narrows down to this sale, as I view it; and it involves questions of fact which are for you. As I have already stated, the uncontroverted evidence shows that the land was on the seated list and was seated land after the possession of Babbitt commenced, say in 1854. It remained seated, for all legal purposes, unless its character was changed in one of two ways: either by its being put on the unseated list of the assessor, or by its being abandoned by the owner and becoming actually unseated again. That it was not put on the unseated list by the assessor appears from the evidence, or at least there is no evidence that the assessor did put it on the unseated list; but it is claimed that the collector, and that is shown to be a fact, made return that the land was unseated and that there was no personal property out of which he could make the tax, and that the commissioners then put it on the unseated list in their office, and the treasurer then proceeded to sell it.

You are instructed as a matter of law that that proceeding was a mere nullity, unless the land was actually unseated, unless it had become so. The collector could not by returning it unseated, and the commissioners by putting it on the unseated book, make this sale anything but a void sale if the land was actually seated. There had been cultivation there, and building there, and the remnants of a barn; [but if the land had been abandoned by the owner so that it became again unseated, then this action of the collector in returning it to the commissioners and the commissioners to the treasurer, then the sale would assume an entirely different phase and the sale made under these circumstances, the land having lapsed into its original unseated state by the abandonment—if you find that fact—the sale would be good and vest the title in the purchaser, without notice.]

[There is no evidence of any notice having been given to the owner; and the commissioners could not by their act give this the character of unseated land without notice to the owner, unless you find that in point of fact the owner had abandoned this property and left it for such time as will satisfy the minds of the jury that he intended to leave and abandon it permanently, thus avoiding personal liability for the tax.]

Now you see this presents a question with which the court has nothing to do; it is a question entirely for you, it is for the judge to endeavor to give you, as best he can, the law as bearing on this, which is that where property has once become seated, the presumption is that it remains seated; and by seated land we mean that kind of permanent occupancy or possession, with the means afforded thereon for the collection of taxes. There may be cultivation without residence or residence without cultivation; either will give the land the character of seated land. The main purpose of the law is that there shall be something on the land to collect taxes from, but that is not indispensable; if the land is occupied either for cultivation or residence so that it shows an intention to reclaim it from its wild condition, that is seated land—whether it is for manufacturing, cutting lumber, or anything else that shows that it is to be occupied.

But having become seated it may again become unseated by the act of the owner in giving it up, in leaving it and going away and abandoning it and showing an intention not to continue his occupancy.

The evidence is that Mr. Babbitt left in 1856. The sale may be taken into consideration in connection with the abandonment; that the sale didn't take place from him to Mrs. Lillie until 1857, which was the following year, so that it wouldn't have so much bearing on his going away as though it had been contemporaneous with the leaving.

Now it is alleged on part of the plaintiff that even if this property was left in this way, it was again occupied by Mr. Snow and that his occupancy would stop the operation of this abandonment, and restore its quality of seated land. That depends upon all the circumstances, and these are for your consideration. The mere temporary occupancy of land for a temporary purpose, by a person not pretending to have any claim to the land and having no intention of making himself liable for the taxes, would not give a seated character to the land, if the jury believe from the evidence that it had been abandoned by the owner. The mere camping out or the mere temporary use of an abandoned building would not be sufficient; but if a man went in there, even as an intruder, and had property, and with the intention of making it a residence remained some time, and had property there in the very year, sufficient out of which the tax might be made, it would be different.

[It is for you to judge. It is impossible to make a rule that will apply to each case, because there is such a variety of circumstances. It is for the jury to use their common sense and determine under the rule we have given you whether this was an abandonment by Babbitt, or whether, he having abandoned it (if you find he did), Mr. Snow went there in such a way as to change that and restore its character of seated land, or prevent the operation of the abandonment, so that it was seated in 1860.]

Was Snow living there with a view of making it his residence for anything more than a casual and temporary purpose; or was he there, although an intruder—there is nothing to show that he went in under anyone—with the intention of residing for some time? He stayed, it seems, for a number of months. Was he making it his residence, or was it a mere camping out and temporary shelter, and did he have property there out of which the tax could be made? If he was living there and making it his residence it would make him liable for the tax, and in that way the land would become seated again. That is entirely for you.

Now if this property was seated, either from Babbitt not having abandoned it and the character of seated property continuing to adhere to it as given by him in 1854, or if Snow went in there and made it his residence, with property there out of which the tax could have been collected in 1860—then the sale by the treasurer—notwithstanding the fact of its having been put on the unseated book, would be void; [but if you find that Babbitt really had abandoned it and gone away without any intention of returning, and the place growing up to briars and the house tumbling down and the barn, originally a flimsy structure, in ruins, not fit for occupancy for any purpose for which it was intended, and you find that the occupancy of Snow was merely temporary and casual, without the intention of making it his residence, then this property was unseated, and then the collector did right in making the return that he did, and the commissioners had a right to put it on the unseated book and the treasurer had a right to sell, and Mr. Thompson would acquire a title, and his title would be good; the time having elapsed without the property having been redeemed.] Mere irregularities about a treasurer's sale are cured by the Act of 1815, but the Act of 1815 doesn't cure the fact that this property was seated—if you find that it was seated under the rules we have given you.

Now the whole case hinges upon your finding upon this question of fact; what else remains to be said to you is included in the points. One of these points, the last one put by Mr. Sproul, involves a question of law which (by understanding upon both sides) will be reserved in the shape of a special verdict; so that if you find for the plaintiff you will find this additional special verdict, which will raise and bring before the court the legal question which was argued last night as to whether Juliette I. Babbitt ever acquired any title at all; there being no proof here that this forfeiture occurred by which she would under this devise become the owner. But you have nothing to do with that; the whole question for you is whether this was unseated or seated, and whether abandoned or not.

The jury rendered a verdict for defendant, upon which judgment was entered; and plaintiff took this writ, assigning as error the portions of the charge of the court embraced in brackets, also the answer of the court to the plaintiffs' first point, which point and answer were as follows:

1. "That the testimony in the case shows that the land in dispute was assessed as seated, and therefore there could be no transfer of it by the collector, or the county commissioners, from the seated to the unseated list, and the sale by the treasurer, June, 1862, of the land as unseated, to Caleb Thompson, passed no title."

Ans. "The evidence shows that the land in dispute was unseated prior and up to the time of its purchase by Isaac Babbitt from H. J. Huidecooper in 1858; that after that time the land was assessed to Isaac Babbitt, among the seated lands, up to and including the year 1860; that in 1860 the land was returned by the collector as unseated, and put upon the list of unseated lands in the commissioners' office; and, the tax remaining unpaid, the land was sold by the county treasurer on June 9, 1862. Whether the sale passed the title to Caleb Thompson, the purchaser at treasurer's sale, will depend upon the view the jury may take of the case under the evidence, and the point is refused.

Messrs. Elijah Babbitt, E. L. Whittelsey, Henry Southar, for plaintiff in error:

The payment of taxes, or the possession, did not help the title. This can only be done to help out the Statute of Limitations, as was done in McCall v. Neely, 3 Watts, 69.

In case of unseated land where the taxes were paid for thirty years, and no taxes paid or other acts of ownership exercised by the adverse claimant, it was held to be equivalent to the running of the Statute of Limitations in favor of the payor.

Sergeant, Land Law, 228; Read v. Goodyear, 17 Serg. & R. 350.

A tract of land ceases to be unseated as soon as it is actually occupied with a view to permanent use; and that occupation may be said to commence with the moment of entry for the purpose of clearing the land.

Campbell v. Wilson, 1 Watts, 508; Wallace v. Scott, 7 Watts & S. 248; Mülliken v. Benedict, 8 Pa. 169; Kennedy v. Daily, 6 Watts, 269; Harbeson v. Jack, 2 Watts, 124; George v. Mesinger, 73 Pa. 418; Jackson v. Stoetzel, 87 Pa. 302; Earley v. Ewer, 102 Pa. 338; Stoetzel v. Jackson, 15 W. N. C. 260.

The intention of Snow had nothing to do with making the character of the land either seated or unseated. It was a fact that he lived upon the premises with his family, and had sufficient personal property there out of which the taxes could be collected. There had been a cultivation of the land so as to make it seated.

George v. Mesinger, 73 Pa. 418; Stoetzel v. Jackson, 15 W. N. C. 260; Sheaffer v. McKabe, 2 Watts, 421; Rosenburger v. Schull, 7 Watts, 390; Jackson v. Sassaman, 29 Pa. 106.

Mr. J. W. Sproul, for defendant in error:

The court left to the jury the question whether this land was seated or unseated at the time of the assessment. This was proper under the authority of Altamose v. Hufsmith, 45 Pa. 121; Rosenburger v. Schull, 7 Watts, 390; Watson v. Davidson, 87 Pa. 270.

The facts on which it is claimed that land is seated, and the extent and character of any alleged occupancy, are for the jury.

Watson v. Davidson, supra; Lackawanna Iron Co. v. Fales, 55 Pa. 94.

If Snow was on the land in 1860, he was there as an intruder or trespasser. There is no evidence that he entered as an owner, or under anyone claiming as owner.

Jackson v. Stoetzel, 87 Pa. 306.

Under the Act of April 12, 1842, "All records of the county commissioners charging lands as unseated with arrears of taxes shall be evidence of an assessment."

But suppose the land was assessed on the seated list for 1860, but its character undesignated, and the land was actually unseated, and the collector so returned it, and the commissioners then put it on the unseated list charged with this tax and the commissioners certified it to the treasurer, who sold it as unseated for the taxes; then we say the sale was regular and the purchaser took title.

Laird v. Hiester, 24 Pa. 452; Arthur v. Smathers, 38 Pa. 40; Alby v. Kennedy, 9 Pittsb. Legal Jour. 356. See also Owens v. Vanhook, 8 Watts, 260; Frick v. Sterrett, 4 Watts & S. 269; Bechdel v. Lingle, 66 Pa. 41.

If there was any irregularity in the assessment, it was cured by the Act of March 13, 1815, § 4, which provides, inter alia: "And that no alleged irregularity in the assessment or in the process, or otherwise, shall be construed or taken to affect the title of the purchaser, but the same shall be declared to be good and legal."

Hubley v. Keyser, 2 Penr. & W. 502; Hess v. Harrington, 73 Pa. 446; McReynolds v. Longenberger, 75 Pa. 13.

This is ejectment by the original title against the tax title, commenced October 27, 1875, more than thirteen years after the tax sale, during all of which time the purchaser at the tax sale was in actual possession of the land. The suit is barred by the Statute of Limitations of April 30, 1804, which enacts that "No action for recovering of said land shall live unless the same be brought within five years after the sale thereof for taxes, as aforesaid."

This limitation is in full force.

Ash v. Ashton, 3 Watts & S. 510; McCall v. Himebaugh, 4 Watts & S. 164; Bayard v. Ingalls, 5 Watts & S. 465; Robb v. Bowen, 9 Pa. 71; Sheik v. McElroy, 20 Pa. 25-81; Burd's Exrs. v. Patterson, 22 Pa. 219; McReynolds v. Longenberger, 57 Pa. 29; Rogers v. Johnson, 87 Pa. 43.

Mr. Justice Trunkey delivered the opinion of the court:

It is somewhat difficult to ascertain from the paper books the mode of assessing unseated lands in Erie County. Not all the evidence has been printed; and defendant alleges that some of the matter relating to the assessment is incorrectly printed. One thing is admitted, namely: the land was sold as unseated for the taxes of 1860; and the record shows no sale for the taxes of 1859. As the case comes it is necessary to notice only the instructions to the jury touching the assessment, on which depends the validity of the sale.

Babbitt had resided on the land and it had been assessed to him as seated. The court told the jury that after 1855 the land was assessed to Babbitt among the seated lands up to and including the year 1860, and that in that year the land was returned by the collector as unseated and put upon the list of unseated lands in the commissioners' office. And they were instructed that unless the land had actually become unseated, the sale was a nullity; also that if the land had been abandoned so long as to become again unseated, and the collector returned it to the commissioners as unseated, and they made the proper entry thereof in the unseated land book, the sale was valid.

It was clear that the land was assessed, either as seated or unseated, for the year 1860; that the rate had been fixed, the amount of tax ascertained, and the same put into the hands of the collector. From the peculiar method of keeping the books it may be impossible to ascertain how it was assessed; but it was assessed with the other lands in the township. That assessment was made in the fall of 1859, or early in 1860. If it was assessed as seated, then the jury were rightly told that "If Snow went in there and made it his residence, with property there out of which the tax could have been collected in 1860, then the sale by the treasurer, notwithstanding the fact that it had been put on the unseated book, was void." But if the land was assessed as unseated, although Snow resided on it in 1860, with personal property, what right had the collector to touch such property? If the officers chose to make it a land tax, without personal liability of the land owner, the personal property of the lessee, or of an intruder, could not be seized and sold in satisfaction of the tax.

It was incorrect to say to the jury, as set out in the fifth assignment, that if the land was seated in 1860, and Snow was residing on it, his property was liable for the tax, in case it was assessed as unseated. The instruction, in connection with other parts of the charge, was that if Snow went on the land in 1860, to reside permanently, his property was liable for the tax, even if it had been assessed as unseated because of Babbitt's abandonment. And with the answer to the plaintiff's first point, the jury would understand that the point of time was December, 1860, to determine whether the land was seated at that date, instead of the date of assessment prior to fixing of the amount of tax.

If the land was seated when the assessment was made, the sale was void; if unseated, the sale was valid. If the assessor found Snow residing on the land in the fall of 1859, he had good reason not to change the assessment. In that case it matters not where Snow resided in the summer of 1860. If he moved away after the making of the assessment and laying of the tax, the collector and commissioners had no authority to change the tax for that year. Instead of so pointedly directing the minds of the jury to the time of the collector's return in December, 1860, the court should have directed their inquiry to the date of the assessment. Nor would it have been amiss to inform them that if the land was seated when assessed, after the collector's return it was the commissioner's duty to cause it to be sold as seated.

Nearly all the rulings and instructions of the learned judge at the trial are unexceptionable. But we think the jury were misled on the matter indicated. It may or may not have affected their conclusion. Snow was assessed in that township for the years 1859 and 1860. It is not shown that he resided elsewhere than on this land; and had the jury been advised that the inquiry whether the land was seated must be with reference to the time of assessment, perhaps the verdict would have been the other way.

Judgment reversed and venire facias de novo awarded.

Robert P. DECHERT, Controller of the City and County of Philadelphia, Plff. in Err.,

v.
COMMONWEALTH, ex rel. T. P. SMART.

1. Mandamus will not lie to compel the performance by public officers of acts and duties necessarily calling for the exercise of judgment and discretion on their part.

2. The City Controller of Philadelphia possesses all the powers of county auditors; his jurisdiction in the exercise of these powers is as full and complete as that of the courts; and he is entitled to exercise them without interference.

3. The court may, in a proper case, correct an error in judgment on part of the controller, but it will not by mandamus interfere, in advance, with that discretion which it is his right and duty freely to exercise, or dictate the decision which, in a given case, he must reach.

4. Where a contractor, having agreed with the City of Philadelphia to build a sewer, to receive payment in assessment bills against fronting properties, to make no claim on the city for payment and that the city shall not "in anywise guaranty any of said bills to be good and collectible," builds the sewer, receives the assessment bills and brings suits against property owners who resist the liens, and afterward the city councils by ordinance direct the chief engineer to draw, and the City Controller to countersign, in payment for the work, a warrant for $600, against a survey department appropriation, the court will not, upon the Controller's refusal, compel him by mandamus to countersign the warrant.

(Decided October 4, 1886.)

ERROR to Common Pleas No. 2 of Philadelphia County, to review a judgment sustaining a demurrer to a return and awarding a writ of peremptory mandamus. Reversed.

The facts as they appeared by the pleadings are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Henry T. Dechert, Robert Alexander and Charles F. Warwick, for plaintiff in error:

The duties of the Controller of the City and County of Philadelphia in relation to warrants, are laid down in the Acts of February 2, 1854, § 12, P. L. 80, West, Dig. 68; April 21, 1855, § 21, P. L. 269, West, Dig. 64; May 18, 1856, § 24, P. L. 572, West, Dig. 120; Id. § 29, P. L. 573, West, Dig. 64; June 11, 1879, P. L. 130.

The Controller has succeeded to all the duties and powers of county auditors, which are as full and complete within their jurisdiction as are the powers of courts.

Runkle v. Commonwealth, 97 Pa. 328; Taggart v. Commonwealth, 102 Pa. 354.

The powers conferred by the Acts have been clearly recognized in the ordinances of councils: Ordinance of November 6, 1862, § 4, West, Dig. 66; Id. § 5, West, Dig. 66.

The Controller has all the extensive powers of the county auditors; besides that, he must countersign every warrant for a municipal expenditure; must countersign no warrant for any object not authorized by law under penalty of punishment for misdemeanor; must examine all bills presented to him, and if no appropriation has been made or the appropriation is exhausted, or if "from any other cause he cannot give his approval" to it, he must refuse to countersign the warrant; may call and examine parties and witnesses, require the production of books and papers, and is given the greatest latitude in inquiring into "whatsoever matter he may deem needful to protect the interests of said city." By the Act of 1879, he is directed in certain contingencies to stop all municipal expenditure.

Every one of these powers implies judicial action, the exercise of discretion and official independence.

The relator bases his claim on an ordinance of councils, which shows no appropriation for the object which he claims was intended, no direction but a simple authority to the Controller to countersign, and a glaring mistake in local reference; and even if his construction of the ordinance be correct, it shows open questions of law and fact. The Controller must then determine: Is the warrant proper and right? Has the city received consideration therefor? Has a proper appropriation been made to meet it?

These questions were at once acted upon and, answering all in the negative, the Controller refused to countersign the warrant. He has thus exercised the judicial and discretionary power of his office, firmly established in Pennsylvania.

Where a person or body is clothed with judicial, deliberative or discretionary powers, and he or it has exercised such powers according to his or its discretion, mandamus will not lie to compel a revision or modification of the decision resulting from the exercise of such discretion, although in fact the decision may have been wrong.

Republica v. Clarkson, 1 Yeates, 46; Commonwealth v. District Court, 5 Watts & S. 272; Drezel v. Man, 6 Watts & S. 886; Commonwealth v. Hultz, 6 Pa. 469.

Mandamus will lie to the secretary of the land-office, to compel him to make calculations of purchase money and interest on lands sold, if he has omitted or wholly refused to do it; but it will not lie to command him in what manner to make such calculations, that act not being merely ministerial; nor, if he has already made the calculations in an erroneous manner, will it lie to compel him to make them in a proper manner.

Griffith v. Cochran, 5 Binn. 87.

So where county commissioners were directed to draw an order for the amount of a school-master's bill for teaching poor children, if they approved thereof, and they disapproved, although for bad reasons, mandamus will not lie.

Commonwealth v. County Comrs. 5 Binn. 534-537.

A rule of the court of common pleas and a similar rule of the supreme court provided that an applicant for admission to the bar should have served a regular clerkship for three years with a practicing attorney or gentleman of the law, of known abilities. The Common Pleas of Cumberland County refused to admit to its bar the son of Judge Brackenridge of the supreme court, on the certificate of the latter. It was held by the court, that while the reason for the refusal was absurd, mandamus would not lie, the act having been a judicial one.

Commonwealth v. Judges, 8 Binn. 273.

The power of county commissioners to appoint collectors of taxes was discretionary and would not be interfered with by mandamus.

Commonwealth v. Perkins, 7 Pa. 42.

Mandamus will not lie to compel school directors to exonerate a property owner from a school tax assessed by them. Exoneration is a discretionary power with them, and they exercised it by refusing to grant the relief sought.

School Directors v. Anderson, 45 Pa. 388.

The mayor of Philadelphia having refused to execute a coal lease of Girard lands, because he believed improper means had been taken to secure it and that it was disadvantageous to the city, could not be compelled by mandamus to execute it.

Commonwealth v. Henry, 49 Pa. 580.

The discretion of a license board will not be interfered with by mandamus.

Schlaudecker v. Marshall, 72 Pa. 200.

The action of a board in refusing to entertain a proposal for public work or grant a contract is discretionary and will not be modified by mandamus, although erroneous.

Commonwealth v. Mitchell, 82 Pa. 343; Commonwealth v. Douglass, 42 Legal Int. 837.

But it was argued that the ordinance was an absolute appropriation to Smart; and as such it was not for the Controller to approve or disapprove the warrant, but to countersign it without looking further than the intention of councils. Assuming for the sake of argument that the theory is correct, the answer is that the case of an appropriation by councils alleged to be void especially calls for the exercise of the Controller's discretionary power.

An injunction will lie against a municipality, at the instance of taxpayers, and its accounting and disbursing officers, to restrain the drawing, countersigning and paying of warrants under an appropriation illegally made.

Dil. Mun. Corp. § 914, 3d ed.; Sank v. Philadelphia, 4 Brewster, 133.

There is nothing in the various Acts of Assembly, defining the duties and powers of the Controller, which would seem at all to limit his power of approval to warrants other than those drawn directly by order of the councils. On the contrary, it is made a misdemeanor for him to pass any bill or order for any object not authorized by law; and he may inquire as to whatsoever matter he may deem needful to protect the interests of said city.

In Commonwealth v. Mayor of Lancaster, 5 Watts, 152, the councils had, by an ordinance passed in regular form, voted a certificate of loan to one of its members for services rendered by him; such an appropriation was prohibited by the Act of incorporation; the mayor refused to issue the certificate, and a mandamus to compel him to do so was refused.

In Faas v. Warner, 9 W. N. C. 412, S. C. 96 Pa. 215, an Act of Assembly had directed the Controller of Allegheny County to examine and the county commissioners to pay the claim of a contractor who had furnished bread to a deceased sheriff for the use of prisoners in the county prison; the Controller refused to examine the claim, and on proceedings in mandamus it was held by this court that the Act was unconstitutional and the Controller had properly refused to act.

An appropriate instance of the exercise of the discretionary power of the Controller, in a case where the right claimed is doubtful, is shown also in the case of Runkle v. Commonwealth, 97 Pa. 323.

It is the duty of the courts, therefore, to uphold the Controller in the exercise of the powers conferred on him by law, and to leave parties who believe themselves unjustly affected thereby to their remedies at law or in equity, which are ample for their protection.

Commonwealth v. Page, 18 W. N. C. 582.

The Controller cannot be elected by councils, and it has never been decided that councils may impose duties on him other than those conferred by statute.

Taggart v. Commonwealth, 12 W. N. C. 465; S. C. 102 Pa. 354.

The relator has a specific remedy at law; and therefore mandamus should have been refused, even where the act sought to be compelled is ministerial.

Commonwealth v. Rosseter, 2 Binn. 360; Commonwealth v. Councils of Pittsburgh, 34 Pa. 496.

The Ordinance of June 9, 1885, in its terms does not make an appropriation to Smart. Smart's name does not appear in any place as the person in whose favor the warrant is to be drawn, and no way is pointed out for determining the beneficiary. The object stated in the ordinance is not connected with anything that Smart had done. It is stated that the object is for the construction of a sewer in Sixty-Third Street, etc. This means only for the contemplated or future construction of a sewer.

But even if it could be shown that councils intended the appropriation to be for the alleged purpose, the object of the appropriation is not stated as required by law. "No appropriation shall be made of the moneys of the city without an ordinance therefor expressing the objects thereof and the amount appropriated for each object."

Act of April 21, 1855, § 21, P. L. 269, West, Dig. 93.

It is not contended by the relator that the city was in any way liable to pay Smart for the sewer. That point was definitely settled in two recent cases, in which it was held that the contractor, where he had released the city from any liability on the assessment bills, "cannot make the city liable to pay him," where the bills had been held to be invalid in suits properly brought upon them.

Horter v. City, 18 W. N. C. 40; Dickinson v. City, 14 W. N. C. 367.

The foundation of Smart's claim in this case, by his own allegation, is the invalidity of the assessment bills, and the consequent appropriation. "With this full knowledge and means of knowledge, the plaintiffs voluntarily assumed the risk of collecting the assessment. Having failed in the attempt so to do, they cannot now repudiate their agreement and make the city liable to pay them."

Horter v. City and Dickinson v. City, supra.

Slighter circumstances of acquiescence on the part of property owners have been held to estop them from raising the question of their nonliability for municipal improvements.

Bidwell v. Pittsburgh, 85 Pa. 412; McKnight v. Pittsburgh, 91 Pa. 278.

Even if the question raised in defense in the suits on the liens, namely: that the property was rural, was decided as a matter of fact in favor of the property owners, that would not be a good defense as matter of law. The sewer built by Smart was not an improvement, from which property clearly proven to be rural would be exempt from liability, under any of the decisions.

Hammett v. Philadelphia, 65 Pa. 146; Washington Avenue, 69 Pa. 352; Seely v. Pittsburgh, 82 Pa. 360; Kaiser v. Weise, 85 Pa. 366; Craig v. Philadelphia, 89 Pa. 265; Philadelphia v. Rule, 93 Pa. 15.

The ordinance of June 9, 1885, sought, under the assumption that the relator's construction is correct, to pay for work authorized by the councils four years before, to be done without expense to the city and actually completed at that time.

This is within the letter and the spirit of the prohibition of the Act of June 11, 1879, § 3, P. L. 181, Purd. Dig. 1610.

The city had made a contract in 1881 which was to cost it nothing; the attempt to pay a full price for it in 1885 is absolutely void, because there had been no appropriation made previous to the making of the contract.

The ordinance would be void because it is making a gratuity, not only to Smart but also to the Grandom Institute, in relieving it from the claims now existing as liens against its property.

There is no consideration for such a gift. The sewer was of no general benefit and was beneficial only to the adjoining properties.

Section 7 of article IX of the Constitution of 1874 confines municipal expenditures to public objects. The word "appropriate" is new, and expanded the effect of the amendment of 1857 so as to embrace money in the treasury itself.

Speer v. Directors, 50 Pa. 150; Wilkesbarre Hospital v. Luzerne Co. 84 Pa. 55.

Under this section no city can be authorized to appropriate money for any corporation, association or individual.

Re Northern Home for Friendless Children, 2 W. N. C. 349.

Where a county had contracted with the sheriff to board prisoners, and the sheriff had died leaving unpaid a bill for bread, and an Act of Assembly directed the Controller to ascertain the amount due and the commissioners to pay it, it was held that the Act was unconstitutional.

Faas v. Warner, 9 W. N. C. 412; 96 Pa. 215.

Whenever a municipality attempts to exercise powers not within the proper province of local self government, whether the right to do so be claimed under express legislative grant or by implication from the charter, the act must be considered as altogether ultra vires and therefore void.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 211; Smith v. Commonwealth, 41 Pa. 341; Wimer v. Overseers of Poor of Worth, 41 Legal Int. 281.

A tax levied for the support of a private charity, however meritorious, is unconstitutional.

Phila. Relief Assn. v. Wood, 39 Pa. 73; Washington Co. v. Berwick, 56 Pa. 466; Tyson v. School Directors, 51 Pa. 9.

Messrs. Emil Rosenberger and David W. Sellers, for defendant in error:

Although the contractor could not have adversely recovered from the city for this work, because of his agreement (Horter v. City, 18 W. N. C. 40), yet the city did pass an ordinance, the effect of which was to pay for the work done and to reimburse the city treasury when the sewer should be used by the property; this being the system in common use relative to water pipes, and which has met the approval of this court in Philadelphia v. Cooke, 30 Pa. 56.

The ordinance appropriated a specific sum to pay for public work done, and the Controller had no auditing or discretionary duties relative thereto. His public duty was only ministerial as to this, because a check on the city treasurer was not good without his signature.

Appeals of Philadelphia, 86 Pa. 186.

As the city could apply the same system in the construction of sewers which it always has adopted for water pipe—that is, pay for the work in the first instance and itself collect the charges—so it could modify any contract after it was made.

City v. Hays, 93 Pa. 72.

Where a teacher's rights are established by law and an appropriation made, the law makes it the duty of the Controller to countersign her warrant.

Commonwealth v. Lyndall, 7 Phila. 29.

Mr. Justice Clark delivered the opinion of the court:

This writ of error is taken to the order and decree of the Court of Common Pleas No. 2 of Philadelphia, awarding a writ of peremptory mandamus. The relator, T. P. Smart, was a contractor of the said city, and the respondent, Robert P. Dechert, Controller of the City and County of Philadelphia. The alternative writ recited that under authority of an ordinance passed June 24, 1881, the relator had constructed a sewer for the city; that certain property on the line was not subject to assessment, or municipal charge for the construction, and that by an ordinance approved June 9, 1885, the chief engineer and surveyor was directed to draw, and the city controller authorized to countersign a warrant for $600, to pay for the construction of said sewer in front of the property referred to; that the chief engineer had drawn the warrant as directed, but the Controller had refused to countersign it and had returned it to the chief engineer, and that the relator had a specific remedy at law for the grievance thus sustained. The Controller was therefore commanded to countersign the warrant, or show cause why he should not.

The Controller made a formal return to the alternative writ, and to that return the relator filed a demurrer. All matters, therefore, sufficiently set forth in the return must be taken for true; and these, with the material allegations of the writ, not traversed by the return, constitute the substantial facts upon which this case is to be determined.

The respondent in his return to the writ, as the Controller of the City and County of Philadelphia, claims to exercise a discretionary power, under the law, in refusing to countersign the warrant referred to, and that in the exercise of that discretion he was not subject to the direction of the court; further, that under the provisions of the ordinance of city councils, and by the terms of the contract under which the work was done, the construction of the sewer had been fully paid for; that the city owed no debt and was under no obligation whatever to the contractor therefor; that the appropriation was therefore not authorized by law, and that in the proper exercise of his duties as Controller he was required to withhold his signature from the warrant.

It is well settled that mandamus will lie to compel the performance, by public officers, of duties purely ministerial in their character; but it is equally well settled that as to all acts and duties necessarily calling for the exercise of judgment and discretion on their part mandamus will not lie. While the writ may, perhaps, be awarded to set the latter class of officers in motion, and to compel action upon the particular matters over which they may have jurisdiction, it will in no manner interfere with the exercise of that discretion, nor control or dictate the judgment or decision which shall be reached.

It is unnecessary to quote authorities in support of this plain and well established principle of the law; such has been the uniform course of all the decisions, and in this case we do not understand the doctrine to be denied.

The question for our consideration, therefore, is whether or not the Controller of the City and County of Philadelphia, in the exercise of his office, when called upon to countersign a warrant, is invested with a discretionary power in the performance of that duty, or whether his duty in this respect is merely ministerial.

On May 12, 1866, a general ordinance of councils was approved, providing for the construction of sewers in said city; that the owners of ground, on the line thereof, should pay at the rate of $1.25 per foot front; and that bills of assessment at this rate in each case should be prepared by the city. The ordinance provides further, as follows: "It shall be a condition of the contracts awarded under the provisions of this ordinance that the contractor shall accept assessment bills as so much cash paid by the city on the said contracts, and that he shall collect the same at his own cost without recourse to the city in any event." By ordinance approved February 16, 1869, the rate was increased to $1.60 per foot front.

On June 24, 1881, an ordinance was approved authorizing and directing, inter alia, a sewer to be constructed on Sixty-Third Street, between Market and Arch, and providing "That it should be a condition of the contract, entered into on behalf of the city for the construction of the several sewers thereon authorized, that the contractor should accept the sums assessed upon and charged to the properties, lying on the line of said sewers, in manner and form authorized by ordinance, entitled, etc., approved May 12, 1866, and the supplement thereto approved February 16, 1869."

On August 19, 1881, T. P. Smart, the relator, under a written contract with the city, agreed to construct the sewer on Sixty-Third Street, as authorized by the ordinance of June 24, 1881; the price and mode of payment were agreed upon as follows: "For sewer three feet in diameter, per lineal foot, and manholes, the sum of the assessment bills given by the survey department against the properties or premises, fronting on the streets on which the sewer forming the subject of this contract is to be constructed, which said bills the said party of the second part agrees to accept, in full, for all work done under this contract. The said party of the second part further agrees to make no claim whatever upon the City of Philadelphia, excepting upon bills against city property, it being distinctly understood and agreed that the City of Philadelphia does not in anywise guaranty any of the said bills to be good and collectible.

* * * Payments for the entire work shall be made by the chief commissioner of highways, upon estimates signed by the chief engineer and surveyor, in assessment bills prepared as specified in section 2 of ordinance 'Regulating the Assessment upon Property for the Construction of Sewers,' approved May 12, 1866, and warrants upon the city treasurer to an amount as authorized by ordinance approved April 3, 1868, in payment for the street intersections, manholes and legal deductions. All of which payments shall be received as so much cash, and be collected without recourse to the City of Philadelphia; but for the purpose of better enabling the contractor to collect the same, the name of the said city may be used, and all her legal remedies, whether by bill or otherwise, employed."

Smart constructed the sewer, and it is admitted, received the assessment bills in full for the work, according to contract, including two against the Grandom Institute, the property on the east side of Sixty-Third Street extending along the whole length of the sewer. He, subsequently, on February 1, 1882, filed in the name of the City of Philadelphia, to his own use, two claims for the construction of the sewer against the Grandom Institute and the said property; which claims are entered in Court of Common Pleas No. 4 of Philadelphia.

Having issued writs of scire facias, the Grandom Institute pleaded non assumpsit, and that the property was rural; the relator replied that the property was not rural. The relator ordered the cases on the trial list, but no further proceedings appear of record, and the suits remain pending and unsatisfied. By the express terms of the general ordinance of May 12, 1866, as well as by the ordinance of June 24, 1881, under and subject to which the contract was made, as well as by the conditions of the contract itself, payment was to be made in assessment bills, which were accepted as cash, to be collected at the contractor's cost and without recourse to the city in any event; it was expressly provided also that the city did not "in anywise guaranty any of the said bills to be good and collectible."

It is plain, therefore, that the city owed Smart nothing for the construction of the sewer; he had been paid in full, four years before the ordinance was passed authorizing the warrant, and paid precisely as the contract provided.

It is not pretended that there remained any obligation on the part of the city, moral or otherwise, to pay to Smart in any other way. There was no mistake, no change of circumstances, or any other intervening matter which caused the contract to operate oppressively on the contractor; the parties stood on equal ground; no advantage was taken in the contract, and the law, as well as the facts, was presumably as well known to one party as to the other.

When this warrant was presented to the Controller for his signature, what was his duty with reference to it? The duties of the Controller, in this respect, are defined in various Acts of Assembly, as follows:

Act February 2, 1854, § 12, P. L. 30: "He shall countersign all warrants on the city treasurer, and shall not suffer any appropriation made by the city councils to be overdrawn, and shall perform all the duties now enjoined by law on the county auditors. He shall superintend the fiscal concerns of the city in such manner, and make reports thereon at such times, as shall be prescribed by ordinance."

Act April 21, 1855, § 21, P. L. 269: "It shall be a misdemeanor in office for the controller of the city to pass or the treasurer of the city to pay any bill or order for any object not authorized by law."

Act May 18, 1856, § 24, P. L. 572: "It shall be lawful for the city controller, and his duty, whenever required by any citizen, to administer an oath or affirmation to any person presenting a bill against the city, as to its accuracy, the prices actually paid or contracted to be paid therefor, whether others and who are interested therein, and as to whatsoever matter he may deem needful to protect the interests of said city."

Act May 18, 1856; § 29, P. L. 573: "The city controller shall be and he is hereby required to keep separate accounts for each specific or separate item of appropriation made by city councils, to each and every department of the city, and shall require all warrants to state particularly against which of said items the said warrant is drawn; and he shall at no time permit any one of the items of appropriation to be overdrawn, or the appropriation for one item of expense to be drawn upon for any other purpose, by any one of the departments, than that for which the appropriation was specifically made; he shall, upon receiving a bill of warrant from any one of the departments, proceed immediately to examine the same, and if the said bill or warrant contains an item for which no appropriation has been made, or the appropriation for which is exhausted, or to which, from any other cause, he cannot give his approval, it shall be his duty immediately to inform such department; and the warrant therefor shall not be issued unless by special authority from the city councils."

By the Act of June 11, 1879, P. L. 180, the Controller is directed not to countersign any warrant until councils have passed the appropriations necessary for each department, and the total of all appropriations, estimates and obligations, is within the estimate of the income of the city; he is also forbidden to countersign "any warrant for the expenditure of money without a previous appropriation."

It will be observed that the warrant was from one of the departments of the city government, the department of surveys; it was drawn by the chief engineer and surveyor, against a particular item in the annual appropriation. It was issued, it is true, pursuant to an ordinance of councils; but all warrants may be said to be so drawn. The power to raise money for city purposes, and also the power to disburse it, subject to certain restrictions, is vested in the city councils; and the warrants which issue from the several departments are drawn under such regulations of the councils as may best serve the public convenience and promote the dispatch of business.

It will also be observed that the ordinance of June 9, 1885, did not in terms authorize the issue of a warrant to Smart, the relator; it directed the chief engineer and surveyor to draw "a warrant to the amount of $600, for the construction of a sewer on Sixty-Third Street," etc.; it did not name the contractor, or other person to whom the money was owing; it simply authorized the application of a portion of item 83 of the annual appropriation to a particular purpose, but did not designate the party or parties entitled to receive it.

Upon receiving this warrant from the department of surveys, it was the Controller's duty to "proceed immediately to examine the same," and if it contained an item for which no appropriation had been made, or for which the appropriation was exhausted, "or to which from any other cause" he could not give his approval, it was his duty immediately to inform such department; and the warrant therefor could not again be issued from the department, and presented for his signature, unless by special authority of councils.

It was his duty in any case, before countersigning the warrant, to know that the appropriation necessary for each department had been made, and that the total was within the estimate of the income, as required by the Act of 1879; to be satisfied that the warrant covered items for which appropriations had been made, and that these appropriations had not been exhausted, as required by the Act of 1856. These inquiries, as they involved no particular exercise of discretion, are perhaps of a clerical and therefore of a ministerial character only. But other duties devolved upon him, as the superintendent of the fiscal affairs of the city; Act February 2, 1854; it was his duty to do what he might "deem needful to protect the interests of the said city." Act May 13, 1856.

To this end (Act February 2, 1854) he was invested with all the powers, and directed to perform all the duties, enjoined by law on county auditors; and as a legal sanction to the just and full performance on his part of these duties, in the interest of the city, it was declared (Act April 21, 1855) to be a misdemeanor in office, and to subject him to the pains and penalties of the criminal law, if he should pass any bill or order for any object not authorized by law.

It is plainly then the duty of the Controller, with due discrimination, to determine what objects are authorized by law for appropriation of the city moneys; he is guilty of a misdemeanor in office if he does not, and the discharge of this duty necessarily calls for the exercise of judgment and discretion on his part. It is his duty, of course, to respect the contracts lawfully made on the part of the city, and to discharge the legal obligations of the city by countersigning warrants regularly drawn in payment thereof; but it must be conceded that he was not bound to do what in his judgment was by the law positively forbidden.

Possessing all the powers of the county auditors, it was his duty to audit, settle and adjust the accounts of the city; and in so doing he could not, with propriety or consistency, reject a claim which he had previously approved.

His jurisdiction as Controller, in the performance of the duties of the county auditors, was as full and complete as that of the courts, and he was entitled to exercise these important functions free from all interference. The court might when a proper case was presented correct an error in judgment on part of the Controller; but it would not by mandamus interfere in advance with that discretion which it was his right and duty freely to exercise, or dictate the decision which, in a given case, he must reach.

In the event of the Controller's refusal to countersign any warrant, the courts of the Commonwealth are open for vindication of the claimant's rights as against the city; and if these alleged rights are submitted to the decision of a court of competent jurisdiction, and are there finally adjudicated in his favor, either the neglect of councils to provide for payment, or the refusal of the Controller to countersign a warrant in discharge of a legally ascertained liability of the city, would present a different question here.

In Runkle v. Commonwealth, 97 Pa. 328, the specific question was as to the duties of controllers of cities of the third, fourth and fifth classes, under the Act of May 23, 1874; yet that case and the case in hand are precisely alike in this: that the city controller in both instances was expressly authorized to perform all the duties enjoined by law on county auditors. In delivering the opinion of the court in that case, our brother Gordon says:

"Upon him also is imposed 'all the duties now enjoined on county auditors by the laws of this State, and he shall scrutinize, audit and settle all accounts whatever in which the city is concerned.' But the powers of county auditors are as full and complete, within their jurisdiction, as are the powers of courts. They may issue subpoenas for parties and witnesses; they may compel the production of books and papers, administer oaths, compel the attendance of witnesses, and punish contempts by attachment. With all this judicial and deliberative power the Controller of the City of Reading is clothed, and of necessity he must be left free to exercise his own judgment. But how can he exercise these important functions if he is to be controlled in his judgment by the court of common pleas, or by any other court? In the present case, Controller Runkle, for reasons satisfactory to himself, refused to approve the warrants drawn in favor of Keppelman; this he had a right to do; this it was his duty to do, if he believed the interests of the city would be protected by the refusal of such approval; and we know of no power in the common pleas to substitute its judgment for that of this officer. Had the Controller refused to act in the matter at all, the court by its mandamus might have compelled him to act; but this was all it could do; but after he had acted and had refused to sanction the warrants, it was a mere piece of usurpation on the part of the court, to attempt to compel him to revise his decision and adopt its judgment in preference to his own. The rule governing cases of this kind may be stated as follows: where a person or body is clothed with judicial, deliberative or discretionary powers, and he or it has exercised such powers according to his or its discretion, mandamus will not lie to compel a revision or modification of the decision resulting from the exercise of such discretion, although in fact the decision may have been wrong. Griffith v. Cochran, 5 Binn. 87; Commonwealth v. Perkins, 7 Pa. 42; Commonwealth v. Mitchell, 82 Pa. 848."

The office of the city controller is certainly one of the gravest importance and responsibility; it is not to be supposed that the powers conferred will be prostituted to any purpose of injustice or oppression, but will be exercised in good faith for the protection of the people. We think the office was designed to operate, in the manner indicated, as a check upon the city councils in the appropriation of the public moneys. The city corporation holds its moneys in trust, to be used for legitimate corporate purposes only; there is no authority to apply them otherwise or to bestow them upon those to whom the city was under no obligation whatever.

It is the Controller's plain duty, as the representative of the people, and of the city in its corporate capacity, to see to it that it is not applied to any object not authorized by law; and if in his judgment the warrant in question was so issued, he was justified in refusing to countersign it.

The judgment is reversed, and judgment is now entered upon the demurrer in favor of the respondent.

Sarah C. ROWLAND, Admr., etc., Plff. in Err.,
v.

Harriet E. MARTIN.

1. A mortgage given by the grantee of land and accepted by the grantor, in furtherance of the specific purpose of putting the land out of the reach of the grantor's creditors, will not be enforced.
2. Courts will not relieve a party from the consequences of his intentional, fraudulent act.
3. In such a case equity will leave the parties in the position where they have knowingly and willfully placed themselves. Public policy forbids the intervention of the courts to relieve a fraudulent actor.

(Decided October 4, 1886.)

ERROR to the Common Pleas of Warren County, to review a judgment for defendant ordered on a special verdict in a scire facias our mortgage. Affirmed.

Defendant pleaded coverture "And for further plea she saith that the said pretended indenture of mortgage is not her deed, and that she is not indebted to the plaintiff's decedent, nor was she so indebted at the impetration of the writ of scire facias."

To this plea the plaintiff replied that the mortgage was given by defendant for the consideration of real estate conveyed to her at the time of its execution.

The jury rendered a special verdict, upon which the court, Wetmore, P. J., ordered judgment for the defendant, which action of the court in ordering judgment for defendant and not ordering judgment for plaintiff, plaintiff assigned as error.

The following is the special verdict:

"On the 27th of July, 1875, the defendant, Harriet E. Martin, a married woman and wife of John G. Martin, executed and acknowledged the mortgage in suit, her husband not joining in the mortgage, but named in the body thereof. The mortgage is for the sum of $1,000, payable $150 and interest on the whole sum in one year from date, and $150 and interest on the whole sum unpaid, annually thereafter until the whole sum is paid; with proviso in said mortgage that in case of default in the payment of the interest or of any payment on the said mortgage, the mortgagee or his representatives might sue out forthwith a writ of scire facias, upon which judgment may be entered in favor of the mortgagees, and against the mortgagor, for the whole amount of the mortgage debt, together with 5 per cent on the whole sum as attorney's fees for collecting the same. The said mortgage thus executed was on the day of its date delivered by the said Harriet E. Martin to George W. Rowland, plaintiff's intestate. Said mortgage was given by defendant under the following circumstances: the plaintiff's intestate, being involved in difficulty with third parties, for the purpose of putting this land out of his hands and beyond their grasp, and thereby inducing them to settle their difficulties and demands, made a deed of the same land described in the mortgage to the defendant, said deed bearing even date with the mortgage, and the deed and mortgage constituting one transaction. Nothing was paid by the defendant to plaintiff's intestate as a consideration for the deed to her save the mortgage in suit, and an understanding between defendant and plaintiff's intestate that defendant should reconvey to plaintiff's intestate some thirty-five acres. That defendant took the deed and gave the mortgage at the request of the plaintiff's intestate, who was her brother, and with knowledge of his purpose and intention. That plaintiff's intestate was indebted at the time of the transaction to his father to the amount of $200 or $300 and had no property except the real estate covered by the mortgage. If the court should be of opinion on these facts that plaintiff is entitled to recover, then judgment for the plaintiff for the sum of $1,326 and costs of suit, as of this date. If the court should be of opinion that the 5 per cent attorney's commission is not recoverable, the judgment is to be $50 less than the amount above stated. If the court should be of opinion that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover, then judgment for the defendant."

Messrs. L. R. Freeman and D. I. Ball, for plaintiff in error:

The mortgage of a married woman given for the purchase money of real estate will be enforced, although her husband does not join her in the mortgage.

Glass v. Warwick, 40 Pa. 140.

The obligation of a married woman, whether by bond, note or mortgage, will be enforced against the real estate, the purchase money of which it is given to secure, although her husband is not a party to the instrument.

Patterson v. Robinson, 25 Pa. 81; Ramborger's Admrs. v. Ingraham, 38 Pa. 146; Sawelle's

App. 84 Pa. 806; Shnyder v. Noble, 94 Pa. 286; Mumma v. Weaver, 2 Pears. 173.

The fact that George W. Rowland gave a deed to Harriet E. Martin, and the latter gave him a mortgage upon the land so deeded to her, for the purpose of hindering and delaying those parties with whom the former had become involved in difficulty, is no defense to Mrs. Martin upon her mortgage. She cannot unravel the fraudulent transaction, or set it up as a defense against her mortgage.

Williams' Admrz. v. Williams, 84 Pa. 812; Gill v. Henry, 95 Pa. 888; Bonesteel v. Sullivan, 104 Pa. 9; Sherk v. Endress, 3 Watts & S. 255; Evans v. Dravo, 24 Pa. 62; Hendrickson v. Evans, 25 Pa. 441.

Messrs. Charles H. Noyes and Watson D. Hinckley, for defendant in error:

Cited Quinn's App. 86 Pa. 447; Glidden v. Strupler, 52 Pa. 400; Evans v. Dravo, 24 Pa. 67.

Per Curiam:

The specifications of error are not sustained. The plaintiff has no equity to invoke. The mortgage was given and accepted in furtherance of the specific purpose of putting the land out of the reach of the vendor's creditors.

Courts will not relieve a party from the consequences of his intentional fraudulent act. In such a case equity will leave the parties in the position where they have knowingly and willfully placed themselves. Public policy forbids the intervention of the courts to relieve a fraudulent actor.

Judgment affirmed.

William L. ELKINS, Plff. in Err.,

v.

SUSQUEHANNA MUTUAL FIRE INSURANCE CO.

1. An agent of an insurance company who is authorized to receive applications for insurance, to forward the applications to the company, to deliver the policies to the insured and to collect the premiums from him, and who is responsible to the company for the payment of the premiums or the return of the policies to the company, has power to waive a condition in a policy that the company shall not be liable until the premium is actually paid.
8. Where the insured applied through a broker to such an agent for a policy of fire insurance and the agent upon receiving the policy delivers it with several others for the insured to the broker, charges the broker in a running account with the premium, receives from him at once partial payment, and the balance of the premium after a fire has occurred, the company cannot, in an action on the policy, set up as a defense the failure of the insured to comply with the condition.

(Decided October 4, 1886.)

ERROR to Common Pleas No. 2 of Philadelphia County, to review a judgment of PA.

compulsory nonsuit in an action of assumpsit. Reversed.

This was an action of assumpsit by William L. Elkins, trading as William L. Elkins & Co., against the Susquehanna Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, on a policy of fire insurance.

At the trial before Hare, P. J., it appeared that about December 1, 1880, the plaintiff, through his broker, Thomas J. Lancaster, applied to Robert Crane, agent of the Insurance Company, for an insurance against fire, amounting to $1,575.

A policy was made out by the Company, and sent by them to Crane, who delivered it to Lancaster.

On March 8, 1881, Lancaster paid Crane $100 in response to a bill rendered for $200.82, for three premiums, one of which was the premium upon the policy in suit.

On March 9, 1881, before the expiration of the policy, a fire occurred in the insured premises.

On March 15, 1881, Lancaster paid to Crane the balance due, $100.82, who receipted for it.

The policy contained a condition that the Company should not be liable upon the policy until the premium therefor was actually paid.

On the grounds that Crane was not the Company's agent and that this condition had not been complied with, the Company refused to pay the loss.

The testimony as to Crane's relation to the Company is fully set forth in the opinion.

At the close of the testimony for the plaintiff the court, on motion of the counsel for the defendant, entered a compulsory nonsuit. The subsequent action of the court in overruling a motion to take off the nonsuit was assigned as error by the plaintiff below who is also the plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Charles B. McMichael and Alex. P. Coletberry, for plaintiff in error: The extent of the agent's authority is a question for the jury.

Sheldon v. Conn. Mut. Ins. Co. 25 Conn. 207; Hough v. City Fire Ins. Co. 29 Conn. 10; Farmers Ins. Co. v. Taylor, 78 Pa. 342.

As an insurance company may waive any condition of policy inserted therein for its benefit, or may at any time, at its option, give authority to its agents to make agreements or to waive forfeitures, it is not bound to act upon the declaration in its policy that they have no authority.

Ins. Co. v. Norton, 96 U. S. 284 (Bk. 24, L. ed. 689); Relief Fire Ins. Co. v. Shaw, 94 U. S. 577 (Bk. 24, L. ed. 291); Miller v. Ins. Co. 12 Wall. 803 (79 U. S. bk. 20, L. ed. 398).

The rule laid down in Marland v. Royal Ins. Co. 71 Pa. 396; Schaffer v. Mut. Ins. Co. 89 Pa. 296, and Pottsville Mut. Ins. Co. v. Minnequa Spring Co. 11 W. N. C. 507, does not apply here, because in none of those cases was there payment of the premium to the company or its agent.

Where a policy was forwarded to the insured by mail, by the agents, with a bill for the premium, in which the insured was set down as debtor to the agents, the premium was not remitted until after the loss. The policy stipulated that it should not be binding until payment of premium. The agents claimed that they were personally liable to the company for the premiums. The agents were accustomed to delivering policies without payment of premium, with the apparent consent of the company. Held, that payment was waived by delivering the policy, and the company was liable for the loss.

Miller v. Ins. Co. 12 Wall. 285 (79 U. S. bk. 20, L. ed. 898); Commercial Ins. Co. v. Union Ins. Co. 19 How. 818 (60 U. S. bk. 15, L. ed. 636); Ins. Co. v. Colt, 20 Wall. 560 (87 U. S. bk. 22, L. ed. 423); Trankle v. Pa. Fire Ins. Co. 12 Ins. Law Jour. 1888, p. 616.

In Riley v. Commonwealth Mut. Fire Ins. Co. 1 Cent. Rep. 120, the facts are almost identical with those of the present case. See also Universal Fire Ins. Co. v. Block, 43 Legal Int. 46.

Mr. James C. Sellers, for defendant in error:

Where a policy of insurance requires the premium to be actually paid before the liability of the insurer shall attach, the insurer will not be liable for a loss occurring before the premium is so paid.

Mariand v. Royal Ins. Co. 71 Pa. 393; Schaffer v. Mut. Fire Ins. Co. 89 Pa. 296; Greene v. Lycoming Ins. Co. 91 Pa. 387; Pottsville Mut. Ins. Co. v. Minnequa Springs Improvement Co. 100 Pa. 137.

The part payment of the premium would not render the Company liable. A policy of insurance is an entire contract. Until the whole consideration passed to the insurer, its liability would not attach. A person cannot recover for part performance of an entire contract where he has failed in the performance on his part.

Martin v. Schoenberger, 8 Watts & S. 367; Shaw v. Turnpike Co. 2 Pen. & W. 454.

A waiver can take place only in the manner stipulated in the policy.

Waynesboro Ins. Co. v. Conover, 98 Pa. 384; Pottsville Mut. Ins. Co. v. Minnequa Springs Improvement Co. 100 Pa. 137; Universal Ins. Co. v. Weiss, 106 Pa. 20.

So far as an insurance agent acts as an insurance broker, he is agent for the insured and not the insurer.

Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Reynolds, 36 Mich. 502.

A party who avails himself of the acts of an agent must, in order to charge the principal, prove the authority under which the agent acted. The burden of proof lies on him to establish the agency and the extent of it.

Hayes v. Lynn, 7 Watts, 524; Moore v. Patterson, 28 Pa. 505; American Underwriters Assn. v. George, 97 Pa. 238.

The Company defendant was a mutual Company. Persons insured in a mutual insurance company are bound to become informed of its by-laws.

Susquehanna Ins. Co. v. Perrine, 7 Watts & S. 348; Mitchell v. Lycoming Ins. Co. 51 Pa. 402; Diehl v. Adams Co. Ins. Co. 58 Pa. 443.

Where an application or other paper is made by the policy a part of the contract, as in this case, the policy is inadmissible without the paper referred to.

Lycoming Ins. Co. v. Sailer, 67 Pa. 108; American Underwriters Assn. v. George, 97 Pa. 238; Lycoming Ins. Co. v. Storrs, 97 Pa. 354; Crawford Co. Ins. Co. v. Cochran, 88 Pa. 280.

438

No evidence was offered to show that the plaintiff had forthwith given written notice of his loss to the secretary of the Company, as was required by the policy. Without proof of such notice the plaintiff was not entitled to recover, and the judgment of nonsuit was right.

Trask v. State Ins. Co. 29 Pa. 198; Edwards v. Lycoming Ins. Co. 75 Pa. 378.

There was also no evidence that the plaintiff had complied with the provision requiring a particular account of the loss, containing proofs of loss, to be furnished to the secretary within thirty days after the loss. Compliance with this condition, unless waived by the Company, was also a condition precedent to recovery.

Commonwealth Ins. Co. v. Sennett, 41 Pa. 161; Beatty v. Lycoming Ins. Co. 66 Pa. 9; Mueller v. South Side Ins. Co. 87 Pa. 399.

No testimony was offered to show a waiver, or excuse for nonperformance, of either of these conditions.

Mr. Justice Clark delivered the opinion of the court:

The policy of fire insurance upon which this suit is brought contained the following express stipulations:

"This Company shall not be liable by virtue of this policy or any renewal thereof, until the premium therefor be actually paid," etc.

It was competent, however, for the Company to waive this provision; it was not bound to adhere to this clause of its contract, inserted solely for its protection, if it chose to dispense with it. Whether or not the Company did dispense with it was perhaps the question in the cause; whether there was evidence from which that fact might fairly be inferred is the question for consideration here.

That Robert Crane, at the time the policy was applied for, was the defendant's agent, for some purpose, is plain; what power he possessed to bind his principal, with reference to the payment of the premium, must be ascertained from an examination of the testimony. The court below having entered a compulsory nonsuit, the plaintiff's evidence must be taken as true—not only the facts directly established, but every reasonable inference therefrom.

Crane, having been called as a witness, testified on this branch of the case as follows:

"I was, in December, 1880, the agent of the Susquehanna Mutual Insurance Company for certain purposes; to receive applications, forward them to the Company, and, if approved, it to write the policies and send me the policies. I to make record of the policies, and to deliver to the assured or his agent. I collected the premiums and remitted the same to the Company, less my commissions. I received this policy from the Company direct by mail, and delivered it to Thomas J. Lancaster. I had a running account with Mr. Lancaster. In March, the day before the fire at the Elkins property, he paid me $100 on account."

Upon cross examination, he said:

"I commenced business with the Susquehanna Insurance Company April 20, 1880; my appointment was in writing. I did not have a certificate under seal. I got permission from it to send it business, and it resulted in an agency for certain purposes. I sent the business as agent, and signed my name as such in communications to it. There were a good many other details. I did not always sign my name as Robert Crane, Manager. Ninety-nine times out of one hundred I signed as agent."

Being recalled and examined by the trial judge, Crane testified:

"I charged myself in the day book with the premium. I was responsible for the premium. It looked to me for the payment of the premium or the return of the policy. I often advanced the money to the Company. I was obligated to pay the Company the premium after I had received and delivered the policy, as agent of the Company."

From this it appears that Crane had power, on receipt of a policy, to deliver it to the assured or to his agent, and to collect the premiums. The Company looked to Crane, either for the return of the policy, or for the premiums. Upon delivery of the policy, he was obligated to pay the premium, as for his own debt. He, therefore, kept an account with the Company, and charged himself with the premiums, as the policies were delivered, and took credit with any remittances he might make.

Now if it be true that an arrangement to this effect existed between the Company and Crane, and that may be fairly inferred from the evidence, the arrangement would seem to indicate that the Company was content to accept the responsibility of its own agent for such sums as he might receive, or otherwise provide for, on delivery of the policies, and to substitute the personal liability of the agent in the place of the security which the suspension clause in its contract afforded.

This implication is greatly strengthened by the course of business which the agent pursued in the conduct of the Company's business. He delivered such policies as he chose, and charged the premiums in an account which he kept. He had a running account with Lancaster, and the premiums for this insurance were charged up to Lancaster when the policy in suit was delivered to him. The effect of such a course of business, as respects Crane, certainly was to substitute the liability of Lancaster for that of the assured; and Lancaster says he usually rendered bills to Mr. Elkins once in three months.

In view of the course of business pursued by this Company with Crane, and by this agent in the consummation of their contracts, we think the implication might fairly arise that any absolute requirement of the policy as to the actual prepayment of the premiums had been dispensed with, and that the obligation of the agent to pay the premium was in effect the payment of it by the assured.

If Crane had advanced the money to the Company, and delivered the policy, no one can doubt that it would have taken immediate effect; and in what respect can there be any difference in principle, if Crane with the Company's consent assumed the payment, thus substituting his personal liability in the place of the money? Lancaster became debtor to Crane and Crane to the Company; and this, in view of the course of business pursued by the Company, would, as between the insurer and the insured, we think, be equivalent to actual payment.

PA.

We think there was enough in this case to require its submission to the jury.

The judgment is therefore reversed and a venire facias de novo awarded.

Augustus REED et al., Plffs. in Err.,
v.

FIDELITY INSURANCE, TRUST &
SAFE DEPOSIT CO., Trustee.

1. Owely, decreed by the common pleas in partition proceedings in equity and charged on the land allotted, is subject to the lien of a mortgage of the undivided interest for which it is payment; and the cotenant to whom the land is allotted must either make application to pay the money into court or else pay the mortgage debt.
2. A release of the land by the mortgagor, in accordance with the decree upon payment of the owely to him, does not prevent the mortgagor from afterwards recovering the mortgage debt from the cotenant to whom the land was allotted.

(Decided October 4, 1886.)

ERROR to Common Pleas No. 4 of Philadelphia County, to review a judgment for the defendant upon a demurrer to a plea in an action of trespass on the case. Reversed.

This action was brought by Augustus Reed and others against the Fidelity Insurance, Trust & Safe Deposit Co., Trustee, to recover money claimed by the plaintiffs and alleged to have been paid out by the defendant negligently and without authority. The declaration contained also counts in assumpsit for money had and received. The facts as they were spread on the record by the declaration, pleas and demurrer, are stated in the opinion.

The court below gave judgment for the defendant; whereupon, the plaintiffs took this writ and assigned as error the entry of the judgment.

Mr. H. G. Harris, for plaintiffs in error:
Liens against shares of cotenants in real estate are, by proceedings in partition, discharged from the corpus of the estate inherited or devised, and attach to the individual shares. Bavington v. Clarke, 2 Pen. & W. 115; Wright v. Vickers' Admrs. 81 Pa. 124-130.

Where proceedings in partition result in a sale of the land held by cotenants, the character of the cotenants' interest as land is not changed by the partition and sale. A mortgage of a cotenant's share is discharged from the ground, but adheres as a lien to the cotenants' share as land, in whatever new form it may actually assume.

Wright v. Vickers' Admrs. supra. See also Commonwealth v. Pool, 6 Watts, 33; Stewart v. Allegheny Bank, 101 Pa. 348.

It is well established that where proceedings in partition result in a sale of the property to be divided, the parties, the court and the sheriff, are bound in apportioning or distributing the fund to regard the lien creditors of the cotenants.

Diermond v. Robinson, 2 Yeates, 329; Lucas' App. 53 Pa. 404.

Mr. J. Cooke Longstreth, for defendant in error:

A decree awarding the premises to one of the heirs, at the appraisement, divests the title of the other heirs, and of all claiming under them.

Merklein v. Trapnell, 34 Pa. 42.

Mr. Justice Trunkley delivered the opinion of the court:

Charles H. Egner, being the owner of the undivided one seventh part of certain real estate, mortgaged the same to the plaintiffs. Afterwards he filed a bill in equity against his cotenants for partition, in which proceeding, on January 25, 1877, a decree was made, allotting the whole of the real estate to the defendant, charged with owelty, of which charge the sum of $4,796.02 became payable to said Egner for his interest; "and by said decree the said trustees were authorized to raise from the sale of personal securities sufficient money to pay off said charges, and upon payment of the same to the said Charles Egner for owelty of partition, it was ordered that the said Charles Egner should execute a full release of said premises of and from said charge for owelty of partition and of all estate, right, title and interest therein."

In pursuance of said decree the defendant afterwards paid to Egner the whole of the charge, and Egner gave a release and conveyance of all his interest in the premises.

The right of tenants in common to make partition, and enjoy all its incidents, is paramount to the right of the lien creditor against any one of the tenants. If necessary to effect the legitimate purpose of the partition, the lien must be shifted to the part allotted to the debtor, or if none be allotted to him, the lien against the land becomes divested. If the whole or part of the land be allotted to the debtor and charged with owelty, it is a prior lien to the lien he had given for his undivided interest. McCandless' App. 98 Pa. 489.

Where a proceeding for partition results in a judicial sale of the land, the lien which had been created by one of the tenants is divested from the land, but continues on the money raised by the sale. "Money raised incidentally, by process of partition, is land in another form, and attended with inheritable qualities." Wright v. Vickers' Admrs. 81 Pa. 124.

Section 49 of the Act of March 29, 1832, provides that in partition in the orphans' court, where the share of an heir shall be converted into money, either by owelty due him or by virtue of a sale, before confirmation of the partition or sale the court may appoint an auditor to ascertain whether there are any liens or other incumbrances on such real estate; and if liens appear, the court may order the amount of money which is payable to the party against whom the lien exists to be paid into court to be distributed among creditors or others entitled.

That Act was applied in Lucas' App. 53 Pa. 404. There the sale was by administrators, under an order of court, and they neglected to move for the appointment of an auditor to ascertain liens. They were compelled to pay the money to judgment creditors according to priority. It was said that they were simply officers of the court to make sale and receive the proceeds, with no power to pay part of the fund to whom it did not belong. The share of the tenant belonged to his judgment creditors, and neither he nor the administrators could divert it from them.

This case is in the common pleas, and not within the Act of 1832. The money does not arise from sale. The court decreed that it should be paid to Charles Egner. Owelty is somewhat in the nature of purchase money for land, and the party who pays it the purchaser. The paramount rights of tenants in common may compel conversion, and then the mortgage becomes a lien on the proceeds of sale; or on the owelty, if no sale. While it is true that the tenants in common derived title from Charles Egner, each knew that his cotenants could create liens on their respective interests. Where one acquired title to all the land, he acquired the titles that had been vested in his cotenants. The decree determined the value of the respective shares, and the sum to be paid for owelty; and it deprives the mortgagee of all remedy on his mortgage, if the lien on the money is discharged. Without a statute similar to the Act of 1832, courts of equity are not prone to despoil persons who have had no opportunity to be heard; nor will such effect be given to their decrees, unless in obedience to plain rules of law.

The mortgagee was not a party; notice was not given to him of the proceeding for partition. He was resting on his recorded security, and no person could acquire the title of Charles H. Egner without notice of that security. It is the duty of a tenant who takes the land divested of a lien against his cotenant, either to make application to pay the money into court because of the lien, or pay the lien itself. He holds the money subject to the lien. It is not a good answer to the lien creditor to say: "I paid the money to your debtor on a decree in a suit where he and I were parties, without notice to you, and without advising the court of your lien."

It is alleged that the partition was at the instance of Charles Egner, that the mortgage was by Charles H. Egner, and therefore the record of the mortgage is not notice to purchasers. But it is not alleged that in fact Charles H. Egner was the plaintiff in the partition. His name appears in the plea as printed, the person to whom the money was owing for his interest in the premises. A search for liens against Charles H. Egner, devisee of Charles Egner, deceased, was all that was necessary. The omission of a letter from his name, by mistake or design, in the partition proceeding, did not change his name, as devisee or heir, in the line of title.

Judgment reversed, and new judgment for the plaintiffs for $1,304.50.

Wilson D. SNYDER and Cyrus Jacoby, Plffs. in Er.,
v.
Morris BERGER.

1. A judgment is final and conclusive between the parties thereto, as to the facts necessarily adjudicated, and cannot be impeached except for fraud, in a collateral proceeding.

1. Although the record of a judgment is evidence for a particular purpose, yet if offered, not for that purpose but for other purposes for which it is not admissible, and rejected, such rejection is not error.

1. Although fraud is never to be presumed, but must always be proved, great latitude is allowed in the admission of testimony that may serve to shed light on the alleged fraudulent transaction.

1. Where facts and circumstances proper for the consideration of the jury on the question of actual fraud are testified to by the witnesses, it is error to withdraw that subject from the consideration of the jury.

(Decided October 4, 1886.)

ERROR to the Common Pleas of Northampton County, to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action of trespass to recover the value of certain chattels. Reversed.

The facts upon which the questions presented were raised are set out in the opinion.

Defendants assigned as error 1 and 2, the action of the court in refusing to allow in evidence the record in the case of Jacoby v. Shafer.

8. In rejecting defendants' offer to show (by the justice of the peace before whom the case of Jacoby v. Shafer was tried, and witnesses) that Berger assented to the defense of want of jurisdiction made by Shafer before the justice. The offer was as follows: "Defendant proposes to show that on December 8, 1883, Morris Berger and Edward Shafer were both present at the hearing before the justice, and that Morris Berger did not claim the property in dispute; but that Shafer, through his counsel, defended on the ground that the justice had no jurisdiction, in a sum exceeding $100, under the Act of 1879; that the defendant disclaimed any fraudulent intent, but that Morris Berger was not called as witness by the defendant Edward Shafer to show that there was no fraudulent intent, although Berger was present at that time; nor did Berger offer himself as a witness in corroboration."

4. In charging the jury as follows: "It is sufficient if the purchaser of the property assume such control over it in pursuance of the purchase as to reasonably indicate the change of ownership; and if you believe that the plaintiff in this case did take control of this property that he swears to, and which his hired man corroborates him in, then I say to you as a matter of law that that would be a sufficient taking of control to make the sale a valid one, even as against creditors."

5. In charging as follows: "I therefore take that branch of the case from you and say to you that there is no evidence in this cause to warrant you in finding that there was a scheme or combination between Shafer and Berger, for the purpose of covering up this property in order to hinder, delay or defraud the creditors of Shafer in general, or to hinder and delay Mr. FA.

Jacoby in the collection of his debt in particular."

6. In answering defendants' first point with a qualification.

The point and answers are as follows:

First point. "If the jury are satisfied that the alleged sale by Shafer to Berger was merely a scheme between Shafer and Berger to prevent Mr. Jacoby from reaching the property of his debtor under proceedings then begun before a justice of the peace, the property in question remained the property of Shafer, and the verdict must be in favor of the defendants."

Ans. "That is sound law and I would affirm the point without qualification, if there was any evidence in the case going to show that there was a scheme such as the point assumes. I have already instructed you, gentlemen, that I find no such evidence in the case; and therefore I withdraw that question from your consideration."

7. In the answer to defendants' second point.

The point and answer are as follows:

Second point. "The evidence being that Snyder acted as a constable, under a writ regular on its face, he is justified; and there can be no recovery against him as a joint tortfeasor with the plaintiff in the execution."

Ans. "I cannot so instruct you."

Mr. W. E. Doster, for plaintiffs in error: The judgment of the court in the case of Jacoby v. Shafer is conclusive in this case as to the ownership of the property.

Billings v. Russell, 28 Pa. 189; Hazelett v. Ford, 10 Watts, 101.

An agreement void as against a bona fide creditor is good between the parties.

Yocum v. Kehler, 28 Legal Int. 63.

An arrangement, fraudulent as to creditors, is binding on the parties.

Dannels v. Fitch, 8 Pa. 495; Telford v. Adams, 6 Watts, 429.

"The court looks behind the nominal party and treats as the real party him whose interests are involved in the issue, who conducts and controls the action of the defense."

Peterson v. Lothrop, 34 Pa. 223. See also McDonald v. Simeoz, 98 Pa. 623; Sloan v. McKinstry, 18 Pa. 120; Hauer's App. 5 Watts & S. 473; Tarbox v. Hays, 6 Watts, 898; Postens v. Postens, 8 Watts & S. 127; Bennett v. Cadwell's Exr. 70 Pa. 253; Emery v. Nelson, 9 Serg. & R. 12; Breading v. Boggs, 20 Pa. 83.

A wife may intervene in an attachment and defend pro interesse suo.

Nat. Bank of Republic v. Tasker, 62 Am. Dec. 332; Doyle v. Commonwealth, 16 W. N. C. 157; Sessions v. Stephens, 1 Fla. 233; 46 Am. Dec. 339 and notes; Savacool v. Boughton, 5 Wend. 170, 21 Am. Dec. 181 and note.

Whether there was such a delivery as the subject matter was capable of and whether it was bona fide are questions for the jury; that the vendor was employed about the premises in a capacity, holding out no indicia of ownership, is such concurrent possession as renders the transaction fraudulent per se.

Evans v. Scott, 89 Pa. 136; Adams Exp. Co. v. Lyons, 7 W. N. C. 421; Smith v. Crieman, 91 Pa. 428; Barr v. Boyles, 96 Pa. 31; Rothermel v. Marr, 98 Pa. 285; McPherson v. Kiernan, 12 W. N. C. 40.

A concurrent possession in the vendor and vendee is not sufficient; the change in possession must be both actual and continued.

Miller v. Garman, 2 Pennyp. 71; S. C. 69 Pa. 184; Snyder v. Shuh, 11 W. N. C. 186; Crowby v. Irwin, 1 Pennyp. 227; McKibbin v. Martin, 64 Pa. 359.

Mr. Robert L. Cope, for defendant in error:

The record offered in evidence could not have availed the defendants below unless it amounted to an estoppel of record. The judgment was not between the same parties or their privies; nor was the question in controversy in the case at bar directly decided or material to the decision in the former suit.

Greenl. Ev. § 524; Giltinan v. Strong, 64 Pa. 246; Worman v. Wolfersberger's Exrs. 19 Pa. 59; Hutchinson v. McClure, 20 Pa. 68; Scott v. Heilager, 14 Pa. 238.

"There is no rule of law which compels the real owner of attached property, on notice of the suit, to intervene and defend pro interesse suo, on pain of forfeiting his rights of property, or of action."

Megee v. Beirne, 39 Pa. 51.

The charge of the court, specified as the fourth assignment of error, is correct.

Crawford v. Davis, 99 Pa. 576; Bear's Est. 60 Pa. 430.

"One cannot be prejudiced by the fraud of another, of which he had no notice."

Reehling v. Byers, 94 Pa. 316.

When a purchaser of property pays a full consideration therefor, he cannot be deprived of it on a vague suspicion that it was sold to him for the purpose of defrauding the vendor's creditors. "The fraud alleged must be clearly and distinctly proved." Id.

Fraud is not to be presumed, but must be proved; and in most cases it is the most dangerous kind of question to be submitted to a jury without proof.

Bradley v. Grosh, 8 Pa. 45.

It has been often ruled that it is error to submit a fact or question to the jury, of which there is no evidence.

Id.; Sartwell v. Wilcox, 20 Pa. 117.

It is true, fraud may be inferred from facts proved. But such facts must tend to prove fraud. "If there is no sufficient evidence to justify an inference of the disputed fact, the court has the right and it is its duty to withhold it from the jury."

Battles v. Laudenslager, 84 Pa. 446.

Mr. Justice Sterrett delivered the opinion of the court:

This action of trespass was brought by Morris Berger against Snyder and Jacoby, plaintiffs in error, to recover the value of a horse sold on a constable's execution as the property of Edward Shafer, together with damages for the seizure and detention of another horse and a wagon, all of which he claimed were his property at the time of the alleged trespass.

It is conceded that prior to December 8, 1883, the horses and wagon belonged to Shafer. On the following day, by virtue of proceedings under the Fraudulent Debtors' Act of 1842, instituted by Jacoby against Shafer, the horses and wagon were attached; and the case was so proceeded in before the justice of the peace that judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff in the attachment; and subsequently Snyder, by virtue of an execution, issued on the judgment and directed to him as constable, sold one of the horses.

The only defense set up before the justice was want of jurisdiction. On that question the case was before us and the judgment of the justice was affirmed. Jacoby v. Shafer, 105 Pa. 610.

As against Shafer it was definitively settled in that case that he was indebted to Jacoby in the sum for which judgment was entered, and that he was about to assign and dispose of his personal property with intent to defraud his creditors. That judgment is final and conclusive as to the facts necessarily adjudicated, and cannot be impeached except for fraud, in this or any other proceeding. But Berger, the plaintiff below in this case, was not a party to that suit, and therefore not precluded from showing what he alleged, viz.: that in good faith and for a full consideration he purchased and had exclusive possession of the horses and wagon the day before the attachment issued.

Having introduced testimony tending to sustain his allegations, it was competent for the defendants to rebut and prove if they could that he was a party to the fraud committed by Shafer. While the record of the former suit was not evidence of such participation on the part of Berger, it was admissible for the purpose of showing the fraudulent purpose of Shafer, under whom Berger claimed, to be followed by evidence of the latter's active participation therein; but we do not understand that it was offered for any such purpose, and hence, as the case stood there was no error in rejecting the offers. The record was also evidenced for other purposes, but for the broad purposes for which it was offered it was not admissible. The first and second specifications are not sustained.

In connection with other evidence tending to impeach the bona fides of Berger's alleged purchase of the horses and wagon, the circumstances recited in the offer covered by the third specification were proper for the consideration of the jury. While it is true that fraud is never to be presumed, but must always be proved, great latitude is allowed in the admission of testimony that may serve to shed light on the alleged fraudulent transaction.

What was said by the learned judge in that part of his charge specified in the fourth assignment of error was doubtless intended to apply to a bona fide purchase, untainted by actual fraud. He was then speaking to the subject of transfer of possession from the vendor to vendee. The jury doubtless so regarded it. Thus understood, what was said by him was not objectionable.

The subjects of complaint in the fifth and sixth specifications, are: instructing the jury that there was no evidence of actual fraud on the part of plaintiffs below, and withdrawing that subject from their consideration. In that we think there was error. An examination of the testimony satisfies us that facts and circumstances proper for the consideration of the jury on the question of actual fraud, on the part of both the alleged vendor and vendee, were testified to by several witnesses. Indeed, the transaction between Shafer and defendant in error, especially the conduct of the latter, was more than suspicious.

There was no error in refusing to affirm defendant's second point as presented.

Judgment reversed and a venire facias de novo awarded.

Effie C. HULETT et al., Plffs. in Err.,
v.

MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE CO. of New York.

1. In a scire facias on a mortgage or judgment, a terretenant is one who became seised or possessed of the debtor's land, subject to the lien thereof.
2. A conveyance by a husband to his wife, which was not recorded until after a mortgage was executed on the same land, is, under the Act of March 18, 1775, void as to the mortgagee without notice; hence, the children of the mortgagor, who claim title through the wife by deeds subsequent to the mortgage, are prima facie terretenants in a scire facias upon the mortgage and are properly made parties to it.

(Decided October 4, 1886.)

ERROR to the the Common Pleas of Bradford County, to review a judgment for plaintiff in an action of scire facias sur mortgage. Affirmed.

This was an action brought to foreclose a mortgage under the following state of facts, as disclosed at the trial:

On February 12, 1878, R. K. Hulett, who was then the owner of two farms in Bradford County, conveyed the same to one Kiff by deed duly acknowledged. On the same day Kiff conveyed these properties to Effie C. Hulett, wife of R. K. Hulett. These conveyances were not recorded until April 4, 1881; and the possession of the property was unchanged.

On January 21, 1881, Rufus K. Hulett borrowed from the defendant in error the sum of $3,500, and gave as security a bond and mortgage upon the above mentioned real estate, the title to which had been previously placed in his wife, Effie C. Hulett, without her uniting in the mortgage. The interest was paid upon the same, to March 1, 1884.

On May 22, 1883, Effie C. Hulett and her husband conveyed the 108 acre farm to their son, Gilbert E. Hulett, one of the plaintiffs in error, by deed acknowledged the same day, which recited the conveyance from Horace A. Kiff to Effie C. Hulett, of February 12, 1878; and May 7, 1883, they conveyed the 78 acre farm to their daughter, Alice J. Hulett, afterwards intermarried with Walter G. Patterson, now deceased.

June 21, 1884, a scire facias sur mortgage was issued against Rufus K. Hulett, with notice to Effie C. Hulett and Rufus K. Hulett, her husband, Alice J. Patterson and Walter G. Patterson, her husband, and Gilbert E. Hulett, terretenants, and all other terretenants. Pleas were filed by Gilbert E. Hulett and W. G. & Alice J. Patterson that they had no land bound by the lien of the mortgage, and by Effie C. Hulett, non est factum and coverture.

Judgment was taken by default against Rufus K. Hulett and Effie C. Hulett, which was afterwards taken off as to Effie C. Hulett.

The case came on for trial at September Term, 1885, when by direction of the court below, Mayer, J., the jury gave a verdict against all of the defendant, terretenants, for the amount of plaintiff's claim. Under their application a new trial was granted, which was tried at December Term, 1885, when, by direction of the court below, the jury were discharged as to Effie C. Hulett without a verdict or nonsuit in her favor, and gave a verdict against the other defendants for the amount of plaintiff's claim.

Defendants took this writ, assigning for error the action of the court as above stated.

Messrs. J. F. Shoemaker and Rodney A. Mercur, for plaintiffs in error:

The Act of 1705, § 8, 1 Sm. 59, 1 Purd. 596, pl. 149, does not require that terretenants or purchasers under the mortgage should be made parties to the scire facias on the mortgage; but the better and general practice is to make them parties.

Mather v. Clark, 1 Watts, 491; Mevey's App. 4 Pa. 80; Tryon v. Munson, 77 Pa. 260.

If, however, the terretenant be admitted to make defense to the sci. fa. he is concluded by the judgment.

Schnep's App. 47 Pa. 87.

"Those only are terretenants who claim by a conveyance subsequent to a judgment."

Chahoon v. Hollenback, 16 Serg. & R. 425. See also Mitchell v. Hamilton, 8 Pa. 491; Dengler v. Kiehn, 13 Pa. 41; Fox v. Hempfield R. Co. 79 Pa. 66 (note).

Defendants, not claiming title from their father but through their mother, have a paramount title to that of the mortgagor and are not terretenants and hence cannot be brought in on the scire facias.

Chahoon v. Hollenback, supra; Jarrett v. Tomlinson, 3 Watts & S. 114; Catlin v. Robinson, 2 Watts, 379.

A writ of scire facias quare executio non is not a writ for the trial of titles; nor was it intended that a judgment creditor should not be bound by the Act of 1807, which declares that two verdicts and judgments in ejectment alone shall conclude the right, or that he should be allowed to settle in this way, not only the question of lien between himself and the debtor but also a question of title between the purchaser and an adverse occupant.

Mitchell v. Hamilton, supra.

Messrs. B. M. Peck, D. A. Overton and D. C. Robinson, for defendant in error:

The first section of the Act of March 18, 1775, provides: "All deeds and conveyances which from and after the publication hereof shall be made and executed within this province of or concerning any lands, tenements or hereditaments in this Province. * * * shall be recorded in the office for recording of deeds in the county where such lands or hereditaments are lying and being, within six months after the execution of such deeds and conveyances; and every such deed and conveyance that shall at any time after the publication hereof be made and executed, and which shall not be proved and recorded as aforesaid, shall be adjudged fraudulent and void against any subsequent purchaser or mortgagee for valuable consideration; unless such deed or conveyance be recorded as aforesaid before the proving and recording of the deed or conveyance under which such purchaser or mortgagee shall claim."

Hence, the conveyance to Effie C. Hulett was fraudulent and void as to this mortgagee.

Although it is not necessary to make the terretenants parties to the scire facias, yet it is the better practice to do this.

Mather v. Clark, 1 Watts, 491.

Kennedy, J., in this case said: "The only difference that a want of notice to the terretenant makes is that he will be permitted to make any available defense against the purchase of the land at sheriff's sale that he might have set up on the trial of the scire facias in case it had been served upon him; see Nace v. Hollenback, 1 Serg. & R. 548; but if it has been served upon him he can make no such defense against the sheriff's vendee.

Id. 540; Blythe v. McClintic, 7 Serg. & R. 841.

But the circumstance of his having become a terretenant of the land after the execution of a mortgage which was valid in its original concoction and has been duly recorded will form no defense whatever either upon the trial of the scire facias or that of the ejectment brought against him by the sheriff's vendee."

See also Mevey's App. 4 Pa. 80; Evans v. Meylert, 19 Pa. 411; Wallace v. Blair, 1 Grant, 81; Schnep's App. and Speer v. Evans, 47 Pa. 87, 141.

Titles similar to the plaintiffs here were tried in actions of sci. fa. sur mortgage in the late cases of Cohell v. Easley, 88 Pa. 81, and Brown v. Henry, 106 Pa. 262.

Mr. Justice Clark delivered the opinion of the court:

A terretenant, in a general sense, is one who is seised or actually possessed of lands as the owner thereof. In a scire facias sur mortgage or judgment a terretenant is, in a more restricted sense, one other than the debtor, who becomes seised or possessed of the debtor's lands, subject to the lien thereof. Those only are terretenants therefore, in a technical sense, whose title is subsequent to the incumbrance. Chahoon v. Hollenback, 16 Serg. & R. 425.

"Strictly speaking" says Chief Justice Gibson, in Mitchell v. Hamilton, 8 Pa. 491, "only the debtor's subsequent grantee of the fee simple is a terretenant."

So in Dengler v. Kiehnor, 13 Pa. 41, the same learned judge says: "Who is a terretenant? Not everyone who happens to be in possession of the land; there can be no terretenant who is not a purchaser of the estate, mediately or immediately from the debtor, while it is bound by the judgment."

444

To the same effect is For v. Hempfield R. R. Co. 79 Pa. 66 and many other cases.

In this case the title of Rufus K. Hulett was conveyed to his wife on February 12, 1878, but the deed was not recorded until April 4, 1881; the possession of the land was unchanged; it was continued, after the execution of the deed, just as it had been before. The mortgage was executed on January 21, 1881, and was recorded on the same day, and there is no evidence whatever of any notice of the conveyance, either actual or constructive, on the part of the mortgagee.

As to the mortgagee, therefore, the deed was fraudulent and void, by the express terms of the Act of March 18, 1775; as to him the deed was as if it had never been made.

On May 22, 1888, Rufus K. Hulett and his wife joined in a conveyance of the land to their son, Gilbert E. Hulett; the mortgage was then a valid and subsisting lien on the land, and Gilbert E. Hulett took title under this deed subject to the incumbrance.

It is true that the conveyance, upon its face, was of the title of Effie C. Hulett, but as the husband joined in the assertion and conveyance of the wife's title, the deed would be effective as a conveyance of his own.

Prima facie, at least, Gilbert E. Hulett was a terretenant, and the mortgagee had a right to name him as such in the scire facias. It was competent, of course, for him to defend under the plea that the mortgage was not then, and never was, a lien upon his land. Cohell v. Easley, 88 Pa. 8.

Under that plea he might have shown that, although the deed to his mother was not recorded, the mortgagee either had actual notice or was somehow affected with notice of it. But there is no such evidence in the case, nor was any offered.

Under the pleadings the question was whether or not the mortgage was or ever had been a lien upon the lands of Gilbert E. Hulett and Alice J. Patterson, as terretenants. Prima facie, we say, they were terretenants, but it was competent for them to show that they were not.

The judgment on the scire facias is against them. As to the effect of this judgment in a subsequent ejectment for the land, we are not now called upon to decide; by all the cases the defendants are certainly concluded as to all matters which as terretenants they might have made matters of defense, on the scire facias; such as payment, release, or efflux of time. Schnep's Appeal, 47 Pa. 37; Dengler v. Kiehnor, 13 Pa. 37.

But whether the judgment is conclusive that they are terretenants is a question not raised upon the record, and it will be time enough to decide it when it arises.

The judgment is affirmed.

NEW YORK.
COURT OF APPEALS.

Re Probate of WILL OF John WILSON, Deceased.

1. A legatee may, by releasing his interest in the will, remove his incompetency under section 829, Code Civ. Proc., to testify, on the probate of the will, in relation to personal conversations and transactions with the testator.
2. An executor is not, as such, incompetent under section 829, Code Civ. Proc., to testify, on the probate of the will, as to personal conversations and transactions with the testator, on the ground that he is a party to the proceeding or interested by way of commissions.
3. Under section 2589, Code Civ. Proc., the general term has no power, on appeal from a surrogate's court, to award costs to an unsuccessful contestant of the probate of a will.

(Decided October 26, 1886.)

APPEAL from a judgment of the Supreme Court at General Term in the Second Department, affirming a decree of the Surrogate's Court of Orange County admitting to probate the will of John Wilson. Affirmed in part, reversed in part.

Memorandum of decision below, 88 Hun, 643.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Henry Bacon with Mr. Joseph Merritt, for the heirs and next of kin, appellants:

The burden is upon the proponent to establish, to the full satisfaction of the conscience of the court, not only a full compliance with the statutory requirements but that the instrument itself was prepared in accordance with the unsolicited and uninfluenced instructions of the testator, its contents fully made known to the testator and understood by him before its execution, and that the beneficiaries were of his free selection and the amounts donated in accordance with his wishes; that he was so far in possession of his faculties as to be able to grasp and comprehend the whole scheme of distribution and did so comprehend it.

Delafeld v. Parish, 25 N. Y. 86; Ford v. Harrington, 16 N. Y. 285-288; Boyd v. De La Montagne, 78 N. Y. 498; Nebit v. Lockman, 34 N. Y. 167; Seare v. Shafer, 6 N. Y. 269; Marr v. McGlynn, 88 N. Y. 371; Nexsen v. Nexsen, 2 Keyes, 232; Re Will of Smith, 95 N. Y. 523.

The admission of Hart's testimony as to personal transactions and communications with testator was erroneous.

Code Civ. Proc. § 829; Lane v. Lane, 95 N. Y. 494; Cadmus v. Oakley, 3 Dem. 824.

The release by Hart was ineffectual to make him competent to testify to personal transactions or communications with deceased against the heirs and next of kin. It is invalid for want of a consideration moving to Hart or from any person or party to it. It never was delivered to anybody representing the estate so as to become effectual. Without either consideration or delivery it amounted to nothing. Even if delivered it would not remove his incompetency.

Genet v. Lawyer, 61 Barb. 211.

If the release were effectual, still the witness was incompetent because he still remained a party, to wit: the proponent in this proceeding, and was testifying in his own behalf. Two classes of persons are disqualified: a party to the record and a person interested in the event. The party is always incompetent whether interested or not.

Code Civ. Proc. §§ 828, 829; Church v. Howard, 79 N. Y. 415; Nearpass v. Gilman, 16 Hun, 121; Schoonmaker v. Wolford, 20 Hun, 166; Wilkins v. Baker, 24 Hun, 82; Smith v. Hathorn, 25 Hun, 159; Price v. Price, 33 Hun, 69; Poucher v. Scott, 38 Hun, 223.

That Hart's testimony was material to the proponent's case is apparent. Its admission was erroneous; and for that error the decree appealed from must be reversed.

Re Will of Smith, 95 N. Y. 516.

Three of the appellants are infants, for whom the surrogate appointed a special guardian.

There can be no question as to the power of the supreme court to award costs to unsuccessful contestants of a will.

Code Civ. Proc. §§ 3280, 3240.

Under section 2589 of the Code of Civil Procedure the appellate court has the discretion to give costs to unsuccessful contestants.

Lawrence v. Lindsey, 70 N. Y. 566.

This section of the Code has wrought no material change in the law as it stood prior to the adoption of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Throop's note to section 2589.

The supreme court has uniformly exercised the discretion given as to costs in such cases, and has directed in cases similar to this that costs of all the parties be paid out of the fund.

Chipman v. Montgomery, 68 N. Y. 221, 237, 298; Smith v. Edwards, 88 N. Y. 92-110; Finley v. Bent, 95 N. Y. 364-369.

The court has the power, independently of any express provision of law or rule of court, to allow a reasonable compensation to the special guardian of the infant parties; and this compensation is not limited to the taxable costs.

McQue v. O'Hara, 5 Redf. 336; Rule 50 Supreme Court.

Mr. B. R. Champion, for John L. Hart, executor, respondent:

All the requirements of the statute were observed as to the execution of the will. Besides, the attestation clause is full.

Rugg v. Rugg, 83 N. Y. 592; Re Will of Ootrell, 95 N. Y. 329.

Hart, the executor and proponent, was competent as a witness. Section 829 of the Code of Civil Procedure does not cover his case.

Childrens Aid Society v. Loveridge, 70 N. Y. 387; Rugg v. Rugg, 83 N. Y. 592; Re Will of Peter Huestis, 23 N. Y. Week. Dig. 224; Whelpley v. Loder, 1 Dem. 368, affirmed by the supreme court, May, 10, 1886; Redf. Am. Cas. on Law of Wills, p. 177, citing English Cases.

"The competency of a witness, disqualified by interest, may always be restored by a proper release."

1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 426, 428, and cases cited.

To the same effect are Burritt v. Silliman, 18 N. Y. 98; Stall v. Catskill Bank, 18 Wend. 406; Utica Ins. Co. v. Cadwell, 8 Wend. 296; Coffin v. Coffin, 23 N. Y. 9; Meehan v. Rourke, 2

Bradf. 888, and Reece v. Crosby, 8 Redf. 74, holding that an executor, although a party and receiving a legacy as compensation, is a competent witness to prove the execution of the will without releasing.

The fact that the release was made for the purpose of enabling the releasor to testify, did not render him incompetent.

Vasseur v. Livingston, 4 Duer, 285, affirmed by this court, 18 N. Y. 248; Doyle v. Daniels, 2 E. D. Smith, 385-387, 496; Nelson v. Smith, 8 Abb. Pr. 117.

Nor did the fact that it was not executed until after the beginning of the hearing.

1 Greenl. Ev. § 426; Tallman v. Dutcher, 7 Wend. 180; Doty v. Wilson, 14 Johns. 378; Clark v. Carter, 4 Moore, P. C. 207.

The allowance of costs to the unsuccessful adult contestants was error.

Re Will of Budlong, 100 N. Y. 208, 205, 1 Cent. Rep. 286; Van Gelder v. Van Gelder, 84 N. Y. 658.

Ruger, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

One Hart was executor under the will of John Wilson, deceased, and also a legatee therein. He presented the will for probate and offered himself as a witness to prove personal conversations and transactions had by him with the testator at the time of its preparation, in relation to its contents and execution.

It was objected that he was incompetent, under section 829 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to testify to such transactions and conversations, both as a party to the proceeding and also by reason of his interest in the event. The proponent, therefore, put in evidence a release to the administrator of his interest as legatee under the will. The objection was thereupon overruled by the surrogate, and this is now alleged as error.

We think the questions presented have been settled by authority against the contention of the appellants.

The interest which the witness might have taken as legatee under the will was effectually discharged by the release. It was an instrument under seal importing a consideration, and its effect was to swell the residuum of the estate and increase the amount to be distributed under the provisions of the will.

The residuary legatee took nothing thereby in the right of the legatee, and did in no sense succeed to the sum derived from, through or under any right of the legatee.

Neither was the witness incompetent by reason of being a party to the proceeding, or as being interested by way of commissions as executor. It was held in the case of Children's Aid Society v. Loveridge, 70 N. Y. 387, that an executor was not such a party to the proceedings to prove a will as would preclude him from testifying to personal transactions with the deceased testator, within the spirit and meaning of section 399 of the Code of Procedure. Neither did his right to compensation as executor render him incompetent by reason of interest to testify to such transactions. This ruling was approved and followed in Rugg v. Rugg, 83 N. Y. 592.

The same question was decided in a similar manner in Reece v. Crosby, 8 Redf. 74.

In McDonough v. Loughlin, 20 Barb. 238, the proposed witness was an executor and trustee under the will, as well as a subscribing witness. The question was whether the execution of the will could be proved by him without working a forfeiture of his appointment as executor and the devise to him as trustee, under 2 R. S. p. 65, § 50, avoiding any beneficial devise, legacy, interest or appointment to subscribing witnesses. It was held that it could, inasmuch as the devise to him was in trust, he taking no beneficial interest therein, and his appointment as executor was fiduciary and not for his own benefit. It was said that the commissions were given by statute as compensation for services and did not accrue to the executor as a gratuity by force of the will. The claim and appointment were not beneficial, within the meaning of the statute. It is said in the same case that the doctrine of the English courts is to the same effect, citing: 1 Mod. 107; Lowe v. Jolliffe, 1 W. Bl. 865; Tyrell v. Holt, 1 Barn. K. B. 12; Bettison v. Bromley, 12 East, 250.

We find no cases in this State conflicting with the principles laid down in those referred to. In Lane v. Lane, 95 N. Y. 494, the proposed witness was not only an executrix but also a legatee; and it was properly held, she not having released her claim as legatee, that she was an interested party.

There are no other objections made by the contestants appearing in the record which are open to consideration in this court.

The executor, however, has appealed from so much of the judgment rendered by the general term as awards costs to the unsuccessful contestants.

We are of the opinion that under section 2589 this appeal must prevail. That section lays down an express rule, by which costs of appeal in that court must be regulated; and it authorizes costs to a successful party only. This was distinctly adjudged by this court in Re Budlong, 100 N. Y. 203 [S. C. 1 Cent. Rep. 286]; and accords with sound policy.

Sections 8230 and 8240 refer only to such cases as are not otherwise provided for in the Code.

The judgment of the General Term is affirmed as to the probate of the will, and reversed as to the award of costs to the contestants, with costs to the executor to be paid out of the estate.

All concur.

PEOPLE of the State of New York, Repts.,
v.

Roxalana DRUSE, Appt.,

1. The evidence in a case of homicide examined and found sufficient to support a conviction of murder in the first degree.
2. After evidence has been given by a defendant, tending to show that the homicide was committed in self-defense, he may follow it by proof of the general reputation of the deceased for quarrelsomeness and violence; but evidence of specific acts of violence towards third persons is inadmissible.
3. When the voluntary confession of a de-defendant is otherwise admissible against him on trial for the crime, it is immaterial that he was under arrest when the confession was made.

(Decided October 26, 1886.)

A PPEAL from a judgment of the Supreme Court at General Term in the Fourth Department, affirming a conviction at the Herkimer Oyer and Terminer, of the crime of murder in the first degree. Affirmed.

The facts in relation to the defendant's confession to the witness McDonald, referred to in the opinion, are as follows: Daniel McDonald, a witness in behalf of the People, testified that he was a justice of the peace; that he was at Eckler's (a neighbor's, where the defendant and her son George and daughter Mary were, in charge of a constable) on the night of January 15, 1885, and saw the defendant and had a conversation with her.

The witness testified: "I didn't tell her she had better tell what there was of it, it would be better for her; I did not tell her anything on that subject; I wouldn't say whether I was asked to talk with her about it by anyone or not; I think not, though; I did not threaten her if she did not tell, not at any time; I am sure of that; I didn't hear anyone else threaten her. * * * I could not tell how many conversations I had with Mrs. Druse in all; perhaps three or four. At the time I had the first conversation with her I said to her that George and Frank and Mary had told us all about it, and she might as well tell us too; I didn't add that it would be better for her; I think I didn't say anything further. The reason that I told her that George and Frank and Mary had told all about it was that before she had talked of her own accord and said she hadn't any hand in it, for what she was arrested, and denied it at that time, and I told all about it."

The defendant's counsel objected to the conversation held by the witness with the defendant, on the grounds: "First, because it was made while defendant was under arrest; and second, because the statement that Frank, Mary and George had told all about this transaction was an inducement for her to tell, was unfair, unjust, and the very evidence he states was calculated to lead her to believe that it would be best, would be a favor to her to tell."

The objections were overruled, and an exception taken; and the witness was allowed to give the admissions and declarations of the defendant, made to him on the occasion spoken of.

The evidence in relation to the other questions raised on appeal is stated in the opinion.

Mr. H. D. Luce, for appellant.

Mr. Eugene E. Sheldon, District Attorney, for respondents.

Andrews, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant was convicted at the Oyer and Terminer in Herkimer County, on the 6th day of October, 1885, of the murder of her husband, William Druse, in the Town of Warren in that county, on the 18th day of December, 1884.

The general term has affirmed the conviction, N. Y.

and the only questions cognizable in this court are those arising upon exceptions taken in the course of the proceedings. People v. Boas, 92 N. Y. 560; People v. Gurdick, 100 N. Y. 508 [S. C. 1 Cent. Rep. 721].

It is not disputed that the deceased came to his death by the act of the defendant. The only defense attempted to be made on the trial was justifiable homicide.

The history of the transactions at the house of Druse on the day of the homicide, as narrated by the witnesses on the part of the People, discloses one of the most remarkable tragedies to be found in the annals of crime. The deceased was a farmer and lived with his wife and their two children (Mary, of the age of about nineteen years, and George, of the age of about ten years), on a small farm in the Town of Warren. Frank Gates, a nephew of the defendant about fourteen years of age, was also, at the time of the homicide, a member of the family. The husband and wife had frequent altercations, and their relations for several years prior to the homicide had been very unpleasant. He was a shiftless farmer, a poor provider, often abusive to his family, and the contracting by the wife of small debts at the stores for clothing and supplies for herself and her children was the occasion of frequent quarrels between them.

The homicide occurred on the morning of the 18th of December, in the kitchen of the house. The sole evidence of eye witnesses of the transaction is that of Frank Gates and George Druse and his sister Mary. The two boys were sworn on the part of the People, and Mary Druse, upon whose testimony alone the defense of justifiable homicide was sought to be supported, was sworn in behalf of the defendant.

The testimony of the two boys, who differ as to some of the details, but who agree in the main facts, may be briefly stated. It appears from their story that the deceased, after having done his chores, came in to his breakfast and sat down at the table in the kitchen, with his back to the stove. The defendant, the two boys and Mary Druse were in the room, but were not at the table. The deceased commenced finding fault with the tea, addressing his wife in harsh and profane language, and complaining of the store bill. The defendant went into the buttery or pantry and came out with a revolver, which she held under her apron. She then spoke to the boys in a low tone and told them to go out doors. They went out and George testified that he heard two or three shots. Frank Gates heard a noise as of chairs being tipped over, but heard no shots.

The defendant then called Frank Gates into the house. He came in and found Druse sitting in his chair with a rope around his neck, and the defendant required Frank to take the pistol and fire at Druse, using at the same time threatening language. He took the pistol and fired as directed, and after that the defendant took the pistol and fired again at her husband. He fell, or was thrown from the chair, and the defendant then took an ax and hit him on the head, and he said, "Oh Roxey, don't!" She then severed the head from the body and rolled it up in a newspaper or a skirt, and carried it into the parlor. She then directed the boys to go up stairs and bring down a straw tick, which they did, and placing the body upon that, it was dragged into the parlor. She then sent the boys down to a brush lot to get a sharp ax, which they brought. She had newspapers placed over the kitchen windows, and set Frank Gates and her daughter Mary to watch them. She afterwards sent the boys out after wood. They brought in dry shingles in a clothes' basket, and they were taken into the parlor. She then sent Frank Gates to a neighbor's for matches.

The day was apparently spent by the defendant, assisted by her daughter, in cutting to pieces, and burning the body of her husband, while in the afternoon the boys amused themselves by playing checkers. The next day the refuse in the stoves, containing the unconsumed portions of the body, was collected and put into a box, which was placed in a cutter and taken by the defendant, Mary, Frank and George, and dumped among some bushes in a swamp. Subsequently Frank Gates, by her direction, threw the ax and revolver into a pond, where they were found after the arrest of the parties.

The defendant represented to neighbors that her husband had gone to New York, and to divert suspicion she telegraphed to a friend, asking: "Is William there?"

The testimony of Mary Druse, who was jointly indicted with her mother for the murder, was introduced to show that her father at the time of the homicide had attacked her mother with a knife, under circumstances which justified the killing. It is sufficient to say that her narration was very improbable, and was inconsistent with some of the conceded facts, and that the jury disbelieved her. The testimony of the two boys was confirmed as to the main facts, by the confession of the defendant to the witness McDonald.

It will be seen from this résumé of the principal facts that there was abundant evidence to justify the conviction. The evidence on the part of the People supplied the elements necessary to the crime of murder in the first degree. The general term, in a careful opinion, has examined the case upon the facts and the law, and reached the conclusion that no error was committed on the trial; in which we fully concur.

We shall content ourselves with a reference to a few of the exceptions, although all of these seem to be unsubstantial, and none of the questions raise any doubt as to the correctness of the rulings.

1. The court in its discretion properly permitted the district attorney to call the attention of the witnesses Frank Gates and George Druse to particular facts, after they, without interruption, had gone through the story of the incidents of the 18th of December. We think the judge carefully guarded and protected the legal rights of the defendant in their examination.

2. The court properly excluded the defendant's offer to show by the witness Van Evera that the deceased treated his domestic animals with cruelty. The rule is that after evidence has been given by a defendant, tending to show that the homicide was committed in self-defense, he may follow it by proof of the general reputation of the deceased for quarrelsomeness and violence. But a defendant is confined to proof of general reputation, and evidence of specific acts of violence towards third persons is inadmissible. People v. Lamb, 2 Keyes, 371; Eggle v. People, 56 N. Y. 643; Thomas v. People, 67 N. Y. 218.

This principle plainly excludes the evidence offered.

3. The confession of the defendant, to the witness McDonald, was properly admitted. It was not made under the influence of fear produced by threats, nor upon any promise of immunity from prosecution, and was therefore admissible, within the general rule prescribed by section 395 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

It is immaterial that when made the defendant was under arrest. The confession was voluntary, and was not within the rule recently applied in the Case of Mondon [ante, 357], excluding confessions made by an accused prisoner, as a witness who has not been informed of his legal rights.

4. The court properly excluded evidence to show that the deceased robbed his father, when in his coffin, of his grave clothes and wore them at the funeral. It was wholly irrelevant and immaterial.

We leave the other exceptions without special notice. Most of them are considered in the opinion below, and are satisfactorily answered. There was no exception to the charge. It fully stated the facts and the law applicable to the case.

We see no reason for disturbing the judgment. It should, therefore, be affirmed.

All concur.

Anton SCHWARTZ, Appt.,

o.

Louise WEBER, Admr., Reopt.

A party appealing from a judgment entered upon the decision of the court upon a trial without a jury is not required to make and serve a case under section 997, Code Civ. Proc., but may file exceptions under section 994; and his time to do this, or to make a case under Rule 82 of the supreme court, does not begin to be limited until service upon his attorney of a copy of the decision of the court, with notice of entry of judgment thereon. The service of notice of entry of judgment, without a copy of the decision, has the effect of limiting the time to appeal only.

(Decided October 24, 1896.)

A PPEAL from an order of the Supreme Court at General Term in the Second Department, dismissing an appeal from a judgment of the Kings Special Term. Reversed.

The question presented and the facts connected therewith are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Henry Wehle, for appellant.

Mr. Alex. S. Bacon, for respondent.

Earl, J., delivered the opinion of the court: This was an equitable action to remove the cloud of a mortgage from certain property of the plaintiff situated in Brooklyn. The action was tried at a special term of the supreme court, and judgment was ordered in favor of the defendant, which was entered on the 28th day of April, 1886. On the same day copies of the judgment and the order dismissing the complaint, and notice of the entry of each, were served upon the plaintiff's attorney.

On the 28th day of May the plaintiff served upon defendant's attorney a notice of appeal from the judgment thus entered to the general term. The defendant's attorney noticed the appeal for argument and also gave notice of a motion that he would move for an order dismissing the appeal, and that the cause be stricken from the calendar and his judgment be affirmed, with costs, on the ground that no case had been made and served.

The motion was opposed, upon affidavits of plaintiff's attorney that the decision, consisting of findings of fact and conclusions of law, made by the judge presiding at the special term, had been filed with the clerk, but that a copy thereof had never been served upon him, and that thus plaintiff's time to serve a case had not expired.

The general term granted the motion dismissing the appeal, with costs of motion, and ordered that the judgment be affirmed, with costs of appeal, unless within twenty days thereafter the appellant should apply to the special term for leave to make and serve a case on appeal, and that if such application should be granted, the appeal should not be dismissed but the cause should go over the term and be argued at the next general term.

We are of opinion that the learned general term misapprehended the practice. The notice of the entry of judgment which the defendant's attorney served upon the plaintiff's attorney limited the right to appeal to thirty days, under section 1851 of the Code, which provides that an appeal to the general term "must be taken within thirty days after service, upon the attorney for the appellant, of a copy of the judgment or order appealed from, and a written notice of the entry thereof," and it had no other effect; and within the time limited the appeal was brought.

The plaintiff was not obliged to prepare a case to be settled as required by section 997 of the Code, but he could file exceptions under section 994 of the Code, to the findings of the trial judge upon questions of law, and could have his appeal heard upon those exceptions without any case, as provided by section 998 of the Code.

At the time plaintiff's appeal was dismissed at the general term, the time for filing exceptions to the findings of law had not expired. According to section 994 those exceptions could be taken and filed any time before the expiration of ten days after service upon plaintiff's attorney of a copy of the decision of the court and a written notice of the entry of judgment thereupon.

A copy of the decision has never been served upon plaintiff's attorney, and hence, his time for filing exceptions to the findings of the judge has not been limited and has not expired.

The court at general term, therefore, had no right to dismiss his appeal, conditionally or otherwise. The defendant must serve upon the plaintiff's attorney a copy of the decision of the court, and then, unless plaintiff's attorney files and serves his exceptions within the time limited by law, his appeal may be dismissed.

Nor has the plaintiff's time to make a case been limited as required by Rule 32 of the supreme court. That rule provides that if the trial is before the court or a referee, a case may be made and a copy thereof served upon the opposite party, "within ten days after the service of a copy of the decision or report, and written notice of the entry of judgment thereon."

It would, therefore, appear that at the time plaintiff's appeal was dismissed he was not in default for not filing his exceptions or making a case.

The order of the General Term should, therefore, be reversed, with costs of appeal to this court and $10 costs of opposing the motion at the General Term.

All concur.

Nathan HUTKOFF, Respt.,
v.

William J. DEMOREST et al., Appts.

Emily R. CALDWELL et al., Respts.,
v.

Franklin J. WALL, Appt.

Gotthelf GREINER, Respt.,
v.

Jettel H. HAMBURGER, Appt.

Chapter 418, Laws of 1886, does not authorize appeals from judgments of the City (late Marine) Court of New York directly to the Court of Appeals. Such judgments must still be first reviewed by the Court of Common Pleas.

(Decided October 20, 1886.)

MO TIONS to dismiss appeals from judgments of the General Term of the City Court of New York. Granted.

Mr. David Leventritt, for the motion.

Mr. Jas. R. Marvin, contra.

Rapallo, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Article VI. of the Constitution of the State was adopted by the People at the November election in 1869, and declared adopted by the board of state canvassers, December 6, 1869.

One of its provisions was that the Superior Court of the City of New York, and the Court of Common Pleas of the City and County of New York, the Superior Court of Buffalo and the City Court of Brooklyn, were continued with the powers and jurisdiction they then severally had, and such further civil and criminal jurisdiction as might be conferred by law (art. VI. § 12).

In the case of Popfinger v. Yutte, 102 N. Y. 38 [S. C. 3 Cent. Rep. 291], we decided this provision superseded section 12 of article 14, which declared that those courts should remain until otherwise directed by the Legislature, with their then present powers and jurisdiction; that after the adoption of article VI. it was beyond the power of the Legislature to take from those courts any of the powers or jurisdiction which they had at the time of the adoption of the article, and that consequently subdivision 5 of section 263 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which purported to confine their jurisdiction in judgment creditor's actions to cases where the judgment on which the action as founded was recovered in the same court, was inoperative and void because at the time of the adoption of article VI. those courts had general jurisdiction in equity within their territorial limits, coextensive with that of the Supreme Court, and subdivision 5 purported to take away part of that jurisdiction by limiting it in judgment creditor's suits to judgments recovered in the same court.

At the time of the adoption of article VI. the jurisdiction and powers of the Court of Common Pleas of the City and County of New York, were declared and enumerated in title V. of the Code of Procedure, sections 33, 34. Section 34 is in the following words: "§ 34. The Court of Common Pleas of the City and County of New York shall also have power to review the judgments of the Marine Court of the City of New York and of the Justices' Courts in that City."

By the Act of 1883, chap. 26, the name of the Marine Court was changed to the City Court, but it still remained the same court with the same judges and officers and the same jurisdiction; and the power to review its judgments continued in the Court of Common Pleas under its original grant of power.

By chapter 418 of the Laws of 1886 it was sought, indirectly and by language the full effect of which would not readily be observed by a casual reading, to take from the Court of Common Pleas the important power of reviewing the judgments of the Marine Court, now the City Court, and to authorize an appeal from those judgments direct to the Court of Appeals, without requiring that they should first be subjected to review by the Court of Common Pleas.

The enactment is as follows: "§ 1. Subdivision 2 of section 191 of chap. 448 of the Laws of 1876 entitled: 'An Act Relating to Courts, Officers of Justice and Civil Proceedings,' is hereby amended so as to read as follows: '2. An appeal cannot be taken in an action commenced in a court of a justice of the peace, or in a District Court of the City of New York, or in the City Court of Yonkers, or in a justice's court of a city, unless the court below allows the appeal by an order made at the general term which rendered the determination, or at the next general term after judgment is entered thereupon. An action, discontinued because the answer set forth matter showing that the title to real property came in question, and afterwards prosecuted in another court, is not deemed to have been commenced in the court wherein the answer was interposed, within the meaning of this subdivision. The City Court of New York shall be deemed a superior city court within the meaning of section 190 of the Code of Civil Procedure.' § 2. This Act shall take effect immediately, but shall not apply to any actions now pending in which the time to appeal has not already expired."

If the Act were construed literally it could not have any operation whatever, for it would have no application to any actions pending at the time of its passage in which the time to appeal had not then already expired; and it is difficult to suppose any case to which under that restriction it could apply. But reading it as if the word "not" were omitted, it is still subject to the fundamental objection that it contravenes section 12, of article VI. of the Constitution by depriving the Court of Common Pleas of its jurisdiction and power to review the judgments of the Marine (City) Court which it possessed at the time of the adoption of the article, and which were thereby rendered permanent and placed beyond the power of the Legislature to take from that court.

The Act authorizing appeals to this court from the decisions of the General Term of the City Court of Brooklyn (Laws of 1871, chap. 282), and its recognition by this court by entertaining such appeals, are relied upon by the appellants as giving support to their position in the present cases. But we do not see that they affect the question. There is no provision in the Constitution in relation to the Supreme Court which could be construed as restraining the Legislature from taking from that court the appellate jurisdiction over the judgments of the City Court of Brooklyn which it possessed in 1869 and 1870; and the question now presented could not arise in respect to the Act of 1871 before referred to.

The motions to dismiss the appeals in the above entitled cases should be granted, but as the question is new no costs should be allowed to either party.

All concur.

PEOPLE, ex rel. Frank B. SMITH, Appt.,
v.

COMMISSIONERS of the Department of Fire and Buildings OF BROOKLYN, Resp'ts.

1. An order quashing a writ of certiorari is appealable to the court of appeals when it adjudicates upon the validity of the proceeding reviewed.
2. A "detailed" fireman is within the provisions of the charter of Brooklyn permitting removals of members of the fire department by the commissioners only on conviction of an offense specified; and the removal of such fireman without notice or trial is illegal.

(Decided October 26, 1886.)

A PPEAL from a judgment of the Supreme Court at General Term in the Second Department, affirming an order of the Kings Special Term quashing a writ of certiorari and affirming proceedings of defendants in removing relator from the Department of Fire and Buildings in Brooklyn. Reversed.

Memorandum of decision below, 37 Hun, 643.

Mr. Edward F. O'Dwyer, for appellant.
Mr. Almet F. Jencks, for respondents.

Rapallo, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The order of the general term in this case is appealable. It affirms a judgment rendered at special term on certiorari, which was in the following words: "It is ordered and adjudged that the respondents have judgment on the return, and that their action in removing relator from said Department of Fire and Buildings is in every respect affirmed, and that said writ of certiorari be quashed, with $10 costs."

An order which simply quashes a common-law certiorari has often been held not to be appealable to this court, because the issuing of the writ rests in the discretion of the court; and consequently it can in its discretion recall or quash the writ without passing upon the validity of the proceeding sought to be reviewed.

The case of People v. Stilwell, 19 N. Y. 581, fell within that principle. There was no hearing upon the return and no adjudication upon the merits, but the decision was rendered on a motion to quash the writ, which motion was granted. In the opinion, it is true, the validity of the proceedings sought to be reviewed was considered, and the court held that the writ had been improvidently issued. But the order simply quashed the writ and did not adjudicate upon the validity of the proceeding.

The cases of People v. Hill, 58 N. Y. 547; People v. Board of Police Comrs. 82 N. Y. 506; and People v. Board of Tax Comrs. 85 N. Y. 655, were of the same description. But in the case of People v. Board of Assessors, 89 N. Y. 88, although the order concluded by directing that the writ be quashed, that conclusion was preceded, as in the present case, by an adjudication that the proceeding brought up by the writ was valid and free from error; and the judgment quashing the writ was not rendered in the exercise of the discretion of the court, and on the ground that the proceeding ought not to be reviewed by the writ, but on the ground that the allegations of error were not sustained. This decision was held to present a question of law reviewable in this court. To the same effect was the case of People v. Knowles, 47 N. Y. 415, 420.

We must, therefore, consider the question of the validity of the proceeding of the board in removing the relator. If he was legally appointed a member of the Fire Department, it is not disputed that his removal was illegal, inasmuch as the power of the Commissioners to remove a member of the Department can only be exercised on conviction of the member of some of the offenses specified in section 14 of title XIII. of the Charter of the City of Brooklyn (Laws of 1873 chap. 863), and in the case of the relator there was no such conviction. He was removed by a simple resolution without trial or notice, or even any charge having been made against him. The only ground upon which the board claim that their action should be sustained is that his appointment was invalid for the reason that he was appointed as "a detailed fireman" and as no such office existed he was dismissed by the board. That position was sustained by the general term in their opinion, and they held that consequently the removal was regular and proper.

We think that the case of Pennie v. Brooklyn, decided by the City Court of Brooklyn and affirmed in this court [97 N. Y. 654], determines the question adversely to the respondents. The appointment of Pennie was precisely the same as that of the present relator. Both were appointed by resolution, "detailed" firemen, and both were removed by resolution, without other cause than the alleged invalidity of such an appointment. Pennie sued out a writ of certiorari and the opinion of the general term of the second department, a copy of which is among the appeal papers in the case of Pennie v. Brooklyn, on file with the clerk of this court (Vol. 62), states: "The relator, Henry Pennie, was removed by resolution because he was appointed a detailed fireman, a position not known to the law. This is quite frivolous; if he were a fireman his office was known to the law; and detailed here means nothing more than selected."

The proceedings were thereupon reversed, and Pennie afterwards brought an action in the City Court of Brooklyn for his salary during the time of his exclusion. The same point was urged on the trial of that action, and a motion for a nonsuit was made on the ground as stated in the case on appeal "that the position of detailed fireman is a position unknown to the law and that the resolution of the commissioners removing the plaintiff is effectual." The motion was denied and exception taken, and a verdict for the plaintiff was directed, and on appeal to this court the judgment entered on the verdict was affirmed. Pennie v. Brooklyn, 97 N. Y. 654.

The cases are identical and we see no ground upon which the proceedings of the board can be sustained.

The judgments of the General and Special Terms should be reversed and the proceedings of the respondents reversed and annulled, with costs to the relator in this court and the court below.

All concur.

Sarah SOLOMON, Admrx. of Joseph SOLOMON, Deceased, Appt.,

v.

MANHATTAN R. CO., Resp't.

1. In an action to recover damages for the death of plaintiff's intestate the evidence showed that deceased, who was well acquainted with the station and its surroundings and the manner of operating the trains, endeavored, together with two other persons, to board an elevated railway train after it had begun to move from the station. The two other persons, who were slightly in advance of deceased, either pushed back the car platform gate or it was drawn back for them by the conductor, the gate having either been closed or was then being closed by the conductor, and succeeded in boarding the train. Deceased took hold of the stanchions of the car, placed one foot on the platform, and was in the act of passing on to the car, when the conductor closed the gate, and deceased, clinging to the car, was carried a few feet until he came in contact with a projection from the station platform and received injuries from which he died. Held, that deceased was guilty of contributory negligence, and that a nonsuit was properly directed.
2. The presumption of negligence in the case of one attempting to board a moving train is stronger even than in the case of one attempting to alight from a moving train.

(Decided November 23, 1886.)

APPEAL from a judgment of the Supreme Court at General Term in the First Department, affirming a judgment of the Circuit Court dismissing the complaint in an action to recover for the death of plaintiff's intestate alleged to have been caused by negligence of defendant in operating an elevated railway in the City of New York. Affirmed.

The action has been twice tried. Upon the first trial plaintiff obtained a verdict. Upon appeal the general term reversed the judgment in her favor for error of law, such error being the refusal to nonsuit the plaintiff or to direct a verdict for defendant. 31 Hun. 5.

From this order plaintiff appealed to the court of appeals and the appeal was dismissed. 95 N. Y. 672.

Upon a second trial the complaint was dismissed, and the judgment in defendant's favor was affirmed by the general term, for the reason that the evidence presented by both parties was similar to that given on the former trial of the cause.

From this judgment of the general term plaintiff appealed to this court.

The facts of the case are sufficiently stated in the opinion.

Mr. Geo. Putnam Smith, for appellant: "It cannot be said, as matter of law, that it is always negligent for a person to get upon a street car while in motion."

Eppendorf v. R. R. Co. 69 N. Y. 195.

The reasoning in this case applies with equal force to cars impelled by steam, and the decisions cited to sustain it are those concerning steam cars.

Doss v. R. R. Co. 59 Mo. 87; Swigert v. R. R. Co. 75 Mo. 475; Price v. R. Co. 72 Mo. 414; Filer v. N. Y. Cent. R. R. Co. 49 N. Y. 47.

The speed of the train when the attempt is made is in all cases to be considered.

Brooks v. N. Y. L. E. & W. R. R. Co. 21 N. Y. Week. Dig. 464; Nelson v. A. & P. R. R. Co. 68 Mo. 595.

Deceased was not guilty of negligence in stepping on the moving car unless he knew, or was bound in law to know that it was in motion. The evidence clearly shows that when Mr. Solomon reached the train the gate was open.

Evans v. Utica, 69 N. Y. 166.

The acts of the other passengers at the time were properly shown, to disprove negligence.

Townley v. R. R. Co. 56 N. Y. 158; Coulter v. Am. Exp. Co. 56 N. Y. 585.

"The speed of the train, the conduct of the conductor, the darkness of the hour, the age and activity of deceased, all these circumstances are for consideration in determining whether plaintiff's intestate was prudent."

Price v. St. L. K. & N. R. R. Co. 72 Mo. 414; Brooks v. Boston & M. R. R. Co. 185 Mass. 21.

Deceased was not guilty of negligence in failing to guard against a danger which, under the circumstances, he had no reason to expect.

204

Langan v. R. R. Co. 72 Mo. 392; Fowler v. R. R. Co. 18 West Va. 580.

By its own misconduct defendant placed deceased in peril, and it cannot complain if he erred in judgment.

Voak v. R. R. Co. 75 N. Y. 320; Ouyler v. Decker, 20 Hun. 173.

"The contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff that has been held to defeat his right of recovery has entered into the creation of the cause of action, and not merely supervened upon it by way of aggravating the damaging results."

Wilmot v. Howard, 39 Vt. 458; Stebbins v. R. R. Co. 54 Vt. 464.

To prevent a recovery in this action, Mr. Solomon's negligence, even if it existed, must have been contributory.

Haley v. Earle, 30 N. Y. 208; Savage v. Corn Ex. etc. Ins. Co. 36 N. Y. 655.

"The inquiry must always be whether there was any intermediate cause, disconnected from the primary fault and self-operating, which produced the injury."

Milwaukee, etc. R. R. Co. v. Kellogg, 94 U. S. 475 (Bk. 24 L. ed. 256).

Notwithstanding any negligence on the part of deceased, if defendant's employees, by the exercise of reasonable care or skill, could have done anything, after they saw him in his perilous position, whereby the chance of injury might have been averted, it is liable.

Austin v. Steamboat Co. 43 N. Y. 76; Swigert v. Han. & St. Jo. R. R. Co. 75 Mo. 475; Isbell v. N. Y. & N. H. R. R. Co. 27 Conn. 406; Price v. St. L. K. & N. R. R. Co. 72 Mo. 414; Meeks v. S. P. R. R. Co. 56 Cal. 513; Jamison v. San Jose R. R. Co. 55 Cal. 593.

Mr. Edward S. Rapallo, with whom was Mr. Robert E. Deyo, for respondent:

The plaintiff failed to prove in this instance that the attempt of the intestate to board the moving train, to which attempt and acts of the intestate the accident was at least in part due, was not, under the circumstances, negligent.

The general rule to be gathered from the decisions of this and other courts appears to be that the boarding or alighting from a moving train is presumably and generally a negligent act per se.

Burrows v. Erie R. Co. 63 N. Y. 556; Morrison v. Erie R. Co. 56 N. Y. 302, 307; Filer v. N. Y. Cent. R. R. Co. 49 N. Y. 47; Nichols v. Sixth Ave. R. R. Co. 38 N. Y. 131; Gavett v. Manchester, etc. R. R. Co. 16 Gray, 507; Hickey v. R. R. Co. 14 Allen, 429; Harvey v. Eastern R. R. Co. 116 Mass. 269; Harper v. Erie R. Co. 32 N. J. L. 88; Secor v. Toledo, etc. R. Co. 10 Fed. Rep. 15.

Andrews, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

It is undisputed that the train was in motion at the time the plaintiff's intestate attempted to enter it. It had been brought to a stop, according to the usual custom, on reaching the Chatham Square Station, for the purpose of discharging and receiving passengers, and had started again before the deceased and the two men in front of him, hurrying from the Third Avenue train across the bridge and down the steps to the station platform of the Second Avenue road, had reached the rear of the first car. It is also undisputed that the conductor, who was standing on the platform between the first and second cars, had given the signal to start the train and had closed or attempted to close the gate before the first of the three men reached the car. The train at this time as we have said, had started and was slowly moving, but with a constantly accelerated speed. The two men in advance of the intestate, succeeded in safely boarding the train. The intestate was a few feet behind them. He attempted to get on to the platform of the car after the others.

The evidence tends to show that he took hold of the stanchions of the car with both hands and placed one foot upon the car platform, and was in the act of passing on to the car when the conductor closed the gate against the deceased, who, clinging to the car or possibly being caught in some way by the gate, was carried along a few feet, until his body came in contact with a water pipe extending horizontally at the end of the station platform, and received the injuries of which he subsequently died.

There is a conflict of evidence as to whether the gate had been fully closed before the two men in front of the intestate reached the car. The conductor testified that it was closed at that time and was pushed open by them. Witnesses for the plaintiff testified that the conductor was closing the gate as the two men approached the car, and opened it for them to enter, and then closed it as the intestate was attempting to get on.

There is also some discrepancy in the evidence as to the distance from the car platform to the water pipe at the end of the station platform, when the intestate reached the car. One of the plaintiff's witnesses, who saw the whole transaction, testified that the distance was four or five feet, and other witnesses testified that it was ten feet.

Wilson, a witness for the plaintiff, testified: "Although my glance was momentary, I saw him (deceased) constantly from the time he put his foot on the car until he struck the projection; in my best judgment that may have been five feet, but I think it was about four feet, the distance."

Haller, also a witness for the plaintiff, was asked: "The whole occurrence from the time the conductor pulled the bell to start the car, until Mr. Solomon struck against the projection and fell, occupied but a very short space of time, did it not?" He answered: "A very little time, quicker than I can tell you."

In view of the undisputed fact that the car was moving when the deceased attempted to enter it, it is evident that the obstruction against which the deceased was carried was perilously near, and that a collision was inevitable if the deceased should fail to get on to the car and should be carried along a few feet in the position in which he was when the gate was closed.

The station platform was lighted and "everything was clear." The deceased had been accustomed to take the train in the evening at this station for more than a year. His son, who usually accompanied his father, testified that "the train stops very sharp and goes off very quick." The trains ran every five minutes. There can be no doubt that the deceased was familiar with the surroundings and was acquainted with the manner of operating the trains.

We are of opinion that the nonsuit was properly directed. It must be assumed that the deceased when he attempted to enter the car, knew that it was in motion. We cannot know what was passing in his mind, or of what existing facts he was actually cognizant, except by inference. But what others saw and knew in respect to matters equally open to his observation, must be presumed to have been seen and known by him; especially is this presumption a reasonable one in respect to matters which common prudence required him to know and observe before he attempted to enter the car. Knowing then, as must be inferred, that the train was in motion, he took the risk of the attempt to board it. The movement of the train was itself notice to him that the time for receiving passengers had passed. He undoubtedly thought he could board the train in safety, and except for the act of the conductor in closing the gate, the attempt would probably have been successful.

It does not appear that the deceased knew of the attempt of the conductor to close the gate before the two men who preceded him entered the car. But he was in a position to have seen it, and the act was observed by the other witnesses. We are of the opinion that the attempt of the deceased to enter the train, under the circumstances disclosed, was in law a negligent act which contributed to his death.

It is we think the general rule of law established by the decisions in this and other States, as claimed by the learned counsel for the respondent, that the boarding and alighting from a moving train is presumably and generally a negligent act per se, and that in order to rebut this presumption and justify a recovery for an injury sustained in getting on or off a moving train, it must appear that the passenger was by the act of the defendant put to an election between alternate dangers, or that something was done or said, or that some direction was given to the passenger by those in charge of the train, or some situation created, which interfered to some extent with his free agency, and was calculated to divert his attention from the danger, and create a confidence that the attempt could be made in safety.

McIntyre v. R. R. Co. 37 N. Y. 287, and Filer v. R. R. Co. 49 N. Y. 47, were cases of injury sustained by passengers, in the one case by going from one car to another by direction of one of the train men to get a seat, while the train was in motion, and in the other by leaving a moving car at a station by direction of a brakeman, who directed the plaintiff, a woman, to get off, saying that the train would not stop.

In Burrows v. Erie R. Co. 63 N. Y. 556, the court reversed a judgment recovered for an injury to a passenger in alighting at his station from a moving car; and in Morrison v. Erie R. Co. 56 N. Y. 302, the court reversed a verdict for the plaintiff under very similar circumstances.

It is said by Rapallo, J. in Burrows v. Erie R. Co., that "The cases in which a recovery has been allowed, notwithstanding that the passenger undertook to leave the car while in motion, are exceptional and depend upon peculiar circumstances." In short, as we now understand the rule established by the decisions, it is presumptively a negligent act for a passenger to attempt to alight from a moving train, and it is not sufficient to rebut the presumption, that the trainmen acquiesced in the action of the passenger, or that the company violated its duty or contract in not stopping the train, or that to remain on the train would subject the passenger to trouble or inconvenience; but that to excuse such an act and free the plaintiff from the charge of contributory negligence, there must be a coercion of circumstances which did not leave the passenger in the free and untrammelled possession of his faculties and judgment.

Negligence no doubt is usually a question of fact of which the jury must inquire, but the inference of negligence in a given case may be so clear and convincing that the judge may direct a verdict.

The conclusion that it is prima facie dangerous to alight from a moving train is founded on our general knowledge and common experience, and it is akin to the conclusion, now generally accepted, that it is in law a dangerous and therefore a negligent act, unless explained and justified by special circumstances, to attempt to cross a railroad track without looking for approaching trains. In boarding a moving train there is generally less excuse than in alighting from one. The party attempting it is not often under the same stress of circumstances as frequently happens in the former case. He may be compelled to wait for another train; but this is an inconvenience merely, which does not justify exposing himself to hazard.

In Phillips v. R. R. Co. 49 N. Y. 177, the plaintiff was thrown against a platform in attempting to board a train while in motion, and a nonsuit was sustained in this court. In the present case the intestate was familiar with the situation. He must have known that according to the ordinary rules the time for receiving passengers had passed and that the greatest celerity and promptness was required on the part of those entrusted with the management of trains.

It is said that the opening of the gate by the conductor was an invitation for him to enter and that if the conductor had not closed the gate upon him he would have boarded the train in safety. It is true that the opening of the gate to admit the two men in front of the deceased, and their safe entrance, may have given the intestate confidence that he could enter also. But the act of the conductor, as the sequel shows, was not intended as an invitation to the intestate, and the conductor's misjudgment or negligence was one of the hazards which the intestate ran. It did not relieve him from the imputation of negligence because he did not foresee the obstruction which would be interposed, or that without the negligence of the conductor the accident would not have happened. One of the very dangers of the situation arose from the fact that all the contingencies upon which the success of the effort to enter the car depended, could not be anticipated. If men will take such hazards, they must bear the consequences of their own rashness; and it is no just reason for visiting the consequences upon another, that his negligence co-operated in producing the result.

We think the judgment should be affirmed.

Ruger, Ch. J., Earl and Finch, JJ., concur. Miller and Danforth, JJ., dissent, Rapallo, J. taking no part.

Angeline C. JOHNSON, Admrx., Reapt.,

v.

Maria J. MYERS, Exrx., Appt.

Angeline C. JOHNSON, Admrx., Reapt.,

v.

Maria J. MYERS, Appt.

1. Evidence as to the value of services and as to whether they were rendered as partner or as employee examined.
2. The question "What proportion of A's time was devoted to B's business?" asked of one who had abundant opportunity to know, is not objectionable as calling for an opinion.
3. When the duty to be done requires a high degree of judgment, skill and ability, and is largely of a confidential character, and not such as has a common or general market value, the character and ability of the person who performed the duty are properly considered in arriving at the value of his services.

(Decided November 23, 1886.)

APPPEALS from judgments of the Supreme Court at General Term in the Fifth Department, affirming judgments in favor of plaintiff entered on the report of a referee in actions to recover the value of services rendered by plaintiff's intestate. Affirmed.

Memorandum of decision below, 35 Hun, 666.

Mr. Wm. G. Tracy, for appellant.

Mr. Chas. A. Hawley, for respondent.

Finch, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff as administratrix recovered compensation in two separate actions for services rendered by Johnson to Myers in his life time, and to his executrix after his death.

Myers appears to have been an able and successful though somewhat illiterate business man, whose enterprises were varied and extensive, widely scattered as to locality, and involving heavy risks of capital, and obstructed by adverse interests and the frequent hostility of litigation. In executing his plans he found it both necessary and wise to secure and use intelligent and trained assistance. To some extent he obtained the aid of Johnson by joining him as an associate in his enterprises; but beyond that he employed him largely in his own affairs, putting confidence in the ability and honesty of the chosen agent. Necessarily, the line between the partnership work of Johnson and that performed by him for the benefit of Myers individually was extremely difficult to draw, and after the death of both parties it has made an accurate and precise separation impossible, and to be accomplished only approximately and by a careful judgment founded upon such evidence as the nature of the case permitted.

No person was so likely to know in a general way the amount of service rendered by Johnson as his wife. His coming and going, his telegrams and letters, the litigations calling him abroad, the meetings and conversations of the parties, would be within her knowledge to some considerable extent; not always accurately in detail, but generally as a whole. She testified that in the summer of 1870 Myers, complaining of his arm and saying that Johnson knew more about his business than any man living, sought his help to "settle up his business," and Johnson entered upon the work and furnished the assistance.

That she told the exact truth in this respect is put beyond dispute by the letters of Myers written mainly by his then secretary and agent, Yoe. Under date of July 6, 1870 the latter writes that Myers is sick and adds: "He wishes you to look after his affairs generally until he is able to return." Under date of July 14, 1870, Yoe writes again that Myers is still sick and "He desires you to look after his matters and that if you desire anyone to counsel in his affairs you will confer with T. B. Fitch, Esq., and if necessary come to Syracuse to see him."

Then follow thirty-four letters running down to the middle of October, when Myers went to New York, where he died a few weeks later.

The burden of Myers' letters is the detail of his business to be attended to. Much of it concerned the sale of the Trenton Arms Company to De Muir. While it is true that Johnson and Myers were joint owners of that property, the title stood in the name of Myers, who sold the whole of it to De Muir as early as December 1869, and from that time on owed Johnson his proportion of the purchase price. Further subjects are the collection of mortgages, the discharge of judgments, the sale of houses and the difficulty with Randall and Williams in which Johnson seems to have had no personal interest.

Beyond any question the statement of Mrs. Johnson was true. She further testified to an arrangement made with Fitch after Myers' death, for the rendition of services to the estate. How entirely true that is becomes evident from the multitude of Fitch's letters calling upon Johnson in every conceivable shape for information advice and service; from the account of moneys received by Johnson and paid over by him running to about $100,000; and from numerous vouchers in which the estate is found paying Johnson for his expenses and returning to him moneys advanced.

Mrs. Johnson further said that from 1864 her husband was more or less occupied with the affairs of Myers and his estate. This also was undeniably true. The defendant drew from her on cross examination the fact that in 1864 while they lived in Trenton, Johnson came to Syracuse every week during six weeks at the request of Myers and that she knew it was on Myers' individual business; that he went to Brooklyn, attended to litigations and consulted with lawyers.

Many letters during this period tend to corroborate her statement. But what is quite as conclusive as a detailed examination of the services is the defendant's own request to find, N. Y.

marked number 6 and couched in this language: "That said William Johnson rendered some services for said Austin Myers during his lifetime. That the services so rendered by him were reasonably worth the sum of $3,600 and no more, and that said item is a proper charge on this accounting in favor of the estate of said Johnson." In the face of this admission it requires some nerve to insist that Johnson's services rendered all related to the joint property.

Mrs. Johnson, swearing to this knowledge shown to be correct, and with abundant opportunity to know and that the best of any living person, was then asked what proportion of Johnson's time was devoted to Myers' business. To this it was objected that the witness was incompetent to give an opinion and that it appeared that Johnson and Myers were partners. The objection was overruled and an exception taken. The witness answered: "One half from 1864 to the time of Johnson's death." The objection was not sound. The question called for a fact within the witness' knowledge and not for an opinion. If a person familiar with the character of Myers' business had been asked how much of one man's time it would have taken to conduct or transact it, that would have called for an opinion, but if asked how much time it did take, no opinion would be sought but a fact founded upon knowledge.

That was the character of the question put to Mrs. Johnson. A fact was asked for of which she had some knowledge and which she could answer to the extent of that knowledge. How gravely inconsistent it would be for us to hold the admission of this question error is apparent from our own ruling in a much more debatable case, Hallahan v. N. Y. L. E. & West. R. R. Co. 102 N. Y. 195 [S. C. 2 Cent. Rep. 924]. There the witness who saw the passenger answered: "I should judge" that plaintiff's elbow was not out of the window from the position that he held in the car. A motion to strike out the answer was denied, on the ground that if the answer seemed an opinion it was in effect not one, but at least was admissible as an opinion founded upon knowledge.

Estimates of time and value thus founded are always admissible and no objection was taken in this case that Mrs. Johnson had not sufficient knowledge. She swore that she had, the opportunity was certainly hers, and the facts corroborate and support the truth of her answer. Bearing upon them, as we have said, was a voluminous correspondence read in evidence, the details of the defendant's own account against Johnson which show a large mass of business done by him for Myers and his estate resulting in the receipt and payment of very considerable sums of money, and the evidence of other witnesses as to services rendered, and the value of the same. The finding of the referee upon the subject was not unreasonable, or outside of the inferences which were possible from the proof.

An exception was taken to a question put to Jewett, which was this: "Have you ever been with Col. Johnson when he was professedly in Capt. Myers' business?" The ground of the objection was that the question called for the declarations of Johnson in his own favor. That was not the object or effect of the evidence. The purpose was not to prove by Johnson's statements that he was at work for Myers, but to show that the witness was acquainted with the kind of business in which Johnson was engaged and which by other evidence it was claimed to have been shown was that of Myers, with a view of obtaining from the witness his estimate of the value of Johnson's services. This is made quite apparent by what immediately preceded the objection. Jewett had said that he saw Johnson engaged in work which the latter represented to be that of Myers. A motion was made to strike out Johnson's declarations in the absence of Myers, and the motion was granted. The referee, therefore, certainly did not understand the word "professedly" used in the question as calling for a class of evidence just held by him to be inadmissible, and must have understood the inquiry as merely preliminary to the proof of value afterward given. It may be added that the answer was harmless. It showed the intestate ostensibly engaged in services for Myers, but not that he was so engaged or what the services were. The referee quite certainly understood that those facts were not proved by Jewett.

The plaintiff was permitted to show what the value of the services of such a man as Col. Johnson was, and to this there was an exception. It is now argued that his character and ability had nothing to do with the value of the services. We think it had much. The duty to be done required the best of judgment, a skill and ability beyond the average, and was largely of a confidential character. It had no common and general market value. The work was not merely ministerial or a service which anybody could render. The business was varied and complicated and in many directions responsible, and the man chosen to perform it by reason of his capacity and ability had a right to be paid upon the standard of the capacity which entered into the work and formed the principal and essential value of the services.

The remaining questions argued respect the counterclaims of the defendant which were disallowed upon the trial. In the main they depended upon pure questions of fact involving the credibility of witnesses and the drift and effect of items in the books of account. They were argued exhaustively before us, leaving upon our minds a conviction, which a careful subsequent examination has strengthened, that they furnish no ground for a reversal of the judgments. The reasons given by the referee and the General Terms substantially cover the ground and meet our approval, and a renewed discussion of them is neither necessary nor suitable.

Each of the two judgments should be affirmed; that against the defendant as executrix without costs, and that against her as an individual with costs.

Miller, Earl and Danforth, JJ., concur.
Ruger, Ch. J., Rapallo and Andrews, JJ., dissent.

Angeline C. JOHNSON, Admrx., Respt.,

v.

Maria J. MYERS, Exrx., Appt.

Held, on the facts, where a judgment for money only had been recovered against 208

an executrix in an action against her in her representative capacity, and where the plaintiff's claim had been duly presented before suit brought, that the defense of the action was reasonable and proper, and that therefore costs should not have been awarded. (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1835, 1836.)

(Decided November 23, 1886.)

A PPEAL from an order of the Supreme Court at General Term in the Fifth Department, affirming an order granting costs and an additional allowance to plaintiff in an action against an executrix on a claim for services rendered to defendant's testator in his life time. Reversed.

Memorandum of decision below, 85 Hun. 666.

Mr. Wm. G. Tracy, for appellant.

Mr. Chas. A. Hawley, for respondent.

Finch, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

An order was made in this case granting costs to the plaintiff and an additional allowance. It is resisted upon this appeal, on the ground that the plaintiff's demand was not presented to the executrix for payment before the commencement of the action, and that such payment was not unreasonably resisted or refused. Both questions turn upon disputed facts, as to which it is the general rule of this court to follow the conclusions of the court below unless for some very obvious and sufficient reason. Field v. Field, 77 N. Y. 294.

The statute (3 R. S. 5th ed. p. 175, §§ 39, 40), authorizes publication of a notice to creditors "requiring all persons having claims against the deceased to exhibit the same with the vouchers thereof, to such executor or administrator," etc., and allows the latter upon such presentation to require production of vouchers and an affidavit of the claimant.

The proofs on the part of the plaintiff show that her claims, with the books and vouchers on which they rested, were fully "exhibited" to the authorized agent of the executrix before the commencement of the action, and were examined and rejected by the assertion of counterclaims sufficient to extinguish them, and all ultimate liability denied. This fact is no further disputed than by an affidavit of the defendant's attorney that no "formal claim" was ever made, though he admits "informal negotiations for a settlement."

But while the courts below were justified in holding that the plaintiff's claim was duly exhibited and properly presented, the examination we have made of the facts in controversy very strongly impresses us with the conviction that the defense of this action was reasonable and proper; and while the defendant estate was unsuccessful in the end, there was abundant reason in the complicated nature of the accounts, in the great amount of business transacted and in the supposed and actual existence of grave counterclaims, to justify the defense actually made and prevent us from holding it to have been unreasonable.

Judgment was demanded for more than $60,000, with a large amount of interest. Judgment was rendered for a sum very materially less and still further reduced by a deduc-tion of the general term of more than $10,000. We discover no trace of bad faith in the defense interposed but much to justify the inquiry and examination which it compelled.

For this reason, we think, costs should not have been awarded, and we therefore reverse the order appealed from.

All concur.

Emily D. JEX et al., Executrices of Josiah Jex, Deceased, Appts.,
v.

Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty of the CITY OF NEW YORK, Resp't.

1. An assessment for repaving in the City of New York, although valid on its face, is void for want of jurisdiction where the proceeding was not based upon a petition of a majority of the property owners, as required by the charter.
2. Chapter 312 of Laws of 1874, amending chapter 838 of Laws of 1858, and confining the remedy for the vacation of assessments in New York City to "the proceedings under the Act hereby amended," only applies where there is an existing lien created by the assessment, and does not affect the right of action to recover money unlawfully exacted under an illegal assessment.
3. An assessment imposed without jurisdiction need not be first vacated in order to enable one to recover money paid thereon.

(Decided November 23, 1886.)

APPEAL from a judgment of the Supreme Court at General Term in the First Department, affirming a judgment of the Special Term sustaining a demurrer to a complaint in an action to recover money paid by plaintiffs' testator on an alleged illegal assessment for street improvement. Reversed.

Memorandum of decision below, 38 Hun, 688.

The facts are sufficiently stated in the opinion.

Mr. Herbert A. Shipman, for appellants:

The commissioner of public works let the contract for this work at a private letting. For an improvement, performed under such a contract, no valid assessment could be imposed.

Re Emigrant Sav. Bank, 75 N. Y. 389; Re Well, 88 N. Y. 543.

An action of this nature can be maintained. Strusburgh v. Mayor, 87 N. Y. 452; Delano v. Mayor, 32 Hun, 144.

The Act of 1858 (chap. 838) as amended by the Act of 1874 (chap. 312) is only applicable when the lien of the assessment exists.

Re Lima, 77 N. Y. 170; Re Hughes, 93 N. Y. 513.

If the construction of the prohibitory clause of the Act of 1874, claimed by the defendant, is the true one, then the Act is unconstitutional. It is competent for the Legislature to deprive a court of equity of the power of giving a particular remedy, but it cannot deprive a party of all remedy.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 3d ed. p. 239; Lennon v. Mayor, 55 N. Y. 361.

N. Y.

The case is governed by the case of Bruecher v. Port Chester, 101 N. Y. 240, 2 Cent. Rep. 90, in which the court says: "Where an assessment is in fact utterly void, on the ground that the assessors had no jurisdiction to impose the same, then an action may be maintained to recover back money paid in satisfaction thereof without first having the assessment set aside or vacated. And so it has been held. Newman v. Supra. Livingston Co. 45 N. Y. 676; Strusburgh v. Mayor, 87 N. Y. 452; Horn v. New Lots, 88 N. Y. 100."

This is not a "suit or action in the nature of a bill in equity or otherwise" "for the vacation of any assessment in said City, or to remove a cloud upon title." This action is not therefore barred by the Act of 1874 (chap. 312), for suits or actions of the nature named in the Act only are affected by the Act. The assessment has been paid; therefore there remains no assessment to vacate. By the payment of the assessment the cloud upon the title (which was created by and only existed while the assessment remained unpaid) has been removed.

In reply:

The work of repaving Broadway was performed under a contract made in direct and open violation of the mandatory requirements of the Act of 1873, chap. 385 § 115.

Re Manhattan R. R. Co. 102 N. Y. 304, 3 Cent. Rep. 329.

Messrs. E. Henry Lacombe and D. J. Dean, for respondent:

Prior to the year 1858, the manner by which assessments for local improvements in the City of New York were vacated was by a suit in equity to remove a cloud upon title.

By Laws 1858, chap. 838, a new and summary method was provided, by which assessments might be vacated by petition to the supreme court.

Miller's Case, 12 Abb. Pr. 121.

From the passage of that Act until the year 1874, two methods of procedure existed, viz.: a suit in equity or an application by petition under chapter 838 of the Laws of 1858, either of which might be resorted to by persons aggrieved by fraud or substantial error committed in the imposition of any assessment for a local improvement.

By chapter 312 of the Laws of 1874, amending the Act of 1858, it was provided that:

"Hereafter no suit or action of the nature of a bill in equity or otherwise shall be commenced for the vacation of any assessment in said City, or to remove a cloud upon title; but owners of property shall hereafter be confined to their remedies in such cases to the proceedings under the Act hereby amended."

This provision was incorporated in the Consolidation Act of 1882, as section 897.

After the passage of the Act last mentioned, no such suit as has been brought by the plaintiffs in this case could be maintained.

Heckman v. Mayor, 23 Hun, 591; Re Gants, 85 N. Y. 539; Knapp v. Brooklyn, 97 N. Y. 720; Astor v. Mayor, 7 Jones & S. 129; aff'd in 62 N. Y. 580.

The Act of 1874 does not deprive the court of jurisdiction; it simply prescribes the method which the plaintiff shall pursue in attacking illegal or voidable assessments. That the Legislature has ample power to do this is held in Lennon v. Mayor, 55 N. Y. 866; Dolan v. Mayor, 62 N. Y. 472; and Bank of Chenango v. Brown, 26 N. Y. 467.

The present contention of the respondent is not in conflict with the opinion of this court in Bruecher v. Port Chester, 101 N. Y. 240-245, 2 Cent. Rep. 90, in which Strusburgh v. Mayor is cited. For in the Bruecher Case it appeared: 1. That the assessment was "utterly void on the ground that the assessors had no jurisdiction." 2. That the same assessment had been adjudged utterly void in a prior suit of other parties against the same defendant. 3. The action was for a money judgment only, as in Peyser v. Mayor, 70 N. Y. 497, and did not require an adjudication as to the validity of the assessment.

An action at law may be maintained to recover back money paid for an assessment or tax which is void upon its face, for lack of jurisdiction in the assessor, without having first set aside the tax or assessment.

Horn v. New Lots, 88 N. Y. 100; Newman v. Superiors Livingston Co. 45 N. Y. 676; Chapman v. Brooklyn, 40 N. Y. 372.

But an action cannot be maintained to recover back money paid for an illegal assessment, which is not void upon its face, so long as the assessment remains unvacated and unreversed.

Swift v. Poughkeepsie, 87 N. Y. 511; Bank of Commonwealth v. Mayor, 43 N. Y. 184; Peyser v. Mayor, 70 N. Y. 497; Purcell v. Mayor, 85 N. Y. 380; Wilkes v. Mayor, 79 N. Y. 621.

The statute in question is not unconstitutional as depriving plaintiff of all remedy; it simply and only deprives him of the remedy by action in equity in which, as plaintiff, he may invoke the equitable jurisdiction of the court.

Lennon v. Mayor, 55 N. Y. 866.

See also Dolan v. Mayor, 62 N. Y. 472; Astor v. Mayor, 62 N. Y. 580; Bank of Chenango v. Brown, 26 N. Y. 467.

Andrews, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Upon the facts averred in the complaint, the assessment imposed upon the lands of the testator, for regulating and paving Broadway, although valid on its face, was nevertheless void for want of jurisdiction. It was an assessment for repaving, and the ordinance of the Common Council directing the improvement was not based upon a petition of a majority of the property owners, as required by the charter. Laws of 1873, chap. 335, § 115.

The work also involved an expenditure exceeding $1,000, and was not let by contract; nor was it authorized by a vote of three fourths of the members of the Common Council, which is essential to justify a departure from the general rule requiring work involving an expenditure exceeding that amount, to be done by contract founded upon sealed bids and proposals.

The presentation of the proper petition is the basis of the jurisdiction of the Common Council to incur an expense for repaving reimbursable by local assessment. The statute requiring the presentation of a petition was designed for the protection of property owners. The initiation of the improvement without a petition was not an irregularity merely, but was fundamental. It was a condition precedent to the right to make an assessment for the improvement, that it should have been petitioned for by the requisite number of property owners. See Re Emigrants Sav. Bank, 75 N. Y. 889; Re Weil, 88 N. Y. 543; and Re Manhattan R. R. Co. 102 N. Y. 802, 3 Cent. Rep. 329.

It is alleged in the complaint that the testator, being ignorant of the defects in the proceedings, was required to pay, and did pay under coercion of law, an assessment against his lands, for the improvement, amounting to $1,487.02, and that the claim to have the money repaid had been duly presented to the comptroller and was rejected; and the complaint demands judgment vacating the assessment, and also for the amount paid thereon by the plaintiff's testator, with interest. It is not controverted that if the assessment was illegal, a case was presented by the complaint, which under the general rule of law entitled the plaintiff to relief. Strusburgh v. Mayor, 87 N. Y. 452.

It is contended, however, that the vacation of the assessment must precede or accompany the remedy to recover back the money paid, and that the remedy by action to vacate the assessment has been taken away by chapter 312 of the Laws of 1874, amending chapter 338 of the Laws of 1858, which declares that "Hereafter no suit or action in the nature of a bill in equity, or otherwise, shall be commenced for the vacation of any assessment in said city, or to remove a cloud upon title; but owners of property shall hereafter be confined to their remedies in such cases to the proceedings under the Act hereby amended;" and that this remedy being taken away, the right to the other relief is gone.

The Act of 1858 provided an easy and expeditious remedy for the vacation of an illegal or irregular assessment which constituted a cloud upon title, without subjecting parties affected thereby to the necessity of resorting to the dilatory and expensive remedy by action. The amendment of 1874 made this remedy exclusive. But the statute only applies where there is an existing lien created by the assessment. When the lien is removed by payment or otherwise, the Act has no application. Re Lima, 71 N. Y. 170; Re Hughes, 93 N. Y. 513.

The Act of 1874 did not in terms and could not have been intended to take away all remedy to recover back money wrongfully extorted under color of an illegal assessment. It confines owners of property to the remedy given by the Act, "in such cases;" that is, where the remedy sought is the vacation of an assessment and the cancellation of an existing lien.

The right of action in this case arises out of the unlawful exaction of money from the plaintiff's testator under illegal process, which, on being paid, operated to cancel the lien. It is not touched by the Act of 1874. See Strusburgh v. Mayor, supra.

The assessment having been imposed without jurisdiction, it was not essential that it should be first vacated in order to enable the plaintiffs to recover back the money paid thereon. A void assessment, like a void judgment, is a nullity, and when its collection has been enforced, the money may be recovered back, although the assessment has not been formally vacated. Bruecher v. Port Chester, 101 N. Y. 240, 2 Cent. Rep. 90.

If, however the vacation of the assessment was necessary, that relief may be had in this action, in connection with relief for the recovery of the money which the plaintiff's testator was illegally compelled to pay.

The judgment should therefore be reversed, with leave to the defendant to answer on payment of costs.

All concur.

Re Claim of Jane WRIGHT, Appt.,

in

PEOPLE of the State of New York

v.

KNICKERBOCKER LIFE INSURANCE CO.; Charles H. Russell, Receiver, Reept.

1. Where a "non-forfeiture" policy of life insurance provided (in case of failure to keep up the premiums after the payment of two or more) for the issuance of a new policy for an amount proportionate to the number of annual premiums paid, subject to the payment of interest on outstanding premium notes, —held, that the insertion in such new policy of a clause of forfeiture thereof for nonpayment of interest annually on outstanding premium notes on the original policy was authorized and valid.*

A PPEAL from an order of the Supreme Court at General Term in the First Department, affirming an order of the Special Term sustaining Receiver's exceptions and denying a motion to confirm referee's report in favor of a policy claimant in a proceeding to wind up the affairs of a Life Insurance Company. Affirmed.

Statement by Andrews, J.:

The original policy contained a provision "that if after the receipt by the Company of two or more annual premiums, the policy should cease in consequence of the nonpayment of premiums, the Company on the surrender of the same will issue a new policy for the full value acquired under the old one, subject to any notes that may have been received on account of premiums; that is to say, if payments for two years have been made, it will issue a policy for two tenths of the sum originally insured; if for three years, three tenths; and in the same proportion for any number of payments, without subjecting the assured to any subsequent charge, except the interest annually on all premium notes remaining unpaid on this policy."

The claimant allowed the policy to lapse after paying, partly in cash and partly in notes, six annual premiums. Thereafter she surrendered it and the Company issued a new policy for six tenths of the amount of the original policy, which contained a recital that it was issued in consideration of the surrender of the old policy and of the representation made in the application therefor, and of the payment of interest annually every 22nd day of November, on all notes or credits given for premiums on the original policy. The outstanding notes or credits amounted to $1,620 and were charged against the policy. The new policy also contained this clause: "If the interest upon said notes or credits shall not be paid on or before the day or days above mentioned for the payment thereof * * * then and in every such case the Company shall not be liable to pay the sum assured or any part thereof, and said policy shall cease and be null and void, without notice to any party or parties interested herein." The claimant paid interest on the notes for three years after the new policy was issued, until 1877, and then ceased to pay interest and made no further payments.

In 1883 the Company became insolvent and a Receiver was appointed. It is claimed that the claimant had no actual knowledge that the new policy contained the clause of forfeiture, above quoted, and that it was fraudulently inserted by the Company.

Mr. John C. Freeman, for appellant:

The old policy was entitled a "Non-Forfeiture Policy." The title was a part of it. "All that is printed or written on the face of it and on the back of it are parts of the policy and constitute the contract (Jennings v. Chenango Co. Mut. Ins. Co. 2 Denio, 75; Patch v. Phoenix Mut. Life Ins. Co. 44 Vt. 481)."

Douglas v. Knickerbocker Life Ins. Co. 88 N. Y. 492-508.

"The non-forfeitable condition was inserted in the policy to meet the case of those who, after payment of three or more premiums, became unable or for some cause unwilling to continue the payment of premiums, and for that reason permitted the policy to lapse."

Douglas v. Knickerbocker Life Ins. Co. supra.

The title, red clause and penalty clause, are to be read together; and so read, giving due effect to each, they are harmonious.

Holly v. Met. Life Ins. Co. 17 N. Y. Week. Dig. 842.

Interest was merely incidental to the principal of the annual premium note, and if failure to pay the principal did not work a forfeiture, failure to pay interest did not either, unless there was an express and special contract that it should.

Fake v. Eddy's Exr. 15 Wend. 76; Cutter v. Mayor, 92 N. Y. 166.

This will appear more plainly if the case be regarded as arising upon the old policy reissued for six tenths, with the provisions for paying further premiums stricken out. This was what the parties were entitled to.

Hay v. Star Fire Ins. Co. 77 N. Y. 235.

Where this has been done the courts have adopted these views.

Coules v. Cont. Life Ins. Co. 1 New Eng. Rep. 247. See also Bruce v. Cont. Life Ins. Co. 1 New Eng. Rep. 635.

In the latter case the court refused to follow or be bound by the earlier case in the same court of Patch v. Phoenix Mut. Life Ins. Co. 44 Vt. 481; S. C. 3 Big. Ins. R. 777, which, in an action at law on the policy, held contrary.

If the language will bear a different construction, or if it is ambiguous, the policy must nevertheless be construed against the right to forfeit it.

McMaster v. Ins. Co. of North America, 55 N.

*See Holman v. Continental Life Ins. Co. (Conn.), 2 New Eng. Rep. 838.

Y. 222; S. C. 3 Ins. L. J. 278; Griffey v. N. Y. Cent. Ins. Co. 100 N. Y. 417, 1 Cent. Rep. 528; Union Cent. Life Ins. Co. v. Pottker, 38 Ohio St. 459, 462. See also Helme v. Phila. Ins. Co. 61 Pa. 107; S. C. 1 Big. Ins. R. 685-8; Hull v. North West Mut. Ins. Co. 39 Wis. 897; Bliss, Life Ins. 2ded. § 186, pp. 292, 298, § 190, p. 802; White v. Hoyt, 78 N. Y. 605; Barlow v. Scott, 24 N. Y. 40; Thompson v. St. Louis Mut. Life Ins. Co. 52 Mo. 469; S. C. 2 Ins. L. Jour. 422; Bruce v. Continental Life Ins. Co. supra; Laws 1876, chap. 341; Laws, 1877, chap. 321; Laws, 1879, chap. 347.

The new policy was issued solely in compliance with the obligation created by the old one. The old policy has never been released, and there was neither a consideration for nor an assent to any change in its terms.

The penalty clause in the new one was nudum pactum.

Seybolt v. N. Y. L. E. & W. R. R. Co. 95 N. Y. 562; Vanderbilt v. Schreyer, 91 N. Y. 392; Cole v. Knick. Life Ins. Co. 63 How. Pr. 442.

The rights and obligations of both parties are to be determined by the dealings of the Company and the insured alone.

Baker v. Union Mut. Life Ins. Co. 43 N. Y. 288.

It was the insured who took the old policy to the Company to be exchanged for the new one. The Company did not call his attention to the proposed change. He never knew or understood that the penalty of forfeiture was in until after the Company failed. Nothing was said about forfeiture on either side, and he got the new policy by mail and put it in his safe without reading it.

It has been repeatedly held in such cases that such a forfeiture clause could not be enforced.

Ohde v. N. W. Mut. L. Ins. Co. 5 Big. Ins. R. 145; Little v. Same, Id. 187; S. C. 5 Ins. L. J. 149; Montgomery v. Phœnix Mut. L. Ins. Co. 8 Ins. L. J. 300.

Equity affords relief in such cases where a fraud has been practiced by one party and the other acted under a mistake.

Gillespie v. Moon, 2 Johns. Ch. 585; Wheeler v. Conn. Mut. Life Ins. Co. 82 N. Y. 543; Hay v. Star Fire Ins. Co. 77 N. Y. 236; Brink v. Hanover Fire Ins. Co. 80 N. Y. 108; Allen v. Ad-dington, 7 Wend. 9; S. C. on appeal, 11 Id. 374; Zabriskie v. Smith, 13 N. Y. 822, 831; Brown v. Montgomery, 20 N. Y. 287; Devos v. Brandt, 53 N. Y. 462; Welles v. Yates, 44 N. Y. 525, 528, 531; Albany City Sav. Inst. v. Burdick, 87 N. Y. 40; Barlow v. Scott, 24 N. Y. 40, 42, 43; Mathews v. Terwilliger, 3 Barb. 60.

The relief claimed was unjustly refused. There were no laches.

Albany City Sav. Inst. v. Burdick, 87 N. Y. 40-48; Phœnix Fire Ins. Co. v. Gurnee, 1 Paige, 278, 280; Barlow v. Scott, 24 N. Y. 40; DePeyster v. Hasbrouck, 11 N. Y. 582; Hay v. Star Fire Ins. Co. 77 N. Y. 235; Bidwell v. Astor Mut. Ins. Co. 16 N. Y. 263; Bartlett v. Judd, 21 N. Y. 200.

Messrs. Edward H. Hobbs and Leslie W. Russell, for respondent:

It is well settled that a provision as to the payment of interest on premium notes and avoiding the policy, if not paid, is valid and proper, and that in the absence of fraud or some special equity the court will not and may not relieve the claimant after he has broken his contract.

Atty-Gen. v. North America L. Ins. Co. 38 N. Y. 172, 189, 190; Roehner v. Knickerbocker L. Ins. Co. 68 N. Y. 160, 164.

The referee found fraud in the provisions of this new policy. The special term declined to adopt that finding. The report of the referee was not binding and was merely to inform the conscience of the court.

Marshall v. Meech, 51 N. Y. 140; Supreme Court Rule, 30.

No cause for the reformation of the contract is shown. In cases of mistake the proof thereof must be clear and unquestionable to warrant a reformation.

Bartholomew v. Mercantile Marine Ins. Co. 84 Hun, 263.

It must be so clear and convincing as to leave no room for doubt.

Mead v. Western Ins. Co. 64 N. Y. 453.

Andrews, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The words "Non-Forfeiture Policy" were conspicuously printed on the original policy. But a reference to the body of the policy shows that it was not intended to make the policy non-forfeitable, except in a limited sense. The assured was not relieved from the obligation to pay the premium annually, on the day specified. By the express terms of the contract an omission to pay the premium, on the day it became due, avoided the policy; but if at the time of such omission he had paid two or more premiums, the Company bound itself to issue a new policy for as many tenths of the original insurance as there had been premiums paid. This was the only sense in which the original policy was non-forfeitable. The assured would not lose all benefit from premiums paid, if the policy should become void by an omission to pay subsequent premiums. An omission to pay the premiums when due terminated the original contract; but the assured, if he had paid two or more premiums, would on a surrender of the policy be entitled to the substituted contract as provided.

In case of a breach of any of the conditions of the policy other than the omission to pay the premiums when due, the assured was in no way protected against an absolute forfeiture of the policy. It is claimed that the insertion in the new policy, of the clause of forfeiture for nonpayment of interest annually on the outstanding premium notes given for premiums on the old policy, was unauthorized by the terms of the original policy.

We think this claim is not well founded. The Company did not undertake to give a new policy free from all conditions. It was expressly provided that the new policy should be "subject to any notes that may have been received on account of premiums." The intention to impose upon the assured, in case a new policy should be issued, an obligation to pay the interest annually on premium notes outstanding is clearly shown by the further provision in the original policy, that the assured, to whom a new policy should be issued, was not to be subjected "to any subsequent charge except the interest annually on all premium notes remaining unpaid on this policy." If the premiums had been paid in cash, no further payment would have been necessary. If paid in part in notes, only the annual interest thereon would be required to be paid, and the principal would remain a charge on the policy, to be settled on the final liquidation.

It is true that the original policy did not provide for the insertion in the new policy of a clause of forfeiture for nonpayment of the interest. But it was made forfeitable on the nonpayment of the premiums at the day, with a provision for a substituted contract, and it was also subject to forfeiture for breaches of other conditions. Causes of forfeiture were contemplated. The new contract was to be made subject to the payment by the assured of annual interest on the outstanding notes, and the right of the Company to insert a clause of forfeiture as a means of enforcing this obligation and of protecting the Company against the accumulation of unpaid interest was, we think, implied.

The successful prosecution of the business of life insurance requires prompt payment by policy holders of their obligations. "It is on this basis that they are enabled to offer assurance at the favorable rates they do. Forfeiture for nonpayment is a necessary means of protecting themselves from embarrassment." Bradley, J., N. Y. Life Ins. Co. v. Statham, 93 U. S. 30 [Bk. 23, L. ed. 791].

The policy of following breaches of conditions by forfeiture was indicated in the original policy, and the fair construction of the agreement to give a new policy subject to the annual payment of interest on outstanding notes, authorized the insertion in the new policy of the usual provision of forfeiture on nonpayment.

We are of opinion that the new policy conformed to the agreement in the original policy, and it is therefore unnecessary to determine whether the claimant could be permitted, after having accepted the policy and held it for years without objection, to now insist that the forfeiture clause was inserted without authority, and excuse himself on the ground that he did not know of its existence until after the insolvency of the Company.

The cases of Conley v. Continental Life Ins. Co., decided by the Supreme Court of New Hampshire [1 New Eng. Rep. 247], and of Bruce v. Same Company, decided by the Supreme Court of Vermont [1 New Eng. Rep. 635], involved the construction of clauses in original policies dissimilar to those in question. The clauses considered in those cases, so far as the reports show, did not provide that the new policy should be subject to the payment by the assured of annual interest on the outstanding notes.

The order should be affirmed.
All concur.

Jennie E. GARDINIER, Admrx., Respnt.,
v.

NEW YORK CENTRAL & HUDSON RIVER R. R. CO., Appt.

In an action to recover damages from a railroad company for the death of a person found mortally injured on the track, under a highway bridge built by the company and which it was required to maintain, the negligence of the company was alleged to consist in the unsafe condition of the approach to the bridge; there was, however, no evidence that the deceased was on the bridge or was seen going in that direction before his injury. Held, that there was nothing to connect the injury with the condition of the bridge or with the failure of the company to perform its duty to restore the highway to a proper state or to make the passage of the bridge safe, and hence, that a verdict against the company could not be sustained.

(Decided November 23, 1886.)

APPEAL from a judgment of the Supreme Court at General Term in the Third Department, affirming a judgment of the Montgomery Circuit, on a verdict in favor of plaintiff in an action to recover damages for negligently causing the death of plaintiff's intestate. Reversed.

Memorandum of decision below, 86 Hun, 647.

The complaint alleged "That at the Village of Fonda, in the County of Montgomery, at a point where the public highway, leading from Fultonville to Fonda, and between the Mohawk River and the Mohawk Turnpike, crosses the railway track of defendant, is a bridge, erected and maintained by defendant, for the purpose of and for the use of the traveling public, crossing defendant's railway track over the same upon said highway, and which said bridge it was the duty of the defendant to keep, maintain and have, for the use of the public to travel, in a safe and proper condition, properly protected and guarded, for the safe passage of all persons desiring to cross the same; that the span of said bridge, crossing over said railway track, rests at either end thereof upon stone abutments raised from the level of said railway track, nearly perpendicular or vertical, to a height sufficient to admit of the engines of defendant to pass under said bridge, at least from ten to twenty feet high; that the width of said span of said bridge is less than the full width of said highway, so that in the approach to said bridge, upon said highway, on either side thereof, where said highway meets the floor of said bridge, there is a space of several feet between the corner of the bridge and the side of said highway, and a wing wall, nearly perpendicular, extending either way from the floor of said bridge; that at the northwest corner of said bridge, at the time hereinafter stated, the defendant carelessly and negligently left said wing wall, for several feet where the said highway approached said bridge, without any proper or sufficient guard fence or railing to prevent persons approaching said bridge from falling over said wall, and down towards and upon said railway track, and left the same, and carelessly and negligently permitted the same to remain in an unsafe, unguarded and dangerous condition."

The complaint further stated, "upon information and belief, that the plaintiff's intestate, John H. Gardinier, deceased, in his lifetime and on the 17th day of December, in the year 1881, in the evening of said day, was at Fonda, in said county, and started to go from said Village of Fonda, by the way of said highway and bridge, to Fultonville, where he resided, and in attempting to approach and cross said bridge, in the night time, did, without any want of care and without any fault or negligence on his part, accidentally walk over and fall over said wall of said bridge, down to and upon the stone, iron and earth below, whereby he was injured, in his person, insomuch that from said injury he died, and his death was caused solely by the injuries received in said fall; and said fall and injury was caused solely by the negligence and carelessness of defendant in keeping said abutment and wing wall unguarded, and unprotected, and in such unsafe and dangerous condition."

The question presented on appeal and the evidence bearing thereon are stated in the opinion.

Mr. C. D. Prescott, for appellant:

There was no sufficient legal evidence that the defendant was guilty of negligence that would authorize a recovery. Negligence is an affirmative fact, and must be proved by the plaintiff. It must be made to appear from the plaintiff's case, that the defendant's negligence alone caused the injury.

Holbrook v. Utica, etc. R. R. Co. 12 N. Y. 236; Johnson v. Hudson River R. R. Co. 20 N. Y. 71; Ernst v. Hudson River R. R. Co. 39 N. Y. 66; Kelsey v. Jewett, 28 Hun, 52; Held v. N. Y. C. & H. R. R. Co. 12 N. Y. Week. Dig. 168; Lamb v. Camden & A. R. Co. 46 N. Y. 271; Heinemann v. Heard, 62 N. Y. 448.

There was no evidence that the plaintiff's intestate was free from negligence. To entitle plaintiff to recover, it must appear that there was no negligence on the part of the plaintiff's intestate that in the slightest degree contributed to the injury.

Shearm. & Redf. Neg. pp. 23-26, chap. 3, § 25; Wilds v. Hudson River R. R. Co. 24 N. Y. 480; Cordell v. N. Y. Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 75 N. Y. 332; Hale v. Smith, 78 N. Y. 488; Reynolds v. N. Y. Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 58 N. Y. 248; Gaynor v. Old Colony, etc. R. Co. 100 Mass. 208; Murphy v. Deane, 101 Mass. 466; Park v. O'Brien, 23 Conn. 339; Glendening v. Sharp, 22 Hun, 78; Schappert v. Ringler, 18 Jones & S. (45 N. Y. Superior Rep.) 345; Becht v. Corbin, 92 N. Y. 658; Tolman v. Syracuse, etc. R. R. Co. 98 N. Y. 198.

Mr. R. B. Fish, for respondent:

The defendant was negligent in leaving the place in question in so unguarded and unsafe a condition. Its liability to maintain, keep in repair and in a safe condition, the bridge in question, together with its approaches, was not disputed on the trial, and under the facts proved it could not be successfully disputed.

People v. N. Y. Cent. etc. R. R. Co. 74 N. Y. 302; Gale v. Same, 76 N. Y. 594; Hayes v. Same, 9 Hun, 63; Morrell v. Peck, 88 N. Y. 398.

The approaches to the bridge are part thereof, and the same duty is imposed to repair and maintain them as exists in regard to the bridge itself.

Hayes v. N. Y. Cent. etc. R. R. Co. supra.

The traveler ordinarily may presume all parts of the highway safe; and even when he may have noticed a defect he is not chargeable with negligence because he fails to have it at all times in mind.

Weed v. Village of Ballston Spa. 76 N. Y. 329.

The plaintiff's case is fully sustained by Johnson v. Hud. Riv. R. R. Co. 20 N. Y. 65.

See also Hart v. Hud. Riv. B. Co. 80 N. Y. 622; Jones v. N. Y. Cent. & Hud. Riv. R. R. Co. 28 Hun, 864, affirmed without opinion, 92 N. Y. 628; Dorland v. N. Y. Cent. & Hud. Riv. R. Co. 19 N. Y. Week. Dig. 76.

Danforth, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

We have evidence from one side only, and on that it is not difficult to find that the defendant failed in its duty to restore the highway across which its track was constructed, to such a state as not unnecessarily to have impaired its usefulness, or to make the passage to its bridge safe for the public. But we do not discover from the record or the argument of counsel that plaintiff's intestate was affected by its negligence, or that his injuries were caused by any default on its part.

The complaint states that he was on the evening of the 17th of December, 1881, at Fonda, "and started to go from thence to Fultonville where he resided, and in attempting to approach and cross the bridge in the night time, fell over the wing wall of the bridge and was killed."

The evidence shows that he was found between eleven and twelve o'clock of the night of that day, lying on the track under and near the bridge, badly hurt. The physician who was soon in attendance discovered slight, superficial scalp wounds, no broken bones, but "he was suffering from shock concussion," and from this cause soon after died. He was hardly able to make a sound, soon became unable to speak, and gave no explanation of the circumstances which led to his condition. The same witness testified that the injury was such as might have been caused by falling from the abutment of the bridge on the railroad track or from a car or by a blow, "but the probability was, from the general condition of the man, that it was a fall."

It is evident that the jury supplied an important but unproven fact by mere surmise, and not on inference. They assumed that the deceased was at the wing wall going towards, or was on the bridge when the accident occurred. But of this there is no evidence. He was not seen at the bridge, or upon or at its approaches. The record does not show that he was during the evening even going towards the bridge or his home, which lay beyond the bridge, or that he was intending to do so. There was literally no evidence to show how the deceased came to the place where he was found. He was seen at the Montgomery Hotel in Fonda, between five and six o'clock in the afternoon; at eight or half past eight he was at Snell's Hotel, in Fonda, "which," the witness says, "was on the road going from Fonda to Fultonville, by the street railroad." Another witness says: "About eight or half past eight, I saw him up street in the Village of Fonda. * * * I saw him go down street toward the Montgomery Hotel." And on the same evening about a quarter before nine, he was seen "at the meat market at Fonda." Nothing more appears as to the whereabouts or the intentions of the deceased on the evening or night of his death.

We find therefore that the appellant's counsel is right in the assertion that there is no evidence that the deceased was "on the bridge that night, or that he was seen going in that direction." It could therefore only be conjectured that the intestate was upon the wall or bridge, but there was no basis in the evidence to support the conclusion, and without that fact established, the condition of the bridge becomes unimportant.

The judgment appealed from should therefore be reversed, and a new trial granted, with costs to abide the event.

All concur.

PEOPLE of the State of New York, Respts.,
v.

Charles A. BUDDENSIEK, Appt.

1. An indictment under sections 198 and 195 of the Penal Code, charging manslaughter in causing the death of a human being, by culpable negligence in the construction of a building, held good.
2. Where one summoned as a juror on the trial of such indictment said, on his examination as to his qualifications, that he had read about the occurrence in the newspapers, but had formed no opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant, but was of opinion from what he had read that the catastrophe was the result of culpable negligence on the part of someone, and that it would require evidence to remove the impression; and another juror said that from reading the newspapers he had formed an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant which it would require evidence to remove, but each also testified that he could nevertheless render an impartial verdict on the evidence—challenges on the ground of bias were properly overruled.
3. A piece of brick and mortar from the fallen wall of the alleged defective building was properly admitted in evidence, as confirming the opinion of a competent witness as to the quality of the mortar and to enable the jurors to understand the difference in effect between the mortar used by the defendant and that properly prepared.
4. The rule that a new trial ought not to be granted even where an exception is well taken, unless the jury could draw from evidence admitted under it, some unfavorable inference, nor when the party excepting has by his own course of examination destroyed the force of his objection—applied to the admission of "unsafe reports" made by the official examiner in the course of construction of the building.
5. Photographs, proved to be accurate representations of an actual scene, are admissible in evidence, as appropriate aids to the jury in applying the evidence, whether it relates to persons, things or places.

6. Alleged errors in the charge are not open to review unless excepted to at the trial. A stipulation by counsel "that a general exception should give the defendant the benefit of a particular exception to any part of the charge" will not avail.

(Decided November 23, 1886.)

A PPEAL from a judgment of the Supreme Court at General Term in the First Department, affirming a judgment of the Court of General Sessions of the Peace, on conviction of defendant of manslaughter in the second degree. Affirmed.

Memorandum of decision below, 40 Hun, 640.

The indictment in the case is as follows:

"The Grand Jury of the City and County of New York, by this indictment, accuse Charles A. Buddensiek, Charles Franck, Thomas W. Dailey, whose real Christian name is to the grand jury aforesaid unknown, and Robert V. Mackey, of the crime of manslaughter, committed as follows:

"Heretofore and prior to the thirteenth day of April, in the year of our Lord 1885, the said Charles A. Buddensiek and Charles Franck each late of the City and County of New York, aforesaid, did erect and construct and cause and procure to be erected and constructed, and did act and assist and were concerned in the erection and construction of a certain building within the said city and county, the same being designed and intended to be used and occupied upon its completion by human beings for dwelling purposes, they, the said Charles A. Buddensiek and Charles Franck, at the time of the erecting and constructing of the said building having the entire care, charge and control and supervision of the same. And the said Charles A. Buddensiek and Charles Franck, so having the entire care, charge, control and supervision of the constructing and erecting of the said building, it thereupon became and was their duty, at the time of such erection and construction and until the said building should be completed, to cause the walls thereof to be properly bonded and solidly put together, and to be built to a line, and be carried up plumb and straight with close joints; and to cause all joints in the said walls to be well filled with mortar of good quality, and to cause mortar of good quality to be used in the construction of the said walls, in order that the same should be properly and solidly put together; and to cause bricks, stones, iron work, planks, timbers, beams, boards and materials of good quality and of sufficient strength, to be used in the construction of the said building; and to prevent from being used in such construction any bricks, stones, iron work, planks, timbers, beams, boards or other materials which were not of good quality and of sufficient strength; and to use and exercise every care and precaution in their power to render the said building and every part thereof safe and secure, as well during its construction as upon the completion of the same.

"And the said Charles A. Buddensiek and Charles Franck, well knowing the premises, but being wholly unmindful and neglectful of their duty in that behalf, at the time of the erection and construction of the said building, and on divers days and times up to the said thirteenth day of April, in the year aforesaid, at the city and county aforesaid, did feloniously and willfully neglect and omit to cause the walls of the said building to be properly bonded and solidly put together, and to be built to a line and carried up plumb and straight with close joints; and did then and there willfully and feloniously neglect and omit to cause the joints in the said walls to be well filled with mortar of good quality; and did then and there willfully and feloniously neglect and omit to cause proper mortar to be used in the construction of the said walls; and did then and there willfully and feloniously neglect and omit to cause bricks, stones, iron work, planks, timbers, beams, boards and materials of good quality and of sufficient strength to be used in the construction of the said building; and did then and there willfully and feloniously neglect and omit to prevent from being used in such construction divers bricks, stones, iron work, planks, timbers, beams, boards and other materials which were not of good quality nor of sufficient strength, and did then and there willfully and feloniously neglect and omit to use and exercise every care and precaution in their power to render the said building and every part thereof safe and secure during its construction and upon the completion thereof; and the said Charles A. Buddensiek and Charles Franck, on the days and times aforesaid, at the city and county aforesaid, did then and there willfully and feloniously cause, suffer and permit the walls of the said building to be improperly bonded, and loosely and flimsily put together; and did then and there willfully and feloniously cause, suffer and permit mortar of a grossly poor and inferior quality, and mortar chiefly composed of loam to be used in the construction of the said walls; and did then and there willfully and feloniously cause, suffer and permit divers bricks, stones, planks, beams, timbers, iron work and other materials of poor quality and insufficient strength to be used in the construction of the said building.

"In consequence of which said most culpable negligence, acts and omissions on the part of them, the said Charles A. Buddensiek and Charles Franck, the said building afterwards, to wit: on the said thirteenth day of April, in the year aforesaid, did fall to the ground there. And the said Charles A. Buddensiek and Charles Franck, by the falling of the said building in manner aforesaid, on the day and in the year aforesaid, at the city and county aforesaid, with force and arms, in and upon the body of one Louis Walters, in the peace of the People of the State of New York, then and there being in the said building before and at the time of the falling of the same, willfully and feloniously did make an assault and him, the said Louis Walters, down upon and against the bricks, stones, planks, timbers, beams, iron work and other component parts of the said building did then and there, with great force and violence, willfully and feloniously cast and throw, thereby giving unto him, the said Louis Walters, then and there, in and upon the head, neck, breast, belly, back, sides and other parts of the body of him, the said Louis Walters, divers mortal bruises and contusions, of which said mortal bruises and contusions he, the said Louis Walters, from the said thirteenth day of April, in the year aforesaid, until the fourteenth day of April, in the same year aforesaid, at the city and county aforesaid, did languish, and languishing did live, on which said fourteenth day of April, in the year aforesaid, the said Louis Walters, at the city and county aforesaid, of the said mortal bruises and contusions, died.

"And the said Thomas W. Dailey and Robert V. Mackey, each late of the city and county aforesaid, at the time of the committing of the felony and manslaughter aforesaid, in manner and form aforesaid, at the city and county aforesaid, were then and there willfully and feloniously concerned in the commission of the same, and did then and there willfully and feloniously aid and abet in the commission of the said felony and manslaughter.

"And so the grand jury aforesaid do say that the said Charles A. Buddensiek, Charles Franck, Thomas W. Dailey and Robert V. Mackey, him, the said Louis Walters, in manner and form aforesaid, and by the means aforesaid, willfully and feloniously did kill and slay; against the form of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace of the People of the State of New York and their dignity."

The questions presented are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Richard S. Newcombe, William F. Howe and A. H. Hummel, for appellant:

I. An indictment must allege the place where the offense was committed, with such directness that the judgment thereon rendered may be pleaded in bar to any second indictment for same offense.

State v. Cotton, 24 N. H. 144; McBride v. State, 10 Humph. 615.

The allegation in the indictment that "he feloniously and willfully neglected to use," etc. is in excess of the requirements of the Code. It is well settled that the duty imposed in such cases is the exercise of such care as a prudent man would ordinarily take under the circumstances; he need not exercise "every care and precaution within his power."

Gerlach v. Edelmeier, 15 Jones & S. 296.

The indictment should not be contra formam statuti.

State v. Casey, 45 Maine, 435; Penal Code, § 718, subd. 1.

The indictment is fatally defective in regard to the times alleged as to the commission of the offense. It charges the offense to have been committed "on divers days and times" up to the said 13th day of April, 1885.

State v. Ingalls, 59 N. H. 88.

Time and place must be stated with certainty. When an averment as to time and place is uncertain the indictment is bad.

People v. Stocking, 50 Barb. 573; State v. Munson, 40 Conn. 475; 2 Green, Crim. Rep. 493; Jane v. State, 3 Mo. 61; Cowley v. People, 83 N. Y. 464.

The indictment charges more than one crime in violation of section 278 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Each of the acts of negligence therein specified may have been the means of the crime itself. It should therefore have been charged in separate counts.

Code Crim. Proc. § 279; Rosekrans v. People, 5 Thomp. & Cook, 487; Harris v. People, 6 Thomp. & Cook, 206.

State v. Leavitt (N. H.) 1 New Eng. Rep. 289, holds that an averment which charges the sale of intoxicating liquor in language equally applicable to the offense discussed in General Laws, chap. 109, § 13, and that described in section 15 of the same chapter, is insufficient.

See also State v. Messenger, 58 N. H. 348; State v. Sherburne, 58 N. H. 159; State v. Narramore, 58 N. H. 273, 275; State v. Adams, 51 N. H. 568.

In criminal pleadings there can be no joining of separate and distinct offenses in one and the same count.

See State v. Weil, 89 Ind. 286.

The indictment does not charge any association with or presence of the two defendants, Dailey and Mackey, and the other defendants therein, at any time and in any connection with the commission of the offense charged. Their joint connection is not in any way indicated.

See Elliot v. State, 26 Ala. 78.

II. The ruling of the court on defendant's challenges to the three jurors was erroneous.

One who has formed an opinion from the reading or report of the testimony against the prisoner on a former trial, however strong his belief and purpose to decide on the evidence and give an unbiased verdict, cannot be readily received.

Greenfield v. People, 74 N. Y. 277. See also Stokes v. People, 53 N. Y. 164; People v. Casey, 96 N. Y. 116; People v. Tyrrell, 8 N. Y. Crim. Rep. 142; Rogers v. Rogers, 14 Wend. 182; Jackson v. Commonwealth, 23 Gratt. 919; Freeman v. People, 4 Denio, 9; Loewenberg v. People, 5 Park. 419; Sanchez v. People, 22 N. Y. 147; Scranton v. Stewart, 52 Ind. 68; Lycoming Fire Ins. Co. v. Ward, 90 Ill. 545; Smith v. Eames, 3 Scam. 76; Union Gold Mining Co. v. Rocky Mountain Nat. Bank, 2 Col. 565, 567; S. C. 96 U. S. 640 (Bk. 24, L. ed. 648); Conway v. Clinton, 1 Utah, 215.

In the above cases, it will be observed, the decision of the triers on challenges for favor was final. All challenges are now tried by the court.

Code Crim. Proc. § 382. See also Thomas v. People, 67 N. Y. 218.

Now the decision of the court is subject to review.

Dew v. McDivitt, 17 Am. Law Reg. N. S. 621; 31 Ohio St. 139, 142.

Hence the cases above cited no longer apply to the existing laws on this subject.

It is a ground of challenge to favor, in an action for libel on the manager of an opera and involving an examination of the conduct of the manager, that a juror declares himself opposed to theatrical representations or performances.

See Maretzek v. Cauldwell, 5 Robt. 660; S. C. 2 Abb. Pr. N. S. 407.

A juror, challenged for favor, should be rejected unless the triers find that he stands impartial and indifferent.

See Smith v. Floyd, 18 Barb. 522; Maretzek v. Cauldwell, supra.

N. Y.

If there is a doubt concerning his indifference he should be rejected.

Smith v. Floyd, supra; Freeman v. People, 4 Denio, 85.

The court erred in overruling the challenge to the juror Weil, who had an opinion as to the defendant's guilt which he would require evidence to remove, but who said he could, he believed, render an impartial verdict.

Oliver v. State, 11 Neb. 1; People v. Casey, 96 N. Y. 115.

III. The admission in evidence of the specimen of brick and mortar exhibited to the jury by the witness D'Oench, and his testimony regarding it, against defendant's objection and exception, was error. The specimen objected to was probably introduced so that the witness and the jury might compare it with the samples from the fallen buildings. But such comparison is not warranted either by principle or precedent.

People v. Muller, 32 Hun, 209, 213; affd. 96 N. Y. 408; Kelley v. Michigan Cent. R. R. Co. 28 Hun, 480; Walworth v. Barron, 54 Vt. 677; Odiorne v. Winkley, 2 Gall. 51; Peach v. Utica, 10 Hun, 477; People v. Carney, 29 Hun, 47; Petrie v. Howe, 4 Thomp. & C. 85.

Questions of value of property, services, etc., are closely analogous to the issue as to quality of work in this case; but such questions are not to be determined by comparison with collateral matters.

Siegel v. Lewis, 54 N. Y. 651; Gouge v. Roberts, 53 N. Y. 619; Dolan v. Etna Ins. Co. 22 Hun, 396; Blanchard v. New Jersey Steamboat Co. 59 N. Y. 292; Color Printing Attachment Co. v. Brown, 5 Jones & S. 433.

Upon questions of the genuineness of handwriting comparison of disputed with genuine writings is allowed; but under very close restrictions, and only with prescribed standards.

Laws 1880, p. 141, chap. 36; Peck v. Callaghan, 95 N. Y. 78; Miles v. Loomis, 75 N. Y. 288, 292; Van Wyck v. McIntosh, 14 N. Y. 439; Randolph v. Loughlin, 48 N. Y. 456; Dubois v. Baker, 80 N. Y. 355, 361; Moore v. United States, 91 U. S. 270 (Bk. 23, L. ed. 846); Doe v. Newton, 5 Adol. & El. 514; Doe v. Suckermore, 5 Adol. & El. 703; Jackson v. Phillips, 6 Cowen, 94, 112.

When comparison is permitted, the genuineness of the standard admitted for that purpose must be shown beyond question. Even under the Act of 1880, the writing offered must be "proved to the satisfaction of the court to be genuine."

Laws 1880, p. 141, chap. 36; Peck v. Callaghan, 95 N. Y. 78.

The witness, whatever his qualifications as an expert upon the subject in general, had not sufficient knowledge of the immediate subject matter of the comparison to qualify himself to testify as an expert and express an opinion thereon. Such opinion, founded upon testimony of other witnesses or upon anything less than previous knowledge of the expert himself, is incompetent, unless given upon a hypothetical state of facts.

People v. Lake, 12 N. Y. 258; Carpenter v. Blake, 2 Lans. 206; Reynolds v. Robinson, 64 N. Y. 539; Guiterman v. Liverpool, New York & Philadelphia Steamship Co. 83 N. Y. 358; Allison v. Scheeper, 9 Daly, 365.

Even an expert in handwriting was held incompetent to testify from an immediate comparison of hands made by him at the trial without adequate knowledge previously acquired by the handwriting of the party.

Doe v. Suckermore, 5 Adol. & El. 703; Hynes v. McDermott, 82 N. Y. 41, 48.

And if the knowledge of the witness is derived from specimens, although genuine, which have been selected by the party calling the witness, or by the witness himself, to enable him to qualify himself to testify, his testimony cannot be received.

Hynes v. McDermott, 82 N. Y. 41, 52; Stranger v. Searle, 1 Esp. 14; Fitzwalter Peerage Case, 10 Cl. & F. 193; Tome v. Parkersburg R. R. Co. 39 Md. 36.

The admission in evidence of the "Weekly Reports" of the condition of the buildings and the testimony of the witness D'Oench in regard to them was also error. These reports were not evidence as against the defendant for any purpose.

Swift v. State, 89 N. Y. 52.

These reports were not admissible as evidence of the facts stated in them. They were not records required by law to be kept, and kept accordingly by a public officer in the discharge of his duty.

Brennan v. Mayor, 62 N. Y. 365, 369; Erwin v. Neversink Steamboat Co. 88 N. Y. 184-192.

When objection to the competency of evidence arises upon the examination of a witness, the objector has a right to interpose with a cross examination upon the facts material to the question of competency.

First Nat. Bank of Easton v. Wirebach, 14 Rep. 606.

Expert witness; held error to refuse such preliminary cross examination.

Trussell v. Scarlett, 18 Fed. Rep. 217, note; Abb. Trial Brief, pp. 55, 56; Commonwealth v. Howe, 9 Gray, 110.

It is not possible for the court to say in any case that the evidence for the prosecution, illegally admitted, such as that objected to here, had no effect upon the minds of the jury and did not contribute to a conviction. Technical errors in other respects may be shown not to have affected any substantial right; but error in the admission of illegal evidence cannot be disregarded on that ground, since it cannot be shown that the jury disregarded the illegal evidence admitted.

Boland v. People, 19 Hun, 80; Lambert v. People, 76 N. Y. 220, 229; 6 Abb. N. C. 181, 192; Petrie v. Howe, 4 Thomp. & C. 85; 19 Hun, 88; Foote v. Beecher, 78 N. Y. 155, 158; N. Y. Guaranty & Indemnity Co. v. Gleason, 78 N. Y. 503, 514, 515; Baird v. Gillett, 47 N. Y. 186; Betz v. Davis, 13 N. Y. Week. Dig. 547; Anderson v. Rome, W. & O. R. R. Co. 54 N. Y. 334. See Ayers v. Water Comrs. 22 Hun, 297 and cases cited; Waring v. U. S. Tel. Co. 4 Daly, 233; 36 N. Y. 639; 35 N. Y. 49; People v. Gonzalez, 35 N. Y. 49; Coleman v. People, 58 N. Y. 555, 561; Ray v. Smith, 2 Hun, 597 and cases cited.

It is a humane principle of the law that a prisoner shall have the benefit not only of doubts upon the fact, but doubts also upon the law.

Lambert v. People, 76 N. Y. 220.

The admission in evidence of the photographs taken by the witness Chandler, against defendant's objection, was error.

Code Crim. Proc. § 411.

Photographs at best, are but the secondary evidence, mere "hearsay of the sun;" and when the lack of better evidence compels a resort to them, the correctness of the photographic copies offered must be shown by proof that the process of taking them was conducted with skill and under favorable circumstances, as well as that the result has been a fair resemblance of the object.

Taylor Will Case, 10 Abb. Pr. N. S. 300, 318; Hynes v. McDermott, 82 N. Y. 41, 50; Cowley v. People, 83 N. Y. 464, 478.

On the trial of an issue involving the condition, appearance or identity of a person, place or thing at a previous time, a photograph at the time in question is competent upon proper evidence of its fidelity.

Ruloff's Case, 11 Abb. Pr. N. S. 245; Cozzens v. Higgins, 1 Abb. Ct. App. Dec. 451; Cowley v. People, 83 N. Y. 478.

In all cases photographs have only been competent when they represented the condition of the article at the time involved in the issue. Photographs have never been allowed as competent evidence when the article itself could be seen in the same condition as represented by the photograph.

Cowley v. People, 83 N. Y. 478; Hynes v. McDermott, 82 N. Y. 41, 48-51; Taylor Will Case, 10 Abb. Pr. N. S. 300, 317; Marcey v. Barnes, 16 Gray, 161; Cozzens v. Higgins, 1 Abb. Ct. App. Dec. 451.

Messrs. Randolph B. Martine, Dist. Atty., and DeLancey Nicoll, Asst. Dist. Atty., for respondents:

The opinion that the fall of the buildings was attributable to someone's negligence did not disqualify the jurors Bloom and Meyer, for they both stated that they had no opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant.

Hagadorn v. Conn. Mut. Life Ins. Co. 22 Hun, 249; Louvenberg v. People, 27 N. Y. 336; Dew v. McDixitt, 31 Ohio St. 139; Carpenter v. People, 4 N. Y. Cr. Rep. 39.

They were qualified persons to serve as jurors in the case, upon the authority of People v. Casey, 96 N. Y. 115; People v. Crowley, 4 N. Y. Crim. Rep. 168, 2 Cent. Rep. 896; People v. Carpenter, 4 N. Y. Crim. Rep. 177, 3 Cent. Rep. 179.

The admission in evidence and exhibition to the jury of a piece of brick and mortar, which the expert witness D'Oench claimed to be good brick and mortar, was not error.

Steph. Dig. art. 50, Chase, ed. p. 107; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 52; Scattergood v. Wood, 79 N. Y. 263; Eidt v. Cutter, 127 Mass. 522; Booth v. Cleveland Rolling Mill Co. 74 N. Y. 15.

The papers "unsafe reports" admitted in evidence upon the redirect examination of the witness D'Oench were properly received.

It is the rule in this State that the cross examination must be limited to the matters stated in the examination in chief. If the party cross examining inquires as to new matter he makes the witness so far his own.

People v. Oyer and Terminer, 83 N. Y. 436.

The principle that the introduction by one party of part of the evidence upon which a conclusion of a witness rests, as part of a series of writings relating to the same subject, entitles the other party to give in evidence so much of the remainder as tends to explain or to qualify, to rebut or to destroy, the part which has been received, is an elementary principle which is recognized by the following authorities:

Phill. Ev. 4th Am. ed. from 10th Eng. ed. p. 416; Prince v. Samo, 7 Adol. & Ell. 627; Rouse v. White, 25 N. Y. 170; Gildersleeve v. Landon, 73 N. Y. 609; Grattan v. Met. Life Ins. Co. 92 N. Y. 274.

The photographs of part of one of the walls, showing a great crack therein from different points of view, were competent.

Cowley v. People, 88 N. Y. 476.

Danforth, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellant draws in question: 1, the sufficiency of the indictment; 2, the competency of jurors; 3, the rulings of the learned recorder upon questions of evidence; 4, his charge and his refusals to charge as requested by the prisoner's counsel, and he does so upon propositions which appear to have been presented to the learned judges at general term, and by them so fully considered and answered as to make it apparent that a different result would have been little better than a miscarriage of justice.

The indictment is under title IX, chap. 2, section 193, subd. 3, and section 195 of the Penal Code, and in substance charges that the prisoner by certain culpable negligence, acts and omissions in the selection and use of materials for and in the construction of a certain building which he was erecting in the City and County of New York, and which acts are specified, killed and occasioned the death of one Walters.

One crime only is alleged: manslaughter in the second degree. Both sections of the Code above referred to define a number of unlawful acts, including those set out in the indictment, as constituting that crime. The case comes within those sections, and the form of the indictment is in substantial, if not literal, compliance with the provisions of section 284 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Neither time, place nor circumstance was omitted. The time was stated to be the 18th of April and days prior thereto during the erection of the buildings, the place within the jurisdiction of the court, and the circumstances those enumerated in the statute as constituting the offense. We discover no imperfection therefore in it, either in form or substance; and those alleged against it by the appellant, if not wholly unfounded do in no respect tend to his prejudice, so far as substantial rights upon the merits are concerned, and hence, they cannot affect either the indictment or judgment. Code Civ. Proc. § 285.

It follows that the trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion in arrest of judgment. Upon such a motion only two objections are available: 1, to the jurisdiction of the court over the subject of the indictment; 2, that the facts stated do not constitute a crime. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 467, 331.

The first was not presented to the trial court, nor are either now relied upon. The other objections are unimportant on such a motion.

It is next argued that the trial court erred in overruling the challenges to three jurors: 1, John Bloom, on examination by the district attorney, testified that he knew of no reason why, if sworn upon the jury, he could not render an impartial verdict upon the evidence; and in answer to the prisoner's counsel he said that he had read in the newspapers about the occurrence in question, but had formed no opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the prisoner; that his mind was free from any impression in regard thereto or the charge contained in the indictment, but was of the opinion from what he had read that the catastrophe was the result of culpable negligence on the part of some one, and that it would require evidence to remove the impression; 2, the condition of Meyer's mind was disclosed in substantially the same way, while 3, Weil said that from reading the papers he had formed an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant, which it would require evidence to remove.

The challenge was upon the ground of actual bias existing in the minds of those proposed jurors, but each also testified in substance that he could nevertheless go into the jury box and render an impartial verdict upon the evidence submitted from the witness stand, without being influenced by the opinion or impression derived or formed from what he had read. There remained therefore no sufficient ground of challenge or reason why the trial court could not, in the exercise of a sound discretion, determine that these several persons could try the issue impartially and without prejudice to the substantial rights of the party challenging. They were therefore competent within the letter of the Code of Criminal Procedure relating to such questions, and the defendant's objections were properly overruled. People v. Otto, 101 N. Y. 690, 2 Cent. Rep. 899; People v. Crowley, 102 N. Y. 234, 2 Cent. Rep. 896; People v. Carpenter, 102 N. Y. 238, 3 Cent. Rep. 179.

There are many exceptions to evidence. The first noticed by the appellant relates to the admission in evidence of a piece of brick and mortar produced by the witness D'Oench. He was Inspector of Buildings for the Fire Department and testified as to the condition of the fallen wall, its want of solidity, the materials of which it had been constructed, and among other things produced in evidence specimens of the mortar taken from the buildings, some of it from between two bricks, part of the fallen walls.

The case of the People turned in part upon the inferior quality of the materials, and anything to show how they in fact differed in their characteristics from good, sufficient and suitable substances in general and approved use for like purposes, was competent. That the mortar in fact used by the defendant in the construction of the walls was of "a poor and inferior quality and chiefly composed of loam" was a distinct and important allegation. That it is the admixture of clear grit, sharp sand with lime, which gives it the character of cement, was proven. That the last is binding while the other is not; that bricks laid with mortar of lime and sand will resist the influence of the rain, while a composition of lime and loam will be washed out, was established so far as it could be by opinion and the result of observation and experience. The testimony came from one qualified to speak upon that subject, but the conditions illustrated by the various specimens of mortar, and mortar and bricks taken from the ruins, and the specimen from another building, were some evidence of the truth of his assertion, and they could properly be received, not only as confirming his opinion but to enable the jurors the better to understand and appreciate the difference in effect between the mortar used by the defendant and that properly prepared. That one was strong and solid, the brick firmly imbedded in the mortar, and the other disjointed and with no coherence, was some evidence that the differences pointed out were substantial.

The evidence as to the quality and component parts of the mortar used by the defendant was indispensable as part of the accusation; and the evidence, as to the proper ingredients, of mortar used by others and in other buildings, and its quality and effect, was not less competent as tending to show the cause of the falling of the walls. The defendant's mortar the expert pronounced bad, the other good. The object of using the mortar was the same in both cases; the specimens tended to prove the truth of his assertion. Indeed, the argument of the appellant goes to the weight of the evidence, rather than to its admissibility. The learned counsel states that if the witnesses had explained and pointed out the difference between the two specimens, the reason why one was good and the other bad, "the specimens might have been shown to the jury as illustrating the testimony of the witnesses." If there was any lack of such testimony, and it seems to us there was not, it would only show that further use might have been made of the pieces of brick and mortar, but would in nowise support the general objection that their exhibition to the jury was "incompetent or inadmissible for any purpose." The cases cited by the appellant upon this branch of the case have been examined, but we find none in point.

During the cross examination of this witness (D'Oench) at the request of defendant's counsel, he stated that he superintended the general work of the office of inspectors of buildings, and that official examiners were his subordinates, and their duty, to make reports among other things of the condition of buildings, the violation of building laws, and unsafe buildings, and also if improper materials were used in construction to notify him; that they did report the buildings in question as unsafe. He was then asked by defendant's counsel: "What are those reports you have in your hands?" and answered: "'Unsafe reports' in reference to those buildings." They bore date January, 1885, and were read in evidence as defendant's exhibit No. 1. Five other reports relating to buildings adjoining that mentioned in exhibit No. 1 were upon like request received in evidence and marked defendant's exhibits Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6, showing the buildings at the time of the reports to be unsafe.

Upon redirect examination the district attorney offered in evidence certain other reports, made subsequently and in successive weeks up to the 13th of April, concerning the same buildings and their safety. The defendant's counsel said: "Before they are put in evidence, I have a right to examine this witness upon them;" and doing so he showed that the reports exhibited the condition of the buildings on the day the reports were made, whether they had remained unsafe or had been changed, and calling attention to one he said: "What do the words 'nothing done' on that report mean?" and received for answer: "That nothing has been done, that the order of the department has not been complied with." He also showed that there was no record of any unsafety save that reported in January.

The general contents of these reports, and a condition of the buildings substantially as therein stated, was also disclosed by parol evidence, coming either upon examination by defendant's counsel, or upon examination by the district attorney in answer or explanation of that so obtained. It is manifest therefore that their admission could in no respect tend to the defendant's prejudice; and while it is important in all cases that evidence should be free from exception, a new trial ought not to be granted even where one is well taken, unless the jury could draw from evidence admitted under it some unfavorable inference (Code Crim. Proc. § 542); nor when the party excepting has by his own course of examination destroyed the force of his objection.

Both rules apply here.

The next exception brought to our attention is the use in evidence of a photograph of the premises. It was taken during the trial, but it appeared that the part represented was in the same condition as when first seen by the witness on the 25th of April, or soon after the structure fell. No objection was made that the person taking the picture was not competent or skilled in his art, nor that the then condition of the ruins was unimportant as throwing light upon the manner of the construction of the buildings. It exhibited the surface condition and state of the wall, and it no doubt carried to the minds of the jurors a better image of the subject matter concerning which negligence was charged than any oral description by eye witnesses could have done. Its accuracy as a faithful representation of the actual scene was proven and in such a case it must be deemed established that photographic scenes are admissible in evidence as appropriate aids to a jury in applying the evidence, whether it relates to persons, things or places. Cozzens v. Higgins, 1 Abb. Ct. App. Dec. 451; Cowley v. People, 88 N. Y. 484; Durst v. Masters, L. R. 1 Prob. Div. 373, 378.

No doubt the court might in its discretion have allowed the jury to visit and view the premises, as it was asked to do by the prisoner's counsel, but it was not bound to do so. Code Crim. Proc. § 411.

There are many other propositions submitted by the appellant in relation to rulings upon evidence. They are less important than the foregoing. They seem indeed, in view of the general course of the trial and the conclusive character of the testimony unobjected to, and which justified the conviction, to have no merit, even if the exceptions upon which they are submitted were technically well taken. We do not think they were, nor do they seem to involve any question which requires discussion.

The next point brings before us several allegations of error in the instructions under which the evidence was given to the jury. The record does not show that any exception to the charge was in fact taken, and there is therefore no question for us to review.

We find in the printed brief of the appellant a statement that a stipulation was made by counsel to the effect "that a general exception should give the defendant the benefit of a particular exception to any part of the charge." This will not avail. Briggs v. Waldron, 88 N. Y. 582.

An exception is not alone for the benefit of the litigant, but is required for the sake of justice and fair dealing, and in order among other things that the attention of the trial judge being called to the supposed error, he may if he thinks proper correct it before the jury are called upon to consider their verdict.

There were, however, numerous requests to charge; some were refused, and the exceptions to the refusal are now said to have been "well taken." No argument is presented in support of that assertion, and our own examination discloses no error. The learned recorder so conducted the trial as to give the defendant the benefit of every doubt; his instructions to the jury were confined to the testimony and their attention directed to the very right of the case as it might appear to them upon the evidence. His rulings have been approved by the general term after a most deliberate and minute examination of the law and the facts: and that the case has been in both courts well and properly decided, we find no reason to doubt.

The result necessarily follows that the judgment appealed from should be affirmed.

All concur.

James B. LOCKWOOD, Sole Testamentary Trustee, et al., Appts.,

v.

William T. BRANTLY, Admr. of Wm. T. Brantly, Deceased, Impleaded, etc., Resp't.

After the lapse of more than twenty years there is a presumption that the apparent title of the assignee of corporate stock is the real title; and where all parties interested on the part of the assignor acquiesced in the assignee's title, and neglected to assert the contrary for that length of time, they should not be permitted, after the assignee's death, to maintain the claim that the stock was assigned as collateral only, without the fullest measure of proof.

(Decided November 23, 1886.)

APPEAL from a judgment of the Supreme Court at General Term in the Second Department, affirming a judgment of the Westchester Special Term, dismissing the complaint in an action to compel the transfer of corporate stock and the amount of dividends paid thereon. Affirmed.

Memorandum of decision below, 38 Hun, 642.

The original transfer of the shares of stock sought to be recovered in this suit was accomplished by the following agreement in writing:

"Know all men, that I, William T. Brantly, of the City of Philadelphia, have this day received of Benjamin F. Cooper, of Utica, New York, six shares of the stock of Utica Steam Cotton Mills, of $100 each, the same having been transferred on the books of the said company by the said Cooper, for the purpose of giving collateral security for a loan of $500 made by me, the said Brantly, to said Cooper, on the first day of March, 1859, on the security of his promissory note for that sum, in two months thereafter, which said note was renewed on the 12th day of May thereafter, and still with the interest thereon remains due and unpaid.

"Now, know all men, that in consideration of the premises, that I, said William T. Brantly, do hereby agree with the said Cooper, that when I shall have received the said $500, with 7 per cent interest thereon, from March 1, 1859, then this instrument is to be void and the said stock reassigned to the said Cooper, or to such person as he shall direct, the said Cooper, by his signature, manifesting his assent hereto.

May 15, 1861.

W. T. Brantly,

Benj. F. Cooper."

Said Brantly and Edmund A. Graham were named as trustees in the will of said Cooper.

The facts are further stated in the opinion.

Mr. Henry Cooper, for appellants:

The agreement recites in hac verba "When I shall have received the said $500 with 7 per cent interest, then this instrument is to be void." The law required the dividend to be applied on the note, a fortiori, an express contract.

Wheeler v. Newbould, 16 N. Y. 392.

The court found as a fact for plaintiffs that the dividends drawn by intestate, Brantly, satisfied and discharged the note February 1, 1870.

Mr. Howard R. Bayne, for respondent:

The agreement of May 15, 1861, was made to afford Brantly collateral security for the loan of $500, and not to pay the note by the dividends on the stock. It would have taken ten years or more to pay the loan by the dividends, and no creditor is to be presumed to have agreed to wait so long for his money. He is not bound to receive a part of his debt.

2 Pars. Cont. 640; Roberts v. Sykes, 30 Barb. 173.

"The court will not, for the purpose of relieving a pledgee from the Statute of Limitations, assume, in the absence of any allegation or proof on the subject, that there was an agreement between the parties that the pledgee should keep the stock until he should have repaid himself out of the dividends and proceeds."

Roberts v. Sykes, 30 Barb. 173. See also 11 Abb. Pr. N. S. 42, 161; 4 Hun, 110; 4 Rob. 229; 1 Jones & S. 361; 6 Thomp. & C. 177, 396; Waterman v. Brown, 31 Pa. 161; Greene v. Dispeau, 14 R. I. 575; Jones, Chat. Mort. § 687.

In Perry v. Craig, 3 Mo. 516, 525, relief was refused after a delay of sixteen years.

In Waterman v. Brown, 31 Pa. 161, after eleven years.

In Greene v. Dispeau, 14 R. I. 575, a very recent case on the subject, after six years.

In Wagner v. Baird, 7 How. 258 (48 U. S. bk. 12, L. ed. 692), after eighteen years.

In Sullivan v. Portland & K. R. R. Co. 94 U. S. 811, 812 (Bk. 24, L. ed. 324), after seventeen years.

In Brown v. Buena Vista County, 95 U. S. 180 (Bk. 24, L. ed. 422), after eight years.

In Marsh v. Whitmore, 21 Wall. 185 (88 U. S. bk. 22, L. ed. 482), after twelve years.

In Godden v. Kimmel, 99 U. S. 210 (Bk. 25, L. ed. 431), after fourteen years.

Whether there has been an actual purchase or not, equity presumes one after a lapse of twenty years—a presumption based not on the fact, but in the face of evidence to the contrary.

Gilca v. Baremore, 5 Johns. Ch. 545; Bean v. Tonnele, 94 N. Y. 881; Edw. Bailm. p. 269; Lockwood v. Ewer, 2 Atk. 303; Story, Ballm. §§846, 304, 347, 348; Story, Eq. Pl. §813; Ellison v. Moffatt, 1 Johns. Ch. 46; Arden v. Arden, 1 Johns. Ch. 313; Ray v. Bogart, 2 Johns. Cas. 432; Story, Eq. Jur. §1520; Havens v. Patterson, 43 N. Y. 218; Loder v. Hatfield, 71 N. Y. 103, 104; Story, Eq. Jur. §1520a; Kane v. Bloodgood, 7 Johns. Ch. 111; Beaubien v. Beaubien, 23 How. 207 (64 U. S. bk. 16, L. ed. 484); Re Nielly, 95 N. Y. 889; Bruce v. Tison, 25 N. Y. 194, 202; Duncomb v. New York, H. & N. R. Co. 84 N. Y. 199; Smith v. Clay, 3 Bro. Ch. 639; Bowman v. Wathen, 1 How. 193 (42 U. S. bk. 11, L. ed. 98); Piatt v. Vattier, 9 Pet. 416 (34 U. S. bk. 9, L. ed. 177); Wagner v. Baird, 7 How. 258 (48 U. S. bk. 12, L. ed. 691); Sullivan v. Portland & K. R. R. Co. 94 U. S. 811, 812 (Bk. 24, L. ed. 326); Brown v. Buena Vista Co. 95 U. S. 160 (Bk. 24, L. ed. 423); Godden v. Kimmel, 99 U. S. 210 (Bk. 25, L. ed. 434); Jenkins v. Pyc, 12 Pet. 254 (37 U. S. bk. 9, L. ed. 1075); Maczrell v. Kennedy, 8 How. 222 (49 U. S. bk. 12, L. ed. 1055); McKnight v. Taylor, 1 How. 168 (42 U. S. bk. 11, L. ed. 88); Hall v. Clagett, 48 Md. 243; McDonnell v. Mulholland, 56 Md. 548; Landsdale v. Smith, 106 U. S. 392 (Bk. 27, L. ed. 219); McCoy v. Poor, 56 Md. 197.

But the plaintiffs are estopped from setting up the contrary, after their acquiescence and silence for twenty-two years, and after the receipt and enjoyment by all the beneficiary plaintiffs of the entire value of the stock in suit.

2 Pars. Cont. 795, § 8; Niren v. Belknap, 2 Johns. 573; 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 809; Morgan v. Chicago & A. R. R. Co. 96 U. S. 720 (Bk. 24, L. ed. 744); Storrs v. Barker, 6 Johns. Ch. 166; 2 Pars. Cont. 799; Coles v. Bank of England, 10 Adol. & Ellis, 437; 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 809; Wendell v. Van Rensselaer, 1 Johns. Ch. 344; Kirk v. Hamilton, 102 U. S. 76 (Bk. 26, L. ed. 81); Tilton v. Nelson, 27 Barb. 595; Continental Bank v. Bank of the Commonwealth, 50 N. Y. 581.

But on the theory of the plaintiffs their claim has been substantially complied with. They have gotten the dividends on the stock for years, and the shares were turned over to them one by one.

Smith, Manual Eq. 28, 29; 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 420, 849; Texas v. Hardenburg, 10 Wall. 89 (77 U. S. bk. 19, L. ed. 839); Tyson v. Mickle, 2 Gill, 376; York Co. v. McKenzie, 8 B. P. Cas. 42; Duncomb v. N. Y. H. & N. R. Co. 84 N. Y. 197, 199; Garland v. Bank, 9 Mass. 408; Citizens' Bank v. Grafflin, 31 Md. 507; Levelen v. Garrett, 58 Ind. 442; Stanley Rule & Level Co. v. Bailey, 45 Conn. 464; Snell v. Atlantic Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 98 U. S. 90 (Bk. 25, L. ed. 52).

Danforth, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was commenced May 12, 1883. It appears from the record that Benjamin F. Cooper died at the City of Utica on the 6th of May, 1864, after devising all his property in trust, first, for the support and benefit of Mary A., his wife, and Helen, his daughter, and if there should be any surplus, then, second, for the support of his sons William and Henry. The persons named as trustees and his son William B. were appointed executors, but Graham and William B. alone qualified as such. The will was admitted to probate in June, 1864, and the above named executors and Graham as trustee continued to act in their several capacities until December 20, 1880, when, upon proceedings instituted in the supreme court by Graham, Mary A., Helen, William B., and Henry Cooper, an order was made discharging Graham from his office of executor and trustee, and from that time Brantly continued sole executor until his death in 1882, when James B. Lockwood was appointed in his place.

At the commencement of this suit therefore, William B. Cooper was the sole executor of the will of Benjamin, and Lockwood sole testamentary trustee. William B. Cooper refused to join as plaintiff, either as an individual or as executor, and was therefore made codefendant, in both capacities, with William T. Brantly, who was sued as the administrator of the Brantly before mentioned. The plaintiffs are Lockwood, who sues as trustee of the estate of Benjamin F. Cooper, and Mary A. Cooper, Helen Cooper and Henry Cooper, beneficiaries under his will.

The object of the action is to compel the defendant Brantly to transfer to the defendant William, as executor, or to the plaintiff Lockwood as trustee, certain shares of the capital stock of the Utica Cotton Mills, and $1,600.37 with interest, being the amount of dividends paid thereon since the first day of August, 1871. The defendant Brantly alone answered, denying certain material allegations of the complaint, and setting up several affirmative defenses. At special term the issues were decided in favor of the defendant, and the complaint dismissed. Upon appeal by the plaintiffs the general term affirmed that decision, and against the judgment then rendered they appeal to this court.

The present controversy brings in question the title to the stock above referred to. It is undisputed that six shares were owned by the testator; that on the 15th day of May, 1861, he duly transferred those shares to William T. Brantly, the respondent's intestate, as collateral security for a loan of $500 theretofore made to him, and at that time with the interest thereon unpaid and due.

For a time Cooper, under a power of attorney from Brantly, collected the dividends and applied them to his own use. Afterwards Brantly assigned the stock to "William B. Cooper, Trustee," and on the 3d of February, 1864, they were so transferred on the books of the company and a new certificate issued to the assignee. He collected the dividends until February 1, 1865, and after that, until August, 1866, they were collected by Graham and paid over by Brantly's direction to Mrs. Cooper and Helen Cooper. It is also found by the learned trial court upon evidence before him, that upon the 7th of July, 1886, Cooper, as trustee, for value received, transferred the stock to Brantly, who thereafter until his death in March, 1888, held, claimed and treated the stock as absolutely his own, and received the dividends thereon.

The plaintiffs' contention is, in substance, that notwithstanding this new and absolute assignment, Brantly afterwards held the stock either as he had first received it, as collateral security, or the dividends having amounted to the sum for payment of which it was pledged, as depository, without a lien upon or interest of any kind in it; in either event as trustee.

It certainly does not appear upon what actual consideration the final transfer to Brantly was made; but the fact of transfer and the claim of ownership were known to every one of the parties interested long before the death of Brantly, and to William B. Cooper and Graham at the very time of the transfer, for both were actors in the transaction. They were trustees and executors, they knew of the terms of the original assignment by way of pledge or collateral security, and of the subsequent absolute conveyance. So did Henry Cooper, one of the beneficiaries under the will, and Mary E. and Helen Cooper, whose meager support was derived from an estate insufficient for that purpose and was eked out by the frequent benevolence of Brantly, avowedly founded upon his possession and ownership of the stocks in question.

Not one of these persons disputed the title of Brantly, and although in 1880 Graham on their petition was relieved of his trust, no claim was made by either that the stock formed part of the estate of B. F. Cooper, with the management of which he had been charged. Not then nor till after the death of Brantly did this contention arise. Had it been otherwise it may be presumed some fuller explanation might have been had from him. If it be now scant the plaintiffs cannot complain. On the part of Brantly there was no concealment; on the part of everyone interested there was perfect acquiescence.

From these facts it would seem to follow that at the time of Lockwood's appointment as testamentary trustee, the estate entrusted to him was in no way concerned or interested in the stock in question. The defendants' intestate had acquired a good legal title to it, and we agree with both courts whose judgments are before us, that there is in evidence nothing which would justify any tribunal in depriving his estate of its benefit. Indeed there is no reason to believe that this action would have been brought, except for the death of Brantly; and that circumstance should not relieve the plaintiffs from giving the fullest measure of proof, and repelling by evidence the presumption which after a lapse of more than twenty years requires us to hold that the apparent title was the real title.

Here is not only lapse of time and negligence in asserting the contrary, but acquiescence, three objections to the plaintiffs' claim, which upon the testimony are wholly unexplained except upon the theory that so long as Brantly lived all parties interested recognized his title as unassailable. There would be great danger of an unjust advantage, if, he being dead, the same parties should now be allowed to question it. It is difficult to find good faith in the plaintiffs' claim; there has certainly been no diligence in asserting it. We think there is no equity in the suit and that the complaint was properly dismissed.

The judgment appealed from should be affirmed, with costs.

All concur.

Phebe ANGEVINE, Resp't.,

John M. JACKSON, Appt.

1. A general exception to a surrogate's decree rendered upon the trial of an issue of fact is useless.
2. By section 2545 of the Code of Civil Procedure the practice upon appeals from a surrogate's decree upon the trial of an issue of fact is assimilated to that upon appeals from a judgment by a court or referee; and specific errors are required to be pointed out in order to be available on appeal.

(Decided November 23, 1886.)

APPEAL from a judgment of the Supreme Court at General Term in the Second Department, reversing a decree of the Surrogate's Court of Queens County admitting a will to probate. Reversed.

Memorandum of decision below, 85 Hun, 668.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Jno. J. Armstrong, with whom was Mr. H. E. Sickels, for appellant:

The appeal of the appellant in the court below was not well taken. No exceptions were taken to any of the rulings made on the findings either of facts or law, nor was there any exception to the refusal of the surrogate to find the facts as requested.

Code Civ. Proc. § 2545; Reese v. Boese, 94 N. Y. 628; Briggs v. Waldron, 88 N. Y. 582.

The exceptions to the decree and "each and every part thereof" is unavailing. It is too general and is insufficient to raise any specific question and is practically of no avail.

Ward v. Craig, 87 N. Y. 550; Hepburn v. Montgomery, 97 N. Y. 617.

If then the general term did not have the facts before it, it was powerless to reverse the decree or review the facts upon which the surrogate based his decision. And as further proof that the reversal was not upon the facts, we submit that the order of reversal was not upon a question of fact.

Code, §§ 1388, 2588.

This court in Weyer v. Beach, 79 N. Y. 409, says: "The order of reversal, however, does not state that it was made on questions of fact, and it must therefore, pursuant to section 1388 of the Code, be deemed to have been made, not on any questions of fact, but of law only. The respondent cannot therefore avail himself of the facts taken by the court at general term, but must abide by the findings of the referee, they having some evidence to support them."

See also Sutton v. Ray, 72 N. Y. 482.

Where it does not appear in an order of the general term, reversing a judgment entered upon the report of a referee, that the reversal was upon questions of fact, the only inquiry upon appeal from the order to the court of appeals is whether it rests upon any questions of law.

Code, § 1888; Davis v. Leopold, 87 N. Y. 620.

If the order of reversal states that it was granted upon questions of law, or if it is silent as to the grounds upon which it was granted, the court of appeals will consider questions of law only.

Rider Life Raft Co. v. Roach, 97 N. Y. 878; Davis v. Leopold, 87 N. Y. 620; Wallace v. Drew, 54 N. Y. 678.

We therefore submit that this court, on this appeal, will not find any fact on which to justify the order of reversal, and will assume that the conclusions of law upon the facts found will be assumed to be correct, and the findings of the surrogate and the judgment entered thereon will be sustained.

Reese v. Boese, 94 N. Y. 623.

Messrs. Benj. W. Downing and James W. Covert, for respondent.

Finch, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Probate of the will of Oliver Mott was resisted, upon the grounds of mental incapacity and undue influence. After listening to numerous witnesses and taking a large amount of testimony the surrogate rendered his decision, finding, as facts, that the decedent was a capable testator and the will was his free act and unaffected by any improper agency; and, as a conclusion of law, that the will should be admitted to probate. No exception was taken to any of these findings. The case recites an exception to the surrogate's decree and each and every part of it. We have repeatedly pointed out the uselessness of such an exception. Ward v. Craig, 87 N. Y. 550; Hepburn v. Montgomery, 97 N. Y. 617.

It indicates no specific error; it directs attention to no finding; and leaves the court and counsel in the dark as to the precise cause of complaint.

The case further shows a series of findings which the surrogate was requested to make and which requests were refused. There was no exception to the refusal. The contestants appealed, and upon this case, which contained no exception raising any question of fact or law, and in which no errors in the admission or rejection of evidence are even claimed to exist, the general term reversed the decree of the surrogate and ordered issues to be tried by a jury, entirely disregarding the provisions of the Code. The provisions point out the practice to be followed, with care and precision. § 2545.

The surrogate is required to file in his office his decision, stating separately the facts found and the conclusions of law. Either party may except to the findings of fact or of law, and upon the settlement of the case may request findings and take exceptions to a refusal, and the appeal brings up for review in the appellate court any question of fact or law thus raised by exceptions taken. The purpose was to assimilate the practice upon appeals from a surrogate's decree in the prescribed cases to that which regulated appeals from a judgment rendered by the court or a referee, and to substitute a system which would point out specific errors, and evolve the exact questions intended to be reviewed. Nothing of this kind was before the general term, and without some exception to some ruling or determination that tribunal was powerless to reverse.

For this reason the judgment and order of the General Term must be reversed and that of the Surrogate affirmed, with costs.

All concur.

Re ACCOUNTING OF Elbridge T. GERRY, as Trustee under the Will of Peter P. Goelet, Deceased.

1. Where the securities (government and municipal bonds and real estate mortgages bearing fixed rates of interest) belonging to a trust fund created by a will which provided that the "annual interest, income and dividends thereof" should be paid to a certain person for life, with remainder to others, were sold after the death of the life beneficiary, for more than the original amount of the trust fund, held, that the accretion or increase so arising belonged to the remaindermen and not to the representatives of the life beneficiary.
2. Held also, that the fact that the trustee had invested the fund in securities other than those authorized by the will (such action having been ratified by the parties interested), did not change the rule of distribution of the fund.

(Decided November 23, 1886.)

APPEAL from a judgment of the Supreme Court at General Term in the First Department, affirming a judgment of the Special Term directing the distribution of a trust estate.

Affirmed.

Memorandum of decision below, 36 Hun, 643.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. E. L. Fancher, with Messrs. Miller & MacFarlane, for Elbridge T. Gerry, as executor of Jean B. Goelet, appellant:

When, as in this case, the clear intention of the testator, distinctly expressed in his will, is to give to the remaindermen a certain sum of money, and to his daughter, during her life, all income from the money, it is not equity to enlarge the gift in remainder by the accretion of thousands of dollars which has come to the hands of the trustee through his use and investment of the moneys, at times many years later than the creation of the trust.

The case would be different had the capital been inseparable from the accretion; as, for example, had the capital bequeathed been shares of stock.

Such were the cases of Clarkson v. Clarkson, 18 Barb. 646; Johnson v. Bridgewater Iron Mfg. Co. 14 Gray, 274; Woodruff's Est. 1 Tucker, 58; and others.

Dividends, whether ordinary or extraordinary ry, belong to the life tenant; though if shares be given they are capital and belong to the remaindermen.

Clarkson v. Clarkson, 18 Barb. 646; Simpson v. Moore, 30 Barb. 637; Est. of Woodruff, 1 Tucker, 58; Riggs v. Cragg, 26 Hun, 89-103; Earp's App. 28 Pa. 368; Willbank's App. 64 Pa. 256; Vinton's App. 11 W. N. C. 246; S. C. 99 Pa. 434; Lord v. Brooks, 52 N. H. 72; Van Doren v. Olden, 19 N. J. Eq. 176; Scovel v. Roosevelt, 5 Redf. 121; Peirce v. Burroughs, 58 N. H. 302; Miller v. Guenard, 21 Am. Law Reg. 881; Bates v. MacKinley, 31 Beav. 280; Barclay v. Wainwright, 14 Ves. 66; Price v. Anderson, 15 Sim. 473; Johnson v. Johnson, 5 Eng. Law & Eq. 164; Murray v. Glasse, 17 Jur. 816; Hooper v. Rossiter, 1 McClel. 527; Norris v. Harrison, 2 Madd. 268; Plumbe v. Neild, 6 Jur. N. S. 529.

In Bergen v. Valentine, 68 How. Pr. 221, the trustee was directed to invest $100,000, and pay over the income to the widow of testator for life, and on her death to pay over the principal to two legatees. The action was for construction of the will.

The court, among other things, said: "But in the event that the funds are held until their maturity, it is not likely that anything more than the principal sum of $96,700 will be received for distribution. In cases of this character it is equitable that the loss, if any, in this manner sustained, should be borne equally as near as may be by the life tenant and the remainderman."

There are authorities which show the care courts have exercised to preserve intact the entire principal for the tenant in remainder; but the same authorities confer on the tenant for life the benefits arising from use of the principal and all income from it.

Hill, Trustees, 385, 386; Covenhoven v. Shuler, 2 Paige, 122, 131; Clark v. Clark, 8 Paige, 152, 160; Spear v. Tinkham, 2 Barb. Ch. 211; Rapalye v. Rapalye, 27 Barb. 610, 615; Calkins v. Calkins, 1 Redf. 337 and authorities cited; Perry, Trusts, § 547; Howe v. Dartmouth, 7 Ves. 137, and White & T. Lead. Cas. 4th Am. ed. 676 et seq. and notes; Kinmouth v. Brigham, 5 Allen, 276.

Looking to the intent of the testator, and to the circumstances of this case, it seems clear that there should be a judgment awarding the principal sum to the remaindermen, and the profits gained therefrom by the trustee's use of it, to the life tenant. The judgment below should be accordingly modified, as hereafter stated. The following authorities support this proposition:

Harvard College v. Amory, 9 Pick. 446; Balch v. Hallet, 10 Gray, 402; Reed v. Head, 6 Allen, 174; Van Doren v. Olden, 19 N. J. Eq. 176; Earp's App. 28 Pa. 368; Willbank's App. 64 Pa. 256; Moss's App. 88 Pa. 264; Londesborough v. Somerville, 19 Beav. 295; Maclaren v. Stainton, 3 De G. F. & J. 202; Plumbe v. Neild, 6 Jur. N. S. 529; 29 L. J. N. S. Ch. 619; Dale v. Hayes, 40 L. J. N. S. 244, 246; Re Chesterfield's Trusts, 49 L. T. N. S. Ch. Div. 261; Re Hopkins' Trusts, L. R. 18 Eq. Cas. 698; Johnson v. Johnson, 15 Jur. 714; 5 Eng. Law & Eq. 646; Price v. Anderson, 15 Sim. 473; Leland v. Hayden, 102 Mass. 550.

N. Y.

Mr. George G. Kip, for Robert Goelet and Ogden Goelet, respondents:

The increase realized from the conversion into money or other securities, of securities constituting the investments of a trust fund, belongs, on the termination of the trust, to the remainderman.

Clarkson v. Clarkson, 18 Barb. 646; Schoonmaker v. Van Wyck, 31 Barb. 457; Re Pollock, 3 Redf. 111-116; Scovel v. Roosevelt, 5 Redf. 121; Townsend v. U. S. Trust Co. 3 Redf. 220; Bergen v. Valentine, 68 How. Pr. 226.

Mere advance in value in no sense constitutes the gains, profits or income specified by the statute. It constitutes and can be treated merely as increase of capital.

Gray v. Darlington, 15 Wall. 66 (82 U. S. bk. 21, L. ed. 45).

The investments were directed to be made for the testator's daughter and representatives. The testator used the word "representatives" to mean such of his grandchildren or children as may take as remaindermen.

See Phyfe v. Phyfe, 3 Bradf. 53.

The investment of the trust was to inure to the benefit of both life beneficiary and remaindermen, and such has been the case. The life tenant has profited by the increased income received from the investment of the gain realized and invested in the lifetime of the first trustee, making the case parallel to that of an increase in value of real estate held in trust, where the life beneficiary received the advanced rent resulting from the increase in value.

Cogswell v. Cogswell, 2 Edw. Ch. 240.

The words which denote the estate of the life beneficiary are "interest, income and dividends." These words have already received a judicial construction. In no case can increase in market value be adjudged to be interest, income or dividends, which presupposes the profits realized from the use of trust funds."

Townsend v. U. S. Trust Co. 3 Redf. 223.

The advance in the value of property during a series of years can in no just sense be considered the gains, profits or income of any one particular year of the series.

Gray v. Darlington, 15 Wall. 65 (82 U. S. bk. 21, L. ed. 45).

In no case could increase in market value be adjudged to be net annual income.

Re Pollock, 3 Redf. 114

The estate of the life beneficiary was capable of being apportioned as it accrued de die in diem.

Clapp v. Astor, 2 Edw. Ch. 388.

Does the fund in question represent earnings from the use of capital, or is the fund the representative of increased capital or of additional value in capital? The disputed fund which comes within the limit of the first test belongs to the life beneficiary, and that which comes within the second test belongs to the remainderman.

Clarkson v. Clarkson, 18 Barb. 646; Simpson v. Moore, 30 Barb. 637; Cragg v. Riggs, 5 Redf. 82; Riggs v. Cragg, 26 Hun, 89; Knight v. Lidford, 3 Dem. 88.

Ruger, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The matter here in controversy arises between the representatives of the life estate and certain remaindermen, with reference to the proper distribution between them of an increase in the amount of the trust fund discoverable upon a sale of the securities in which it was invested, after the life estate terminated.

The fund was created in the year 1828 under the will of Peter P. Goelet devising to his executors as trustees the sum of $50,000 to invest "in funded stock of the United States or of the State of New York or in good bonds and mortgages on real estate," with directions to pay "the annual interest, income and dividends thereof" to his daughter Jean B. Goelet during her life, and upon her death leaving no issue, to divide the "principal or capital sum aforesaid, * * * among my other children in equal proportions." A codicil to said will made in the same year increased the said fund by an additional sum of $20,000, which upon the death of said Jean B. Goelet without issue was also directed to be paid to her surviving brothers and sisters or to their respective representatives.

During the existence of this trust which extended for fifty-four years to the death of Jean B. Goelet in 1882, the annual interest collectible upon the sum invested was duly paid to her by its trustees. It does not appear affirmatively in the case in what securities the capital sum was originally invested or when any investment or conversion of them occurred; but the evidence shows that in 1880 it was represented in unequal proportions by United States bonds, bonds of the Cities of New York and Brooklyn, bonds and mortgages on real estate and the sum of $3,424.95 in cash. The cash seems to have been the result of an increase in the value of some securities exchanged or converted by the trustee prior to 1880.

In April, 1880, an order was made by the supreme court in a proceeding instituted by Robert Goelet and Ogden Goelet, who with Elbridge T. Gerry had succeeded to the said trusteeship under the will of Peter Goelet, who died in 1879, to ascertain the amount of said fund and the securities in which it was invested, and to obtain their discharge from the duties and obligations of said trusteeship upon the delivery of said trust funds to their associate Mr. Gerry. Jean B. Goelet and Mr. Gerry were both parties to this proceeding and acquiesced in the order of the court appointing Mr. Gerry sole trustee and defining the securities and capital of the trust fund as it then existed.

It may fairly be assumed from the evidence that this fund has always been kept invested in securities upon which there was a fixed rate of interest payable annually determinable by the provisions of the security, and that it has never been possible for the trustee to receive or secure therefrom any extra dividends or any greater annual income than that producible by fixed rates of interest. A sale of these securities by the trustee after the death of the life tenant resulted in a surplus of nearly $23,000, over the amount of the original investment, and this sum is claimed respectively by the representatives of the life tenant and by the remaindermen.

The primary rule for the determination of questions arising upon the construction of wills is the ascertainment of the intent of the testator from a consideration of its provisions. In the case in hand the will provides specifically for the interest which the legatee for life was to take in the fund, and it is limited to the "annual interest, income and dividends thereof." All beyond this must from necessity have been intended to go to the remaindermen, for there are no other persons who could lawfully take it.

This case is not analogous to and presents none of the questions or embarrassments attending the division of gain or profits arising upon investments in trade or the stock of corporate business enterprises and which are usually represented by dividends, either regular or extra payable in cash, stock or scrip, or remaining undivided in the hands of the corporation.

The authorities in such cases are very numerous, and show that it is often a matter of great difficulty to distinguish with precision between those gains constituting an accretion to the fund, and those which legitimately may be termed the earnings of the investment properly distributable by way of dividends to the stockholders of the corporation. In this case, however, the investment is directed to be made in securities bearing a fixed rate of interest which can neither be increased by the prosperity nor diminished by the misfortunes of the debtors and are eventually to be satisfied by the repayment of the principal sum of the obligation.

At the time of the conversion of this fund by the trustee he held in his hands obligations which upon their face called for the repayment to him of the sum of $70,000 only, and the purchasers from him received obligations which at maturity were redeemable by the obligors at that sum. The causes occasioning the increase in question seems to have been a depreciation in the rate of interest effected by natural causes, and which gave an increased value to securities bearing the higher rates of former times. This constituted in no sense a profit upon the investment, but was an accretion to the fund itself arising from natural causes and was liable to be altogether lost by the approximation of the securities to the period of their maturity. The benefit derivable from this condition was enjoyed annually by the beneficiaries of the fund in the increased value of the income derivable therefrom. Had the life tenant lived to the maturity of the bonds she would have received in annual interest the entire difference, if any existed at any time prior thereto, between the face and market value of these securities.

The theory of the will did not contemplate any traffic in securities by the trustee but a permanent investment in interest bearing obligations subject to be sold or exchanged only when the exigencies of the trust required it to be done.

It is quite clear that the life tenant could not have compelled the trustee to sell or convert securities lawfully purchased and held by him, upon the ground that their market value had appreciated in his hands, any more than he could have compelled her to make good any depreciation in the value of such securities. The acquisition and retention of such securities was one of the objects contemplated by the will of the testator, and was essential to execute his design; and a proceeding to compel a sale of the securities would plainly have been contrary to his intent in creating the trust.

If the will had required trustees to invest in real estate, the rents, income and profits of which were made payable to the life tenant with remainder over, it cannot be questioned but that any increase of the value of the land from natural causes would have been an accretion to the capital and inured to the benefit of the remaindermen; Perry, Trusts, § 545, p. 486; Cogswell v. Cogswell, 2 Edw. Ch. 240; and we can see no difference in principle between this case and the one supposed.

The question here presented was up in the cases of Townsend v. U. S. Trust Co. 3 Redf. 222, and Whitney v. Phoenix, 4 Redf. 180, before the Surrogate of New York, and it was there held that an enhancement of the value of United States bonds held in trust went to the remaindermen and not to the legatee for life. These decisions accord with our views.

The cases cited by the learned counsel for the appellant may all be classified as cases where the terms of the trust authorized investments in the stock of private corporations or trading enterprises whose profits are largely affected by the vicissitudes of business and trade, and the disposition of whose gains and profits is largely if not wholly left to the discretion of the managers of the enterprise. In such cases it was plainly the intention of the settlor of the trust that the life tenant should have the advantage of any extraordinary profits realized from the investment.

As we before said, these cases are not analogous. The circumstance that the trustee in this case at sometime invested a portion of the funds in unauthorized securities would not seem to have effected any change in the respective rights of the life tenant and remaindermen in the corpus of the trust. When the fact came to their knowledge in 1880 they each and all seem to have acquiesced in and approved the action of the trustee in making the investment; and it cannot now be objected on the part of either of them that any interest of theirs was thereby varied or changed. It was optional with those parties at that time, by taking appropriate proceedings for that purpose, to have required the defaulting trustee to invest the fund in the securities specified in the will or to have made compensation in some other form for the damages, if any, occasioned by his wrongful act; but it was also competent for them to ratify and approve the action of the trustee by accepting the securities held by him as representing the trust fund, and this we think was determined by the proceedings taken to release Robert and Ogden Goelet from the duties of trustees under the will. The action of the trustee in making the investments in question was sagacious and inured to the benefit of all of the parties concerned, and they should not after long acquiescence in such dealing be allowed to obtain an advantage by questioning its legality.

But further than this we think the securities in which the funds were actually invested by the trustee until changed by some proceedings taken for the purpose, so far as the beneficiaries were concerned, represented the trust fund, and their earnings, income and increase would, as between the several parties interested therein, be subject to the same rules of division and distribution as though it had been invested and kept on interest in accordance with the terms of the will. The remaindermen could not thereby be deprived of a natural accretion to the fund, however invested, or the life tenant become entitled to an increase, which if the fund had been lawfully invested would not have accrued to her. Indeed, in prosecuting this proceeding the representatives of the life tenant have ratified the acts of the trustee in making the investment in question by treating the unauthorized securities as the corpus of the fund and claiming their increased value as income earned by the employment of the capital. In other words: while claiming the advantage to be derived from the unauthorized act of the trustee, they insist that such act was the efficient cause of transforming what was otherwise an accretion to the fund, going to the remaindermen, into profits accruing to the life tenant.

N. Y.

The life tenant was not the sole party interested in the determination of this question, and inasmuch as she during her lifetime and the remaindermen also acquiesced in and approved the conduct of the trustee in making the investment, her representatives should not now be allowed to acquire an advantage by denying the lawfulness of his proceeding.

The judgment of the court below should be affirmed, without costs to either party.

All concur.

Nellie CARD, Exrx., Respt.,

v.

MANHATTAN R. CO., Appt.

In an action against an elevated railway company for damages for the death of an intending passenger, the evidence showed that after the car platform gate was closed and the train in motion, the deceased had hold of the platform stanchions and clung to them as the gateman was pushing him away, and was injured while thus clinging to the car. Held, that the plaintiff should have been nonsuited.

(Decided November 23, 1886.)

APPEAL from a judgment of the Supreme Court at General Term in the First Department, affirming a judgment of the Circuit Court, on a verdict for plaintiff in an action to recover damages for the death of plaintiff's testator, caused by alleged negligence of defendant in operating an elevated railroad in New York City. Reversed.

Memorandum of decision below, 87 Hun, 644.

The following facts appeared by the testimony of plaintiff's witnesses:

Mr. Card, with his wife and Sarah A. Hull, his sister, went to the easterly side of the Houston Street Station, on the Third Avenue Elevated Railroad in New York City, on the day of the accident, to take a train going north. When they arrived at the ticket office Mr. Card was in advance of the two ladies, and purchased three tickets, receiving some change from Mrs. Hull for that purpose; they then passed through the passage way in front of the ticket office to the station platform in the same order, Mr. Card dropping the tickets in the ticket box provided for that purpose; a train of cars was about leaving the station when they reached the ticket office. They did not attempt to board this train but remained on the station platform in close proximity to and conversing with each other for several minutes, waiting for the next train; when such train arrived and stopped the deceased and the two ladies were standing about midway between the ends of the second car from the locomotive; Mr. Card stood nearest the front end; all three started toward the rear end of the second car for the purpose of entering it; the gate was opened at the end of said car by a gateman on the train and the two ladies stepped on board while the train was standing still; Mr. Card, who was immediately behind them, approached the same gateway intending to enter it, but before he could step on the car, the gate was closed against him by the gateman who was then standing on the car platform; at about the same instant, the usual signal was given for the train to start and it started. Mr. Card walked along the platform with the moving train, evidently talking with the gateman, but what he said to him was not testified to by any witness; while he was thus walking he had a satchel and cane in one hand and may or may not have taken hold with the other of an iron bar or rod which extends from the floor of the car platform to the roof, and to which the car gate is attached by hinges; while he was thus walking and when he was making no effort to board the train, he was pushed by the gateman so that, from that cause alone, he fell and went under the cars, and received the injuries from which he died.

227

The evidence on the part of the defendant given by the persons in its employment is in decided hostility to plaintiff's evidence. According to their statement the deceased approached the train with very great rapidity, alone and unattended, there being not only no persons in company with him, but no persons on the platform at the time he made his appearance. Indeed one of the witnesses, the brakeman who was charged with having pushed the deceased, testified that he had not only pushed the gate but announced in both cars, north and south of where he stood, that Ninth Street was the next station, and that he saw the deceased only when he had seized the iron stanchions which he is by some of the witnesses said to have taken hold of, while he was moving along with the cars, either expostulating with the brakeman, or requesting that he should be admitted to the car.

The defendant moved to dismiss the complaint and requested a verdict, upon the ground that it was not shown that it, or its employees, or any of them, were guilty of negligence, and that the deceased was guilty of contributory negligence; which motion the court denied and verdict was rendered for plaintiff and judgment was entered thereon. On appeal to the general term the judgment was affirmed and defendant appealed to this court.

Mr. E. S. Rapallo, for appellant.

Mr. S. W. Fullerton, with whom was Mr. E. W. Simmons, for respondent:

Courts cannot properly nonsuit in actions of this nature where any possible inference can be drawn from any of the testimony which would relieve the deceased from the charge of contributory negligence.

Kellogg v. N. Y. Cent. & Hud. Riv. R. R. Co. 79 N. Y. 72; Casey v. N. Y. Cent. & Hud. Riv. R. R. Co. 78 N. Y. 518; Voak v. N. Y. Cent. & Hud. Riv. R. R. Co. 75 N. Y. 320; Dolan v. Del. & Hud. Canal Co. 71 N. Y. 285.

To justify a nonsuit on the ground of concurring negligence the negligence must appear so clearly that no construction of the evidence or inference drawn from the facts would have warranted a contrary conclusion, and that a verdict the other way would have been set aside as against the evidence.

Kain v. Smith, 89 N. Y. 375.

Finch, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The opinion recently delivered in the case of Solomon v. Manhattan R. Co. [ante, 775] substantially covers all the questions raised by this appeal and makes it our duty to reverse the judgment of the courts below.

In both cases, after the gates were shut and the intending passenger was excluded and the train was in motion, the injured party clung to the moving cars and was thereby killed. In the one case the deceased had his foot upon the car step, and was obviously making a physical effort to get upon the train; in this case the trial court deemed it debatable, whether the deceased was endeavoring to get upon the car or was merely walking along by the side of the moving train expostulating with the gateman. But disregarding all the evidence of the defense and taking as true the plaintiff's proofs, two facts remain undisputed. After the gate was closed and the train in motion the excluded passenger had hold of the stanchions of the platform, clinging to them as the train moved while the gateman was pushing him away.

Three witnesses for the plaintiff saw the accident. The wife and sister observed only the gateman pushing the deceased at a moment when they are unable to say whether the train had started or not; but the third witness, a passenger in an adjoining car and apparently wholly disinterested, testifies distinctly that after the gate was slammed and the train in motion the deceased was holding on to the iron standard supporting the roof of the platform while the gateman was trying to push him away, and that this continued until the deceased disappeared from sight.

It is not material whether the act of the deceased should or should not be deemed a physical effort to get upon the car. It was an interference with the moving train obviously dangerous and imprudent, from which the injury resulted, and for which there was no necessity or excuse. The motion for a nonsuit should have been granted.

Judgment reversed, new trial granted, costs to abide the event.

All concur, except Danforth, J., not voting, and Rapallo, J., taking no part.

NEW JERSEY.

COURT OF ERRORS AND APPEALS.

CAMDEN & ATLANTIC R. R. CO., Plff. in Err.,
v.

MAYS LANDING & EGG HARBOR CITY
R. R. CO.

- *1. When a transaction is complete and the party seeking relief has performed on his part, the plea of ultra vires by the corporation which has acquiesced in it is inadmissible in an action brought against it for not performing its side of the contract, in all those instances where the party who has performed cannot upon rescission be restored to his former status.
2. The State may interpose its authority at any time and compel an abandonment of the act in excess of power, and if need be revoke the charter of the company for its usurpation.
3. When the State challenges the legality of the transaction, the paramount and only question is whether it has bestowed upon the company the requisite authority to engage in it. When the question arises between the company and the other party to the contract, other legal principles apply in determining whether the contract shall be observed.
4. The liability of the company does not rest upon the doctrine of ratification, which in ordinary legal acceptance applies to such contracts as a party has authority to make, but upon acquiescence, on which the other party has acted, so that he cannot be restored to his former status, and thereby the company is precluded from interposing its own infirmity as a defense.
5. Under the circumstances presented by this case, the agreement must be dealt with as a contract executed substantially on both sides.

(Decided ——— 1886.)

ERROR to the Supreme Court, to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action of debt to recover rent. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. P. L. Voorhees and Wayne MacVeagh, for plaintiff in error.

Mr. S. H. Grey, for defendant in error.

Van Syckel, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an action of debt brought in the supreme court to recover the rent alleged to be due from February, 1881, to June 1, 1882, on a lease of its road executed in 1873, by defendant in error to the plaintiff in error, for the term of 999 years.

The Mays Landing & Egg Harbor Road was built under a charter obtained in 1871, and since its completion in 1872 it has been in the possession of the Camden & Atlantic Company as lessee until February, 1881, at which time the latter Company ceased to operate it, and refused to recognize the validity of the lease.

The defense to the action is rested upon the want of power in the lessee Company to execute the lease.

The Camden & Atlantic Railroad was completed from Camden to Atlantic City in the early part of 1862, under a charter granted in 1852. This road I will hereafter for brevity style the main line, and the Mays Landing & Egg Harbor Road the branch road. The branch road rests its own authority to make a lease, and the authority of the main line to accept a lease, upon the seventeenth section of the charter of the branch, which provides that the said branch road is authorized to lease its railroad to (or consolidate with) any other railroad company, which is thereby authorized to take such lease and operate the same for such time or times, and on such terms, as the said parties may agree upon.

This language is unquestionably broad enough to confer upon the companies the power requisite to enter into a valid contract for a lease; and no doubt could arise in this case, if the powers of one railroad company can be amplified by provisions in the charter of another.

The title of the Act incorporating the branch road is "An Act to Incorporate the Mays Landing & Egg Harbor City Railroad Company."

Under the clause of our State Constitution which provides that "To avoid improper influences which may result from intermixing in one and the same Act such things as have no proper relation to each other, every law shall embrace but one object, and that shall be expressed in the title," can the seventeenth section of the branch road charter be upheld so far as it purports to confer additional franchises upon other railroads?

It seems to me very clear that this question must be answered in the negative.

This charter manifestly embraces two distinct objects; it confers power upon the branch road to construct its line and to lease it, and attempts to enlarge the authority of all other railroad corporations by permitting them to accept a lease. There is no indication in the title that such legislation was contemplated.

The constitutional restraint could not be revoked for a more salutary purpose than to suppress a scheme to amplify corporate powers in a way which effectually conceals the intention to do so. Jersey City v. Elnendorf, 18 Vroom, 293.

So far as the grant of authority to the main line is concerned, the seventeenth section is unconstitutional.

The necessary power to the main line, if it exists, must be sought for in its own charter.

The Camden & Atlantic Road had authority under its charter to build the branch road from Mays Landing to Egg Harbor City, but as before stated did not exercise that right, the branch having been constructed under a charter subsequently granted in 1871.

In Branch v. Jesup, 106 U. S. 468 [Bk. 27, L. ed. 279], Mr. Justice Bradley held that the power granted to a railroad company to construct a particular line of railroad carried with it by implication the right to purchase such line of railroad subsequently built by another corporation.

The doctrine I think is sound, and the right to lease for 999 years would coexist with the right to purchase.

This would establish the power of the main line to enter into the lease, if the right to construct the branch had survived until the lease was executed.

But by reference to the seventeenth section of the charter of the main line (Laws 1852, p. 271) it will be observed that its power in this respect expired by limitation on the first day of August, 1862.

The section reads as follows: "That if the said railroad shall not be completed and in use at the expiration of ten years from the first day of August next ensuing, then and in that case this Act shall be void."

Under the rules which apply to the construction of legislative grants of power, the only interpretation which this language will reasonably bear is that the authority derived through the charter must be exercised within ten years from August 1, 1852, and that such portion of the road as should not then be constructed could not thereafter be built under the granted authority.

In Morris & Essex R. R. Co. v. Central R. R. Co. 2 Vroom, 205, it was expressly adjudged that the power of a corporation to take the land of an individual is determined by the expiration of the term limited for its exercise, after which the right of eminent domain derived from its charter no longer exists in the company.

The branch road was not constructed until the year 1871, nine years after the expiration of the time limited to the main line for the enjoyment and exercise of its granted powers.

At that time the main line, having no longer the right of eminent domain, was without the power to build the branch road, and consequently in the loss of that authority is involved the deprivation of all power which would flow from it.

It must therefore be conceded that the execution of the lease on the part of the Camden & Atlantic Road was ultra vires.

The rule is well settled both in England and in this country that an executory contract, ultra vires, cannot be validated by the acquiescence of every stockholder of the company. It is also generally conceded that an ultra vires contract fully executed cannot be receded from. Field, Corp. §§ 263, 264; Green's Brice, Ultra Vires, 371-373; 1 Wood, Railways, § 171-173; Thomas v. R. R. 101 U. S. 71 [Bk. 25, L. ed. 950].

The courts have differed upon the question whether the plea of ultra vires is available by a corporation in an action brought against it for not performing its side of the contract, where the transaction is complete, and nothing remains to be done by the party seeking relief.

Ashbury R. etc. Co. v. Riche, L. R. 7 H. L. Eng. & Irish App. 658, is the leading English case. The company by its directors entered into an agreement with Riche to give him the construction of a railway from Antwerp to Tournay. After Riche had entered upon the work and executed it in part, the company repudiated the contract as one ultra vires.

Riche then brought an action to recover damages for breach of contract. The case was referred to a barrister to state a special case, and the question of ultra vires was that on which the decision was to depend.

The court was to be at liberty to draw inferences of fact. In the Court of Exchequer two of the three judges were of opinion that the plaintiff should have judgment, and when the case came before the Exchequer Chamber, it was heard before six judges, who being equally divided in opinion, the judgment was affirmed. On appeal to the House of Lords the judgment was reversed, pronouncing the contract ultra vires, and declaring that it was without the power to validate it by their acquiescence.

Mr. Justice Folger, in 78 N. Y. 187, distinguishes the English case, on the ground that the contract with Riche was prohibited by the Act of Parliament. Although the court did not rest its decision on that ground, Lord Chelmsford adverted to that fact to distinguish the cases of Spackman v. Evans [L. R. 3 H. L. Eng. & Ir. App. 171], and Evans v. Smallcomb [Id. 249], where the act of the directors was not prohibited by statute, but was merely not warranted by the deed of settlement of the company.

In affirming the judgment now under review it is not necessary to dissent from the conclusion reached in this case. The agreement with Riche was not fully executed on either side; and it was one in which payment to him of the money he had expended in behalf of the company, under the agreement, would have done complete justice. The suit, being for damages for breach of the contract, would have embraced profits which might have resulted from its execution. If the suit had been maintained it would have given the plaintiff a measure of relief greater than was necessary to restore him to the status he occupied before the contract was made.

In Parish v. Wheeler, 22 N. Y. 494, Chief Justice Comstock in delivering the opinion of the court said that a corporation cannot defend itself against a claim for money paid at its request to one who advanced the price of a steamboat purchased for it, on the ground that the purchase was ultra vires, although the plaintiff, when he paid the money knew all the facts. He declared that corporations, like individuals, in dealing with other parties, must live up to the rules of common honesty.

In the previous case of Bissell v. Michigan Southern, etc., R. R. Co. 22 N. Y. 258, the same learned judge expressed the view that where a corporation has received the consideration of its unauthorized contract and restitution will not do complete justice, the other party may sue directly on the contract.

He said that the plea of ultra vires, according to its just meaning, imports, not that the corporation could not make the unauthorized contract, but that it ought not to have been made. Such a defense therefore rests upon the violation of trust or duty towards the shareholders, and is not entertained where its allowance will do a greater wrong to innocent third parties. The acquiescence of the shareholders in the abuse will prevent the interposition of such a plea.

This case was decided without an expression of opinion of a majority of the court on this point, but in the later case of Kent v. Quicksilver Mining Co. 78 N. Y. 159, Judge Folger delivered the opinion in which the entire court concurred, giving the fullest approval to the views of Chief Justice Comstock in the cases cited. The case was one in which the directors had done an act which the company had no power to do, and in which there was not full execution on both sides. It was not of that class of cases, where an authorized act was executed in an unauthorized manner. The transaction was clearly ultra vires, and in that aspect it was dealt with by the court. The English and American cases were cited and the cause was ably and elaborately argued.

The propositions mentioned by the court were: that acts of a corporation which are not per se illegal, or malum prohibitum, or contrary to public policy, but which are ultra vires, affecting only the interests of stockholders, may be made good by the assent of shareholders, so that strangers to them dealing in good faith with the corporation will be protected in reliance on those acts.

That it needed not that there be an express assent upon the part of shareholders to work an equitable estoppel upon them. When they neglect to promptly and actively condemn the unauthorized act and to seek judicial relief after knowledge of it, their acquiescence will be presumed.

That where the public is concerned to restrain a corporation within the limit of the power given to it by its charter, an assent of the stockholders to the use of unauthorized power will be of no avail.

In Whitney Arms Co. v. Barlow, 68 N. Y. 62, the Court of Appeals of New York enforced the ultra vires contract against the other party where it had been performed on the part of the corporation. In addition to the estoppel, which in that case applied to the person dealing with the company, it is true that none of his rights were infringed by the fact that the transaction was ultra vires the company, and he could not for that reason also interpose that defense. But where shareholders are chargeable with consenting to an understanding, which they have permitted to be executed, they waive their pre-existing rights, which would be affected by the unauthorized act, and become equally subject to the estoppel.

Chief Justice Ruger in Woodruff v. Erie R. Co. 98 N. Y. 609, in an opinion from which there was no dissent, gave his full approval to the previous cases, and held that under an ultra vires lease, the lessee is estopped from questioning its validity in an action to recover the stipulated rent.

In Bradley v. Ballard, 55 Ill. 418, Chief Justice Lawrence said that where the contract is executed, the doctrine of estoppel is applied for the purpose of compelling corporations to be honest, in the simplest and commonest sense of honesty, and after whatever mischief may belong to the performance of the ultra vires act has been accomplished. The case was one in which money was borrowed and notes given by a corporation to enable it to prosecute a business which the lender knew it had no right to undertake.

In Terry v. Eagle Lock Co. 47 Conn. 141, the Eagle Lock Company entered into an unauthorized agreement with another company to purchase its stock, and run it as a separate company.

The Connecticut Court held that after the contract had been executed and the defendant company had been permitted for five years to transact business under the arrangement, it would not be interfered with.
N. J.

In Steamboat Co. v. McOutcheon, 18 Pa. 18, a foreign corporation had taken a lease of real estate without authority in its charter, and in an action for the rent the court enforced the contract.

In Dorst v. Gale, 88 Ill. 187, the Peoria Marine & Insurance Company executed a deed of trust to secure payment of certain bonds upon which the company had received the money. The bill was filed to enjoin the trustee from selling the premises and to declare the deed of trust void. The court refused to allow the plea of ultra vires to prevail, on the ground that a private corporation cannot be heard in such a defense, where the contract has been performed by the other party, and the corporation has had the benefit of the contract and the performance. The language of Chief Justice Lawrence in Bradley v. Ballard, was cited with approbation.

"That it would be pressing the doctrine of ultra vires to an extent that can never be tolerated, even though the lender knew that the corporation was transacting a business beyond its corporate powers, provided the business itself was free from any intrinsic immorality or illegality."

These views were reaffirmed in Ward v. Johnson, 95 Ill. 215, and in Peoria, etc. R. R. Co. v. Thompson, 108 Ill. 187.

In Amerman v. Wiles, 9 C. E. Green, 18, the chancellor refused to entertain the defense of ultra vires to a mortgage executed by a corporation to secure a debt to the defendants.

Thomas v. R. R. Co. 101 U. S. 71 [Bk. 25, L. ed. 950], is relied upon by the plaintiff in error. In that case the lease was held to be ultra vires and therefore void.

Mr. Justice Miller for the court referred to the English cases, and said that although the American cases were conflicting, the preponderance of authority was that an extra vires contract, but partly executed, could not be enforced.

He however held the lease there to be contrary to public policy, for the reason that the lessor company had no power to make the lease, and that thereby it disabled itself to perform the duties which it had undertaken, in accepting its charter from the State, and he therefore treated the contract as one forbidden by the law. He did not question that the lessee would be liable for the rental, for the period during which it had enjoyed the term.

It is to be observed in this case that by the surrender of the lease the lessor was left in his former position, and the rental being paid, no apparent injustice was done.

In the case of Trenton Mutual Life & Fire Ins. Co. v. McKelway, 1 Beas. 133, the defendant was successful in his attempt to recede from his contract, but it was not a suit by one of the parties to the unauthorized contract to enforce it against the other. The proceeding was instituted in behalf of corporators, as to whom the learned jurist who decided the case was careful to observe that it did not appear that they insured upon the faith of the ultra vires contract, or that they became corporators after the contract was entered into or in consequence of it.

In the conflict of judicial decision on this subject, this court may adopt and should adopt the rule which will produce the best results in the administration of justice. In my judgment the true rule is that when the transaction is complete, and the party seeking relief has performed on his part the plea of ultra vires by the corporation which has acquiesced in it is inadmissible in an action brought against it for not performing its side of the contract, in all those instances where the party who has performed cannot upon rescission be restored to his former status.

In the cases maintaining the contrary doctrine the reasoning of the courts has been: 1. That corporators might, by ratifying corporate acts by their acquiescence, indefinitely extend and amplify their granted powers. 2. That consent on the part of those who do an act which they have no power to do cannot make it legal. 3. That to hold that an act performed in executing a void contract makes all its parts valid is to say that the more that is done under an unauthorized contract, the stronger is the claim to its enforcement by the courts.

To the first objection a sufficient answer is that the State may interpose its authority at any time, and compel an abandonment of the act in excess of power, and if need be revoke the charter of the company for its usurpation.

When the State challenges the legality of the transaction, the paramount and only question is whether it has bestowed upon the company the requisite authority to engage in it. When the question arises between the company and the other party to the contract, other legal principles apply in determining whether the contract shall be observed. It will be admitted that where there is an absence of authority on the part of a corporation to do an act, the requisite power cannot be imported into the transaction, either by the consent of stockholders or by the execution of the contract by the other party to the agreement. The contract must necessarily continue to be ultra vires.

No such effect has been attributed in any of the cases to acquiescence or unilateral performance. The basis upon which the enforcement of the contract in such cases rests is that the company is estopped from setting up its own unauthorized act, and its own incapacity to evade performance on its part, after receiving the fruits of the bargain. The power of the company is not amplified, the agreement is none the more legal, in the sense that there was authority to execute it; the court simply refuses to entertain the defense which common honesty forbids the company to make. A man may become bound by the act of an unauthorized agent, and be held liable to the contract made for him, not on the ground that the agent in fact had any authority, but for some conduct on the part of the alleged principal which precludes him from raising the question of authority.

No reason is perceived why the rules of fair dealing which are so rigorously applied to natural persons shall not pertain as strictly to private corporations. No instance is known where a natural person can set up, in his own behalf and for his own advantage, his want of authority to do an act for which he has received the consideration from the other party. Transactions which are immoral, illegal, forbidden by statute, or contrary to public policy, are not embraced in this discussion; they cannot furnish a basis for a legal cause of action.

Why is it that extra vires contracts are recognized as unassailable, and are permitted to stand as the foundation of rights acquired under them, after they have been executed on both sides? Such execution imparts no additional power to the corporate body. It does not transmute the negative into the positive.

The absence of power is as apparent after as before performance. Why is it that corporations are compelled to pay money borrowed in excess of authority, and to pay the stipulated rent for premises unlawfully leased, for the period of occupation?

The law does not imply a contract to pay the bondholders the money thus received. It is illogical to say that the law will imply a contract by the company which it has no power to make for itself. A contract cannot be implied where an express contract cannot be made. The law recognizes the obligation; it precludes or estops the attempt to evade it. Apply to it what legal phrase you may, the underlying principle is that the corporation cannot set up its own infirmity when it is unconscionable to do so. The law forbids the defense on account of the flagrant injustice which would otherwise be done. The question of corporate power is not entertained.

To enable recompense to be had to this extent, the contracts are respected, not that they rest in authority but because good conscience requires it.

How, then, can recognition of the estoppel be denied, where the contract has been executed on the one side, and the party performing cannot upon rescission be restored to his former status? Why should the corporate body be permitted to plead its own wrongful act, and set up its own infirmity as a bar to the recovery by the other party of what it should in right and justice be accorded?

It is true that a person cannot by his own act acquire a right against another; the other must in some way bind himself. The acquiescence in the contract in virtue of which the other party performs, and the acceptance of its benefits, constitute the binding acts and raise the estoppel. I am unable to see how, upon a just conception of the legal principles involved, a different rule can be applied where the corporation has acquiesced in the contract, and the other party by performance on his part has been led into a position from which he cannot be extricated.

Misconception arises from failing to distinguish between those rights which parties acquire as between themselves, and the rule by which corporate authority must be measured and limited, when the State interposes to assert its prerogative. Nor does the liability of the company rest upon the doctrine of ratification. In its ordinary legal acceptance, ratification applies to such contracts as a party has authority to make. Repeated affirmations of a contract, by one who has no authority to enter into it, cannot supply the requisite authority.

But acquiescence in it upon which the other party acts may and does upon settled legal principles preclude the parties from starting the question of power as between themselves. There is in fact a subsisting contract actually executed in due and legal form, which under the rule stated is unimpeachable, except at the instance of the State. It is thus, in legal contemplation, impressed with the vigor and incidents of a valid contract as between the parties, and there is no difficulty in enforcing it in a suit at law.

It is like the case of one who makes in legal form a conveyance of real estate which he has no power to convey, and not like the case where the true owner fails to do some act which may operate as an equitable estoppel to his setting up his title against the person who has been misled by his conduct. In the former case the grantee could maintain an action at law against the grantor, to recover possession of the premises granted. In the latter case the relief must be sought in a court of equity.

But whether the rule which I have formulated shall be applied in this case or not, the judgment below should in my opinion be affirmed, upon the ground that the lease in this case must be regarded as substantially a contract as fully executed on both sides as those unauthorized contracts in which money has been loaned to or work done for a corporation, for which it has issued its bond to the creditor.

The agreement was entered into November 8, 1871, between the Camden & Atlantic Railroad Company and the Mays Landing & Egg Harbor City Railroad Company, in and by which it was agreed that if the latter Company would construct the branch road in a specified manner, on or before the first day of July, 1872, the former Company would guaranty the bonds of the latter Company to the amount of $87,500, to be used in the construction of the said road, and take a lease for the same when completed, for 999 years at a specified rental.

In pursuance of this agreement the bonds were issued by the branch road, and guarantied by the main line. The road was built under the direction of the main line and the lease executed.

Every term of this agreement on both sides has been fulfilled, and the agreement in all respects substantially executed.

The annual report of the directors for the year ending December 31, 1871, recited the terms of this agreement in detail.

Annually thereafter, until 1879, the existence of the lease and the income and disbursements incident to the operation of the branch were duly reported to the stockholders of the main line, during all which time no attempt was made to avoid the lease.

We must impute to the stockholders of the main line utter neglect of their affairs, if we say that they did not have notice of the agreement to build the branch road and of the lease executed in pursuance thereof. The only reasonable inference from the circumstances proven is that they had knowledge of the transaction, and that it was engaged in and consummated with their approval and acquiescence.

This case presents all the features which have led the judicial mind in the cases cited to establish the distinction between executory and executed contracts, in which respect it essentially differs from the case in 101 U. S. This was not as in the case in the federal court, the mere leasing of a road owned by the lessor, where the repudiation of its terms would restore both parties to their former status. Here the lessor built the road, not for itself but at the instance of and for the lessee, with the proceeds of bonds guarantied by the lessee to promote and effect the scheme. The branch road was a mere instrument in the hands of the main line to consummate the undertaking.
N. J.

By the clearly expressed contract of the parties, the road was to be the road of the lessee, the lessor to have only the fixed rentals.

The lessor has fulfilled every term of its agreement, and put the lessee in possession of all that it stipulated for. Nothing remains on the part of the lessor to be done. We must look at the substance of things in applying legal principles. The lease for 999 years is practically an absolute transfer of the road to the lessee, and the rental a mere mode of paying the lessor for the work done and money expended in constructing the road for the lessee, instead of paying a fixed principal sum. The case does not in effect and substance differ from what it would have been if the main line had employed the branch road to construct the branch at a stipulated price, and had issued its bonds in payment after completion and acceptance of the work.

All the cases concede that under such circumstances the contract must be treated as executed.

If the contract had been to compensate the branch road for the work by the bonds of the main line, securing the payment of an annuity for 999 years, and those bonds had been delivered, would it be asserted that it was in substance the less an executed agreement? It is the merest verbiage and form whether it is termed a lease securing a rental for 999 years, or a bond securing an annuity for a like term.

The injustice and inadmissibility of permitting the main line to repudiate its bonds after it has been in occupancy of the road for more than seven years, because the road proved to be unprofitable, would not be more glaring than the inequity of the defense interposed here to the payment of the rental.

The work undertaken to be done was fully executed by the branch road, and the manner in which it is to be paid for is immaterial, so far as the principle involved is concerned. There is no consideration of justice and fair dealing which in the cases referred to led to the rejection of the offer by the corporations, to set up their own incapacity in avoidance of their just obligations, which is not forcibly presented by this case. It cannot in the application of legal principles be dissociated from executed contracts, without disregarding the reasons which lie at the foundation of the rule. If the lease is subject to the defense of ultra vires, the guaranty of the bonds is also incapable of enforcement, and thus loss will likewise fall upon those who advanced money upon the faith of the guaranty to be used under the direction of the lessee and for its purposes.

If such a doctrine is established, who can answer for the solvency of our insurance companies, savings banks, and moneyed institutions? It is a matter of common knowledge that corporate bodies in many instances, through misconception of their powers or otherwise, have exceeded the legal limits of their authority.

An action to enforce against the main line its guaranty of these bonds could not be classed with those cases in which companies have been required to return the money they had received on ultra vires contracts, or to pay rentals for the period of occupancy.

If the invalidity of the contract and the right to repudiate it be conceded, the law cannot raise an implied obligation on the ruins of the contract upon which to found a recovery. The liability of the defendant upon the bonds must rest, if it exists at all, upon the contract of the guaranty. The money was not paid to the main line, but to the obligor of the bonds; and no obligation can be implied on the part of the defendant to repay it. The validity of the guaranty contract must be affirmed, or no action can lie against the defendant.

In the destruction of the contract there must be an entire absence of legal liability.

The legal doctrine which must be invoked to maintain an action by the bondholders on the guaranty will support the judgment in this case.

The doctrine of estoppel by acquiescence, in cases which present the characteristics which appear here, can work no inequity, for it may safely be presumed that the parties to be affected by an engagement are competent to determine what will best promote their own interest, and for any error in judgment they and not others should suffer.

The contrary doctrine, affording so easy an escape from the consequences of their own acts, invites them to overstep the boundaries of their authority.

There can be no dissent from the assertion that good faith and honest dealing unite in forbidding that the defense here set up shall be successfully interposed. In my opinion the law is against it, and the judgment below should be affirmed.

Solomon CLARK, Piff. in Err.,

v.

STATE of New Jersey.

1. On the trial of an indictment for selling lottery policies, the first count of which charged a sale to A, and the second count charged a sale to a person to the grand inquest unknown, the State may ask of A, when on the witness stand, whether she had seen other persons than herself buy of the defendant, and the names of those persons.
2. The State, for the purpose of showing that the defendant would be likely to commit the crime charged, cannot prove that he committed other crimes, although of a like nature.
3. Counsel cannot take the chance of testimony making in his favor and, if it happens to be adverse, then interpose an objection to it.
4. Because a witness has spoken of one transaction, the State is not precluded from proving, by the same or other witnesses, that the offense charged was a different transaction.

5. Where the defendant requested the court to compel the prosecution to elect which of several transactions he would rely upon for a conviction under a count of an indictment, and there was an acquittal under that count, there was no error prejudicial to defendant in the refusal of the court to compel an election.
6. Upon the trial of such indictment, a book called a dream book found upon the premises of defendant, which was used to get numbers out of, and a checkered paper with numbers upon the squares, both of which belonged to the policy business, are admissible in evidence.
7. It was not error to refuse to charge the jury that in order to convict they must find that defendant expressly promised to pay or insure to the purchaser some money or thing in the event of the number being successful. Such promise might be inferred from the general character of the business and the well known course of dealing.

(Decided ——— — 1886.)

ERROR to the Supreme Court, to review a conviction for selling lottery policies. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. J. J. Crandall, for plaintiff in error.

Mr. R. S. Jenkins, for defendant in error.

Reed, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff in error was indicted for selling lottery policies. The first count in the indictment charged that the said Clark did receive from one Fannie Jordan certain money, in consideration of which he unlawfully promised and agreed to pay her a certain sum of money upon the event of her drawing certain numbers in a certain lottery, then set up and opened in certain state lotteries and thereafter drawn in the State.

The second count charges that he received money from a certain person, to the grand inquest unknown, upon a similar understanding.

There was a conviction upon the first count.

The first and second assignments of error are grounded upon the permission granted to the counsel for the State, in the face of an exception, to ask Fannie Jordan, a witness for the State, whether she had seen other persons than herself buy of the defendant; and second, to ask the names of those persons.

The first count, as already stated, charged a sale to Fannie Jordan. She had, when placed upon the witness stand, mentioned the fact of a sale to herself. The State was privileged, under the second count, to also prove a sale to someone other than the witness. For the purpose of showing that there were sales to persons other than her, the first question was relevant; and for the purpose of fixing the identity of the particular person with whom, in respect to such sale, the State wished to fix the defendant under the second count, the second question was equally relevant.

Thus far there was no error.

After the witness had, in answer to the second question, given the name of a Mr. Matthews as one of such purchasers, the State desisted, so far as appears by the record before us, from pursuing the matter of the sale to Matthews. The State then called two other witnesses, Carter and Rice, each of whom swore to a sale to himself. The counsel for the defendant moved to strike out the testimony of Carter, on the ground that it related to a distinct offense from that sworn to by Fannie Jordan.

The testimony of George Rice, so far as it related to the fact of the sale to himself, was not objected to, and the legality of its admission is not before us for review. The error alleged to arise by the admission of the evidence of Carter is that after the State had proven one sale under the second count to one Matthews, it was permitted to prove a second distinct sale to Carter.

The rule of evidence upon which this assignment is founded is entirely settled. As a general rule the State, for the purpose of showing that the defendant would be likely to commit the crime charged, cannot prove that he committed other crimes, although of a like nature. But, recognizing the force of this rule, I yet think that the defendant has not shown error in the record before us.

In the first place, the testimony of Carter, so far as the record informs us, was all in before the objection to it was taken. It does not appear that there was not an opportunity afforded to the counsel for the defendant to have made his objection earlier. The rule is established that counsel cannot take the chance of testimony making in his favor, and if it happens to be adverse, then interpose his objection. There is nothing to show that the defense here was not apprised of the point upon which the witness was about to speak, before his testimony relative to the sale to himself was delivered. The testimony being so in without objection, it cannot be said that the court erred in not striking it out.

In the second place, it cannot be claimed that because a witness has spoken of one transaction, the State is precluded from proving by the same or other witnesses that the offense charged was a different transaction.

It is not unusual in the progress of a trial for a witness to commence to detail the circumstances of a transaction and it turns out to be a different assault or larceny from that charged.

The State has the privilege, as soon as the distinctness of the matter in the mind of the witness from the matter in the indictment is apparent, to abandon the former and proceed to prove the latter. This applies to all cases where the State has unintentionally been placed in this posture. Where it is obvious that the above course of procedure is for the purpose of prejudicing the interests of the defendant, by showing his tendency to commit crime, the court should hold the State to the first offense which it attempts to prove. Upon error, I think this effort upon the part of the State should be apparent, and that it was erroneously countenanced by the trial court, before a reversal can be claimed. There was in the conduct of this trial, undoubtedly, something to show that this erroneous view was adopted by the court, for upon the State resting its case, the counsel for the defendant requested the court to compel the prosecution to elect which of these several transactions he would rely upon for a conviction. The court refused this request. To this refusal an exception was sealed. But it appears that there was no conviction upon the second count, and it was only upon this count that an election as requested was material.

Only one of the transactions, namely: the sale to Fannie Jordan, could refer to the offense charged in the first count, upon which there was a conviction. The others were all referable to the second count, charging the sale to a person unknown, upon which count there was an acquittal. The failure to elect could only have prejudiced the defendant's defense to the latter count, and the jury found that none of the sales except the one to Fannie Jordan were proven, and that was the single transaction sworn to under the first count. There was no error by which the defendant was injured in the refusal to compel an election.

It is also assigned for error that the court, under an exception, admitted in evidence a book proven to have been found upon the premises of the defendant, called a dream book, and also a checkered paper with numbers upon the squares. It was testified that the dream book was used to get numbers out of, and that both it and the checkered paper belonged to the policy business.

I think that this evidence was admissible, in support of the testimony of the witnesses who swore that they purchased numbers, as tending to show the character of the business carried on in the place where the numbers were purchased, and in which business the numbers were used, and so tending to give significance to the act of purchasing the numbers.

It is lastly urged that the refusal to charge that the jury must find that the numbers were understood by the parties to be connected with some scheme of chance, and that defendant expressly promised to pay or insure to the purchaser some money or thing, in the event of the numbers aforesaid being successful in some way in such scheme of chance, was error.

The request to charge that there must have been an express promise to pay upon a chance event was too broad. The jury had the right to infer the promise, if the general character of the business in which the numbers were bought was shown to be such as to support the inference. The purport of the transaction could be as clearly evidenced by a uniform and well known course of dealing between the vendor and the purchasers of numbers as if there was an express stipulation connected with each sale. If by such course of dealing with his patrons the defendant held out to the purchaser of numbers the hope of gaining something upon the occurrence of a chance event, the transaction is within the statute. This disposes of all the assignments of error.

The judgment of the Supreme Court is affirmed.

For affirmance—The Chancellor, Dixon, Knapp, Magle, Reed, Brown, Clement, Cole—7.

For reversal—Paterson—1.

George G. LENNIG, Appt.,

v.

OCEAN CITY ASSOCIATION, Respt.

1. Whenever the owner of a tract of land lays it out into blocks and lots upon a map, and designates on the map certain portions of the land to be used as streets, parks, squares, or in other modes of a general nature calculated to give additional value to the lots delineated thereon, and then conveys those lots by reference to the map, he becomes bound to the grantees not to use the portions so devoted to the common advantage otherwise than in the manner indicated.
2. Distinct and independent private rights of such character, in other lands of the grantor than those granted, may be acquired by implied covenant as appurtenant to the premises granted, although they are not of such a nature as to give rise to public rights by dedication.
3. Where a portion of land has been thus laid down on a map for a camp ground, and lots sold by reference to such map, the use of such camp ground for another purpose, as, for the erection of cottages, may be enjoined at the suit of the purchaser who has bought some of the lots.

(Decided ——— 1886.)

APPEAL from a decree of the Chancellor, dissolving a preliminary injunction and dismissing a bill in equity to restrain defendant from leasing certain lands or exclusively appropriating the same. Reversed.

The Chancellor's opinion is reported in 8 Cent. Rep. 68.

The facts are fully stated in the opinion of the court.

Mr. J. C. Leaming, for appellant.

Mr. D. J. Pancoast, for respondent.

Dixon, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant is a corporation organized under the laws of this State for the avowed object of "establishing a summer seaside resort, founded on Christian principles, and affording religious privileges as well as healthful recreation."

For this purpose it acquired a tract of land upon the Atlantic coast, consisting of three sections, distinguished by the letters A, B and C. It caused section A to be plotted upon a map or plan into rectangular blocks divided by Atlantic, Ocean, Wesley, Central, Asbury and West Avenues, running nearly parallel with the shore, and by streets numbered from first to ninth, inclusive, running at right angles with the avenues.

These blocks, except the five which lie between Fifth and Sixth Streets, were divided into lots numbered on the plan consecutively from 1 to 995. Of the five excepted blocks the two nearest the ocean and the one furthest from it appear on the map as blank rectangles, the other two form a square bounded by Fifth and Sixth Streets and Wesley and Asbury Avenues, and intersected by what seem to be footways leading to an inner space marked "auditorium."

On May 26, 1880, the defendant held a public sale of lots laid down on this map, before and at which were distributed similar maps, on which, however, the lots were not numbered but only outlined, and the blocks between Fifth and Sixth Streets appeared to be occupied by trees, the square before mentioned being designated "camp ground." At this sale the complainant bought a lot on the southeasterly corner of Sixth Street and Wesley Avenue, which was conveyed to him as lot No. 696 on the map first mentioned.

Subsequently, in July, 1880, and May, 1881, he purchased from the Association lots Nos. 700 and 702 on the same plan, thus securing a plot having 105 feet on Sixth Street and 150 feet on Wesley Avenue; and shortly afterwards he erected thereon a summer dwelling.

Early in 1881 the Association published its first annual report, in which is stated:

"The space allotted to the encampment is 500 feet wide, from the thoroughfare to the ocean, with plenty of tenting ground."

This description applies to the entire space between Fifth and Sixth Streets.

In its second annual report, published in 1882, one page contains a diagram showing the square above referred to substantially as in the original map, and also the adjacent portions of the blocks upon the east and west of that square, the west block being marked "grove" and the east "park."

In the fall of 1882 the defendant publicly announced:

"After an experiment of two summers with canvas tents, the Association has taken a new departure. The two squares of ground lying between Wesley Avenue and the beach and between Fifth and Sixth Streets, reserved for tenting purposes, will be laid off in lots suitable for the erection of small, neat cottages, similar to those in use at Pitman Grove and elsewhere. The Association does not propose at present to erect the cottages, but simply to lease the lots for small rent yearly, with privilege of ten years."

The complainant insists that the execution of this scheme will be in derogation of his property rights, and will materially interfere with the enjoyment of his dwelling, and he prays that it may be prevented by injunction. On final hearing the injunction, which the chancellor had at first granted, was dissolved, and the bill dismissed. Hence this appeal.

Whenever the owner of a tract of land lays it out into blocks and lots upon a map, and on that map designates certain portions of the land to be used as streets, parks, squares, or in other modes of a general nature calculated to give additional value to the lots delineated thereon, and then conveys those lots by reference to the map, he becomes bound to the grantees not to use the portions so devoted to the common advantage otherwise than in the manner indicated. This principle has been asserted most frequently for the purpose of supporting dedications to uses strictly public; but it is by no means necessary that such a use should be created.

As was said by this court in Booram v. North

Hudson Co. R. R. Co. 18 Stew. 557, with regard to the dedication of a highway by means of conveyances to private persons which referred to a proposed street over other lands of the grantor: "The private rights of the grantees precede the public right, and are the source from which the public right springs. By such conveyances the grantees are regarded as purchasers, by implied covenant, of the right to the use of the street as a means of passage to and from their premises, as appurtenant to the premises granted; and this private right of way in the grantees is wholly distinct from, and independent of the right of passage to be acquired by the public."

From this doctrine, it of course follows that such distinct and independent private rights, in other lands of the grantor than those granted, may be acquired by implied covenant as appurtenant to the premises granted, although they are not of such a nature as to give rise to public rights by dedication. The object of the principle is, not to create public rights but to secure to persons purchasing lots under such circumstances those benefits, the promise of which it is reasonable to infer has induced them to buy portions of a tract laid out on the plan indicated. Clark v. Elizabeth, 8 Vroom, 120; 11 Vroom, 173; Bayonne v. Ford, 14 Vroom, 292.

The inquiry now presented therefore must be, not whether the Association has dedicated the blocks between Fifth and Sixth Streets to public use, but whether it has entered into an implied covenant with the complainant not to use those blocks in the mode now proposed, and has granted to him, as appurtenant to his lots, the benefits to be derived from such restriction.

The circumstances lead us to answer this inquiry in the affirmative.

The map or plan according to which the complainant's deeds were made, interpreted in the light of the object of the Association as avowed in its articles of incorporation, indicates that the blocks between Fifth and Sixth Streets were not to be divided into lots; that the square between Wesley and Asbury Avenues was to be used for the auditorium; and that the blocks between Wesley Avenue and the sea were to be kept open. Taking into view also the plan circulated at the sale, in May, 1880, and the published reports of the Association, it further appears that these blocks and squares were to form the camp ground, reserved for religious services and tenting purposes.

The testimony shows that at the time the complainant bought his lots it was the usage among associations similar to the defendant to reserve, around their buildings erected for worship, an open space whereon those assembled for the campmeeting dwelt in tents during its continuance. These tents were, as the term imports, of canvas, sometimes with a wooden kitchen attached; but the erections were all of a temporary nature and were removed as soon as the meeting ended. This no doubt was the character of the use to which the defendant devoted the ground now in controversy; it was to be a camp for the purposes of a religious campmeeting, where the sojourners would remain a short time under the shelter of tents or other such temporary structures.

N. J.

It is obvious that the use now contemplated is a very different one, and very differently affecting the complainant's property. Instead of a camp, occupied for a few weeks only by tents which will scarcely at all interfere with the prospect or the breeze over an open space 600 feet wide extending to the ocean, the ground is to be divided into small lots, on which permanent buildings are to be constructed, of such height and dimensions as may suit the taste of the occupant, and shutting in the complainant's dwelling to an outlook over a fifty foot street. The contrast between the two situations covers much of the attractiveness of a seaside resort.

If the present scheme of the defendant be carried out, it is certain that the complainant will lose a great portion of those advantages which the Association impliedly promised him as inducements to the purchase of its lots. Of this he has a right to complain, and it is no answer to say that the use of tents at these campmeetings is now generally abandoned; that frequenters demand the accommodations of more durable places of abode, and the Association must meet this demand or suspend its operations. Such considerations do not impair the binding force of bargains.

In our judgment, the injunction prayed for should be granted, and to this end the decree below should be reversed.

Decree unanimously reversed.

Catharine CADMUS et al., Exrs., Plffs. in Err.,

v.

Patrick FAGAN.

1. Where a city charter, after prescribing the mode in which commissioners of assessment shall make up and present to the board of councilmen an assessment for a local improvement, declares that "if said board of councilmen shall, by resolution, confirm said assessment, it shall constitute a lien,"—the lien of the assessment attaches at the date of its confirmation.
2. If after an assessment has become a lien it is replaced by a new assessment, without disturbing the improvement, the new assessment relates back to the original one and becomes a lien as of the date of the original assessment.
3. Where the original assessment was in existence at the time of the execution of a deed containing a covenant against incumbrances, such covenant was broken as soon as made, and the grantee is entitled to actual damages, measured by the amount paid by him on the new assessment.

(Decided — — 1886.)

ERROR to the Supreme Court, to review a judgment in favor of the plaintiff in an action in covenant. Affirmed.

Reported below, 17 Vroom, 441.

The action was brought to recover damages for breach of covenant contained in a deed to certain premises at Bayonne, Hudson County, made September 26, 1872, by Richard Cadmus, deceased, represented by the plaintiffs in error, to the defendant in error, who is the grantee.

The covenant on which a breach is alleged is the usual one contained in warranty deeds, showing the property to be free and clear of all taxes, assessments and other incumbrances.

The municipal authorities of Bayonne, on February 24, 1871, directed by ordinance the opening of Avenue C, from North Avenue to Morris Canal. The final assessment map and the report of the commissioners were approved and confirmed by the city council, September 28, 1871.

By order of the supreme court, November 12, 1877, the assessment was set aside as to some of the property owners along the line of the improvement; and by a subsequent order, June 14, 1878, made in the same proceedings and on motion of the defendant, the city, it was set aside as to all persons affected thereby, and commissioners were appointed by the court to make a reassessment of the cost of the improvement.

Mr. Peter Bently, for plaintiffs in error.

Messrs. Parmlly, Olendorf & Fisk, for defendant in error:

The action of the municipal authorities on September 28, 1871, made the assessment a lien upon the premises of the plaintiff from that date.

Act to Incorporate the City of Bayonne, § 58, P. L. 1869, p. 371.

This assessment was a lien on the premises at the time of the execution of the deed by Richard Cadmus to the plaintiff; and therefore the covenant as to incumbrances was broken as soon as made.

Garrison v. Sandford, 7 Halst. 261; Stewart v. Drake, 4 Halst. 189; Blackie v. Hudson, 117 Mass. 181; White v. Stretch, 7 C. E. Green, 76; Cross v. Hayes, 16 Vroom, 12.

Magie, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The conclusions reached by the supreme court in its advisory opinion were: 1, that the covenant on which the action was brought was broken when made, by the existence of the original assessment unpaid; and 2, that the plaintiff below (the defendant in error) was entitled to recover not merely nominal but actual damages, measured by the amount agreed to have been paid on the assessment imposed after the vacation of the original assessment.

The correctness of the first conclusion has not been and cannot be disputed.

The second conclusion is the point of contest and error complained of in this case.

In that respect the result reached so accords with my view of the case that I should be content to vote to affirm this judgment without comment, but for the fact that it appears to have been grounded on reasons with which I find myself unable to agree.

The question presented for solution related to the status of an assessment imposed after the vacation of a former assessment. If the reimposed assessment became an incumbrance only from its determination or confirmation, then only nominal damages were recoverable, for the incumbrance which caused the breach had been wholly vacated. But if the reimposed assessment related back as an incumbrance to a time prior to the covenant, then its payment was the payment of an incumbrance covered by the covenant, and the amount paid would measure the damages to be recovered.

The supreme court adopted the last mentioned proposition; but in the opinion it was declared that the reimposed assessment related back as an incumbrance, not to the date of the first assessment but to the time when the work for which the assessments were made was completed. Cases from the courts of Massachusetts were cited and relied on as sustaining that doctrine, and it was on this ground that it was adjudged that the payment of the last assessment was the payment of an incumbrance existing at the date of the covenant.

It is from this portion of the opinion that I feel constrained to dissent. To adopt the doctrine there enunciated, as establishing the correct rule for determining the time when the lien of such assessments attaches to land, under the provisions of such charters as that of the City of Bayonne, would in my judgment be opposed to a proper construction of those provisions.

It is completely settled that taxes, whether general or specially imposed by reason of peculiar benefits conferred by a public improvement, become liens on land only by virtue of express legislation. The power to impose the lien necessarily includes the power to limit its extent and duration. Cooley, Tax, 305; Heine v. Levee Comrs. 19 Wall. 655 [86 U. S. bk. 22, L. ed. 225]; State, Society, v. Paterson, 18 Vroom, 615; Johnson v. Van Horn, 16 Vroom, 136.

The first question, therefore, must be: What has the Legislature prescribed? The legislative intent to impose the tax as a lien must appear; the extent and duration thereof may be expressly declared, or, in the absence of express declaration, inferred from the language of the Acts or their general scope.

The charter of Bayonne, after prescribing the mode in which the commissioners of assessment should make up and present to the board of councilmen an assessment of this sort, declares that "If said board of councilmen shall, by resolution, confirm said assessment, it shall constitute a lien on the property assessed for the amount of such assessment." Laws of 1869, p. 371, § 58.

In this respect, the provisions of this charter are similar to those of other municipalities, and identical with many.

Applying to such clauses the ordinary rules of construction, I think we are driven to the conclusion that the legislative intent is thereby, either expressly or by a persuasive and necessary implication, shown to be that the lien of the assessment should attach at the date of its confirmation. In the face of this expression, I conceive it to be impossible to hold that the time when the lien should attach was left to an implication to be deduced from the general scope of the legislation. If left to such a deduction, it seems to me we should be forced to hold that the lien attached when the work was ordered to be done, rather than when it was completed. But as the declaration of the charter is that when an assessment shall be confirmed it shall constitute a lien, in my opinion we are not left to inferences from the general scope of the Act; but the enactment itself fixes the date at which the lien is to attach as that of the original confirmation of the assessment.

This construction, it is not amiss to note, establishes a convenient rule capable of practical application. The date when the lien attaches is, under this rule, discoverable by record evidence. Under the rule stated by the supreme court it could only be fixed by parol evidence, which, in respect to the completion of the work, might be uncertain or even variant.

Besides, the construction I put on these provisions has I think been generally adopted in practice by a consensus of the profession. To overthrow it would in my judgment be disastrous. It would operate to unsettle titles, and would vastly increase litigation on covenants of this sort, if the time at which these liens attach themselves to lands is open to the uncertainty of parol testimony.

My conclusion is that the lien of the original assessment in this case attached to the land, not when the work was completed but when the assessment was confirmed.

Upon this view, the conclusion of the supreme court may be supported in accord with principles already established.

Assessments of this sort have been treated as adjudications having the force of judgments, so long as unmodified and unvacated, in respect to moneys paid thereon. Davenport v. City of Elizabeth, 12 Vroom, 362; Campion v. City of Elizabeth, 12 Vroom, 355; Jersey City v. Green, 18 Vroom, 627.

In Campion v. Elizabeth, supra, the action was to recover money paid on an assessment which had been afterwards vacated. But it appeared that after the vacation, a new assessment had been imposed to as great an amount. The circuit court had denied the right of recovery, holding that the proceedings to assess and reassess were a unit, resulting in the substitution of the new assessment for the former one. The case was affirmed in this court, upon grounds which indicated, although they did not require, a concurrence with the view expressed in the circuit.

In Cross v. Hayes, 16 Vroom, 12, the supreme court held that an assessment of this sort was a mere determination of the amount which, on the basis of benefits conferred, should be returned to the public, and that an unsuccessful effort to levy this form of tax might be followed by a successful one, truly measuring the burden which the land should bear and which should take the place of the former one. This case was affirmed in this court, upon the opinion read in the supreme court. Cross v. Hayes, 16 Vroom, 565.

So it has been held that in making a reassessment the assessing officers should determine the liability as of the date of the first assessment. Johnston v. Trenton, 14 Vroom, 166.

In this court, in a suit to recover the excess of a payment made on an assessment afterwards vacated, over the amount of a reassessment, it was held that the amount of the reassessment was to be charged against the payment as of the date of the first assessment, and interest could be recovered only on the balance. Jersey City v. O'Callaghan, 12 Vroom, 849.

From these cases it appears that proceedings of this kind have a sort of unity. When an assessment is made, it becomes a lien, if the statute so directs, at a time fixed by the confirmation or other similar act. If thereafter proceedings are taken resulting in affirming, or, at least, in not disturbing the foundation of the assessment, viz.: the making of the improvement, but disaffirm and annul the adjudication fixing the amount to be imposed, then if a reassessment is provided for, the latter (although separated from the first assessment in point of time) is, in intentment of the law, a single procedure with the former, and a mere revision of the adjudication. It relates back to the original assessment and takes practical effect, as to liability, as to drawing interest, and in my judgment as to becoming a lien, as of the date of the original assessment.

So in the case before us, the original assessment adjudged that the expenses of the improvements were to be paid in respect to specified property in specified amounts, which, on its confirmation, became liens. When this adjudication was vacated the property was not exonerated from a liability, but remained liable to the true amount and proportion of the expenses when imposed in the legal continuance of the proceeding. When the true amount was determined it became a charge as of the date of the original assessment.

The case of White v. Stretch, 7 C. E. Green, 76, presented the same question now before us. The conclusion reached by Chancellor Zabriskie accords with the views here expressed. He says:

"But the assessment was merely the mode of ascertaining the share of the cost of the sewer to be paid by these lots; they were liable to pay for the cost of the sewer from the time the proceedings were completed by the confirmation of the first assessment. That liability was the real incumbrance. It existed at the date of the deed, and it was never for a moment removed; the same judgment which set aside the assessment, affirmed the proceedings which created the incumbrance, and affirmed the continuance of that incumbrance by appointing commissioners to ascertain the proportion which each lot should pay. If, then, the cost of this sewer was an incumbrance on these lots at the date of the deed, and that incumbrance has never been removed, but the only change has been that the assessment of the amount which is the share of these lots has been changed, the conclusion is inevitable that White is liable to relieve the premises from it."

The present chancellor has presented a similar view of the subject. Commissioners v. Linden, 18 Stew. 27.

It is on the grounds above stated that I approve the result arrived at in the supreme court, and shall vote to affirm the judgment before us on this writ of error.

For affirmance—The Chancellor, Dixon, Magie, Van Syckel, Brown, Clement, Cole, McGregor, Paterson—9.

For reversal—None.

Lehman MOORE, Appt.,

v.

Robert B. S. DIAMENT et al., Repts.

Where a bill is filed to restrain the sale, under execution, of personal property, and upon the application of the complainant the property is delivered to him by order of the court, with leave to use it, on his giving bond to return it when ordered by the court, the court has the power, on dismissing the bill, to order that the complainant return the property or account for the value of it, less loss, if any, by unavoidable accident.

(Decided ——— — 1886.)

APPEAL by complainant from a decree of the Court of Chancery, in favor of defendants in a suit to settle the rights of creditors of Horace Hammell and to enjoin a sale. Reversed.

The decree appealed from was advised by Vice Chancellor Bird, who filed the following conclusions, wherein the facts appear:

This suit is instituted to settle the rights of certain creditors of Hammell to the goods and chattels named in the bill. The complainant claims them under a bill of sale, and the defendants, Diamant, the First National Bank of Camden and Benner, claim them under levies upon executions issued upon confessed judgments. The dealings between the complainant and Hammell, which ripened into the bill of sale, will appear in the recitals hereafter. It will be quite difficult to so formulate a statement as to fully express all that may be justly implied from the transactions between these parties, Moore & Hammell.

The defendant Hammell was a drayman, owning fourteen drays, and generally twenty-four to twenty-six horses and harness, and other things necessary to carry on such business.

Moore went into Hammell's employ in the year 1871. He then had, or he claims he had, $500. This he placed in the hands of his brother, but when he cannot tell. Hammell paid Moore $15 a week for his services from 1871 to the year 1879. During this interval Moore claims that he made $2,400 by investments in Pennsylvania railroad securities, and $800 out of some oil stock.

During all the period from 1871 to January 1, 1879, Moore made out bills for Hammell, and after the second year, in addition, would take orders to the foreman and occasionally collect a bill. That is all he did. After January 1, 1879, he says:

"I did the same, but worked harder, because I felt that I had more responsibility, and that I was doing that for myself, and not Mr. Hammell only."

Moore says that on January 1, 1879, he and Hammell entered into a copartnership in this dray business. He says that he proposed the partnership to Hammell, and asked him if it would be agreeable, and that Hammell replied:

"That it would be agreeable, and that he would be very glad to, as he had other business to attend to; that he and Mr. Brown expected, if they could get a suitable place, to go into the wholesale grocery business, and his time would be so taken up that it would be necessary for someone equally interested to look after the business; so, under the former arrangement, I agreed to go in with him; I was to pay him $5,000 for the one half interest in the business; I paid him $3,000 in cash, and the balance out of the profits of the business."

There was no estimate made of the value of the horses, mules and wagons. Moore says that Hammell said that they might not be worth that much money, but "he considered the business worth some good will, not stating any amount." He produced a receipt signed by Hammell, dated January 10, 1879, for $500, "on account of half interest in teams and business, consisting of twenty-four horses, fourteen wagons and all double heavy harness." He says he paid $1,500 on the 13th of the same month, and $1,000 on the 18th. For the last two payments he took no receipts. He says that a little over $1,800 was paid out of the profits of the business for the first year, ending December 31, 1879. The balance, about $186, was paid out of the profits of the business the following year, leaving a balance due him of over $2,000.

It appears that Moore had the whole $2,000, which comprised the first two payments by him, at the time when he made the first payment of $500; he had it in his house and had had it there four or five years; and I infer he also had by him $300 additional, for he says this, too, he had had by him three or four years, and had kept it in the cellar. According to his statement, then, he really had in his own possession and unemployed about $2,300 at the time he made the first payment of $500, yet he only paid the $500. Then in a few days he paid $1,500 more and takes no receipt, still retaining $300 of his funds unemployed, and afterwards adds that sum to $700 which he says he borrowed and paid to Hammell without taking any receipt.

This is the substance of the statement made by the complainant, showing how the copartnership was formed and how he paid the alleged consideration.

According to his statement he continued to do about the same work after the formation of the copartnership that he did before, when he only received for the like services $15 per week.

It is important to observe that there was nothing said or done to indicate to the public that the complainant had any interest in the business. The business had been carried on for years in the name of Hammell, and Moore says the agreement was that it should still be carried on in his name. And it was so carried on in every transaction except in five or six cases; and in those, from all that I can gather, the transactions were exclusively with Hammell himself, so that the public was not informed of the act done. These were dealings between Hammell on the one hand and a firm of which Hammell was a member, by the name of Hammell & Mellor. This firm sold to Hammell certain goods, and the bills were receipted by Hammell in the name of Hammell & Moore. These receipts were given towards the close of the copartnership and after the formation thereof about two years.

Moore says that it was agreed that the business should be carried on in the name of Hammell, because Hammell did not want a neighbor by the name of Marshall to know that he had taken a partner, since Marshall himself had been anxious to be a partner with Hammell; and yet Moore leaves the impression that Ham-mell told Marshall of the partnership in a few days.

I cannot but conclude if a partnership was formed, or if Moore had any interest whatever in the goods and the business, that it was the intention of the parties to keep the partnership, or such other interest as may have been created, a secret.

Besides the above fact that the parties had an understanding that it should not be published, it is very suggestive that they kept no books of account. We have here two men doing business as partners, the profits of which are several thousand dollars a year, carrying it on in the name of one, without the slightest evidence to show Moore's interest in those profits in case of his death, and without the slightest evidence to show his interest in goods and chattels except the receipt for $500. And in case of Hammell's death Moore had nothing by which he could establish any payment of interest beyond the $500.

I say there were no books of account; but it is said as between themselves they have the equivalent of books in the numerous slips of paper produced. Moore says that Hammell kept all the transactions of the concern on slips of paper, by which a settlement was made, and the balance due to the one or the other ascertained and exhibited on the paper. He produces a large number of such slips or bits of paper, some of them being note paper of the ordinary size, while some of them are pieces of blank leaves of day books or ledgers, two or three or four inches in width, while some others are plain bits about three or four inches square. In some instances the whole week's work is presented on a single piece and in many on two or more. It is due to complainant that one or two of these be given. • I will copy exhibit No. 8, which was offered to show the transactions for the week ending February 14, 1880. On one side of a half sheet of note is:

"February 14th, 1880.

Theodore.....	$ 7 00
Andrew.....	6 00
Shaffer.....	3 25
Blange.....	8 00
Dwaul.....	9 00
Johnson.....	9 50
Brown.....	8 00
Jackson.....	12 00
Gale.....	10 00
Chick.....	10 00
Wolfe.....	10 00
Stanton.....	15 00
Harris.....	15 00
Martin.....	10 00
J. Wood.....	8 00
	3 00
A. Jenkins.....	10 00

$158 75

February 14th."

On the other side is:

Wages.....	$158 75
B. & P.....	92 14
Camden.....	98 25
Carson.....	46 94
H. H.....	15 00
Atlantic.....	18 00

L. Moore.....	$ 5 00
L. Moore.....	112 60
Sailor.....	90 58
Moore.....	15 96
Moore.....	25 88
Moore.....	1 50

$251 47

Stanton.....	$186 18
--------------	----------

$ 40 69

226 82

H. H.....	$5 50
-----------	--------

$488 79

419 08

Drew.....	$64 71
-----------	---------

24 71

H. H.....	40 00
-----------	-------

John.....	6 00
-----------	------

Due from H. H.....	$46 00
--------------------	---------

February 14th."

The statement for the next week, being exhibit No. 9, is on two slips or bits of paper. The general characteristics are like those given above. In the list of items like the one given above, commencing with "wages," is the additional item "hay, $5.04," and "discount, 60," and "Seifert, $15." The totals are thus used producing such balance as appears:

Moore.....	$267 75
------------	----------

Stanton.....	69 60
--------------	-------

$437 85

P. D. H.....	3 11
--------------	------

$440 46

458 11

Due H. H.....	$20 76
---------------	---------

8 11

$17 65

3 71

$18 94

February 21st.

Exhibit No. 10 is quite similar. Under the list beginning with "wages" there is an item of "discount, $1.65." The totals are thus used:

$598 18

528 80

$73 38

Tickets.....	12 50
--------------	-------

$60 88

Cash.....	30 00
-----------	-------

Due from H. H.....	$80 00
--------------------	---------

Less.....	5 00
-----------	------

$25 00

Less tickets.....	25 00
-------------------	-------

February 28th.

Exhibit No. 12 closes thus:

	$585 46
	508 82
Cash	$26 64
without more, not saying to whom the balance is due, or from whom.
On exhibit No. 13, under the list commencing with "wages" as above, is this item, "cash, $25.25;" additional. The balance due on this paper is expressed thus:
Due H. H.	$88 87
March 22d, ticket	12 50
	$96 87
Less Benner's check	84 60
	$61 77

Exhibit No. 14 has some characteristics of its own. In the list beginning with "wages" is "discount, $1.37," and "cash, $28." Then the balance is attained by these figures:

	$827 24
	490 48
	$336 76
Seifert	100 00
	$236 76
Bills	71 24
	$165 52
October 2d	61 71
	$108 75
October 6th	91 75
	$195 50
Due from H. H.	6 98
Ridgeway
	$202 48
Due from H. H.	15 00
Less cash
	$187 48

After the first few exhibits, the letter "C," appears in the list, with the item "wages," with small items, as "15.48," opposite, and also the word "drawer" in with other items of a few dollars (less than $15) up to $30, $40, and still higher.

I have presented these statements and results of statements for the purpose of showing why I have said that it seemed to be the desire to keep the relations of these parties a secret, in case there really was any other relation between them than master and servant or employer and employed. I can discover nothing on any of these papers (except the five or six above referred to), that in the least distinguishes the complainant from any other man named on them.

All inferences and deductions which are sought to be made in favor of Moore can as surely and as strongly be made in favor of Sailor, or Stanton, or Wood, or Martin, or Wolfe, or any other man who is named. The fact that in the footings and balances it is said "due from H. H." or "due to H. H." raises no presumption whatever that the balance was due to Moore or from Moore rather than to or from some one else. Indeed, the account being with Moore, as he claims, and he being present, as he swears, I think, if there can be a presumption of any kind from the papers themselves, such presumption inevitably is against the complainant.

Moore swears he became a partner in the business, and yet to all the world, as I read the exhibits, amounting to nearly one hundred, he acted simply as an agent or employee, as did Sailor, Stanton, Williams, Coffin and all the rest. He seems to have been on precisely the same level with them. There is nothing to show that he exercised any other rights or authority than they did. His name always appears on these papers in the same category with theirs, and I think in no instance otherwise. Take, for example, exhibit No. 24, and we have these words and figures:

Moore	$567 97
Sailor	288 73
John	710 82
	$1,561 51
	1,527 66

Due from H. H. $39 85

Due from H. H., May 29th $1,097 96

Due from H. H., May 29th $1,137 81
Less for tickets

14th and 17th, H. $1,112 81
June 5th, 1880, June 12th, due
H. H. 188 71

Due from H. H. $924 10

What is there in this to show to whom these sums or any of them were due? Moore was by and often must have seen Hammell write "due H. H.," or "due from H. H.," but he never had him write "due to L. Moore," although his name appeared, as given above, on every paper as an agent or employee collecting large sums of money every week and paying them over, without protest, to Hammell. If Moore was a partner or had any other interest in the business such as the above named receipt would imply, there is no reconciling his conduct, except upon the theory that the parties were careful to conceal the fact from public view, for some unlawful purpose.

Again, and on the same point, Moore says that it was part of the agreement that each should have $15 per week for his services. He says that he got his $15 out of the money which Hammell placed in the drawer. Hammell, however, charged the business with his own $15 per week in a distinct manner, as appears on the papers, while it nowhere appears that Moore was paid one cent. In many instances it appears that different sums, from less than $15 to much above, went into the drawer; while in many others it does not appear that any at all did.

All this, perhaps, does not prove that there was no partnership or other relation between Moore and Hammell, beyond master and servant, but it does convince me that there was a studied effort on the part of Hammell to conceal that relation, and that Moore most fully assented thereto. There must have been some design in all this, hostile to creditors and obnoxious to good morals.

Who can believe that Moore would have allowed Hammell to retain the title to at least $5,000 of property in his own individual name and to deal with it as his own, and also to retain for so long a period of time the entire profits of the business in his own hands, without the slightest acknowledgment that would avail him in law or equity, unless there was a motive underlying all, that would not bear the light? It seems to me that every disinterested mind must incline to the conviction that Hammell designed mischief and that Moore was in collusion with him.

Look, again, at one of the five or six bills of goods above alluded to, and I think the conviction of illegal designs will be strengthened. It is true the complainant points to them as full proof of the partnership. I point to them for a different purpose, to show the collusion, to show that Moore knew of the concealment and must have known it was for some unworthy purpose. This bill, exhibit No. 79, is dated June 30, 1881, and reads:

"Messrs. Hammell & Moore, Bought of Hammell & Mellor."

Then follows a bill of meal and bran amounting to $114.95, and the words "Rec'd payment, Hammell & Mellor."

The names "Hammell & Moore" and "Hammell & Mellor" are in Hammell's handwriting. The financial crisis in Hammell's affairs was approaching. He wanted a partnership, it may be, but for a purpose. He did not want it known. Hence "Hammell & Moore" deal with "Hammell & Mellor" by the hand of Hammell alone; but with all the rest of the world Hammell deals, not as Hammell & Moore, but as Hammell alone.

As to the same bills made out by Hammell to "Hammell & Moore" and receipted by him in the name of "Hammell & Mellor," it is quite worthy of attention that they are inconsistent with the fact in this: that Moore swears the business was to be carried on in the name of "Hammell," and not "Hammell & Moore." According to Moore's statement it was expressly agreed that his name should not appear.

It will be seen that I have not sought to determine whether or not a partnership was formed between Hammell & Moore, but rather to determine the effect of their relations to each other upon the rights of creditors. I am considering the rights of the respective creditors of Hammell, including Moore as a creditor. And in this case I think it matters not whether Moore be considered a creditor of Hammell as an individual or of Hammell as the representative of Hammell & Moore.

Thus matters stood until the year 1881 was well advanced. Hammell was, to all outward appearances, dealing with the world as he had been for very many years previously. So far as the world knew of Moore, he was the servant of Hammell, as he had been for seven years anterior to the year 1879.

On November 12, 1881, Moore says he and Hammell had a final settlement, and that his half of the profits was $3,310.59, which was reduced, by the discovery of an error, to $2,958.47. This included all the business for the year 1880 to November 12, 1881. Moore had received nothing but his $15 per week. Moore says:

"I then told him if he would buy me out I would sell out to him, clear and clean, for just what money I had in the concern, and would run the business on a salary that might be agreed on between him and me until such time as he was able to take charge of the business himself; if he wanted me no longer, I would step out without hard feelings towards him; he said no, he would prefer to have things continue as they were, and have Mr. Taylor draw up the proper papers of settlement; he did not seem to want to do that; I then wanted him to consent to give me a first class mortgage for all money that was due me, in the place of the bill of sale spoken of; he did not seem to want to do that; I then proposed for him to give me a judgment bond, and that I would not push him if he should get in a tight place, as long as no one else did; if no one else ever pushed him, I never would; he didn't seem to be willing to do that; so he agreed to give me the bill of sale as before stated."

He cannot give the date of this conversation, except that it was the latter part of November. He says:

"I was anxious to have this settlement made because Mr. Hammell's health was bad, and I thought he was liable to die at most any time."

He also says that he saw Hammell about November 21, and adds:

"It had been intimated to me, just the week previous, that he had some financial difficulty of some kind; I asked if it was so, and he said it was not; that he had no trouble of any kind, either financially or otherwise; that he didn't know of anything to give him any trouble in that direction."

However, Moore went to Hammell's physician, and inquired about his health, and learned that:

"Hammell appeared to be a man with a terrible weight on his mind of some kind, and asked me (Moore) if I knew of anything that would probably worry Hammell relative to his business, between him and me, or anything else; I told him I knew of nothing that would be likely to cause him trouble."

On the 23d of November he went to Hammell's house with Mr. Taylor, and "Mr. Taylor was instructed to draw up an article of partnership and a bill of sale." The parties met again, November 28, Mr. Taylor and George W. Moore, the brother of the complainant, also being present. He says that on this day papers were signed and afterwards destroyed. He says Hammell claims to have discovered a mistake. Moore says:

"He told my brother that he and I had been in business all this time and he had been receiving all the money; he was sorry it had run so long unsettled, and was willing and anxious now to have it settled up at once, and was willing to do anything that was right to make me safe."

He wanted Hammell to give him a bond and warrant of attorney, but Hammell refused. He also proposed that Hammell should give him a bond and mortgage.

George W. Moore was sworn. He was present at the interview last referred to. He says he conversed with Mr. Hammell, Mr. Taylor and Moore upon the best plan of making his brother secure. He says:

"My brother told him that if he could pay him the balance due to him that would be satisfactory, and I think named the amount; Mr. Hammell said that he was not prepared to do that at that time; my brother then proposed a judgment note, and Mr. Taylor a chattel mortgage; Mr. Hammell refused to give the judgment note, and I said I didn't think a chattel mortgage was good in Pennsylvania."

I have given these interviews in detail because Moore says he did not know that Hammell was embarrassed; whereas, I conclude, from what appears above, that he did know, or had abundant reason for his anxiety. He had trusted Hammell for two years without even the slightest promise in writing, but at this juncture he insists on a bond and warrant of attorney, or a bond and mortgage, or a chattel mortgage, and accepts a bill of sale of all the goods and chattels used in the business, and would not be content until he was thus secured.

I think that the correctness of this conclusion will be impressed upon everyone who considers the foregoing statements in connection with the fact that at this time Hammell's liabilities to others besides Moore exceeded $25,000.

But, following Moore and Hammell further, it appears that on December 2, 1881, Hammell executed a bill of sale to Moore for his undivided one half interest in the horses, wagons, etc. This, it was conceived, did not sufficiently secure Moore, and the papers were destroyed, and a new bill of sale executed, conveying the entire property in the horses and wagons to Moore, with a guaranty that the title thereto was in Hammell, and that he had the right to sell. At the same time articles of copartnership were entered into. In these articles is a clause which I cannot understand, except upon the theory that these parties were then and had been willing to lend themselves, each to the other, for illegal and fraudulent purposes. I refer to the clause in these words, viz:

"3d. That said partnership shall continue under the name of Horace Hammell, as heretofore."

Why not let the public know the whole truth, the exact condition of things? Why continue the deception? It seems to me that this is one of those false badges or tokens which the law condemns. Look at it from what standpoint I may, the whole scene is disclosed by the constant effort at concealment. Creditors are to be blinded, and put off their guard.

The said business is not only to be carried "on under the name of Horace Hammell as" heretofore, but it was expressly stipulated,

"4th. That said Lehman Moore shall suffer and permit the said partnership to use all of said personal property in the business of said partnership, but that the same not in any wise be considered partnership property, nor taken into account as the assets of the firm."

The proofs assure me that Moore knew that Hammell was in great distress, and could not stand the storm, and yet he solemnly aids him in hoisting a false signal. I cannot find and do not believe there is a case that gives countenance to such agreements, when creditors have been before the court, and especially when the fraud doer is complainant, and invoking the arm of the court to his protection. I speak with reference to all the circumstances of this case. From the beginning, if the complainant is believed, Hammell presented to the world a false front, and the complainant for years encouraged the delusion.

But the complainant says no creditors were deceived, because none of them traded or dealt with Hammell on account of the partnership. That may be very true, most likely is; for I am not satisfied that any of them knew of the partnership, except Marshall, and to say that he did until after the 6th of December, 1881, is quite inconsistent with Hammell's desire for secrecy.

But the real question is not whether the creditors of Hammell dealt with him on account of this partnership business, so called, but whether that part of his business was so conducted as to obtain for him a false credit generally. This business, including good will and goods and chattels, was valued at $10,000. There can be no doubt but that that went largely to make Hammell's credit good in every one of his transactions with bankers, merchants, and all others.

It seems to me that if the courts were to sustain this transaction, every man would be justified in doing business in his own name, while the absolute title to all his stock in trade could be secured clandestinely in another. As I have said, I do not think any of the cases since Twynn's Case go so far as to tolerate the actions of Moore and Hammell. I do not think these transactions were bona fide. For proof of this, consider Hammell's entire control of Moore and the business, from the commencement to the conclusion.

Moore seemed at no time to have any voice in the concern. If he was a partner at all, he was not only a secret but a silent partner. When the crisis came and Hammell consented to make a settlement, it appears that he dictated the terms, certainly the amount to be allowed Moore. And so potent was his dictation that after one result had been arrived at and the papers executed and delivered, as Moore says, Hammell, as I understand, demanded further reduction and obtained satisfaction. Then it was that Moore obtained a letter from Hammell to Mr. Taylor, directing the delivery of the bill of sale and articles of copartnership. For fifteen days Moore wanted possession of the papers (the bill of sale and articles of copartnership), but Hammell prevented it. Not once can I find that Moore asserted his pretended rights.

I conclude, therefore, that there was not that bona fides on the part of Moore which is called for by the authorities; Sayre v. Fredericks, 1 C. E. Green, 205; Merchants Bank v. Northrup, 7 C. E. Green, 58; 8 C. E. Green, 582; and consequently that the judgment creditors are entitled to the benefit of their levy on the goods in question. This is my view of the case, even though there was a delivery of the bill of sale at the time of its execution.

Hence it is quite useless for me to determine whether there was a delivery, in fact, of the alleged bill of sale, or not.

I will advise a decree in accordance with these views, sustaining the claims of the judgment creditors by virtue of their executions and levies as against the complainant's claim.

Mr. H. A. Drake, for appellant,
Mr. P. V. Voorhees, for respondents.

Reed, J., delivered the opinion of the court: Horace Hammell confessed judgments severally to the respondents, the defendants below. Upon these judgments executions were issued, and a lot of property used in the business of draying was levied upon as the property of Hammell. Moore then filed his bill in this case against the said judgment creditors to restrain the sale under said executions. Moore claimed by his bill that he and not Hammell was the owner of said goods. He sets up that Horace Hammell was engaged in the business of drayman in Philadelphia, with his principal stables in Camden, where he had a large number of mules, horses, wagons, etc.

He says that about June 1, 1879, he, Moore, having been employed as the clerk and book-keeper of said Hammell, purchased a one half interest in the business for the sum of $5,000, $3,000 of which he paid in cash, and the balance was to be paid out of the profits of the business.

He further says that he permitted his share of the profits to remain in the business until June 1, 1880, when it amounted to over $3,000, and on June 1, 1881, it amounted (after deducting $15 a week for living expenses) to $4,500; that on the 6th of December, 1881, Hammell sold him the stock used in said partnership business for the sum of $2,958.47, the amount then due after payment of the $2,000 yet due for his interest in the partnership.

By virtue of this agreement for the sale of the said stock, Moore claims title thereto against the judgment creditors of Hammell, and asks the restraining order of the court of chancery to protect his property against a sale under their executions.

The vice chancellor refused this relief. In a very full and exhaustive review of the facts surrounding the transactions between Moore and Hammell, he found that the alleged partnership and sale was a fraudulent contrivance to defeat the creditors of Hammell. In this conclusion I concur.

There was no written evidence of the existence of the partnership until December 6, 1881, at the date of the alleged sale. Hammell was then hopelessly insolvent, and soon after gave the bonds with warrants to confess judgments, upon which judgments were entered. The existence of any partnership was not revealed by any change in the business, in any sign, or any important revelation, by Moore or by Hammell.

The evidence of the payment of $3,000 in cash by Moore to Hammell is not credible, under the circumstances. He has a receipt from Hammell for $500. The balance he says was paid within a few days thereafter. He had previously been working for Hammell for $15 a week, and supporting himself and wife. He says that he had made some money in speculations in oil and railroad stock and in commissions on the sale of one or two houses. But Ridgeway, through whom the speculative enterprises were conducted, is not called. There is no testimony to corroborate his story as to the source of this large sum, and I am constrained to regard it as incredible. In this most important point of the complainant's case, such corroborative evidence as could, if the story was true, have been produced, or its absence accounted for, is entirely neglected. I conclude that the arrangement of December 6, 1881, was fraudulent, and that the appellant was not entitled to relief.

The counsel of the appellant complains, however, that the decree, instead of merely dismissing the bill and dissolving the preliminary injunction, proceeded to grant affirmative relief to the respondents. A glance at the proceedings taken during the progress of the cause will disclose facts which gave the court of chancery the right to deal with the subject matter of the litigation. The bill prays that a receiver may be appointed to receive the moneys arising from the sale of the chattels, in lieu of an injunction of the sale, if the chancellor should deem such course equitable. Theodore B. Gibbs, the sheriff of Camden County, was appointed receiver.

On the 10th of January, 1882, on application of the counsel of the complainant, it was ordered that the complainant should have leave to use the chattels, etc., in the possession of the receiver, upon terms that he give bond, with security, for the return of them, when ordered by this court, in as good condition and repair as the same now are, loss by unavoidable accident alone excepted, and that said Moore should be at the expense of keeping, caring for and keeping in repair all of the said goods and chattels during all the time of his using the same. Under this order, made at the instance of the appellant, the property was delivered to him, to be used until the further order of the court. By this conduct on the part of the appellant, he submitted himself to the control of the court, in respect to the use and return of the goods. The court could not do otherwise than to make such an order as would place the judgment creditors in the position they would have occupied had the chattels not been delivered to the appellant. The terms upon which they were handed over to Moore were designed to effectuate that object.

The court of chancery had the right to make such order as would place the parties in statu quo. The decree, as made, however, after reciting that one or more of the horses had been sold or disposed of, ordered that appellant pay to the receiver the sum of $4,683.50, the value of said chattels, as appraised by the appraisers, duly appointed by Gibbs, with interest from the time the goods were delivered to said appellant. Since then it has also been ordered that the said Moore, within three days after the service of a copy of the said order, return to the receiver all the chattels received by him under the original order, and the receiver and sheriff are by said order directed to appraise and sell the same.

I am constrained to adopt the conclusion that the order that Moore should pay the appraised value of the chattels with interest, during the term he was using them, is too stringent.

The obvious reason why they were handed over to Moore was to preserve the chattels, and to avoid the expense of their keeping. The degree of his responsibility was fixed by the terms of the order by which he got the possession.

He was to feed the animals, and care for the other chattels, and was to be allowed no reduction for the usual wear, but was to be allowed a deduction for any loss resulting from unavoidable accident. He is to account to the receiver for the value of the goods at the time they came into his possession, less loss of any by unavoidable accident. The appraisal made by the sheriff's appraisers is not evidence of this value. If the property has been sold, then the difference between the proceeds of such sale and such value of the property as ascertained is the standard of Moore's liability.

I think the decree should, in this feature, be modified, and the cause be remitted to the court of chancery for an ascertainment of the value of the goods as above indicated.

Decree unanimously reversed.

Inhabitants of Township of NORTH PLAINFIELD, Appts.,

v.

Isaac S. COLTHAR, Respt.

Where complainant gave to a township his bond and mortgage for a sum certain, to indemnify it to the extent of a specified sum per week against the support of his wife while she should be chargeable to the township, and the township received moneys on the bond and mortgage and he has demanded an account thereof, he is entitled to file his bill against the township for an account of the moneys so received by it, and for the payment of whatever may be due him.

(Decided ———, 1886.)

A PPEAL from a decree of the Chancellor, overruling demurrer to a bill in equity for relief. Affirmed.

The nature of the case and the facts and questions raised are set forth in the following opinion of the CHANCELLOR:

The bill states that the complainant gave to the defendants, the Inhabitants of the Township of North Plainfield, in the County of Somerset, in 1875, his bond in the penal sum of $1,000, with condition that he should pay to the Township, or to the overseer of the poor thereof for the time being, the sum of $3.50 a week every week thereafter, during and for so long a time as his wife, who was then chargeable to the Township, should be chargeable to it; that to secure the payment of the money according to the condition of the bond, he gave to the defendants a mortgage upon land of his in Somerset County; that that land was afterwards sold under an execution against him on a judgment recovered in 1876, and a deed given by the sheriff therefor in November, 1878; that after that time, but at what particular time the complainant cannot state, the defendants, as the complainant is informed and believes, received from somebody unknown to him $750 or more upon the mortgage; that after the complainant gave the bond and mortgage, the overseer of the poor of the township went to his house and carried away all his household goods (of the value of about $300) under pretense of applying them to the support of the complainant's wife; that the mortgage was canceled of record April 11, 1879; that the bond is still in the hands of the officers of the Township, who refuse to deliver it up to him, although he has requested them to do so; that he has been informed that the money received for or upon the mortgage was deposited with the treasurer of the Township on the 18th of April, 1879; that at the time of giving the bond and mortgage the complainant gave the overseer of the poor of the Township notice that he would make an arrangement for the support of his wife and provide a place of residence for her; that shortly after that time he gave notice to the overseer of the poor and to the township committee and to his wife that he was ready and willing to support her; that he had provided a place for her in a family in Plainfield, but his wife refused to go there and remained of choice at the almshouse of the defendants; that he gave the township committee and the overseer of the poor notice not to pay any money to her; that shortly after the giving of the bond and mortgage he requested his wife to live with him, but she refused, and he gave notice to the township committee and overseer of the poor of such refusal; that after the giving of the bond and mortgage his wife went out of the Township of North Plainfield into the County of Essex and resided there for a long time, and that in December, 1881, he filed a bill in this court for a divorce from her on the ground of desertion, and obtained a decree of divorce in the suit July 31, 1883.

The bill also states that he has applied to the officers of the Township for an account of the money received by them from the mortgage, but they have refused to give it. The bill prays an account of the moneys received upon the bond and mortgage and of the value of the household furniture, and for a decree for the payment thereof to the complainant.

The defendants demur on the ground of vagueness in the charges of the bill, want of particularity as to time, etc., and on the ground that the complainant has a remedy at law.

The substance of the bill is that the complainant gave the Township his bond for $1,000, conditioned to indemnify it to the extent of $3.50 a week against the support of his wife while she should remain chargeable to the Township. The Township received $750 or more from the mortgage given to secure the payment of the bond. He insists that his wife was not chargeable after the giving of the bond and mortgage, and that she ceased to be his wife in July, 1883. He claims that he is entitled to the money received from the mortgage, or at least to an account of it, and files his bill to obtain the account and payment of whatever may be due him.

The statements on which he seeks to charge the Township are definite enough. He says that it received the money after November, 1878; that the mortgage was canceled of record April 11, 1879, and that the money was deposited in the treasury of the Township April 18, 1879. The relief sought cannot be obtained at law. The complainant is entitled to the delivery of his bond to him if the defendants have no lawful claim upon him thereunder. They have received money of his on account of it, but how much he cannot say; and he seeks a discovery. He could not compel them to deliver up the bond to him, in a suit brought against them at law to recover the money which he claims to be due to him from them.

The demurrer will be overruled, with costs.

Mr. J. H. Jackson, for appellants:

The bill resolves itself into: 1, a bill for account; or 2, a bill for discovery. It cannot be maintained as either.

Nesbit v. St. Patrick's Church, 1 Stock. 76; Jewett v. Bowman, 2 Stew. 174; R. R. Co. v. Hopcock, 1 Stew. 281; Seymour v. Long Dock Co. 5 C. E. Green, 396; Little v. Cooper, 2 Stock. 276; Brown v. Edsall, 1 Stock. 256.

The bill must show clearly the grounds of equity. They must not be left to inference.

Willard, Eq. 92.

Messrs. Wilson & Suydam, for respondent.

Per Curiam:

This decree unanimously affirmed, for the reasons given by the Chancellor.

Joseph J. READ, Plff. in Err.,
v.

Mary A. RIDDLE.

Where one entered into a contract for the purchase of lands, through the agent of the vendor, and thereupon made a payment to such agent on such lands upon his promise to return the money paid in case it should turn out that his principal's title was not good, and the sale fell through because the vendor had not a good title, such agent is liable to the purchaser for the return of the money.

(Decided ———, 1886.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court of Atlantic County, to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action to recover back part of the consideration paid on a contract to convey land. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Garrison & French, for plaintiff in error:

A fatal bar to recovery by plaintiff against Read is that there is an entire lack of privity between them.

Colvin v. Holbrook, 2 N. Y. 126; Stephens v. Babcock, 3 Barn. & Ad. 854; Baron v. Husband, 4 Barn. & Ad. 611; Bamford v. Shuttleworth, 11 Adol. & El. 926; Elliott v. Snartwout, 10 Pet. 187 (35 U. S. bk. 9, L. ed. 873); Stephens v. Bacon, 2 Halst. Law, 1; Whart. Agency, § 517.

No subsequent change of agents could alter the status of money already received by an agent; nor could it defeat his right to payment for services rendered, or his lien on the funds in his hands for such services.

Shepherd ads. Hedden, 5 Dutch. 384; Vreeland v. Vetterlein, 4 Vroom, 247; Derrickson v. Quimby, 14 Vroom, 878; Cooley v. Barcroft, 14 Vroom, 863.

An agent having received $500 for vendor, part payment on a written contract signed by his principal, is liable to be sued for it by his principal. In such a suit, it would be no answer that one Mary A. Riddle had recovered a judgment against him for that same amount.

N. J.

Broom, Legal Max. "res inter, etc." cases cited.

Stephens v. Bacon, 2 Halst. 1; Whart. Agency, § 517.

"Whenever an agent is estopped from disputing the principal's title to the fund, then the agent cannot be compelled to pay it back to the third party."

Whart. Agency, § 517.

To give plaintiff's case the most favorable aspect it only amounts to this: that as Read did not represent all the vendors, the $500 paid to him was payment on account to those whom he did represent. If this be true, then it was certainly error for plaintiff to pay over this sum a second time in settling with those whose agent she had once acknowledged him to be. Read as agent has a lien on this fund, and no one can sue him for the fund excepting the person or persons for whom he received it, and against whom he has an offset. This lien is irrespective of whether the contract was completed through Read's instrumentality or otherwise.

Chitty, Cont. 547; Wilkinson v. Martin, 8 Car. & P. 1; Murray v. Currie, 7 Car. & P. 584; Shepherd ads. Hedden, 5 Dutch. 384; Vreeland v. Vetterlein, 4 Vroom, 247; Derrickson v. Quimby, 14 Vroom, 878; Cooley v. Barcroft, 14 Vroom, 863.

Messrs. Thompson & Endicott, for defendant in error.

Runyon, Chancellor, delivered the opinion of the court:

Mrs. Maison, through Read as her agent, sold to Mrs. Riddle a tract of land in Atlantic City, for $25,000. There was a written agreement between the parties, dated March 30, 1883. The deed was to be delivered on or before April 27, in that year. On making the agreement, Mrs. Riddle paid to Read $500 on account of the price. The sale fell through because Mrs. Maison had no title in fee to the property. She had only her dower therein as widow of Peter B. Maison, who died intestate, seised of the land. He left several children. Mrs. Riddle afterwards got title to the premises by deed from Mrs. Maison and the children, but such conveyance was not under or in pursuance of the agreement between her and Mrs. Maison, but in execution of another subsequent one between her and the heirs. When Mrs. Riddle paid the $500 to Read, he promised to return it to her in case it should turn out that Mrs. Maison had not a good title.

This suit was brought by Mrs. Riddle against him to recover the $500. When the action was begun he had not paid the money over to Mrs. Maison. At the trial his counsel asked the court to charge that the action could not be maintained because Read received the money merely as the agent of Mrs. Maison, and the payment to him was in fact payment to her. The judge refused to so charge and, on the contrary, charged that under the evidence the action could be maintained. The charge was correct.

Under the circumstances, Read was liable to Mrs. Riddle for the return of the money. Where an agent, being a stakeholder, receives a deposit, which he pays over before the conditions upon which it is to be paid are fulfilled, he is liable for the deposit. Ewell's Evans, Agency, 818; Story, Agency, § 206.

In Burrough v. Skinner, 5 Burr. 2639, it was held that an auctioneer was liable to an action by a bidder, to recover the deposit, where the latter had sufficient reason not to proceed to complete the sale, and the money had not been paid over to the principal.

To the same effect are the cases of Edwards v. Hodding, 5 Taunt. 815, and Gray v. Gutteridge, 3 Car. & P. 40.

Where payment of money, through a mistake of fact, is made to an agent, he is liable to the payer, unless, without notice, he has paid it over to his principal or has given him credit for it. Add. Cont. §87.

And it is held that if he misleads the plaintiff by giving him to understand that he has not paid over the money, and thereby induces the plaintiff to sue him for its recovery, he is precluded from insisting upon the defense that he has paid it over. Edwards v. Hodding, supra.

In the case in hand, Read expressly promised Mrs. Riddle that he would return the money to her in case it should turn out that his principal's title was not good. There is no error in the judgment.

It should be affirmed.

For affirmation—The Chancellor, Chief Justice, Depue, Dixon, Magie, Parker, Van Syckel, Brown, Cole, McGregor, Paterson—11.

For reversal—None.

Alice BUCKINGHAM, Appt.,

v.

James LUDLUM, Respnt.

Case affirmed on opinion reported in 2 Cent. Rep. 197.

(Decided ———, 1886.)

APPEAL from a decree advised by Vice Chancellor Van Fleet, sustaining a demurrer and dismissing a bill to set aside a deed made by complainant to the defendant. Affirmed.

The facts and questions raised are fully set out in the opinion of the Vice Chancellor, reported in 2 Cent. Rep. 197.

Messrs. Coult & Howell and William Jay, for appellant.

Messrs. McCarter, Williamson & McCarter, for respondent.

Mr. F. W. Stevens, for Andrew Kirkpatrick, receiver, etc.

Per Curiam:

This decree unanimously affirmed, for the reasons given by the Vice Chancellor.

RIEGLSVILLE DELAWARE BRIDGE CO., Ptf. in Err.,

v.

John D. BLOOM et al.

Plaintiff claimed title to land under a deed from S. which had been lost. The evidence of title under the lost deed consisted of a statement in a subsequent deed for other land from S. to a third person, that one of the lines of the land thereby conveyed ran "thence by lands of" plaintiff. Held, that that statement was, standing alone, too indefinite to control the title to the land in dispute; that it by no means indicates that the whole of the line was along those lands.

(Decided ———, 1886.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court of Warren County, to review a judgment for defendants in an action of trespass quare clausum fregit. Affirmed.

The facts and questions presented are stated in the opinion.

Mr. J. G. Shipman, for plaintiff in error.

Mr. W. H. Morrow, for defendants in error.

Runyon, Chancellor, delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action of trespass quare clausum fregit. The defendants pleaded freehold title in John M. Smith, and entry, etc., by them as his servants and by his command. The plaintiff claimed that it had had a deed for the land in question from Smith, but had lost it, and it claimed also that it had had twenty years' adverse possession.

The evidence of title under the lost deed consisted of the statement, made in a subsequent deed for other land from Smith to Benjamin Rieggle, that one of the lines of the land thereby conveyed ran along land of the plaintiff, and testimony that a verbal allegation was made by Jesse Rieggle, a former president of the Company, but now deceased, to and in conversation with Smith, as to the dimensions of the tract conveyed by the lost deed, that they were "eighty feet from the abutment of the bridge, and forty feet each way." If those were the dimensions, they would embrace the land in question. And if the land conveyed to Benjamin Rieggle by the deed from Smith was, in the description thereof in that deed, bounded along the whole of its north side by the land of the Company, it would be an indication that the land in dispute was conveyed by the lost deed.

The defendants, however, insisted that that boundary was only partially along the land conveyed by the lost deed, and that it was intended merely as descriptive of the direction of the northerly line of the land conveyed to Benjamin Rieggle. The court charged that that statement in the Benjamin Rieggle deed was, standing alone, too indefinite to control the title to the land in dispute. That view was manifestly correct. The expression in the deed is "thence by lands" of the Company. This description of the line by no means indicates that the whole of the line was along those lands. If it ran partially so only, the line would answer the description.

The evidence on the part of the plaintiff does not show what answer Smith made to the allegation made by Jesse Rieggle to him, as to the dimensions of the land conveyed by the lost deed, nor that he made any. On the other hand, Smith denies that the allegation was made.

There was no error in the charge or refusal to charge upon the subject of title by adverse possession. The possession under which the claim was made was possession by Wolfinger, the plaintiff's tollgate keeper. But he obtained and held possession by and under express permission of Smith. It was not adverse.

The judgment of the Circuit Court should be affirmed.

For affirmance—The Chancellor, Depue, Dixon, Magie, Parker, Reed, Van Syckel, Brown, Clement, Cole, McGregor, Paterson.—12.

For reversal—None.

Amos CHAMBERLAIN, Appt.,

v.

Richard H. MANNING et al., Respts.

Where complainant purchased by verbal contract, of an agent who had merely authority to solicit purchasers (the principal retaining the right to reject any sale by him), a piece of land, and paid the agent $10, and by the agent's authority entered upon the land and dug a trench and deposited some timber for a building, the principal subsequently rejecting the contract on tender of performance, specific performance will not be decreed.

(Decided ———, 1886.)

APPEAL from a decree advised by Vice Chancellor Bird, dismissing a bill in equity to enforce an alleged contract for the sale of lands. Affirmed.

The facts and questions raised are set forth in the following opinion by the VICE CHANCELLOR:

This bill is filed to enforce an alleged contract for the sale of lands. The defendant Manning had authorized one Tintle to solicit purchasers for lots of land in a tract of 100 acres or more. Tintle had procured persons to purchase. His authority was by parol. He never signed for Manning. He accepted offers and promised conveyances; but in all cases the negotiations rested until Manning made, executed and delivered a deed. It seems that a few sales of lots were effected in this manner. I mention the fact because the complainant pressed it on my attention. But I cannot see that it aids him in the least, for it does not appear that Manning was bound in any case, or could have been in the law, until the delivery of the deed. The complainant says:

"I contracted with James Tintle, on the 28th of February, 1878, for a lot of land."

He also says he made a bargain on the 4th of March. He says:

"I went down on the 5th, the next day; he showed me where he had run off the land, showed me the corner, exactly where I stuck my cane in; the contract was on the 28th of February; he showed me where he had run it out; I said to him: 'It is just where we bargained for it;' he said: 'Yes;' I said: 'All right,

N. J.

I find no fault; now I am ready to pay for it at any time; I want to go right to work at it;' 'Well,' he said, 'here is your corner, borders and lines; I now deliver it over to you and give you possession; go on as soon as you have a mind; we will make you a deed in a few days or a few weeks.'" He says: "I pointed out to him where I wanted the lands to be, asked him his price, and he told me, and I said I would give it; his price was $150; Tintle said he would get Roome to run the lines." He says: "Tintle showed me the lines which he had run, gave me the lines and borders where they struck."

He says that he took possession of the lot on that day, March 5, 1878, and went to work on it. He says Tintle gave him possession. The complainant says that after this, March 25, he saw Manning in New York, and that he told Manning that he had purchased the lot, and that Manning said it was all right, and that he told Manning he was about to build on it. The complainant says he again saw Manning, in the latter part of May, and said to him:

"I had bought that property, and I began to feel as if I wanted a deed for it now; and he said: 'All right;' he said he expected to be up a few days before, and didn't come; he said the reason why he didn't come was he was about negotiating with another party, he didn't tell me who the other was, for the sale of the rest of the land; I said: 'Has that got anything to do with me?' he said: 'No, what is done already is all right;' he said it had nothing to do with me.

Q. How far had you progressed with your building at that time?

A. I forget just whether I had it raised then or not; I had the timber all got out ready; I don't know whether I had it raised or not; I can't recollect exactly, but I had been working at it and getting out all the time."

He saw Manning again the latter part of July; then Manning told him that he had sold the land to Howell & Noble, the other two defendants; he says Manning told him that Howell & Noble would make a deed to him; he paid $10 to Tintle on account, May 10, 1878; he spoke of the deed, and said to Tintle: "You are so slow about the deed;" "No question about it whatever—oh, no, not the slightest," he said; then I said: "I will make you a payment."

This was before he had seen Manning and had been told by him that he was about to sell to others. As to improving the lot at this time in May, he says:

"I built a foundation and got timber out for all the building.

Q. Where was the timber?

A. It was got out principally at Newfoundland, and carried down there; the foundation was laid, the stone was brought up there and the foundation was laid; the ditch was dug; there was no cellar under it; the ditch, where we laid the wall, was dug.

Q. Where was the timber at that time?

A. It was some on the ground, and some between there and Newfoundland; carted at my convenience, whenever I could.

Q. Have you erected a building upon the lands?

A. Yes, sir; it is forty feet one way, and sixteen feet the other way; there are eight rooms, counting the hall room below.

Q. How near was the building completed on the 12th of June of that year?

A. I can't just recollect; I had all the timber; I don't recollect exactly the time; I got it out at that time; I must have had it raised, and partly enclosed; I know I had a spree there, 4th of July."

The complainant then tendered the money to Manning in June, 1879, and demanded a deed; Manning refused to accept the money and to make a deed; Howell & Noble had purchased the entire tract of the defendant Manning; the complainant then made a tender to them and demanded the deed; they also refused.

If the complainant's statement is considered, it will be seen that he undertook to purchase of an agent who had no authority to execute any writing; it will also be seen that no writing was executed; it will likewise be seen that this agent delivered possession of some part of the larger tract to complainant, and that the complainant, at some time thereafter and before the sale to Howell & Noble, made some excavations for a structure of some kind on the premises; he is only certain in his own mind that the ditch was dug; it is not certain that the timber was on the ground.

This is the complainant's best showing. I think it does not make a complete case. He has no standing except on the doctrine of part performance. He claims that he entered into possession under the contract. I do not understand that simply going upon a vacant parcel of ground is enough to satisfy the demands of the adjudged cases which prevail against the statute to prevent fraud.

But the complainant insists that he made valuable improvements in good faith, relying upon his contract, supposing the agent had power to deliver possession. I cannot conclude that the alleged improvements were made before the sale to Howell & Noble, nor before Chamberlain had notice of such sale. As intimated above, I cannot determine that he had made any substantial improvements. Judging from his own statements, there was only a trench dug and some timbers on the ground and some at Newfoundland.

But still, from the complainant's side, the material inquiry is: Was the building erected at the time of the sale to Howell & Noble? Notwithstanding what I have said above, respecting the complainant's own statement, yet both he and his witnesses assert that the building was up and partially inclosed. This is emphatically denied by the defendants and their witnesses. The contradiction is full and complete. I have given great consideration to the numerous conflicting statements, in the hope of some reasonable reconciliation, but in vain. In such case it is not enough to say that the complainant's witnesses affirm positively that there was a house, while the defendants' witnesses only speak negatively. I can see no more reason for the latter to be mistaken than the former; they had equal opportunities for seeing. To insist that a negation cannot be established as against an affirmation in many like cases, is a mere mockery of our most common experience.

But let us look at this claim of possession further. Was it under the contract? How did he obtain it? Chamberlain says that Tintle told him to take possession; and Tintle says he authorized Chamberlain to enter. Tintle being a mere agent to solicit purchasers, with no authority to execute a writing or to make a conveyance, was the possession here claimed such as can be pleaded in bar of the Act? As intimated, I can find no satisfactory evidence which authorized Tintle to bind Manning. It seems quite plain that Manning always had the right of rejection, and especially in cases where he had not previously fixed the price. Manning says so, and there is no evidence sufficiently explicit to the contrary. Hence, I am bound to say that Chamberlain was not in possession under any contract. His possession was that of a stranger, and consequently unlawful. Such a possession never ought to be tolerated to bar a solemn Act of legislation, which legislation was enacted to prevent the mischiefs which seem to throng this case from its commencement to its conclusion. In all the exemplifications of the wisdom of this celebrated Act, I think no more conspicuous illustration can be found than the one before me.

I have looked at this case from another standpoint. Suppose the relation of the parties reversed, the defendant Manning being complainant; could he, at any time prior to his sale to Howell & Noble, have prevailed in a suit for specific performance? I think not. Chamberlain was not bound. He paid $10 to Tintle, but that did not bind him; all the cases so adjudge. He had taken possession of the naked soil, under the agent, and perhaps dug a trench.

I cannot believe that any considerate judge would regard that a valuable substantial improvement which so changed the nature of things as to bind Chamberlain to a specific performance. If it be said that the person who makes the improvements is the only one who can claim the benefit of them, then I say as to this case there is want of mutuality, without which the law abhors specific performance.

I conclude that there was no contract within the statute, and also that there was no such part performance by the delivery of possession and making valuable improvements as would enable the defendants to avail themselves of their own wrong, unless the court should interpose.

I will advise a decree dismissing the complainant's bill, with costs.

Mr. Z. M. Ward, for appellant.

Mr. H. C. Pitney, for respondents.

Per Curiam:

This decree affirmed, for the reasons given by the Vice Chancellor.

For affirmance—The Chief Justice, De-pue, Knapp, Reed, Van Syckel, Cole, McGregor, Paterson—8.

For reversal—Dixon, Brown, Clement, Whitaker—4.

James A. HAND, Appt.,

c.

The Mayor and Common Council of JERSEY CITY, Respts.

The lien of an assessment made under the charter of Jersey City, for a street improvement, upon mortgaged premises, is paramount to that of the mortgage.

(Decided ———, 1886.)

APPEAL from a decree of the Chancellor in favor of defendant in a suit to foreclose a mortgage. Affirmed.

The case was heard by the Chancellor on the pleadings and agreed facts. His opinion is as follows:

On August 17, 1871, an assessment of $259.42, made under the charter of Jersey City for a municipal improvement, a street improvement, upon the mortgaged premises, which are within the bounds of that City, was confirmed; and on the 12th of July, 1872, another of $2,031.89, made upon them, under the like authority, for another improvement, a sewer, was confirmed. Those improvements were duly brought before the board of commissioners appointed under the Act, "to adjust unpaid assessments in Jersey City;" P. L. 1873, p. 442; and new assessments were made instead thereof.

The assessment on account of the street improvement was reduced to $238.88, and the other to $720.98. The assessments appear to have been confirmed except as to the amounts. The confirmation in the case of the first mentioned improvement took place in May, 1874, and that of the other in February, 1874.

The Act provides that the proceedings of the board shall be filed and recorded in the office of the clerk of the city, and that when so filed, the assessments made by the board, or a majority thereof, shall be a lien upon the property on which they are laid, and shall be collected in the same manner provided for the collection of assessments in the charter of the city.

The Act also declares that, when an assessment has been adjusted or confirmed by the board, it shall be a new assessment.

The complainant's mortgage was given and recorded in 1873, after the assessments, as originally made, were confirmed. The complainant insists that, inasmuch as the Act just referred to declares that the assessment by the board shall be a new assessment, and that such new assessment shall be a lien when filed in the city clerk's office, the lien of the assessment, as originally made, was lost, and that of the new one did not attach until 1874, and therefore is subsequent and subject to the lien of the mortgage. The lien of the assessments has priority over that of the mortgage, by force of the provision of the charter for collecting the assessments.

Under the construction which has been put upon like provisions in municipal charters, the assessments are a lien, paramount to any mortgage or other incumbrance. The charter declares (P. L. of 1871, p. 1155, § 151) that assessments shall be a lien from the time of confirmation until paid, notwithstanding any devise, descent, alienation, mortgage or other incumbrance thereof; and there is a provision for the sale of the property for a term of years to pay them, and that the purchaser at the sale shall hold the property against the owner or owners, and all persons claiming under him or them. There is also a provision for redemption by mortgagees or other incumbrancers, and for a record of the sales. Under these provisions, the lien of the assessment is paramount to that of the mortgage. O'Neill v. Dringer, 4 Stew. 507; Howell v. Essex Co. Road Board, 5 Stew. 672.

There will be a decree accordingly.

Mr. James B. Vredenburg, for appellant.

Mr. Allan L. McDermott, for respondents.

Per Curiam:

This decree unanimously affirmed, for the reasons given by the Chancellor.

Benjamin A. VAIL, Receiver of the Woodbridge Clay Mining & Refining Co., Appl., James JAMESON, Respt.

1. A transfer or mortgage of the property of an incorporated company, although made when the company was insolvent and to prefer creditors, is not prohibited by statute, nor objectionable in itself.

(Decided ———, 1886.)

APPEAL from an order advised by Vice Chancellor Van Fleet, in favor of petitioner in a petition for an order to compel the receiver to pay over the proceeds of the sale of goods and chattels mortgaged to petitioner. Affirmed.

The facts appear in the opinion.

Mr. Ephraim Cutter, for appellant:

Claimed, 1. That under the provisions of sections 72 and 77 of the "Act concerning corporations" (Rev. p. 175) any mortgage or conveyance of the property of a corporation, after it becomes insolvent, is null and void as to creditors. Previous to the Revision of 1874, such had been the law.

Holcomb v. New Hope Bridge Co. 1 Stock. 457; Suydam v. Bank of New Brunswick, 2 Green, Ch. 114; State Bank v. Bank of New Brunswick, 2 Green, Ch. 266; Stratton v. Allen, 1 C. E. Green, 229; Wells v. Railway Rubber Co. 4 C. E. Green, 402; American Co. v. Paterson Co. 7 C. E. Green, 72.

2. That although the second section of the "Act to prevent frauds by incorporated companies" (Nixon's Digest, p. 406) was not included in the Revision, yet the remaining portions of the Act, including section 15 (section 80 of revised Act), are unchanged; and their language is such as to require the same construction of the Act as had previously been given to it.

3. That the Receiver clearly had a right to recover back the sum of $107.80, paid to Jameson, after the making of the restraining order, and if so, was entitled to have it offset against the claim of Jameson.

Rev. p. 191, § 77.

4. That it was competent, on the hearing of the rule to show cause, to show that the said company was insolvent when the mortgage was given.

Wells v. Railway Rubber Co. 4 C. E. Green, 402, and cases above cited.

Mr. C. C. Hommann, for respondent:

I. There was no error in the decision of the vice chancellor in making the order appealed from. The Revision of 1877, p. 191, § 80, gives the order in which the funds in the hands of the receiver are to be distributed; and the order appealed from is in conformity with the section cited.

II. The company was not insolvent within the meaning of the statute on September 27, 1884.

"The Act respecting insolvent corporations, under which the proceedings were instituted, looks to the suspension of the ordinary business of the company, or some overt act by which its insolvency may be ascertained and declared. The court cannot, upon an inquiry of this nature, undertake to investigate the financial ability of the corporation at previous periods, founded upon nonfailure to meet its engagements, or upon the actual state of its finances after its business has been suspended."

Bedford v. Newark Machine Co. 1 C. E. Green, 120; R. R. Co. v. Oxford Iron Co. 6 Stew. 192.

III. The mortgage in this case was not a preference but a security. "A mortgage made in good faith to continue business is valid, though a part of the consideration is a present debt."

Blumenthal Bank. p. 232; Ex parte Ames, 7 Bank. Reg. 223; Perrin v. Hance, 13 Bank. Reg. 77; Ex parte Winder, Re Winstanley, L. R. 1 Ch. Div. 290.

IV. Even if the corporation was insolvent and the mortgage a preference, under the present statute it would still be a valid and subsisting lien; for at common law an insolvent corporation, as well as an insolvent individual, may prefer one creditor to another; and that part of the Statute of 1846 which forbade such preference by a corporation was repealed by the Revision of 1877.

The Act forbidding sales, transfers and assignments of the estate, effects, etc., etc., by the directors or managers of insolvent corporations, or sales, transfers, etc., in contemplation of insolvency, was the second section of the Act of 1846.

Rev. 1846, p. 129.

In the Act concerning corporations, Rev. 1877, sections 69-82 embrace sections of the Act of 1846; but the second section was omitted and the whole Act of 1846 repealed.

Rev. 1877, pp. 1395-1411, and p. 1122, § 16.

All the decisions based upon that statute or the second section thereof are, therefore, inapplicable.

This left the power of a corporation to prefer its creditors as at common law, and the rule at common law favored that right.

Morawetz, Corp. § 582; Catlin v. Eagle Bank, 6 Conn. 233; Bump, Fraud. Conv. p. 388.

See also Sargent v. Webster, 13 Met. 497.

Magie, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The question presented by this appeal relates to the proceeds of a sale of property of an incorporated company, made by a Receiver appointed under the Act concerning corporations, with the concurrence of a creditor of the company holding a chattel mortgage thereon. The latter claims the proceeds of the sale by virtue of his mortgage; the Receiver contends that he should be permitted to distribute the proceeds among the general creditors.

The Receiver was appointed February 19, 1885, on a bill filed by a creditor and stockholder February 17, 1885.

The mortgage was made by the company to respondent, Jameson, September 27, 1884, and was therein declared to be intended to secure the payment of such notes (not exceeding $6,000) as had then been or might thereafter be made by the company, and indorsed by Jameson for the accommodation of the company.

The case shows that when the mortgage was made, Jameson was an accommodation indorser on a note of the company for $3,000, which was afterward renewed and was outstanding when the bill was filed; and that on September 20, 1884, he indorsed a note for $2,000, for the accommodation of the company, which was also renewed and outstanding when the bill was filed. Jameson paid both the outstanding notes, and a large sum is due to him.

The Receiver's contention is that Jameson's chattel mortgage was a transfer of the company's property to him after insolvency, and as a preference over other creditors; and that it is thereby rendered null and void as against creditors.

But the evidence has not satisfactorily made out that the company was insolvent when the mortgage was made, or that it was made as a preference.

The decree made in the proceedings fixed the insolvency of the company as having occurred on December 10, 1884. The mortgagee's petition was filed in that cause. If the decree does not conclude the Receiver in this proceeding, the evidence that he has produced is not sufficient to establish the fact of insolvency at a time prior to the date of the mortgage.

The only facts tending to show the intent with which the mortgage was made seem to indicate that it was designed rather as security for the loan of Jameson's credit to the company than as a preference over other creditors.

But if the facts were conclusively proved, the conclusion insisted on would not follow. It has been decided at this term that a sale or transfer of the property of an incorporated company, although made when the company was insolvent, and to prefer creditors, is not now prohibited by statute or objectionable in itself. Wilkinson v. Bauerle, 14 Stew. 625 [5 Cent. Rep.].

This result was reached from a consideration of the effect of the repeal of the second section of the "Act to prevent frauds by incorporated companies," approved April 15, 1846. R. S. p. 129.

Nor can there be found in the remaining sections of that Act which have been included in the "Act concerning corporations," or in other existing legislation, any prohibition against a preference of corporate creditors by way of a mortgage of corporate property.

The eightieth section of the last mentioned Act requires creditors to be paid in the distribution of an insolvent company's assets, proportionately to their debts, "excepting mortgage and judgment creditors, when the judgment has not been confessed for the purpose of preferring creditors." This evidently prohibits any preference in distribution under the proceedings prescribed, to a judgment confessed for the purpose of preferring creditors. It may be that it constitutes an implied prohibition against any such preference. But the expression of a prohibition of preferences by way of a confessed judgment plainly excludes any intent to prohibit preferences by way of mortgage.

For these reasons the respondent Jameson is entitled to the proceeds of the property covered by his mortgage.

The receiver further contends that Jameson should be charged with $107.80, alleged to have been paid him by the company on the day the bill for a receiver was filed.

This contention cannot prevail.

If there is sufficient proof that such a payment was made, it was not in violation of the restraining order, for that was not served on the company's officers until the next day.

The only objection to this payment to be considered is that it was a transfer of the company's property, to prefer Jameson as a creditor after the company's insolvency. But, as we have seen, such a transfer is neither prohibited nor objectionable in itself.

The order made below, giving the whole proceeds to Jameson, should be affirmed.

Order unanimously affirmed.

ORANGE & NEWARK HORSE R. R. CO.,
Plff. in Err.,
v.

James WARD.

1. If it appear by plaintiff's evidence that his own negligence caused the injury of which he complains, or contributed to it in such way that but for it he would not have received harm from defendant's negligence, the court should nonsuit, and error may be assigned upon its refusal.
2. Held, in an action for an injury caused by the collision of a street car with plaintiff's vehicle, that whether, under the facts, the safer and more prudent course for plaintiff to pursue to avoid collision was to attempt to get off the track, or to quicken his speed and pass before a car coming on to the same track from a spur reached him, were questions for the jury.
3. The driver of a vehicle rightfully using a street railroad track as a part of a public street is entitled to notice that the company requires the track for its car, before he is obliged to leave the track.
4. Whether the verdict was against the charge and against the weight of evidence are matters for the trial court, and can not be considered on review.

(Decided —, 1886.)

ERROR to the Supreme Court, to review a judgment in favor of the plaintiff in an action on the case for damages occasioned by a collision between the plaintiff's wagon and the defendant's horse car. Affirmed.

N. J.

The facts appear in the opinion.

Mr. Edward Q. Keasbey, of A. Q. Keasbey & Son, for plaintiff in error:

If the injury was occasioned in any degree by the plaintiff's own negligence, he is without redress, unless the act of the defendant amounted to a willful trespass or an intentional wrong.

N. J. Exp. Co. v. Nichols, 4 Vroom, 434; Drake v. Mount, 4 Vroom, 441; Moore v. R. R. Co. 4 Zab. 268, 824; Runyon v. R. R. Co. 1 Dutch. 556.

If the plaintiff's negligence was the immediate cause of the accident, he cannot recover even though the defendant was also negligent. If both parties are to blame, neither one can hold the other responsible; and if the plaintiff alone was to blame, a judgment against defendant is plainly against the law.

If it appears by the plaintiff's evidence that his own negligence contributed to the injury, it is the duty of the court to nonsuit; and a writ of error will lie for the refusal to grant a nonsuit in such a case.

N. J. Exp. Co. v. Nichols, 4 Vroom, 434-8.

Mr. Charles Borchertling, for defendant in error:

The court properly refused the motion for nonsuit.

Plotts v. Rosebury, 4 Dutch. 146; Durant v. Palmer, 5 Dutch. 544; R. R. Co. v. Moore, 4 Zab. 824; R. R. & Trans. Co. ads. West, 8 Vroom, 95; R. R. Co. v. Matthews, 7 Vroom, 582; Bonnel v. R. R. Co. 10 Vroom, 189; Klein v. Jewett, 11 C. E. Green, 474.

The court will consider the instructions of the judge who tried the cause, with reference to the evidence before the jury; and if the instruction can be sustained so far as there was evidence to which it was applicable, will not reverse, although it might be erroneous if taken literally.

Million v. Riley, 1 Dana, 359.

When the charge of the court is erroneous in some particular, but the result of the charge is correct, such error furnishes no ground for a new trial.

Gibson v. Stevens, 7 N. H. 852; Camden, etc., Trans. Co. v. Belknap, 21 Wend. 354; Freeman v. Rankins, 21 Maine, 446; Holbrook v. Hyde, 1 Vt. 331; Walcott v. Keith, 2 Foster, 196.

Knapp, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This suit was brought by the defendant in error to recover compensation from the plaintiff in error, a Horse Railroad Company, for injuries which the defendant in error received in a collision with a car of the Company, which injury was charged to the culpable negligence of the plaintiff in error's servants in managing the car.

On the trial, at the close of the case on the part of the plaintiff below, the defendant below asked that plaintiff be nonsuited, on the ground that the testimony disclosed contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff in the management of the vehicle which he was driving. The court denied the motion, and upon the refusal to nonsuit, error is assigned. It is also alleged for error that there was misdirection in the judge's charge.

The second ground was not relied upon in the argument, and it is sufficient to say as to that, that the law was correctly stated to the jury by the judge.

The only question then for our consideration is whether the judge, on the evidence as it stood when the plaintiff rested his case, should have granted the nonsuit for contributory negligence of the plaintiff, established by his own proofs.

It is unquestionably the law that if it appear by plaintiff's evidence that his own negligence caused the injury of which he complains, or contributed to it in such a way that but for it the plaintiff would not have received harm from the defendant's negligence, the court should nonsuit, and error may be assigned upon its refusal. N. J. Exp. Co. v. Nichols, 4 Vroom, 434; R. R. Co. v. Moore, 4 Zab. 824; Telfer v. R. R. Co. 1 Vroom, 188; Drake v. Mount, 4 Vroom, 441; R. R. Co. v. VanHorn, 9 Vroom, 188.

When the evidence leaves that fact in uncertainty, it is the duty of the judge to submit the evidence, under proper instructions, to the jury for their decision.

I think the case of the plaintiff, on the point of contribution, presented such a state of uncertainty as rendered it necessary for the judge to submit the question as one of fact to be determined by the jury. This he did, with clear and precise instructions on the law.

The plaintiff gave evidence to prove that at the time when he received the injury he was driving in his wagon along one of the streets of Newark and was, just before and at the time of the collision, using one of the tracks of the Company's horse railroad. He was traveling at an ordinary gait. No car was in front of him on the track along which he was passing, but as he neared a spur of this road, leading to one of the car stations of the Company, a car which had been standing there came out suddenly from the station on the main track and faced him.

The point was whether in this situation the best mode of avoiding collision was to attempt to turn off the track or to urge his horse on and thereby pass the car before it barred his way. Both vehicles were in motion towards each other when the plaintiff saw the car. The plaintiff decided to urge on his horse, as the safer means of escape, and failed; a foot more gained in distance would have saved him.

The contributory negligence charged is that he drove on instead of turning from the track.

Now, whether the safer and more prudent course for the plaintiff to pursue to avoid collision was to attempt getting off the track, or to quicken his speed and pass before the car reached him, were questions of fact to be settled upon the evidence and by the jury. I think it quite obvious that the judge could not have determined, legally, that one course or the other was demanded of the plaintiff in the exercise of proper care; or that driving on under existing exigencies was legal negligence.

The plaintiff was rightfully upon the track using it in the manner that he did, as a part of the public street. Coach Company v. R. R. Co. 6 Stew. 267.

Before he was obliged to leave it, in submission to the superior right of use vested in the Company, he was entitled to some notice or timely signal that the Company then required the track, for passing its car. The notification came in the presence of the car itself coming suddenly upon him from a side track, the view of which was somewhat obstructed at the time. That notice coming so late put him in a dangerous and perplexing position. Whether, then, he acted with reasonable judgment or negligently was properly and necessarily submitted to the jury.

It is alleged for error that the verdict was against the charge of the court, and against the weight of evidence. These matters belong to the trial court, and cannot be considered here in a review of this record.

There is no error in the judgment, and it should be affirmed.

Paterson, J., dissenting:

I cannot agree with the conclusions reached in this case. My reason is that the facts and circumstances appear to disclose such fault on the part of the defendant in error as preclude his recovering damages for the injury sustained. He should show a clean record, and this, in my opinion, he has failed to do, and that most decidedly. He was an expert driver on the street and among horse cars, by his own showing, and familiar with the location of the tracks and siding where the accident occurred. He was going on a downward grade, and saw the car start. This was full notice to him, as much as the record of a deed is of the existence of that instrument. Other special notice was not required.

The car came out on an upward grade, and over or round a curve—elements of retarded motion; the wagon was on a downward grade and on a straight track—elements of speed. It is idle to attempt to show that the car was going as fast or faster than the wagon. To make out a case, this had to be shown. It was necessary, also, to change the place where Ward first said he was when he saw the car. Just here was the turning point. If Ward had been where he located the spot originally, a nonsuit must have followed. If his wagon was where the witness Billings placed it, then that light vehicle traveled on a downward grade and a straight, smooth, iron track, with the rate of speed accelerated by the momentum carried from Lawrence Street, more slowly than a heavy, lumbering car, proceeding on an upward grade, around a curved track, with a momentum to acquire, and under increased friction.

This is against all ordinary probability. It is simply impossible that the car could have started from the usual place on the side track and acquired as much velocity as the light wagon running down hill at the rate of five or six miles an hour. Ward knew that the car was entitled to the right of way, and his familiarity and experience in driving among cars and on their tracks required him to be on his guard. An expert cannot plead the ignorance that would excuse a novice in the art.

I am satisfied that neglect and want of proper care on the part of the defendant in error were the main causes of the accident, and for that reason shall vote to reverse.

For affirmance—Dixon, Knapp, Magie, Reed, Van Syckel, Brown, Clement, Cole, McGregor—9.

For reversal—Paterson—1.

Abigail R. DOUGHTEN et al., Appts.,
v.

CAMDEN BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATION, Respt.

John C. DOUGHTEN et al., Appts.,
v.

SAME, Respt.

One party to a contract cannot rescind it by his own will, and at the same time keep possession of the consideration, in whole or in part, which he has received under it. He must, so far as practicable put the other party in statu quo before he can exercise his right of rescission.

(Decided — —, 1886.)

APPEALS by defendants from decrees advised by Vice Chancellor Bird, in favor of complainant. Reversed.

Two cases were argued together. Separate bills were filed to foreclose two mortgages, one for $3,000, the other for $1,800, on distinct lots of land in the City of Camden.

William S. Doughten was a shareholder in the Association, having fifteen shares on which the loan of $3,000 was made, and nine shares on which the other loan had been made to one Elisha Shaw for $1,800. He owned both lots of land covered by the separate mortgages. The shares, when fully paid up, were valued at $200 each, and would satisfy the mortgages. On January 4, 1881, the following entry appears in the minutes of the Association:

"Mr. William S. Doughten made a proposition through the secretary, stating that he wished to straighten up his accounts with the Association by making a new transaction and canceling the old mortgages on the properties Seventh and Mount Vernon and 528 Liberty Street.

"The matter was considered by the board and the transaction accepted; loan on thirteen shares of the fourteenth series to be considered as bought at 8 per cent premium, both properties to be included in one mortgage. (For description of property see minutes of February 8, 1880.)

"Mr. Doughten's proposition was accepted. An order for $2,392 was directed to be drawn in favor of William S. Doughten upon the delivery of the required papers."

The required papers were a bond and mortgage for $2,600, covering both lots. These were duly executed February 10, 1881. They were drawn and the mortgage recorded by George W. Gilbert, the solicitor of the Association and, as he testifies, "in the regular course of business, and as it is my custom to do in all cases," searches were ordered by him up to the date of record.

Another requirement was that the fifteen and nine shares of stock, in all twenty-four shares, covering the two loans, should be assigned. These were transferred in writing, for William S. Doughten, by J. C. Doughten and Isaac Doughten, his attorneys in fact, to one William B. Mulford, by deed of assignment dated February 1, 1881, according to the direction of the Association.

Henry F. Geiter, secretary of the Association. J.

tion, testified that "the old roll-book No. 2 shows that Doughten had thirteen loans bought out and several monthly payments made thereon." These were in the fourteenth series, which commenced to run in July, 1880.

The searches disclosed that the $2,600 mortgage would be the first mortgage after the two former mortgages were removed, but that there were unpaid taxes and assessments against the property due to the City of Camden. These taxes and assessments Mr. Doughten, or his sons acting for him, promised to settle. The solicitor testifies that everything they were to do was arranged except the taxes and the expenses of the papers and searches.

On May 26, 1881, a statement of account was made by the secretary, at the request of J. C. Doughten, acting for his father's estate, in which appears a debit for the thirteen shares of new stock and dues for the same, January, 1881, $26, and for May, $26 less a credit of $9.25, the balance of the general credit, which includes the twenty-four shares of stock to be delivered and surrendered, and the thirteen loans at 8 per cent premium on the thirteen shares, the final balance due at June meeting, 1881, being $48.59. For this balance ($48.59) a check was given by J. C. Doughten, agent, June 27, 1881, which was paid at the First National Bank of Camden to the credit of F. P. Mulford, treasurer of the Camden Building & Loan Association.

From this statement of balance and check therefor it appears that all was settled up to June, 1881, except the taxes and assessments against the property mortgaged.

The $2,600 mortgage settled the two former mortgages, leaving an excess of $9.25, which was credited in the final statement. Doughten paid, in February, 1881, $26, the regular dues on these shares, the same in March, also in April, missed the month of May, and in June paid the balance due for May and June of $48.59, above stated. All were credited, at the time they were paid, to the fourteenth series of the new loan. Afterwards he attended two meetings, tendered payment, and the Association refused to accept it on the new transaction on which he offered it. The Association offered to take it on the old transaction, but he would not consent. With the expectation that the whole thing would go through, the stock was transferred, as collateral, to the Association when the last papers were made.

After June, 1881, the Association transferred the whole amount of money paid on the thirteen shares to the nine shares of the seventh series, a part of the stock of the old loan. It was done by the directors without consulting Mr. Doughten, he wishing to keep the new loan alive by offering to pay the dues as he had been doing.

J. C. Doughten testifies that at the time the last loan was made nothing was said about paying the municipal taxes, nor the expense of drawing the papers, searches, etc.; that when his attention was called to the taxes by the solicitor, he told him that he expected to pay them. Doughten was notified that they would not accept the mortgage until he paid the municipal claims, and if he did not pay them before the end of the fiscal year, on the fourth Monday in June, the transaction would fall. These taxes were paid July 30, 1881.

The bills to foreclose the two mortgages for $3,000 and $1,800, respectively, were filed August 10, 1881. William S. Doughten died before the bills were filed.

Vice Chancellor BIRD, on advising a decree for complainant in the first entitled suit, filed the following conclusions:

"The complainant held two mortgages on two lots of the defendant.

She allowed the accruing payments to fall in arrears. She also allowed the taxes and assessments to remain unpaid. The payments which she had made on the loans reduced the amount due from her to about $2,600. At this juncture she offered to assign and transfer so much of the stock as represented the payments which she had made to the Corporation, and give a new mortgage for all the balance due on both properties. The Company agreed to accept this offer, provided the defendant would discharge all the taxes and other assessments. The Company passed a resolution to this effect.

A settlement was had between the parties determining the amount of the balance actually due from the mortgagor. The defendant, the mortgagor, assigned the stock accordingly. It ought to be remarked that all the stock was of a certain value. The solicitor of the Corporation was directed to draw a mortgage in compliance with the terms of the agreement. He did so, and it was executed by the defendant and recorded. All this was done, but the defendant did not discharge the liens by way of taxes and other assessments. These not being discharged, the Company rescinded the resolution and directed a foreclosure of the two original mortgages. After this had been done, and before the bill was filed, the defendant paid the taxes and other liens.

The defendant now insists that this bill should be dismissed; that the court should compel the complainant to regard the agreement and settlement; and that she has a just defense to this bill under said agreement.

In the first place, I am not at all clear that there is any consideration shown for the alleged agreement. The defendant paid nothing but what was her duty to pay; she owed every dollar of it. It is true she did not owe it all at that particular time, but the then value of the stock was ascertained and that value was applied to the payment of the principal of the mortgages and all the dues that remained unpaid.

This does not, in my judgment, present a consideration. The Company got what was due to it at that time; that is, what was actually due, and what was due by anticipation, determined by the then value of the stock.

In the next place, the defendant did not comply with the agreement on her part until after the Association had withdrawn therefrom. The Association had a perfect right to rescind the contract, the defendant herself being at fault. The complainant reaps no advantages from the rescission, nor does the defendant suffer. She is placed just where she stood at the time negotiations began. The Association then had the right to foreclose, and in so doing would have been obliged to apply the stock at its value to the payment of the amount. This will still be done.

The amount due upon the mortgages on February 10, 1881, was $2,600. The complainant is entitled to interest and dues, according to the rules and by-laws of the Association, from that time.

I will advise a decree in accordance with these views."

Messrs. Bergen & Bergen, for appellants:

A party seeking to rescind a contract, even for fraud, must put opposite party in statu quo so far as able. So long as he retains anything received under the contract, there can be no rescission. The rescission must be before suit brought and on notice. The Association has never given us notice nor returned us our mortgage or our money paid.

Byard v. Holmes, 4 Vroom, 119; Smalley v. Hendrickson, 5 Dutch. 371; Roberts, Fr. p. 130; 3 Pars. Cont. p. 65; Rev. p. 445, § 6.

Mr. P. L. Voorhees, for respondent.

Scudder, J., after stating the facts, delivered the opinion of the court:

It is claimed that under these facts the Association was authorized to rescind the resolution to substitute the bond and mortgage of $2,600 for the two prior mortgages, and the stock and loan on thirteen shares for the previous loan on twenty-five shares. But, granting that the complainant had the right to rescind on the nonperformance of the full terms of the contract by the defendants, it failed to legally exercise that right before there was a substantial compliance on the part of the defendants by payment of the municipal taxes; and the bills to foreclose were not filed until after these taxes had been paid. The consideration was good, and completed before the agreement was annulled.

One party to a contract which imposes reciprocal obligations upon both parties may have a right to rescind it, by reason of the failure of performance of conditions by the other party; but he must, if he wish to rescind for such cause, return to the other party what he has received, so as to put him in the same position he was before.

It is a well settled principle of law and equity that a party cannot rescind a contract by his own will, and at the same time keep possession of the consideration, in whole or in part, which he has received under it. So far as it is practicable, he must put the other party in statu quo before he can exercise his right of rescission. The rule is that there shall be prompt repudiation and restoration so far as possible. Byard v. Holmes, 4 Vroom, 119; Gay v. Alter, 102 U. S. 79 [Bk. 26, L. ed. 48]; Hunt v. Silk, 5 East, 449; Clough v. London, etc. R. Co. L. R. 7, Exch. 26, 37; Rulch-y-Phom Lead Mining Co. v. Baynes, L. R. 2 Exch. 324; Pollock Pr. of Cont. 509; 2 Pars. Cont. *679.

In this case the twenty-five shares of the prior loans were transferred to the Association in part performance of the agreement; the mortgage for $2,600 was executed and recorded. The assignment of shares was delivered to the treasurer of the Association, and the bond and mortgage were left in the possession of their solicitor.

It is no answer to say that there was not a formal acceptance of them by the Association. It is enough that the defendant, William S. Doughten, or his representatives, by legal transfers, put them in the possession and control of the Company's agents in part performance of the contract, and in such form that he could not be restored to his former position without the action of the Association.

He could not cancel the mortgage for $2,600, and satisfy the record; nor could he reassign the twenty-five shares to himself. It might in equity be allowed that the complainant should, on failure to conclude the arrangement by the delay and neglect of the defendants, transfer the credits of the payments on account of the thirteen shares in the last loan series to the former loans, on which there were large arrearages, and the defendants could have no just cause of complaint; but it is not necessary to decide this, for the complainant has done nothing to restore the defendants to their former position, but has shown a purpose to manage the matter for its own advantage, and to regard the transaction as altogether void.

It has taken the shares of the old loans, and credited them to the defendants at their withdrawal value, not at their actual value, which is a well known difference in the business of all loan associations; it has changed the special appropriations of payments or the thirteen shares of the last series to the ducs and the indebtedness on the old loans; it has left the assignments of those shares in the hands of its treasurer; and the bond and mortgage for $2,600, to it duly executed, and recorded by the act of its solicitor for its greater security, is in his hands; and it has left the defendants to get these papers and right themselves as they may be able. This is not rescission, with proper regard to the equitable rights of the defendants, but a repudiation of the partly executed contract without any attempt at restoration. This it cannot do, and the decrees should be reversed, and the bills dismissed with costs.

Decree unanimously reversed.

ESSEX PUBLIC ROAD BOARD, Plff. in Err.,

STATE, James A. SPEER et al., Prosecutors.

1. The legislative grant in section 16 of the supplement of 1870 to the Road Board Act (P. L. p. 181) of the right to assess damages upon lands benefited, for the transfer of the franchise of a turnpike company to the Essex Public Road Board, is an authority to lay a burden where no possible benefit can accrue, and is unconstitutional and void. It sanctions the taking of private property for public use without compensation.
2. Therefore, the prescribed limitation of the time within which a writ of certiorari must be sued out, to review an assessment under said section, for benefits alleged to accrue by reason of the transfer of a turnpike franchise to the Road Board, is inoperative.

(Decided ———, 1886.)

ERROR to the Supreme Court, to review a judgment of certiorari, setting aside a report of appraisers of damages for Bloomfield Avenue. Affirmed.

N. J.

The case was argued in the supreme court at the November Term, 1884, before Van Syckel and Knapp, JJ. The opinion of the court, delivered by VAN SYCKEL, J., is as follows:

The writ in this case brings up the report of appraisers of damages for Bloomfield Avenue, awarding $22,000 to the Newark & Pompton Turnpike Company, as compensation for the franchise of its turnpike from the Newark City line to Morris County line, and apportioning $7,515.64 as the share to be paid by Caldwell Township.

It also certifies for review the revised assessment of February 6, 1872, against the relators, for the special benefits alleged to accrue to them by reason of the transfer of the said franchise to the Essex Public Road Board.

The Act of 1874 (P. L. p. 389), as amended by the Act of 1875 (P. L. p. 421), provides that writs of certiorari shall be brought within two months after ratification of the assessors' report.

The writ in this case was not prosecuted until August, 1884; and therefore the plaintiff, by his laches, has lost his remedy, unless the assessment is wholly without authority and void.

If any benefit could have been conferred upon the relators, by the transfer of the turnpike franchise from the turnpike company to the Road Board, the judgment of the assessors cannot be disturbed.

Section 16 of the supplement of 1870 to the Road Board Act (P. L. p. 181), empowers the said Board to purchase or take (compensation being first made) any turnpike road in said county, or such part thereof as may be necessary; and the damages sustained by the taking shall be ascertained as is directed in case of taking lands; and the compensation paid the turnpike company shall be assessed upon lands peculiarly benefited.

Under this provision the franchise of the turnpike company was condemned by the Essex Public Road Board, and the turnpike company awarded $22,000 therefor.

This case turns upon the question whether there can be, in legal contemplation, any special benefit conferred upon the adjacent land owners by such transfer of the turnpike franchise. If not, the legislative Act, in the respect that it authorizes an assessment against the relators for supposed benefits, is unconstitutional and void.

In Wright v. Carter, 3 Dutch. 76, which was an action of ejectment, Chief Justice Green held that the land was subject to the same easement after the turnpike company took it as before, it having been a laid out road; that, therefore, the land owner suffered no damage, so far as the change in the title to the franchise of the road was concerned. Nothing was taken from him that he had before the transfer.

In the court of errors the view of the court below was concurred in, although the judgment was reversed on another point. See State v. Lacerack, 5 Vroom, 207.

In delivering the opinion of the supreme court, Chief Justice Green said: "The title of the soil is not changed; it remains as it was before, in the owner of the adjoining soil. He has precisely the same right to and control over the soil that he had before the passage of the Act. The land was subject to the easement or right of way before the passage of the Act, and continues subject to the same burden still. It cannot, therefore, be said that the property of the plaintiff was, by virtue of the Act, taken for public use without just compensation. Nothing was, in fact, taken from the plaintiff. As before the passage of the Act, so after, the title to the soil remained in the plaintiff, the right of way in the public. All that the Legislature granted to the turnpike company was the easement of the use of the ancient highway for the purposes of their road."

So in this case; the easement, after its acquisition by the Essex Public Road Board, did not lose its identity, or in anywise change its character. It was neither diminished nor enlarged in its extent, and it constituted no additional burden or servitude. If, therefore, the easement remains the same in the ownership of the Road Board, and no damage by such change falls upon the land owner, how can any benefit accrue to the land owner by the transfer? If some benefit could accrue by reason of abolishing tolls in this case, then in Wright v. Carter, some damage might have ensued to the land owner by the conversion of the public way from a free to a toll road.

If the extinguishment of the right to toll is a benefit to be assessed, then the grant of a right to take toll must be a damage for which the land owner is entitled to compensation. Such right in the land owner was expressly denied in Wright v. Carter.

The condemnation of the franchise by the Road Board is not an improvement of the highway. Until work or reparation is done upon it, it in no respect undergoes improvement. It simply vests the franchise in a new owner, so that improvements may be projected and carried out, if desired.

The Legislature may authorize an assessment against land owners for benefits conferred by taking land not before constituting a road bed, because by such taking the advantage of a highway not before in esse is acquired. But here the easement was enjoyed as fully before the condemnation as afterwards.

The right to assess for the mere transfer of the franchise is one thing; the right to assess for improving it is another and very different thing. The latter right is not controverted.

If there is any possible benefit to the relators in this case, there must have been a possible damage in Wright v. Carter, in which event it must have been submitted to a jury. But the court in that case held, as matter of law, that there could be no resulting damage to the land owner.

If the right to take toll has been extinguished by the transfer of the franchise to the Road Board, the cost of repairing must be provided by tax, to which the relators must contribute. The tax will stand in the place of the toll; and the change from one burden to the other will constitute no basis for an imposition upon the relators, according to the views expressed in the case cited.

The legislative grant in section 16, of the right to assess damages for the mere transfer of the franchise, is an authority to lay a burden where no possible benefit can accrue, and is to this extent unconstitutional and void. It sanctions the taking of private property for public use without compensation. In such case the prescribed limitation of the time within which a writ of certiorari must be sued out is inoperative. Traphagen v. West Hoboken, 10 Vroom, 232; State v. Elizabeth, 12 Vroom, 152; Kirkpatrick v. Commissioners, 13 Vroom, 510; Culver v. Jersey City, 16 Vroom, 256.

The assessments for benefits, based upon the mere transfer of the turnpike franchise to the Road Board, should be set aside.

Mr. John W. Taylor, for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Stevens & Ward, for defendants in error.

Runyon, Chancellor, delivered the opinion of the court:

The judgment of the Supreme Court should be affirmed, for the reasons given by that court in its opinion.

For affirmance—The Chancellor, Chief Justice, Magie, Parker, Scudder, Brown, Clement, Cole, Whitaker—9.

For reversal—Dixon, Reed, McGregor, Paterson—4.

STATE, William A. ALDRIDGE et al., Prosecutors, Pliffs. in Err.,
v.

ESSEX PUBLIC ROAD BOARD.

STATE, Lydia ANDREWS et al., Prosc- utors, Pliffs. in Err.,
v.

SAME.

1. The change of a turnpike to a common, free, public road confers no special benefit upon the land owner.
2. The statutory provision authorizing the assessment of the price of the turnpike upon land owners benefited is unconstitutional and void.

(Decided —, 1886.)

ERROR to the Supreme Court, to review a judgment affirming an assessment for damages for Bloomfield Avenue. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion. The opinion of the supreme court is reported in 17 Vroom, 126.

Mr. John L. Blake, for plaintiffs in error.

Mr. John W. Taylor, for defendant in error.

Runyon, Chancellor, delivered the opinion of the court:

The writs of error in these cases bring up for review assessments made by the Essex Public Road Board upon the lands of the prosecutors in the Townships of Bloomfield and Montclair, in the County of Essex, for benefits conferred by the laying out and widening of Bloomfield Avenue, in that county.

Among the objections to the proceedings it is assigned for error that a proportion of the price at which the Board purchased, from the Newark and Pompton Turnpike Company, its turnpike, which is part of the avenue, was assessed upon the prosecutors' lands. By a supplement, passed in 1870, to the Road Board Act, the board was authorized to buy the turnpike and to assess the price upon the lands peculiarly benefited.

The objection above stated is well founded. It was held by the supreme court in Wright v. Carter, 3 Dutch. 76, that no damage is done to the owners of the soil of a public highway by changing such highway from a common, free, public road to a turnpike; or in other words, by transferring the easement from the public to a private corporation, which by law is authorized to require of the public payment of tolls for traveling upon the road.

The court of errors took the same view of the matter, as appears from the opinion of Chief Justice Beasley in State v. Laverack, 5 Vroom, 201. Upon the same grounds upon which the decision in that case rests, it must be held that the converse: that the change of a turnpike to a common, free, public road confers no special benefit upon the land owner, is true also. It was so held by this court at this term in Essex Public Road Board v. Speer [ante, 829].

It follows that the statutory provision authorizing the assessment of the price of the turnpike upon the land owners is unconstitutional and void. This conclusion renders it unnecessary to consider the other objections to the proceedings.

The judgment of the Supreme Court will be reversed.

For affirmance—None.

For reversal—The Chancellor, Chief Justice, Dixon, Knapp, Magie, Scudder, Clement, Cole, McGregor, Paterson, Whitaker—11.

George B. BEATTY et al., Executors of David Cory, Deceased, Appts.,

v.

Trustees of CORY UNIVERSALIST SOCIETY at Sparta et al., Respts.

1. An account rendered by executors within thirteen months after the probate of the will and before the estate was in condition for final settlement, which nowhere on its face states that it was either final or joint, and which was neither signed nor sworn to by any executor, where only two of the four executors were present at or cognizant of the making of the account, and they swore that they understood that the account was not final, and that each was accounting for his own transactions only, is not binding upon the executors as a joint and final account.
2. Where a will directs that certain legacies shall be paid to the legatees "in notes or bonds and mortgages, transferred to them with the respective value at the time by the executors," such securities are to be taken by the legatees at their fair intrinsic value, and not at the amount due on them.

(Decided ———, 1886.)

APPEAL from a decree of the Chancellor. Reversed.

The facts and questions raised are stated in the opinion of the court. The chancellor's opinion is reported in 12 Stew. 452.

Mr. Thomas Kays, for appellants.

N. J.

Mr. Edward Q. Keasbey, with whom was Mr. A. Q. Keasbey, for respondents:

The executors cannot have relief in equity from a decree of the orphans' court, except on the ground of fraud or palpable mistake appearing on the face of the account. If there had been a mistake, they should have appealed or applied to the orphans' court for a resettlement of the account; and even the orphans' court cannot open a final account, except to correct the particular item which is wrong. The account cannot be restated and made over again on new evidence.

Stevenson v. Phillips, 2 McCart. 236; Hyer v. Moorehouse, Spencer, 125; Voorhees v. Voorhees, Exr. 3 C. E. Green, 223-228; Black v. Whitall, 1 Stock, 572-576; Frey v. Demarest, 1 C. E. Green, 236; Conover v. Conover, Saxt. 403; Story, Eq. Jur. § 142, et seq.

Even if the executors did not intend to make a joint account, they cannot now be relieved of the consequences of filing an account which purported to be joint. They became jointly liable for the balance stated; and the legatees had a right to rely on that liability and were not driven to a discovery in whose hands the funds are.

Laroe v. Douglass, 2 Beas. 308; Wilson v. Fisher, 1 Halst. Ch. 439.

The executors were bound to take measures promptly to turn all the securities in their hands into money and, if they did not pay the legacy, to invest the money in state or United States bonds, or bonds and mortgages, according to the rule imposed upon all executors and trustees.

Tucker v. Tucker, 6 Stew. 235; 7 Stew. 292; Gray v. Fox, Saxt. 259; Lathrop v. Smalley, 8 C. E. Green, 192; Halsted v. Meeker, 3 C. E. Green, 186; Vreeland v. Vreeland, 1 C. E. Green, 512.

For instances of the rule as to the personal liability of an executor for a loss resulting from delay or negligence in collecting or investing funds, see:

Wms. Exrs. 1284, 1285, 1287, 1290; Hayward v. Kinsey, 12 Mod. 573; Lowson v. Copeland, 2 Bro. Ch. Cas. 156; Powell v. Evans, 5 Ves. 839; Mucklow v. Fuller, Jacob, 198; Massey v. Banner, 1 Jac. & Walk. 248; Moyle v. Moyle, 2 Russ. & Myl. 710; Buxton v. Buxton, 1 Mylne & C. 80; Brazier v. Clark, 5 Pick. 96; Cooley v. Van Syckle, 1 McCart. 496; Holcomb v. Holcomb, 3 Stock. 282, 300, 476; Vreeland v. Vreeland, 1 C. E. Green, 512-530; Stark v. Hunton, 2 Green, Ch. 800.

The intention of the testator must be very clear before the court will hold a legacy to be specific.

See Norris v. Thomson, 1 C. E. Green, 218; 2 McCart. 498; Perrine v. Perrine, 1 Halst. 133, 140; Wheeler v. Hartshorn, 40 Wis. 83; Metcalf v. Framingham Parish, 128 Mass. 870.

Messrs. Roe & Shepherd, also for respondents.

Dixon, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The object of the present bill, filed by the executors of David Cory, deceased, is that the court of chancery should take exclusive jurisdiction and control of the final settlement and distribution of the estate of the decedent; and to this end the executors ask to be relieved from the force of an alleged joint and final account, presented to and confirmed by the Orphans' Court of Sussex County, at the December Term 1871. On this prayer, the chancellor has decreed that the account must stand and be accepted as a joint and final account of all the executors, except as to a few designated items. From this feature of the decree, the complainants appeal.

In our judgment the decree is erroneous.

There are four executors, and they all swear that only two of them, Beatty and Easton, were present at or cognizant of the making of this account; and these two also swear that they understood that the account was not final, and that each was accounting for his own transactions only.

The account was rendered within thirteen months after the probate of the will, and before the estate was in condition for final settlement. It nowhere on its face states that it was either final or joint, and it was neither signed nor sworn to by any executor. The testimony to the contrary is that of the surrogate alone, by whom the account was stated. It is not likely that his memory of a transaction occurring so long ago, and resembling no doubt many others in which he was engaged, without more than an official interest, should be so distinct as that of the executors, to whom the matter was comparatively novel and specially important. The general veracity of none of the witnesses is impugned. We therefore think that the decided preponderance of proof is with the complainants, and that this portion of the decree should be reversed, and the executors be permitted to render their accounts in the pending suit.

Consequent upon the chancellor's view of the conclusiveness of this account are other portions of the decree, to the effect "that the cost of endeavors to collect claims (except as to the Alfred Roof mortgage), after the account in the orphans' court, are not to be allowed; that the complainants, as such executors, are chargeable with all the unpaid legacies in full, with interest thereon; and that the complainants pay the costs of this suit." These directions must also be reversed, and the points involved will remain to be disposed of, upon other considerations, at the final accounting.

The bill also prays for the construction of various clauses of the will, and the appellants complain of the interpretation put by the chancellor on some of its provisions. In one respect only do we think he has erred.

The will directs that certain legacies are to be paid by the executors to the legatees "in notes, or bonds and mortgages, transferred to them with the respective value at the time by the executors."

The chancellor regards this as directing that the value at which these securities shall be taken by the legatees shall be the amount due upon them at the time of the transfer. The appellants insist, and we agree with them, that the intention was that they should be taken at their fair intrinsic value; otherwise some of the bequests might be rendered abortive by the perverse or mistaken conduct of the executors in assigning worthless paper to the legatees. Such a result we think would defeat the purpose of the testator. On this point also the decree should be reversed.

Let the record be remitted, that the cause may be proceeded in according to equity.

For affirmance—McGregor—1.

For reversal—The Chief Justice, Depue, Dixon, Knapp, Parker, Reed, Scudder, Van Syckel, Brown, Clement, Pater-son—11.

Trustees of the CORY UNIVERSALIST SOCIETY at Sparta, Receipts, v.

George B. BEATTY et al., Executors of David Cory, Deceased, Appts.

Per Curiam :

This cause was heard before the chancellor in conjunction with and upon the same evidence as was offered in the case of Beatty, etc. v. Trustees of Cory Universalist Society [preceding case]; and upon the opinion in that cause delivered (to the effect that the account presented to the Orphans' Court of Sussex County at December Term 1871 was binding upon the executors of David Cory, as a joint and final account), the chancellor adjudged that the executors were jointly chargeable with assets sufficient to pay to these complainants the legacy bequeathed to them by the will of David Cory, deceased, and decreed that the said executors pay the same, $12,000 with interest thereon, from the end of one year after the probate of the will, less $3,000 thereof previously paid.

The executors appealed from that decree, and their appeal was heard with their appeal in the said cause wherein they were complainants.

For the reasons stated in the opinion delivered in the appeal last mentioned, the decree below should be reversed, and the determination of the amount for which the executors are chargeable toward the payment of said legacy should await the settlement of the executors' accounts upon the bill which they have filed for that purpose.

For affirmance—McGregor—1.

For reversal—The Chief Justice, Depue, Dixon, Knapp, Parker, Reed, Scudder, Van Syckel, Brown, Clement, Pater-son—11.

PREROGATIVE COURT.

Joseph R. BRUERE, Trustee, etc., Appt.,
v.

Almira R. GULICK et al., Admsrs., Receipts.

Where, by the provisions of a will, a trust therein established, is to be executed by the executor in that capacity, and the trust is inseparable from the executorship, the executor is not entitled to double commissions, first as executor and then as trustee.

(Decided ———, 1886.)

APPEAL from a decree of the Orphans' Court of Mercer County, upon an accounting in the settlement of a decedent's estate. Reversed.

Mr. A. G. Richey, for appellant.

Mr. G. O. Vanderbilt, for respondents.

Runyon, Ordinary, delivered the following opinion:

By the third section of the will of William Gulick, deceased (the instrument is dated July 30, 1855), he devised to his executors and to the survivor of them certain lands, in trust to receive the rents, issues and profits thereof, and pay them to his son, William A. Gulick, and his son's then wife, Sarah, each and every year during their lives, and after their death the property was to go to their children.

By the residuary clause, he gave one fifth of the residue of his estate to William. By the codicil, dated February 14, 1863, he revoked that gift, and gave the fifth to his executors, thereafter named, and the survivor of them, in trust for the use and benefit of William's before mentioned wife for life; and after her death it was to go to their children.

By the codicil, he directed the executors to retain William's indebtedness to his estate out of the share, and if there should be any residue thereof after payment of that indebtedness, they were to invest it and pay the interest to William's before mentioned wife for life, and the principal after her death was to go to the children. He revoked the appointment of executors made by the will, and appointed his son Alexander and Job S. Olden, and the survivor of them, executors. The inventory amounted to $151,398.08.

By the first account, which was filed by Alexander Gulick alone, and ran from July 31, 1865, to January 10, 1867, the accountant charged himself with $164,092.21, and was allowed $3,461.64 as commissions upon that sum. He was charged, on that account, with a balance of $86,013.48. The next account was that of both executors. They charged themselves with that balance, and $31,808.94 of additional receipts. They were allowed commissions to the amount of $806.17 upon the $31,808.94. This account was sworn to, and allowed in February, 1870. The third account was passed in May, 1876, and was of the sum of $4,000, retained, under the provisions of the will, for the support of Rachel, a slave, and interest thereon. It was filed by Alexander Gulick alone. Job S. Olden, the other executor, was then dead. It charged the accountant with the $4,000 and $1,680 of interest, and he was allowed commissions upon the latter sum alone.

Alexander Gulick subsequently died, and his administrators, in 1885, filed his account of his dealing with the trust under the will in favor of William A. Gulick and his wife and children. It runs from January 1, 1870, to January 15, 1881. It charges the amount received from settlement of the estate of William Gulick, deceased, $6,518.91, and interest received thereon, $6,241.80, and "cash from trust fund invested, under the will of William Gulick, for Rachel, $824.17," and interest received thereon, $422.88; also, rents received from farm (land devised by the third section of the will for the benefit of William A. Gulick and his wife and their children), $8,400. The commissions of the executor upon the interest and rents were paid thereout.

The administrators claim commissions upon the principal of the two funds; that is, upon the $6,518.91, and the $824.17. The claim is resisted on the part of Mrs. Gulick. The orphans' court allowed it.

By the will the share in question was given to the executors, and the survivor of them, in trust, and they were (as executors) to collect the indebtedness due the estate from William A. Gulick, by retaining the amount of it from the share (and to that end the power to convert the share into cash if they should deem it necessary or advisable was conferred upon them); and they were, as executors, to hold the balance in trust, to pay the interest to William A. Gulick's wife for life, and at her death the principal was to go to the children.

The provision for the slave was that she should be free, and if she should become unable to support herself, the executors should support her out of the estate. These trusts devolved upon the executors as executors. In the case of the fund for the support of the slave, the principal constituted part of the residue, and it could not be distributed until she ceased to need support out of the estate, and then it would be the duty of the executors to distribute it.

There is no evidence in the provisions of the will that the testator intended that the executors should hold the balance, not as executors but in a different capacity, as trustees. He clearly intended that the trust should be executed by the executors in that capacity. Where, as in this case, the trust is inseparable from the executorship, the executor is not entitled to double commissions, first as executor and then as trustee. Everson v. Pitney, 18 Stew. 539, and cases there cited.

The supplement of 1882 to the Orphans' Court Act (P. L. 1882, p. 280) supports this view of the subject. It provides that whenever, upon the settlement of the accounts of executors or trustees under a will, or of commissioners in partition, the usual commissions shall have been allowed them, according to law and in pursuance of the provisions of the will or of the directions of the court, any money shall remain in the hands of or to be intrusted to any such person or persons for investment, the interest of which is required to be paid to any legatee or other person that may be entitled thereto, it shall and may be lawful, upon any subsequent accounting, for the court before which said account shall be presented for settlement and allowance to consider the actual pains, trouble and risk of such accountant, and to allow such commissions upon the interest or income received as to [by] the said court shall be deemed fair and just; provided, that said allowance shall not exceed the sum of 5 per centum on such interest or income.

It will be seen that that Act embraces such cases as this, and it is quoted to show that the Legislature, when its attention was drawn to the subject, provided, not that there shall be double commissions on the principal, but that the accountant, where he shall once have had the usual commissions, shall receive his compensation for his further pains, trouble and risk, in commissions to be allowed him upon the interest and income only, and that then it shall not exceed 5 per centum of such interest or income.

It is admitted, and it so appears from the accounts also, that the executors received commissions according to law upon the principal of the fund in their accounts as executors. The accountants in this case are not entitled to commissions upon the corpus of the trust fund. It may be remarked that it seems that in the first account Alexander Gulick received commissions upon the whole amount of the inventory, though he asked and obtained allowance for $33,425.63 of it as unsettled and subject to a claim of set-off, and in the second account the executors received commissions again upon $24,610.05 for the same demand which had then been settled and that sum collected upon it.

The decree of the orphans' court, which merely adjudges that the exceptions to the allowance of commissions on the principal of the trust fund be overruled, and that the accountants be allowed a commission at the usual rate upon such principal, will be reversed. No costs, either above or below, will be awarded to either side.

Ann J. HICKS, Appt.,
v.

Sarah C. WILLIS, Exrx., Respt.

An executor's sale of real estate to pay debts, ordered by the orphans' court and duly advertised, may be adjourned by the executor through his attorney or agent; and it is not essential that the executor be present in person at the announcement of adjournment.

(Decided — — 1886.)

A PPEAL from the Orphans' Court of Union County, to review an order confirming an executor's sale of lands to pay debts. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. E. F. Morrow, for appellant.

Mr. Charles F. Hill, for respondent:

The executor may sell lands to pay debts.

See Orphans' Court Act, §§ 70, 71, 76; and Sale of Land Act, §§ 1, 3, 6, 37, 40.

If the court has jurisdiction, a mere irregularity in selling or in the method of conducting the same, will not avoid the sale.

Boylan v. Kelly, 9 Stew. 331, 332; Runyon v. Newark India Rubber Co. 4 Zab. 467; Youngs' Admr. v. Rathbone, 1 C. E. Green, 224; Bray v. Neill's Exrx. 6 C. E. Green, 343.

It is not necessary that a notice of sale be signed by the sheriff or master or executor, with his own hand.

Coze v. Halsted, 1 Green, Ch. 311.

There is no rule of court regulating adjournments, and the statute governing is the Sale of Land Act, §§ 3, 4, 6, 37, 40.

Unless fraud, mistake or accident be shown, by which the rights of others have been injuriously affected, the sale will not be interfered with by this court.

Seaman v. Riggins, 1 Green, Ch. 214, 217; Campbell v. Gardner, 3 Stock. 423.

A purchaser is not to be deprived of his rights by reason of mere irregularities in the proceedings, of which he was ignorant.

Conover v. Walling, 2 McCart. 178.

Where a party is present and makes no objection to an adjournment, he cannot afterwards be heard to except to it because irregular.

Zingsem v. Kidd, 2 Stew. 516.

A public proclamation of an adjournment is all that the law requires.

Allen v. Cole, 1 Stock. 286; Coze v. Halsted, 1 Green, Ch. 311.

The adjournment of a sale of lands is purely a ministerial act and may be done by attorney.

See Losey v. Simpson, 3 Stock. 246; Hayes v. Stiger, 2 Stew. 196; McDowell v. Perrine, 9 Stew. 632; Butler v. Kitchen, 12 Vroom, 229; De Louis v. Meek, 2 G. Greene (Iowa), 55; Weeks, Attys. § 216; Freem. Void Judg. Sales, 43, 44; Boylan v. Kelly, 9 Stew. 331; Skillman v. Holcomb, 1 Beas. 131; Hewitt v. R. Co. 10 C. E. Green, 392.

The purchaser is not to lose his purchase because of erroneous advice regarding matters of law given to the appellant by her counsel.

Dillett v. Kemble, 10 C. E. Green, 66; Hayes v. Stiger, 2 Stew. 196; Skillman v. Holcomb, 1 Beas. 131; Mott v. Shreeve, 10 C. E. Green, 438.

Offers to pay more for the property than it brought at public sale, are not in themselves ground for setting aside the sale.

Cline v. Prall, 12 C. E. Green, 415; Hewitt v. R. Co. 10 C. E. Green, 392.

A sale for less than value, if fair, is no cause for setting aside the sale.

White v. Zust, 1 Stew. 107; Flommerfelt v. Zellers, 2 Halst. Law, 153; Smith v. Young, 1 Halst. Law, 300.

Public proclamation of an adjournment of a sale is all the notice of such adjournment that is required.

Wade, Notice § 1086; Coze v. Halsted, 1 Green, Ch. 311; Allen v. Cole, 1 Stock. 286.

This proclamation may be made by the executor in person or by representative.

R. S. Sale of Land Act, § 3; Freem. Void Judg. Sales, 43; White v. Zust, 1 Stew. 107; Tousslip of Morris v. Carey, 3 Dutch. 377; Abbott, Law Dic. 109.

The title of a purchaser, not himself in fault, cannot be impaired by any mere error or irregularity in the proceedings.

Freem. Void Judg. Sales, 43, 44; Skillman v. Holcomb, 1 Beas. 131; Hewitt v. R. Co. 10 C. E. Green, 392; Boylan v. Kelly, 9 Stew. 331.

Runyon, Ordinary, delivered the following opinion:

The appeal in this case is from an order of the orphans' court, confirming a sale of land made, under its order, by the respondent, as executrix of Thomas E. Hicks, deceased, to raise money to pay his debts. The appellant is the widow of Mr. Hicks. The only grounds of objection presented on the argument were that the sale was not duly advertised, and that if it was so, the adjournments were not made by the executrix in person or in her presence. The objection to the advertisement was not discussed and there does not appear to be any ground for it.

The executrix was not present at any of the adjournments. Some of them were made for her by her attorney, and the others by the deputy surrogate of the county (the sale was advertised to take place at the court house), upon the written request of the attorney. In each case a written notice of the adjournment, signed by the attorney as attorney for the executrix, was posted under the notice of sale at the court house. It was to the effect that the sale was adjourned by order of the executrix, to take place at the court house at a specified day and hour, the same stated in the verbal announcement of the adjournment.

The executrix, in her report of the sale to the court, stated that the adjournments were made by her, and that the last one (which, like the others, was for one week only) was advertised in two newspapers and by notices set up in four public places in the City of Elizabeth, and in five public places in the Township of Springfield, the township in which the land lay. And she reported that in pursuance of such last adjournment, at the time and place fixed therein, she attended and then and there sold the property at public vendue to George Schmitt, the highest bidder, for $1,400.

It appears, by the stipulation of counsel, that the property is worth $2,000 "to any person who wants it;" but it also appears thereby that the property was sold by the executrix twice before the sale under consideration, under the order of sale, and brought the same price, $1,400, at each of those sales. No person was present at any of the adjournments to bid upon the property. The appellant or her attorney was present at each of the adjournments, and had full notice thereof.

There is no good reason for holding that the announcement of an adjournment of a sale by an executor or administrator, under the order of a court, must be made either by or in the presence of the executor or administrator. On the other hand, every consideration of convenience is against it.

It is urged that an argument in favor of the proposition is to be drawn from the supplement of April 13, 1876, to the Act "relative to sales of lands under a public statute or by virtue of any judicial proceedings" (Rev. p. 1051, § 37), by which it is provided that any master in chancery may continue any sale to be made by him under execution or order of sale, by public adjournment made by a master in chancery, or the sheriff of the county in which the lands lie, provided such master or sheriff be authorized by him in writing under his hand, to make such adjournment. But it by no means follows from that legislation that an executor or administrator cannot lawfully adjourn a sale to be made by him under order of the orphans' court, unless he either make the announcement himself or be present in person at the making thereof; nor is any such inference to be drawn therefrom.

The case of Meyer v. Patterson, 1 Stew. 239, cited by the appellant's counsel, is not in point. That case holds that a sheriff cannot appoint a special deputy pro hac vice by parol, and that if a sale under an execution in a foreclosure suit in chancery be made by a bailiff thus informally appointed, it will be set aside on a direct application to the chancellor in the course of the proceeding. It is no authority for the proposition for which the appellant's counsel contends. Nor has the maxim "Delegatus non potest delegare" any application; for there is no delegation of trust or confidence in the committing to an attorney or agent the performance of the merely ministerial act of announcing an adjournment of a sale for and in the stead of the trustee.

Trustees may act through agents and attorneys to a certain extent in matters confided to their discretion. If a trustee gives instructions to his attorneys and agents how to act, it cannot be said to be a delegation of his trust. Perry, Trusts § 409; Sugd. Pow. 222.

It is very clear that an executor or administrator, ordered by a court to make sale of land, may lawfully adjourn the sale through the instrumentality of an attorney or agent. It may be added that in this case the first adjournment at least, and perhaps all of them, was made at the suggestion of the ordinary, in open court, upon an application for an order for such adjournment in behalf of George Schmitt, who was the purchaser at the second sale. He was also the purchaser at the first sale, but the orphans' court refused to confirm that sale on account of a defect in the advertisement. After the second sale he refused to complete his purchase, because he was advised by his counsel that the orphans' court could not lawfully sell the property free from the widow's dower. He made an unsuccessful application to that court to set aside the sale upon that ground. From the order denying the application he appealed to this court. The executrix, upon his refusal to complete his purchase, readvertised the property. In order to save himself from the consequences of a resale at a lower price than that which he had bid, he applied to this court to prevent the executrix from reselling the property until his appeal should have been decided. In consequence of and upon that application, as before stated, the first adjournment was made, and perhaps the others also. So that some of the adjournments at least (how many does not appear), and perhaps all of them, were made, not at the discretion of the executrix, but in consequence of judicial direction.

The order appealed from will be affirmed, with costs.

James A. ALEXANDER, Exr., Appt.,

v.

John V. BACOT, Admr. Recept.

1. A bond and mortgage, executed by an executor and a devisee, to secure a debt against the estate of the testator, on part of the lands of the estate, intended to secure payment of the debt by the executor, do not operate to discharge the liability of the estate for the debt.
2. The orphans' court has power to determine whether one who files exceptions to the account of an executor or administrator is a creditor of the estate.

(Decided — — 1886.)

APPPEAL from an order of the Orphans' Court of Hudson County. Affirmed.
The nature of the case and the facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. P. Bentley, for appellant.

Mr. Clarence Linn, for respondent.

Runyon, Ordinary, delivered the following opinion

The administrator of the estate of Mrs. Helen C. McClelland, deceased, filed exceptions to the account of James A. Alexander, executor, etc., of Dr. John M. Cornelison, deceased, in the Orphans' Court of Hudson County; and the court, by its order, set the exceptions down for hearing upon a day fixed, and directed that the executor appear on that day, and present himself and his vouchers for examination. From that order the executor appealed. The ground of appeal is that the administrator has no right to except to the executor's account, because the administrator has no claim against the estate.

Dr. Cornelison, at his death, was indebted to Mrs. Maria M. Meade in the sum of $13,000 or thereabouts. By his will he gave to Mr. Alexander one-half of all his real estate except a certain farm (which he gave to his son in fee) for the benefit of his, the testator's, son for life, with remainder to the son's children or their issue, and in default of children or issue thereof, the remainder to go as the son might by his will direct. He gave to his daughter, the wife of Mr. Alexander, the other half of his real estate, excepting the farm; and he gave all his personal estate, except household goods and furniture and farming utensils, to Mr. Alexander, for the purpose of discharging incumbrances upon his, the testator's, property, and the testator's debts, and gave all his household goods and farming utensils and his horses, carriages, harness and cattle to his son and daughter, in equal shares.

After the testator's death, Mr. Alexander as trustee under the will, and Mrs. Alexander as devisee under the will, in order to secure the payment of the debt to Mrs. Meade, gave her their bond in the penalty of $28,000, conditioned for the payment, by Mr. Alexander as trustee, and Mrs. Alexander and Mr. Alexander personally, of $1,291 a year to Mrs. Meade for life, and of the sum of $11,300 to her legal representatives at her death.

To secure the payment of the bond, a mortgage of real estate, part of the Cornelison property, was given. Mrs. Meade died, and by her will gave $5,000 to Mrs. McClelland. The $11,300 due from Dr. Cornelison's estate to Mrs. Meade was unpaid, and for $5,000 of it Mr. Alexander, as trustee under the will of Dr. Cornelison, and Mrs. Alexander, gave to Mrs. McClelland their bond in the penalty of $10,000, dated November 1, 1879, conditioned for the payment, by Mr. and Mrs. Alexander, of $5,000 in three years, with interest.

Under the bond was written an agreement, under seal, signed by Mr. Alexander as executor, by which he, as executor of the will of Dr. Cornelison, agreed with Mrs. McClelland to pay her $500, on account of the principal of the bond, each year, until the bond should be paid off. To secure the payment of that bond, a mortgage of part of the real estate mortgaged to Mrs. Meade was given. Upon the delivery of the latter bond and mortgage, the bond and mortgage to Mrs. Meade were canceled. Mr. Alexander has paid $750 on account of the principal of the McClelland bond, and the interest up to 1884, inclusive. He testifies that he has always considered the debt due to Mrs. McClelland a debt of the estate of Dr. Cornelison.

If the liability of the estate of Dr. Cornelison to pay the debt due to Mrs. Meade was discharged by the giving of the bond and mortgage to her, the administrator of Mrs. McClelland has no right to except to the account of the executor. But the giving of the bond and mortgage was not payment of the debt. It was intended to secure thereby payment of the debt by the executor. The bond was made by Mr. Alexander in his trust capacity under the will. He styles himself trustee.

The intention was to bind the estate, part of which was devised to him in trust for the testator's son, and another part to Mrs. Alexander, for the payment of the debt by the executor. The bond to Mrs. McClelland was given in like manner and with like design, and Mr. Alexander, as executor, agreed to pay the money therein mentioned in certain specified installments. The debt due from Dr. Cornelison's estate was not discharged by the giving of the bond and mortgage to Mrs. Meade, nor were $5,000 of it discharged by the bond and mortgage to Mrs. McClelland. Such appears to have been the understanding of the parties. In his letters to Mrs. McClelland and her administrator, Mr. Alexander speaks of the $5,000 bond and mortgage as having been given by him as executor, and of the money due thereon as being due from Dr. Cornelison's estate, and in his account he claims credit for the payments of principal and interest made by him on the bond. There is no evidence that the bonds and mortgages were accepted in discharge of the liability of the estate, but the evidence is to the contrary.

The administrator of Mrs. McClelland, upon the application to have the exceptions set down for hearing, made oath that the estate of Dr. Cornelison was indebted to the estate of Mrs. McClelland in the sum of $4,000 and upwards. The executor cannot, under the circumstances, deny the title of Mrs. McClelland's administrator to part of the Meade debt.

The orphans' court decided that the administrator was a creditor of the estate, and therefore entitled to except to the account. It had power to make such adjudication. Poulson v. Nat. Bank of Frenchtown, 6 Stew. 250, 618.

It may be remarked that in the report of the opinion of this court in that case, upon the subject of the power of the orphans' court to determine whether one who files exceptions to the account of an executor or administrator is a creditor of the estate, the word "without" (p. 253) is a misprint of the word "within."

The order appealed from will be affirmed, with costs.

Elwood KING, Appt.,

v.

Elwood ROCKHILL, Respt.

An order of the orphans' court revoking an order theretofore made by it extending the time for filing exceptions to claims against an insolvent estate, on the ground that such order was improvidently granted, being discretionary, is not appealable.

(Decided — — 1886.)

A PPEAL from an order of the Orphans' Court of Burlington County, revoking an order extending the time for filing exceptions to claims against an estate. Dismissed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. J. H. Gaskill, for appellant.

Mr. Mark R. Sooy, for respondent:

Contended—1. That the orphans' court had no power to grant further time to creditors to file exceptions to the administrators' accounts, the application not being within the time fixed for presenting the report of claims.

Rev. p. 771, § 83.

2. That if the court had such power, its exercise was entirely discretionary, and that it was equally within the discretion of the court to vacate an order improvidently made.

3. That no appeal will lie from an order that was discretionary.

Moore v. Ruggi, 5 Stew. 273.

4. That if an appeal would lie, there is nothing on the record to show that the discretion was improperly exercised.

Ruayon, Ordinary, delivered the following opinion:

In this case the administrators, upon obtaining the letters of administration, May 9, 1883, took an order limiting creditors. It required them to present their claims within nine months. The limited period expired in February, 1884. In April following, the orphans' court, on application of the administrators, fixed the 16th of July then next as the time for making the report of claims, etc.; and the administrators duly gave notice that the report of claims would be made on that day, and that they would then apply to have the estate declared insolvent.

In May, 1884, the court made an order barring creditors who had not come in under the before mentioned order of limitation. On June 6, 1884, the report of assets and claims was filed, from which it appeared that there were assets to the amount of $15,009.25; preferred claims to the amount of $13,528.81, and unpreferred claims to the amount of $3,666.69. On the 25th of August following, the administrators filed their final account, which was duly passed at December Term, 1884. It showed a balance in favor of the administrators of $274.20.

On May 5, 1885, the court ordered the account to be restated, which was done, and the account as restated showed a balance of $1,259.98 against the administrators. On July 1, 1885, the court, on application of a creditor, and without notice, made an order giving twenty days further time in which to file exceptions to the claims presented to the administrators. On July 19, 1885, exceptions were filed to twelve of the claims, amounting together to $3,096.58. On the 18th of August following, the court, upon due notice, on the application of one of the creditors, to whose claim exception had been filed, set aside the order giving further time to accept, on the ground that it was improvidently made, and at the same time dismissed all the exceptions without hearing them. From the order setting aside the order giving further time, the exceptant appealed to this court.

The Orphans' Court Act provides that any person interested may file exceptions to the claim or demand, or any part thereof, of any creditor against an insolvent estate, but such exceptions must be filed on or before the day specified for presenting the report of claims to the court, or within such time as the court may on application allow. Rev. p. 771, § 86.

The time specified in this case was July 16, 1884. No exceptions were filed at that time, nor was any extension of time for filing exceptions asked for at or before that time. When, subsequently, the final account of the administrators was passed, it appeared that there was nothing to distribute. On the restatement thereof a balance for distribution was shown. The court then, upon application, gave further time within which to except, and exceptions were filed within such period. The ground on which the court vacated the order for further time was that it had been improvidently granted. The time for filing exceptions expired on the 16th of July, 1884. No application for further time was made until nearly a year afterwards, when an application was made without notice.

It is urged, on behalf of the appellant, that the creditors did not know until after the restatement of the final account in May, 1885, that there would be any sum to distribute among them; for, at the settlement of that account in December Term, 1884, there appeared to be a balance in favor of the administrators. But as before stated they filed no exceptions within the time fixed by law, and asked no further time to do so for almost a year.

The respondent's counsel insists that the court had no power to grant further time to except, unless the application were made at or before the expiration of the time fixed for presenting the report.

Without regard to the questions thus raised, it is enough to say that it was entirely discretionary with the court whether it would grant the appellant further time to except or not, and it was equally within its discretion to vacate an order improvidently made. The appeal is from the vacating order. No appeal will lie from that order, because it was discretionary; and if an appeal would lie, there is nothing before me from which I could say whether the discretion was properly exercised or not.

The appeal will be dismissed, with costs

Re WILL OF James M. DIETZ, Deceased.

1. The reasons which induce a testator to change his testamentary disposition of his property, or to make a disposition of his estate which appears to be unequal or even absolutely unjust, need not be mentioned by him. The will cannot be rejected because the court can see no good reason for the change.
2. The orphans' court, having appointed an administrator pendente lite, may order parties before it to pay and deliver over moneys and property of the estate, received by them since the death of the testator, to such administrator.

(Decided — — 1886.)

APPEAL from a decree of the Orphans' Court of Essex County, admitting a previous will to probate and rejecting a subsequent one. Reversed.

APPPEAL from an order of the Orphans' Court of Essex County, directing appellants to pay and deliver over to the administrator with the will annexed, or pendente lite, moneys and property belonging to an estate. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. John Linn. Parmly, Olendorf & Fisk, E. T. Bartlett, of New York, and B. Williamson, for appellants.

Mr. C. Parker, for respondent.

Runyon, Ordinary, delivered the following opinion:

James M. Dietz, late of East Orange, in the County of Essex, died at that place on the 31st day of March, 1884. Two instruments of writing, purporting to be wills of his, one dated January 6, 1870, and the other June 18, 1880, were propounded for probate before the Orphans' Court of Essex County. His widow (he had no children) and his brother, Samuel Dietz, each filed a caveat against admitting to probate any paper purporting to be his last will and testament, until after examination and decree thereon by the orphans' court.

After a long and severe contest, the will of 1870 was, by the decree of the orphans' court, admitted to probate, and the will of 1880 rejected. From that decree, appeals were taken. The appellants are Samuel Dietz and William Cheney, executors of the will of 1880, Samuel Dietz, the American Baptist Home Mission Society, the American Baptist Missionary Union and the American Female Guardian Society, otherwise known as the Home for the Friendless, legatees under that will.

The will of 1870 was executed in the City of New York, while the testator resided there. It was drawn by Mr. Fransioli, a lawyer of that city, and witnessed by him and Joseph F. Mosher, who at that time was a clerk in his office. By it, the testator gave to his wife his household goods, furniture and paintings, and the income of his estate, for life; and he gave, upon her death, $3,000 to his adopted daughter, Maggie Dietz, and the interest of $15,000 to his sister, Sophia, for life, the principal, at her death, to go to Christopher Wolston, then of the City of New York, to whom he also gave the residue of his estate. He appointed John L. Campbell, physician, of Brooklyn, and William Cheney, then the testator's bookkeeper, executors.

The will of 1880 is a holograph. By it, the testator gave to his wife all his household furniture, cooking utensils, beds and bedding, books and pictures, his horse and buggy and carriage, and all the articles appertaining thereto. All the rest of his estate he gave to his executors, in trust, first, to pay his brother, Samuel Dietz, $1,000 a year for life; second, to apply the balance of the interest, income, rents, issues and profits to the use of his wife, annually, for life; third, to pay to his aunt, Mary E. Dietz, if living, $500; fourth, to pay to the American Baptist Home Missionary Society, $10,000; fifth, to pay to the American Baptist Missionary Union, $5,000; and sixth, to pay over, deliver and convey all the residue of his estate to the Home of the Friendless, in East

Twenty-Ninth Street, in the City of New York. He then added:

"In case I have not precisely and correctly described the proper, corporate, or associated names and titles of the American Baptist Home Mission Society, the American Baptist Missionary Union, and the Home of the Friendless, in East Twenty-Ninth Street, yet my executors will not doubt what institutions, associations or establishments are intended by me in using those designations; and if, by reason of any misdescription herein of them or of either of them, or if, by reason of their, or either of their, not being incorporated, they would not respectively take the gifts and devises hereinbefore given and declared in respect to them or either of them, then and in such case as to them respectively, I give to my said executors the power of appointment of the portions of my estate so by me declared to be given and devised respectively to said American Baptist Home Mission Society, the American Baptist Missionary Union, and the Home of the Friendless in East Twenty-Ninth Street, City of New York, so that my said executors shall apply and appropriate the same to the use of the said associations that I have so described as the American Baptist Home Mission Society, the American Baptist Missionary Union, and the Home of the Friendless in East Twenty-Ninth Street, in such manner as to my said executors may seem best and most likely to effect my wishes as above expressed in the premises."

He then appointed his brother, Samuel Dietz, of Grove Street, East Orange, in this State, and William Cheney, of Brooklyn, Long Island, executors, and declared that all the powers, authority and discretion therein given to them, were given to them and the survivor of them, and to whichever of them, if but one, should take upon himself the execution of the will, without bonds; and he empowered his executors to sell his real estate and invest the proceeds thereof, and his personal estate, in such securities, real and personal, public or private, as they should from time to time see fit.

The will is, as before stated, dated June 18, 1880. It was drawn by the testator, in his office in the City of New York, on that day, in the presence of Frederick B. Smith and Gustave Horst, the two members of the firm of F. B. Smith & Horst, die sinkers and engravers, who also carried on their business there.

Mr. Smith testifies, and he is corroborated by his partner, that the testator came into the office in the forenoon and got some paper and wrote; that the witness did not know what it was that he was writing until the testator told them what he had written; that the testator was engaged in writing about an hour and a half or two hours; that when he had written the will, the testator called on the witness and Mr. Horst to come and witness his last will and testament; that he called them "Smith" and "Gus" (meaning Horst, whose Christian name is Gustave), and said to them that it was his last will and testament, and that he wished them to witness his signature; that the testator signed his name to the will, and then read the attestation certificate, and then the witness said to the testator: "You acknowledge this to be your last will and testament, in regard to your personal effects and all your property," or something to that effect, or, as the witness afterwards says: "You acknowledge that to be your last will and testament, and acknowledge that to be your signature;" that the testator said he did, and that the witness then said: "Does this contain the disposition you wish to have made of your property, real and personal?" and the testator replied that it did. He further says that after the testator had signed his name and read the attestation certificate the witnesses signed their names. After the will had been signed, the testator folded it up, and went out of the room into the next room, taking the paper with him.

Mr. Smith had been acquainted with the testator for over thirty years, and had witnessed a will for him about twenty years previously. He says the testator was as sound in mind as he had ever known him in thirty-two years; that he was perfectly sound. Mr. Horst had known him for about six years. He says he was of sound mind. There is no evidence entitled to any weight that at that time the testator was not possessed of full testamentary capacity.

Dr. A. L. Fowler Ormsbee, a doctress, of Orange, testifies that she attended him in an illness of a severe character, which, she says, confined him to his bed during the whole of the month of June, 1880. She says that she thinks he was in an unsettled state of mind; that his "physical condition was very exaggerated, and that he was suffering a great deal," and that she should suppose a man in his physical condition would not be in a very good mental condition. She says, also, that his intellect was very much impaired by his previous life (referring to habits of intemperance), and that his mind was more or less distorted; but she says, also, that he understood what she said to him, and as a rule gave rational answers. He subsequently (July 31, 1880) paid her $194 for medical services. In settling the bill he objected, she says, to one of her charges. He gave her his check for $194, payable to her order, and she indorsed it, and obtained the money for it. An examination of the checks which he gave about the time in question, and of the memoranda in his check book, and the other evidence of his business transactions, renders it entirely clear that on the 18th of June, 1880, he was possessed not only of testamentary capacity, but of excellent business ability.

Mrs. Dietz, the widow, when asked, in her direct examination, what was the condition of his mind with respect to testamentary capacity, from the beginning of 1880, answered that for the last three years of his life (he died in March, 1884) she "should not think" that he was competent to make a will. On her cross examination she says that he was incompetent, because he "indulged so strongly in liquor that he was scarcely ever himself." She says he conducted his own business altogether in 1880, and he appears to have attended to his business down to December 12, 1883, a few months before he died. Mrs. Dietz, when asked when it was that Samuel Dietz acted for her husband, answered that she never knew that he acted for him.

The will in question is itself evidence of the complete possession by the testator of testamentary capacity. He wrote it himself. Including the attestation certificate, it covers five pages of legal cap paper, and it is written in a current hand, without a single erasure. The words "without bonds" are written in a larger hand than the rest of the instrument, and they are emphasized by underscoring.

It is urged that the instrument contains internal evidence that it was drawn by a lawyer. There is no evidence on that head, except such as the will itself affords. There is no evidence that he copied the will from any other paper, or that he had any other paper at the time he wrote it; nor is there any evidence to the contrary. But if he did copy it, that would be evidence of competency, rather than incapacity. It would be evidence of care and painstaking in the preparation of the will, in order that his wishes in the disposition of his property thereby might not be defeated if he could prevent it. That he knew what he was about in making the will is beyond all question, if the testimony of Smith and Horst is to be believed, and no attempt was made to impeach their character for veracity.

Experts were called, in opposition to the will, to speak as to the handwriting. It is quite unnecessary to consider their testimony. It is not of such a character as to demand attention. The proof, from comparison, is so clearly in favor of the genuineness of the instrument, and shows so conclusively that it was written and signed by the testator, that it would be waste of time to dwell upon that subject.

And here the fact that the testator, in the last clause of the will, misspelled the words "eighteenth" and "eighteen," spelling the one "eitheenth," and the other "eithreen," may be adverted to. The orphans' court regarded these errors as evidence that the testator did not write the will. But it will be found, on examining the letters of the testator that have been put in evidence, that he frequently misspelled words, sometimes omitting a letter. And again it will be seen that, in the date of the will in which the words "eighteenth" and "eighteen" are misspelled, he spells the word "eighty" correctly.

What has been said in reference to the testimony of the experts produced by the caveators, on the subject of the will and the signature of the testator, is equally applicable to their testimony as to the signatures of Smith and Horst upon the will. Smith and Horst signed twice; once under the in testimonium clause, and again under the attestation certificate. The signatures were written on the same occasion. It seems, from the testimony, that when the testator signed the will the witnesses signed under the in testimonium clause as witnesses to that fact, and signed the attestation certificate after he had read it to them. There is no reason to doubt the genuineness of their signatures, nor that they were all written at the time of the execution of the will.

But an effort was made (and it was successful in the orphans' court) to discredit Smith and Horst, by evidence that at the date of the will the testator was sick abed at home, in Orange, and was not in the City of New York on that day. Indeed, the testimony goes fur ther and, if entitled to confidence, would establish the fact that the testator was not only unable to rise from his bed on that day, but had been in the same condition for the whole of the preceding part of the month, and remained so (or, at least, was unable to leave his house) up to the first of July.

The principal testimony on this point is that of Dr. Ormsbee. She says that on the first of June they sent for her in the night, and she was there all night; that the testator had cystic hemorrhage, and it reduced him very much; that previously to this he had inflammation of the lungs, or pneumonia, which had reduced him very much; that her visits to him were constant, with the exception of three days, the 8th, 9th and 12th in the month; that he was affected with muscular rheumatism, which rendered him helpless; that he was obliged to remain on the bed, except when persons moved him—except when he was helped by some one else; that he was lifted from the bed to the lounge by persons who had the strength to do it, and that he was not able to get off the bed himself.

To the question whether he was able to write, she answers that she cannot say whether he was or not; that she knows that he should not have written; that he was not able to write, and he could not have written any more than his name; that the rheumatism confined him entirely to the bed; that he was so that he could not have been, on the 18th, in New York; that she visited him on that day, and that it would have been impossible for him to go to New York, unless by some miraculous transfer. She adds that he was not in New York on any day in June. The witness speaks from recollection and from her account book in which she made her charges for visits to her patients.

There are other witnesses who testify that the testator was sick abed on the 18th of June. They are the widow, and Elizabeth Somerville and Joseph A. Marsh. The widow testifies that the testator remained ill and in bed five or six weeks, and that it was four or five weeks after the 18th of June that he became convalescent. Elizabeth Somerville says she went to the testator's house on the 16th, which she thinks was Tuesday, and she stayed there until Friday of the next week. She says he was confined to his bed all the time she was there, and that he got up only on one day, Thursday, of the week in which she left, and then he walked across the room only until they got the bed changed. She says, also, that before that he had not been up and had not been able to be up at all.

Joseph A. Marsh testifies that he was employed by the testator to attend to his horse, etc., and do work generally around the premises; that in June, 1880, the testator was "sick and complaining; mostly confined to his room," and that he was in bed most of that time; that the witness assisted him in getting up from the bed during his sickness; that he is positive the testator did not go to New York for two weeks at least before the 24th of June, at which time the witness left his employ, but returned to it again about three weeks afterwards, and stayed about two months or two months and a half longer.

According to the testimony of this witness (and he is corroborated by other witnesses), on 598 the 24th of June the testator was not only not confined to his bed, but was about the house, and was so violent toward his wife that she sent the witness to appeal to a neighbor for her protection. The witness did the errand, and when he returned the testator threatened to kill him with a carving knife, which he had in his hand, for going, and it was with some difficulty that he was restrained from doing the witness bodily injury with the knife, until the witness escaped from the house.

It is very evident, from this transaction, that the testator was not confined to his bed during the whole of the month of June, and that on the 24th he was capable of very considerable bodily exertion. But there is proof that on the 16th day of June, two days before the will was drawn, he was in his office in New York, and there drew a check for $61.48 to the order of Charles Doughty, a real estate or insurance agent at East New York, for payment of a bill due from the testator for some expenses for repairs, etc., upon a small house he owned at Belle Plain, in the Town of New Lots, and gave it to Mr. Smith, requesting him to deliver it to Doughty, which Smith undertook to do. Smith went with it to Doughty's office, but did not find him in, and therefore brought the check back with him, the next day. When at Doughty's office he wrote a note to Doughty informing him of his visit and errand, and requesting him to inform him by postal card how he could safely get the check sent to him. He says in the letter that the testator had been sick and could not attend to the matter personally, but that he was then better, and that the testator might not be in New York until Friday of that week.

The note is produced. It is dated June 16, 1880. The postal card written by Doughty in reply is also produced. It is dated June 17, 1880. Mr. Smith says that when the testator gave him the check on the 16th, he told the witness that he would not be in the office the next day, the 17th, as he expected Mr. Fransioli's son to come out to his place for some cherries, and he was going to give him a drive, but he would be in his office again on Friday. As already stated, he swears that the testator came in on Friday, and drew and executed the will. Mr. Fransioli's wife and the son referred to testify that the latter came out on the 17th of June and made the visit and got the cherries, and the son says that he took the drive with the testator. Doughty's bill for the $61.48 is also produced, receipted, and it is indorsed by the testator, "Charles Doughty, $61.48, paid June 18, 1880."

The testator appears to have drawn his check on the 19th for $50, and got the money for it himself, in New York, from one J. Trigan, who kept the restaurant to which he was in the habit of going for his meals. On the 28th he drew two checks—one for $38.37, to the order of Edwin W. Hine, to whom it was delivered, and who indorsed it and got the money for it, and the other for $50, to his own order. He appears to have indorsed the latter check to Thomas F. Brosnan, who indorsed it and got the money for it. He drew a check on the first of June, 1880, for $50, to his own order, and indorsed it to Purss & Young, who indorsed it and obtained the money for it. Between the first and the 16th he drew no checks. Bills rendered to him are in evidence, which are indorsed by him as having been paid: one on the 10th of June, one on the 16th, two on the 17th, one besides that of Doughty on the 18th, and two on the 28th. It seems quite probable that the testator was sick for a few days in the early part of June.

Mr. Fransioli, it should be observed, swears that he saw the testator in New York and did business with him there on the 12th and 14th of June. The testator was in New York on the 16th, and drew the check for Doughty. He kept his check book in the office there. The stub of the check in the book contains the following entry in the testator's handwriting:

"June 16th.

"To pay for repairs of house at Bellplain, Long Island, to the order of Charles Doughty, $61.48."

The will is evidence that on the 18th he was in New York. It is dated on that day. Not only so, but, in addition to its date, the date is twice stated in the attestation certificate. Smith and Horst are wholly disinterested witnesses, and they swear he was there on that day, and they are not in any way impeached. There is a fact sworn to by Mr. Fransioli of some importance in corroborating them. He says that in the spring of 1880 the testator said to him that he wanted him to draw another will for him; that he, Fransioli, replied that the testator could come to his office at any time he desired, and he would be glad to attend to him. He says the testator did not come, and that afterwards they met and he said to the testator that he, the testator, had not come, and the testator said: "Well, I have attended to that business myself without any lawyer; I have cheated the lawyers."

The will was found in a safe in which the testator kept his valuable papers, where he himself had put it, in a sealed envelope indorsed by him, addressed originally "William Cheney, Bank of America" (where Cheney was employed), to which he appears to have added, after Mr. Cheney's name, "or my bro. Samuel." Mrs. Dietz testifies that the testator told her that she would find all the papers "in the safe in Mr. Smith's office." Mr. Cheney, who is wholly disinterested, swears that the will and signature are in the handwriting of the testator. He was his bookkeeper from March, 1869, to March, 1872, three years, and is well acquainted with his handwriting. Mr. Fransioli and Samuel Dietz, and the expert, Mr. Carvalho, all testify to the same thing. And here it may be remarked that the witnesses who swear that the testator was not in New York on the 18th of June swear from memory as to what his physical condition was, and as to what he was or was not able to do on a particular day four years before they gave their testimony.

It is urged that the will is the result of undue influence on the part of Samuel Dietz, who, it is alleged, was actuated by desire of gain and by dislike of the testator's wife. But there is no proof of such influence, nor is there any of such dislike at the time when the will was made. Mrs. Dietz testified that there was no unfriendliness on his part towards her until the last year of the testator's life. She says that he had always come over every Saturday to sit at the table and have dinner with them, and was pleasant and polite to her until the last year of the testator's life; and the other evidence shows that whatever discord there was between them occurred within the period she mentions.

Samuel Dietz swears that he had no part or instrumentality in preparing the will or in having it prepared; that he did not know his brother had written it; that the testator never consulted him in regard to preparing a will for him, and that he never spoke nor made a suggestion to the testator about writing his will. He says that in November, 1883, the testator said to him that in case anything should happen to him, the testator, he, Samuel, would find the document or documents which he would need under Samuel's private checks, in the right hand corner of the safe; and he swears that that was all the knowledge he had of the paper.

The will, so far as the widow is concerned, differs from the will of 1870 only in that it gives to Samuel $1,000 of the income and the rest of it to her, while, by the will of 1870, the whole of the income was given to her. There is a similarity between the two wills in this: that in both the testator preserves the corpus of the estate intact until his wife's death. By the first, he gave, after her death, $3,000 to his adopted daughter, and the interest of $15,000 to his sister Sophia, and then gave the residue, including the $15,000 after Sophia's death, to Christopher Wolston, a friend of his.

It appears, by the testimony of the adopted daughter, that she married (it would seem without his consent), and left the family in 1875. The testator's sister Sophia is dead. She died in 1877. Maria E. Dietz, the testator's aunt, to whom $500 are given by the will of 1880, was an indigent invalid. She became dependent upon charity for support after the will of 1870 was made. What the testator's reasons were for the change of testamentary disposition, so far as his wife was concerned, do not appear. Nor does it appear that she, in fact, will get less by the will of 1880 than she would have got under that of 1870 had he died then, for it does not appear that his estate was not much larger in 1880 than it was ten years before. The estate appears to be worth $60,000.

It was alleged on the hearing (but I find no proof of it) that the Orange property, which was bought after the making of the will of 1870, was given by the testator to his wife. It appears that he gave to her, after the making of the will of 1870, real estate in New York which she sold about 1880 for $11,500. But it by no means follows that if the court cannot find a reason satisfactory to its own mind for a change of testamentary disposition, the last will must therefore be rejected. Stat pro ratione voluntas.

I will not discuss at length the matters which are presented on behalf of the widow as evidence of fraud on the part of Samuel Dietz and Mr. Fransioli. I find nothing in them to lead to any conclusion adverse to the genuineness of the will under consideration, nor to induce the conviction that the instrument was the result of any imposition or fraud.

It is urged on the part of the widow that what was said in Delafield v. Parish, 25 N. Y. 9, 35, is apposite to this case, viz.: "That it is not the duty of the court to strain after probate, nor in any case to grant it where grave doubts remain unremoved and great difficulties oppose themselves to so doing, and that when it is sought to establish a posterior will to overthrow a prior one, made by the testator in health and under circumstances of deliberation and care, and which is free from all suspicion, and when the subsequent will was made when the testator was in enfeebled health, and in hostility to the provisions of the first one, the prior will is to prevail, unless he who sets up the subsequent one can satisfy the conscience of the court of probate that he has established a will. Also, that the prior will is to prevail unless the subsequent one is so proven to speak the testator's intentions as to leave no doubt that it does so speak them."

In adjudicating upon the admission of wills to probate, it is the manifest duty of the court to uphold the right of free testamentary disposition of property, and not to attempt to annul or control it by considerations wholly at variance with that right. It is its duty to sustain the instrument, and admit it to probate if it finds that it is the duly executed last will and testament of the testator. If he is proved to have been possessed of testamentary capacity at the time of making the will, and the will does not appear to have been the result of any fraud, and it is proved to have been duly executed, the court has no right to reject it. If probate courts are to determine, from any other considerations whether a will ought or ought not to stand, then there will be an end of that right of free testamentary disposition of property which it has been and is the policy of our law to favor and guaranty. In the case in hand I am satisfied that the testator executed the will in the City of New York, on the day of its date, with all the legal formalities required by the law of this State; that at the time he was possessed of full testamentary capacity, and there is no proof that the will was the result of any manner of fraud.

It is urged that the fact that the testator has given considerable legacies to two religious societies and has given the residue of his property to an eleemosynary society is a suspicious circumstance. But the first two are societies of a religious denomination with which he was long connected, and the other is a most worthy public charity.

The fact that he has made those societies his legatees is surely not more remarkable than the provision which, by the will of 1870, he made for Mr. Wolston, who was not a relative of his, but only a friend. He had a right to give the property to the societies or to his friend, just as he saw fit. The reasons which induce a testator to change his testamentary disposition of his property, or to make a disposition of his estate which appears to be unequal or even absolutely unjust, may be very good ones, and yet they may be wholly confined to his own breast. He is not bound to mention them in his will, under penalty of having it rejected by the probate court if he fails to do so.

The decree of the orphans' court admitted to probate the will of 1870 and rejected that of 1880. It directed that Samuel Dietz pay the costs of the caveatrix and $2,000 counsel fee to her counsel. It also directed that letters of administration with the will annexed be issued to

George H. Hartford, the executors named in the will of 1870 having made no application for probate thereof, although notified and requested to do so.

The decree will be reversed, and there will be a decree refusing to admit the will of 1870 to probate, and admitting the will of 1880. The costs of both sides in the matter of probate, both in this court and in the court below, will be allowed out of the estate, with a counsel fee of $1,500 for each side in both courts.

The orphans' court appointed an administrator pendente lite in the cause, and on the day on which the decree above mentioned was made; and after the making thereof, it made an order by which, after reciting that it had appeared to the court, by the examination of Samuel Dietz and Augustus G. Fransioli, that they had severally received, since the death of the testator, moneys belonging to his estate, or due to him, it was ordered that they forthwith pay to the administrator with the will annexed, or to the administrator pendente lite, in case of appeal from the before mentioned decree of the court, denying probate to the will of 1880 and admitting the will of 1870 to probate, all moneys by them, or either of them, received since the death of the testator, due to the testator or coming to his estate, with interest thereon from the time of such receipt, and also deliver to such administrator all books, papers, securities, certificates of stock, bonds, mortgages, or other choses in action belonging to the testator which, at the time of making the order, were in the possession of either of them, and that Samuel Dietz give to the administrator, on demand, access to the safe of the testator proved in the cause to have been and to be in the office of Samuel Dietz, in the City of New York, to the end that any papers and securities of the testator there being might be found and taken into the administrator's possession.

From that order Samuel Dietz and Mr. Fransioli appealed. It is argued that the court had no jurisdiction to make the order. It had jurisdiction of the subject matter and of the parties. Speaking generally, the order was a direction (it was an authorization also) to pay and deliver over property of the estate to the person entitled by law to the custody of it. There was no conflict of jurisdictions. The order directed the parties to do nothing which it was not their plain duty to do without it. It does not appear that they were in any way prejudiced or aggrieved by it.

It will be affirmed, with costs.

James P. SULLIVAN, Appt.,
v.

Richard W. HORNER, Admr., etc., Respnt.

1. Reasonable funeral expenses, and the physician's bill for the last sickness, of a deceased debtor, are preferred in payment to all other claims or debts.
2. Reasonable funeral expenses of the wife and child of a decedent, who were deprived of life by the same accident, and buried at the same time, with him, are also preferred in payment, over all other claims or debts against his estate.

3. Expenses of bringing home the body of one who dies away from home, and of a person to accompany the body, are proper funeral expenses.

(Decided — — 1886.)

APPEAL by a judgment creditor from a decree of the Orphans' Court of Monmouth County, preferring a claim against decedent's estate for funeral expenses. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. G. T. Werts, for appellant.

Mr. E. W. Arrowsmith, for respondent:

Where any person interested sees to it that the funeral rites of the decedent are decently performed, and incurs and pays the expenses thereof, the assets in the hands of the personal representative are liable for the expenses thus incurred.

8 Redf. Wills, pp. 245, 247; 3 Wms. Exrs. ed. 1877, p. 1886; Hagood v. Houghton, 10 Pick. 154; Re Miller, 4 Redf. 302; Patterson v. Patterson, 59 N. Y. 582; Happleyea v. Russell, 1 Daly, 214; McCue v. Garvey, 14 Hun, 568.

This principle is clearly established in this State in the case of Campfield v. Ely, 1 J. S. Green, 150.

"Under the advanced civilization and christianizing influences of the present age, the extreme rigor of the common law has greatly relaxed, so that it now has become the rule that a suitable tombstone or monument is properly chargeable as a part of the funeral expenses, even where the estate is insolvent, and is almost invariably allowed, because it is one of the demands of public opinion and is in accord with public sentiment."

3 Redf. Wills, p. 246.

In Jennison v. Hagood, 10 Pick. 77, the expenses of a journey (made by the wife and other relatives) to the testator, who was sick at a distance from home, were allowed, although they did not arrive until after his death.

The expenses of a wake have been allowed; McCue v. Garvey, supra; the cost of ordinary mourning apparel for the family of the deceased; Campfield v. Ely, supra; and the bills incurred by erecting suitable gravestones at the grave of the deceased.

2 Wms. Exrs. ed. 1877, p. 1035, note; and note to Wilson v. Staats, 6 Stew. 524.

Where the intestate committed suicide at a hotel in New York City, it was held that the expense of sending a special messenger to the relatives of the deceased at Philadelphia should be allowed, and that the charge for accompanying the body to that place should fairly be considered as a funeral charge.

Husler v. Hasler, 1 Bradf. 248.

In Stag v. Punter, 3 Atk. 119, decided nearly 150 years ago, the case of an insolvent estate, Lord Hardwicke was "of opinion that sixty pounds is not too much for the funeral expenses, especially as the testator had directed his corpse should be buried at a church thirty miles from the place of his death."

In the case of Haines v. Price, Spencer, 480, the court on page 483 says: "The priorities or order of preference at common law may be shortly stated as follows: 1. Funeral charges and the expenses of administration. 2. Debts of record."

N. J.

Toller, Exrs. 2d ed. 245; Dayton, Surr. 2d ed. p. 813.

Funeral expenses were to be preferred, even to a debt due to the Crown.

2 Wms. Exrs. top p. 1055.

Apd to debts of the United States Government.

U. S. v. Eggleston, 4 Sawy. 199.

Judge Folger decided in Patterson v. Patterson, above cited: "Though our statute of payments of debts and legacies (2 N. Y. R. S. 87, § 27), gives the order in which the executor shall make payment of debts against the estate, and though there is no provision there for a priority of payment of funeral expenses, it is not to be held therefrom that the common-law rule is abrogated. Those expenses are not to be treated as a debt against the estate, but as a charge upon the estate, the same as the necessary expenses of administration."

It can hardly be seriously contended that this is such an officious intermeddling with the estate of the decedent as to make him an executor de son tort; the contrary has been the law for a century.

Toller, Exrs. 2d ed. pp. 40, 245. See note to Rogers v. Price, 3 Younge & J. 28, 38.

But even an executor de son tort should be allowed for proper and reasonable funeral expenses conditioned to the circumstances of the case.

Yardley v. Arnold, 1 Crompt. & Mees. 484.

Runyon, Ordinary, delivered the following opinion:

The subject presented for adjudication is a claim of James S. Coleman against the estate, for the funeral expenses of the intestate, Moses W. Stoll, and his wife and child. Stoll died on the 7th of February, 1882, at Waco, in Texas, whither he had gone from Matawan, in this State, to engage in the construction of a railroad there. His residence was in Matawan. His stay in Texas was to be merely temporary. He intended to return to Matawan. He and his wife and child were all killed at the same time, in a collision on a railroad.

Coleman ordered and paid for the funeral. The bodies were brought from Texas to this State for burial in the same month of February, and were buried in Stoll's burial plot, in a cemetery at or near Matawan. The cost of the funeral, including the amount ($10) of a surgeon's bill for services at Waco to render the head of the child presentable to view, and the cost ($235.25) of sodding and curbing the lot in the cemetery, and of a monument over the graves, was $1,767.95. In this amount were included the expenses ($100) of a person who came from Texas to this State with the bodies, to superintend the transportation thereof. The expense of the funeral was increased by the amount of about $500 by the bursting of the caskets in which the bodies were placed in Texas, which rendered it necessary to buy new ones on the arrival of the bodies here, and to transfer the bodies thereto.

The agent of Mr. Coleman (it was Mr. Horner, who afterwards became administrator of Stoll) endeavored to keep down the expenses of the funeral as much as possible, and the funeral was in accordance with the station in life of the decedent. The estate is insolvent.

The appellant, a judgment creditor of Stoll, excepted to the claim of Coleman, which, with interest to June 24, 1884, amounted to $1,980. At the time of the funeral, Coleman did not know of the existence of the judgment. The orphans' court allowed the claim to the amount of $760, which they adjudged to be a reasonable sum for the funeral expenses of the intestate.

The appellant insists that the expenditures of Coleman were entirely voluntary, and that he cannot recover against the estate therefor, nor for any part thereof; that if he can recover, his claim is not to be preferred to that of the judgment creditor; that if it is to be so preferred, it can only be preferred for what would be the reasonable cost of the funeral of the intestate alone, in Texas, where he died. An executor is bound to provide for his testator decent and appropriate Christian burial. Not only do the usages and necessities of society require this at his hands, but it is a requirement of the law also. Went. Exrs. 17, § 1; Ram, Assets, 331.

Decent Christian burial is part of the individual rights of everyone. The estate in the hands of the executor or administrator is bound by law for the payment of the expenses of the decent interment of the decedent; and the executor or administrator, if he have sufficient assets, is liable upon an implied promise to another person who, as an act of duty or necessity, has provided for the interment, if the funeral was conducted in a manner suitable to the rank in life of the decedent, and the charge is fair and reasonable. Tugwell v. Heyman, 3 Campb. 298; Rogers v. Price, 3 Younge & J. 28; Rapley v. Russell, 1 Daly, 217.

Funeral expenses are, by the common law, to be first paid out of the assets. 11 Vin. Abr. 432.

And they are by law, in England, preferred in payment to a debt due the Crown. 2 Wms. Exrs. 938.

And in this country, to a debt due to the United States Government. U. S. v. Eggleston, 4 Sawy. 199.

By our statute they are among the preferred claims. Though grouped in the statute with other claims also preferred, they are entitled to preference over those claims, as they are at the common law. The statute does not take away the absolute preference which the common law accorded. The reason for such absolute preference still exists in full force. Our statute as to preferred claims is as follows: judgments entered of record against the decedent in his lifetime, funeral charges and expenses, and the physician's bill during the last sickness, shall have preference, and be first paid out of the personal and real estate of the testator or intestate. Rev. p. 764, § 58.

In the statute, as it stood before revision, they were mentioned in inverse order. R. S. p. 846, § 2.

It is argued that the preferred claims, under the present statute, are entitled to priority in the order in which they are mentioned. This construction would give to judgments of record against the decedent in his lifetime preference over his funeral expenses and the physician's bill for services during the last sickness. It is entirely obvious that such a construction is not allowable. It might give to the judgment creditor of an insolvent decedent the entire property of the debtor, and leave his body to be buried at public expense, and his physician's bill for services in his last illness unpaid. It would subordinate the demands of society, i. e. the very important matters of medical aid in sickness and decent burial after death, to the claim of a creditor; and thus the insolvent might be compelled to depend upon charity for medical aid in his last illness, and his body, at his death, go to a pauper's grave, furnished at the public expense.

The condition of a man's estate is, in the great majority of cases, unknown to the community until after his death. It follows that if the construction contended for were adopted, the physician and the undertaker would, in very many cases, decline to render their services on the credit of the estate. The law is not so careful of the interests of judgment creditors of insolvent debtors as to prefer their demands to the claims of humanity and the proprieties and necessities of society, but, on the contrary, for manifest reasons, subordinate the former to the latter. It has been held that the claim for funeral expenses is not to be regarded as a debt at all, but as a charge upon the estate. Patterson v. Patterson, 59 N. Y. 574; Schouler, Exrs. § 421.

From an early day it has been held that a stranger who furnished a funeral for a decedent does not thereby make himself executor de facto. The dictates of humanity, no less than the decencies of enlightened society, demand that the reasonable funeral expenses, and the physician's bill for the last sickness of a deceased debtor, be preferred in payment to all other claims or debts. The same considerations apply in this case to the reasonable funeral expenses of the wife and child of the decedent. He and they were deprived of life by the same fatal stroke, and were buried with one and the same funeral. Had he survived them, it would have been his duty to bury his wife and child, and the law would have required it at his hands. This duty, which he was thus unable to discharge, the law, under the circumstances, charges upon his estate. Otherwise, the law, while it secures to the deceased insolvent debtor decent burial out of his estate, would deny it to his wife or child dying at the same time, and would, merely out of consideration for his creditors, leave their bodies to be buried by the hand of charity, and perhaps at the public expense. That would be discreditable to the law.

In such a case it should be held that, in the interest of society, out of a proper regard to its proprieties and decencies, and to protect the public against the expense, and put it where it of right should fall, the reasonable expense of the funeral of the wife or child may be included in that of the husband or father. Nor would it be too great a strain upon the words of the statute, but it would be a reasonable construction, to hold that, under such circumstances, it embraces such expense. It is true the statute, in the provision for the payment of funeral expenses, contemplates the expenses of the funeral of the decedent debtor; but an enlightened construction would hold that the provision is broad enough to embrace, in an exceptional case, such as this, the reasonable funeral expenses of the wife and child in that of the husband and father.

The case under adjudication differs essentially from that in which a husband or father furnishes the funeral, and dies without paying for it. In the latter case, the unpaid claim for funeral expenses would not be a charge upon his estate, but merely an unpreferred debt. The charge of funeral expenses of the wife or child upon the husband's or father's estate, when he dies insolvent before he can discharge his duty of burying his dead, rests upon the ground of necessity and public decency. The expense of the funeral must, in such case, not only be reasonable, but should be only such as is necessary for a funeral conducted in a plain manner, and without the superfluous accessories which would be allowable in case the estate were solvent. The rule, as against a creditor, is that no more shall be allowed for a funeral than is necessary, and, in considering what is necessary, regard must be had to the degree and condition in life of the decedent. Hancock v. Podmore, 1 B. & Ad. 260; Edwards v. Edwards, 2 Crompt. & M. 612.

When the decedent dies away from home, it is reasonable that his body should be brought home for interment. And to the expense of such transportation may reasonably be added that of a person to accompany the body for the purpose of superintending such transportation. Hastler v. Husler, 1 Bradf. 248; Schouler, Exrs. § 421.

In this case the expenditure for the funerals, not including $253.35 expended for a monument and work upon the burial plot, was $1,514.70. The court allowed only $760, including interest, i. e., $650 for the expenditures. That is about $216 for each person. The rule on the subject of allowances for funeral expenses, already stated, is that they must be reasonable under all the circumstances. The amount allowed by the orphans' court is reasonable under the circumstances of this case. It is true that in the decree the orphans' court states that the $760 were allowed as a reasonable sum for the expenses of the funeral of the intestate. The court probably regarded the funeral as the funeral of the intestate, in which his wife and child were buried with him.

The decree should be affirmed, but without costs.

Jacob N. HILL, Appt.,

v.

John D. BLOOM, Exr., Respnt.

1. A will contained the following: "I do further order that if, at the time of the distribution of said estate or any part thereof, there shall be due to my estate, from any of the said legatees, obligations of any kind or evidences of debt of any kind, then such obligation shall be first deducted from his or her share of said estate before payment shall be made of such share or legacy." Held, (a) That term "obligations" was intended to include notes and all instruments by which the maker thereof binds himself to pay money; (b) That the term "evidences of debt" was intended to embrace instruments not obligations or promises to pay, and which might not be even acknowledgments of indebtedness; e. g., receipts for advances of money; (c) That by the use of the word "obligation" in the second clause of the sentence, testator intended to embrace everything mentioned in the first clause, namely: obligations of any kind and evidences of debt of any kind.

2. The orphans' court has power to construe a will so far as necessary to determine to whom distribution or payment of the amount shown by an account filed by an executor or administrator cum testamento annexo shall be made.

(Decided — — 1886.)

APPEAL from a decree of the Orphans' Court of Sussex County. Affirmed.

The facts and questions presented are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Roe & Shepherd, for appellant.
Mr. C. D. Thompson, for respondent.

Runyon, Ordinary, delivered the following opinion:

This is an appeal from an order of distribution made by the Sussex Orphans' Court, October 21, 1884, under the will of Nehemiah Hill, deceased. By the seventh section of the will, the testator ordered that if, at the time of the distribution of his estate or any part thereof, there should be due to his estate, from any of his legatees, "obligations of any kind or evidences of debt of any kind," then "such obligation" should be first deducted from his or her share of the estate, before payment of such share or legacy.

He gave a share of his estate to his daughter, Mary Ann Newbaker; another to the heirs of his daughter, Magdalena Emmans; another to his son, Jacob N. Hill, the appellant; another to his daughter, Sarah Jane Bowers; and another to his daughter, Susan Ellen Bloom.

At the time of his death, he held two promissory notes and four receipts given to him by the appellant for money advanced by him to the latter. They amounted, with interest, to $3,206.12.

The executors filed two accounts. The first was passed August 8, 1882. The balance thereon to be distributed was $3,692.60. That balance was distributed by an order made August 22, 1882, which adjudged that Sarah Jane Bowers owed the estate, at the date of the order, $3,746.60 on notes and obligations given by her to the testator in his lifetime, and that there was due to the estate from the appellant, at that date, $3,431.98 on notes and obligations given by him to the testator in his lifetime, and that there was nothing due the estate from any of the others to whom shares were given. The order distributed the balance among those other persons.

The final account was passed July 22, 1884. The balance thereon for distribution was $8,093.90, including the balance of the former account. The order of distribution upon the settlement of the final account was made October 21, 1884. It recited that there was at that date due to the estate from Sarah Jane Bowers, $4,013.91 ($2,061.72 of principal and $1,952.19 of interest), and from the appellant, $3,658.77 ($1,695 of principal and $1,963.77 of interest), and ordered and adjudged that those sums respectively be deducted from their respective shares. Also, that there was no proof that there existed any indebtedness of any kind to the estate from the other persons entitled to shares, and that it appeared that the balance upon the account of August, 1882, had been distributed according to the provisions and directions of the will, so that there remained in the hands of the executor, to be distributed, the sum of $4,401.30. It thereupon ordered that the costs of the order and a counsel fee be paid out of that residue, and that the remainder, $4,348.86, be distributed and paid by the executor as follows: $1,449.45 to Mary Ann Newbaker, the like sum to Susan E. Bloom, and the like sum to Joseph R. Emmans, Nehemiah H. Emmans and Uriah Emmans, children of Magdalena Emmans, deceased, in equal shares. From this latter order the appeal was taken.

The appellant insists that the court erred in charging against him the amount of the notes and receipts given by him to the testator in his lifetime. According to the evidence, he has admitted that he received from his father the money mentioned in those instruments, and that the money was advanced to him by his father. It appears that it was advanced to him on account of his share of his father's estate.

John R. Reamer testifies that after the testator's death, the appellant said to him that "he had had his share of his father's estate and a little bit more, but, if there was anything more to get, he was going to have some more." The appellant's counsel argues that by the terms of the seventh section of the will, only obligations according to the technical signification of the term are to be deducted from the shares. The language of the section is:

"I do further order that if, at the time of the distribution of said estate or any part thereof, there shall be due to my estate, from any of the said legatees, obligations of any kind or evidences of debt of any kind, then such obligation shall be first deducted from his or her share of said estate before payment shall be made of such share or legacy."

Obviously, that construction would be too narrow. It evidently would not be in accordance with the intention of the testator. By the term "obligations" he meant to include notes and all instruments by which the maker thereof binds himself to pay money. And by the term "evidences of debt" he meant to embrace instruments not obligations or promises to pay, and which might not be even acknowledgments of indebtedness, such, for example, as receipts for advances of money. And when in the second clause of the sentence he used the word "obligation," he intended to embrace therein all those things mentioned in the first clause, namely: obligations of any kind and evidences of debt of any kind. He meant, by means of this provision, to secure to his children an equal division of his estate, taking into account and charging against them any advances which he might have made to them, for which he held their obligations or written promises to pay, or of which he held other written evidence.

As before stated, he held, at the time of his death, two promissory notes given to him by the appellant for advances made by him to the latter, and four other instruments of writing, signed and given to him by the appellant, acknowledging the receipt by the latter from him of different sums of money. Those sums were also advances made by the testator to the appellant, and those receipts were given, taken and held as evidence of those advances. The testator always spoke of them as "Jacob's notes." They all merely acknowledged the receipt from the testator of the money mentioned therein, without stating on what account or for what the money was paid or received. One of them (for $500) contains a statement of the mode in which the money mentioned therein was transmitted, in the words "what I sent to you by a check." That receipt is in the handwriting of the testator and signed by the appellant.

The words above quoted were written by the testator, and by them he intended to identify that particular advance. The testator never owed the appellant any money. The former lived in this State, and the latter lived in Michigan during all the time in which the advances were made. When, since the testator's death, the appellant was asked why he did not send notes to his father, instead of receipts, he replied that that was his business. He also said that the notes and receipts (he had then examined them) were all right; that he had received every cent of the money for those papers, and that his father was very kind, and always sent him money when he wanted it.

In Harens v. Thompson, 11 C. E. Green, 383, a receipt given by a son to his father for a sum of money "in full, in lieu of dowry," was held, under the evidence, to be an agreement by which the son, in consideration of the money so paid to him by his father, agreed with the latter that he would make no claim to a share of his father's estate, should the latter die intestate, but would be debarred therefrom by that instrument made upon what was a satisfactory compensating consideration.

There is no error in the adjudication complained of in this case.

The appellant's counsel insists that the orphans' court had no jurisdiction to make the decree of distribution, because, in order to do so, it was necessary for it to construe the will, and he insists that that court had no authority to construe the instrument. The objection is not well founded. The one hundred and fifty-first section of the Orphans' Court Act (Rev. p. 785) provides that when an account shall have been filed by an executor or an administrator cum testamento annexo, exhibiting a balance in hand, it shall be lawful for the court, upon the application of any party in interest, to adjust, order and make just distribution, in accordance with the directions and provisions of the last will and testament in each case, of what shall remain after all debts and expenses shall have been allowed and deducted. The power to construe the will, so far as necessary to determine to whom the distribution or payment is to be made, is obviously a necessary incident to the power given by that section.

It is also urged, on behalf of the appellant, that if the orphans' court had authority to make the deduction, and it was right that the deduction should be made, the court ought to have treated the money due to the estate from Sarah Jane Bowers and the appellant respectively as part of the assets of the estate, for the purpose of ascertaining the shares.

It appears, by the account of 1882, that those debts were included in the inventory, and that allowance therefor was obtained in that account, on the ground that they had not been collected and were, in fact, uncollectible.

The decree appealed from will be affirmed, with costs.

Caroline BROKAW et al., Exrs., Appts.,
v.

Edward V. BROKAW, Resp.*

A testator gave all his personal property to his wife, and directed his executors to sell all his real estate and divide the proceeds into two equal parts, one of which he gave to his wife and the other to his executors in trust, to invest it and pay to his father, from time to time, so much of the principal and interest as he might require for his support as long as he should live; and he gave so much of this fund as should remain after his father's decease, to his, testator's, brothers' children. The wife and father of testator survived him and occupied his house and land until the father's death, when it was sold; and to the account of the disposition of the proceeds filed by the executors, a son of a brother of testator excepted. Held:

(a) That the testamentary provision for the wife was inconsistent with her dower, and having accepted it, she was not entitled to occupy the mansion house of her deceased husband rent free, on the ground that dower had not been assigned;

(b) That the heirs at law of the testator had no claim, as such, to the rents and profits of the land, but were entitled to an account for half the value of the use and occupation, and to have it applied to the cost of the support of testator's father;

(c) That the executors were chargeable with one half the value of the use and occupations of the land, and were to be credited with one half the taxes and insurance;

(d) That a part of the exceptions to their account having been sustained, it was not error to decree that the executors should pay costs and counsel fees out of their own funds.

(Decided — 1886.)

ON appeal from the Orphans' Court of Middlesex County, to review a decree on exceptions to an executors' account. Modified.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Jacob Weart, for appellants:

The widow was entitled to dower in the real estate; she was entitled to quarantine until the dower was assigned, and the dower never was assigned.

Van Arsdale v. Van Arsdale, 2 Dutch. 404; Colgate's Exr. v. Colgate, 8 C. E. Green, 372; Den v. Creveling, 1 Dutch. 449; Stark v. Hutton, Saxt. 216.

The executors having treated the fund as at interest from the day of the death of their testator, and this charge having been excepted to, this court can now deal with the question, and do in the matter what, according to law and justice, ought to be done.

Cook's Exrs. v. Cook's Admr. 5 C. E. Green, 377; Fluke v. Exrs. of Fluke, 1 C. E. Green, 478; Craig v. Leslie, 3 Wheat. 563 (16 U. S. bk. 4, L. ed. 480); Fletcher v. Ashburner, 1 Bro. Ch. 497; Pratt v. Douglas, 11 Stew. 539; Macknet v. Macknet, 2 Stew. 54; 1 Wms. Exrs. 551.

An election made in ignorance, or under a mistake of the real nature and extent of the parties' own rights, is not binding, and may be revoked, unless the rights of third persons have intervened which would be interfered with by such revocation.

Pratt v. Douglas, 11 Stew. 539; Macknet v. Macknet, 2 Stew. 54; Stewart v. Stewart, 4 Stew. 398.

The devise to exceptants being in money, and not in land, they had no right to the rent of the farm until it was sold.

Moores v. Moores, 12 Vroom, 440; Romaine v. Hendrickson's Exrs. 9 C. E. Green, 231.

Mr J. J. Bergen, for respondent.

Runyon, Ordinary, delivered the following opinion:

Garret G. Brokaw, late of Middlesex County, at the time of his death was the owner of a farm of 105 acres, and another tract of about 51 acres. He died February 24, 1877. By his will he gave all his personal property, after payment of his debts and funeral expenses and costs of settling his estate, to his wife. He then directed his executors (his wife and Archibald C. Wallison) to sell and convey all of his real estate, as soon as convenient after his decease, but at such time as would be for the best interest of his estate, and divide the proceeds into two equal parts; and he gave one of those parts to his wife, and the other to his executors, in trust, to safely invest it and pay to his father (Samuel S. Brokaw), from time to time, whenever he should desire it, and ask for it, so much of the interest, and also so much of the principal as his father, in his own uncontrolled judgment, should require for his own comfortable support and maintenance so long as his father should live.

And the testator directed that in case his father's mental faculties should become impaired so that he should become unable to appropriate and use the money, the executors should use and expend for him so much of the principal and interest as should be needful and proper for his support, so long as he should live; and he bequeathed whatever, if anything, of the fund so created and set apart for his father, should remain after his father's death, to the children of his (the testator's) deceased brothers who should be living at the time of his father's death, in equal shares, to be divided per capita; and if only one should survive, then the whole was to go to that one.

*See Brokaw v. Brokaw's Exrs. 3 Cent. Rep. 365.

The farm of 105 acres was conveyed to the testator January 6, 1865, by his father, upon condition that he, the testator, should suffer and permit his father to have a home and maintenance upon the premises, in the testator's family, so long as his father should live; and the testator thereby agreed, in consideration of the conveyance, to furnish and provide for his father good, sufficient, appropriate, fit, proper, comfortable, convenient and suitable food, lodging, raiment, nursing, care, medical attendance and medicines during his sickness, and all necessary care and attention during sickness and health, to make him comfortable; and that he would furnish and provide for him, at his death, proper burial, and provide a suitable tombstone for his grave.

At the death of the testator his father was in the eighty-second year of his age; and when he died (which was six years and nine months after that time), he was in his eighty-eighth. For the greater part of the period between the testator's death and his own he was an invalid and confined to his room, and part of the time he was confined to his bed.

The executors, in execution of the power of sale conferred upon them by the will, sold part of the tract of about fifty-one acres, before the death of Samuel S. Brokaw, for $1,150, and paid one half of the proceeds to the widow, and applied the rest, except $1, to his support. Because of the condition upon which the testator held the farm, they could not sell that property to advantage before the death of Samuel S. Brokaw, who refused to release.

The widow, from the death of the testator to the death of Samuel S. Brokaw, continued to occupy the farm, and kept and cared for him there. After his death, the executors sold the farm and the residue of the fifty-one acre tract for $7,112. Of this money they paid over one half to the widow, and accounted in the Orphans' Court of Middlesex for the rest. In the account they charged themselves with the half of the $7,112, and interest at 6 per cent per annum upon the amount of that half from the death of the testator. They claimed credit for half of the taxes and insurance upon the property for the same time and for the support of the testator's father, money paid him, etc., etc.

Exceptions were filed by Edward V. Brokaw, a son of the testator's deceased brother John. Some of them were allowed, and the accountants were accordingly charged with the rental value of the farm from the death of the testator until the death of his father, instead of the interest on one half of the purchase money of the property, and were credited with all of the taxes and insurance for that period, instead of only half thereof. The charge for board, etc., of the testator's father was reduced, and certain items were struck out because the same money had been previously charged in the account. The court decreed that the accountants pay out of their own funds the costs of both sides on the exceptions, and a counsel fee of $75 to each side. From part of that decree the executors appealed to this court.

The respondent insists that, inasmuch as the title to the farm was, from the death of the testator to the death of the testator's father, in the heirs at law of the former, the rents, issues and profits of the property for that period should go to them; or, if not, should be applied to the satisfaction of the claim for the support, etc., of the testator's father. The property was not rented during that time, but, as before stated, was occupied by the widow, who lived upon it; and the testator's father lived with her there and was supported by her.

The executors, on the other hand, claim that the widow was entitled to dower in the property, and that, her dower not having been assigned, she was entitled to remain on the farm rent free under the statute, which provides that a widow may, until her dower is assigned to her, remain in, hold and enjoy the mansion house of her husband, and the messuage and plantation thereto belonging, without being liable to pay any rent therefor. Rev. p. 320, § 2.

They also claim that if she was not thus entitled to the use of the property, she was, under the will, entitled to one-half of the rents, issues and profits.

She was not entitled to occupy the property rent free as a dowress. She accepted the provision made for her by the will, and that provision was inconsistent with her dower. The will gives her all the personal estate after payment of debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, and then directs that the executors sell, as soon as conveniently may be after the testator's death, at their discretion as to the time of sale, all his real estate, and divide the proceeds into two equal shares, of which the will gives her one and devotes the other to the support of the testator's father, etc. The testator certainly did not intend that she should have her dower in his land in addition to the provision made in the will for her.

Where the provisions of the will manifest a clear and unequivocal intention on the part of the testator to bar his wife's dower, it is sufficient, without express words, to put her to her election between the provision made for her in the will and that made for her by law. Stark v. Hunton, Saxt. 216; Colgate's Est. v. Colgate, 8 C. E. Green, 372; Stewart v. Stewart, 4 Stew. 398.

The heirs at law of the testator have no claim, as such, to the rents and profits of the farm. Their claim to the property is under the will. The testator, manifestly, did not intend that they should have the rents and profits. He directed that the property be sold as soon after his death as might be convenient, and, but for his father's refusal to release his claim under the condition, it would have been sold accordingly. The heirs at law are entitled to an account for the half of the value of the use and occupation, and to have it applied to the cost of the support, etc. of the testator's father.

Where a testator directs his executor to sell lands for a particular purpose, until such disposition is made of them, the heir is entitled to the rents and profits unless the testator has, by express terms or by implication, otherwise disposed of them; but whoever is entitled to the beneficial interest of the land from the death of the testator until it is sold, is entitled to the rents and profits. Current v. Current, 8 Stock. 186.

In that case the testator directed his executor to sell at public auction or otherwise, as to him should seem best, and for such prices as he should deem expedient, all the rest and residue of his land and real estate and personal property, and the money arising from such sale, with certain other moneys, to divide among eight of the testator's children not before provided for in the will. He died in 1849, and the executor sold in 1852. It was held that those eight children were entitled to the rents and profits for the intermediate time.

As before stated, this property was not rented, but the widow occupied it. The executors are chargeable with a proper sum for the use and occupation. The counsel of the parties agreed that the value of the use and occupation for the whole time was $3,346.10. The executors are chargeable with one half of this sum, or $1,673.05, which is the amount with which they charged themselves as interest; and they are to be credited in this account with one half only of the taxes and insurance. The amount on which commissions are to be allowed will, of course, be reduced in accordance with this decision.

The appellants insist that the award by the decree, that the costs and counsel fees upon the exceptions be paid by them out of their own funds, is erroneous. But of the exceptions, two—one as to a duplicate charge of a large amount of money, and the other as to the amount to be allowed for board, etc., of the testator's father—were sustained. It would not be proper, under the circumstances, to put the cost of the litigation upon the trust fund. There is no error in that part of the decree. The costs of the appeal, and a counsel fee of $50 to each side, will be paid out of the fund.

COURT OF CHANCERY.

John HOGAN

v.

Edwin A. GASKILL et al.

1. A provision, in a lease of shore front with right to build a pier thereon, that the lease shall cease and determine "in case of the destruction of said pier, or failure in operation, or the abandoning of it," will not entitle the lessee to surrender the pier to the lessor so as to cut off a mechanics' lien upon the pier built by the lessee.
2. The filing of a mechanics' lien secures to the lien claimant the rights of the owner of the property existing at the time of filing, and the owner cannot abridge or abandon such rights to the injury of the lien claimant.

(Filed November 15, 1886.)

BILL to quiet title and for an injunction. On order to show cause why injunction should not issue. Denial of injunction advised.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

N. J. C. R., V. IV.

Mr. J. J. Crandall, for complainant.

Mr. George T. Ingham, for defendants.

Bird, V. C., delivered the following opinion:

Hogan was the owner of a shore front, a portion of which he leased to Howard with the right to build a pier thereon extending into the Atlantic Ocean. The term was for ten years, at the rental value of $50 a year. The conclusion of the instrument was in these words:

"In case of the destruction of said pier, or failure on the part of the said George W. Howard to keep the said pier in operation, or the abandoning of it, then this lease shall become null and void, cease and determine; otherwise to remain in full force to the end of said term."

On the 7th day of September, 1886, the said Howard executed a paper writing in which, after reciting the agreement or lease by which he held the land whereon said pier stood, used these words:

"Know, all men, by these presents, that I, George W. Howard, the above named lessee, do hereby abandon and yield up the above described pier to the said John Hogan and his heirs."

Prior to the execution of the last named instrument, Hogan recovered a large judgment against Howard, and so also did Gaskill, the defendant. Hogan's judgment was a general judgment; but Gaskill's was special by virtue of the statute respecting mechanic's liens. Gaskill advertised the pier for sale, by virtue of his special judgment. The bill was filed to restrain such sale. The bill sets forth many alleged irregularities in the proceedings at law in recovering the judgment upon the lien claim, and also sets forth the abandonment of the pier by Howard as is expressed in the above quotation. An order to show cause why an injunction should not issue was allowed. Counsel have been fully heard.

There never was any doubt in the mind of the court as to its duty to refrain absolutely from interfering with the common law proceedings, so far as any question could possibly arise as to methods or practice, whether regular or irregular, in the prosecution of the suit.

The only question worthy of consideration was whether Howard, under the circumstances, could abandon his right to the pier under his lease, so as to effectually defeat the lien of the judgment creditor. It is admitted that if such abandonment were effectual it could be pleaded at law; but it is insisted that if that be so, Hogan should be protected in this court and his property be preserved from the cloud which will be cast upon it by a sale.

It may be, considering that the bill was filed to quiet title, that it was properly filed. I am not sure that the cases, in New Jersey, have gone quite so far, yet perhaps they have. Than about this, I concern myself more about the effect of the alleged abandonment. This is not easy of solution.

The real question is, Could Howard, under the circumstances, abandon a valuable legal right, simply for the purpose of defeating his creditors? I think it will be conceded on every hand that he could not, if the agreement by which he held and enjoyed the right did not contain the clause "or the abandoning of it." Does this qualification change the legal rights of the parties? I think not. I think there is a great difference between abandon and surrender; between abandoning a right or thing, and the surrender of such right or thing to another; between giving it up because it is regarded as utterly useless or valueless, and surrendering, assigning or transferring it to another as a valuable right or thing. When one surrenders a right or thing to another by solemn agreement in writing he certainly does not abandon it, in the sense in which all understand the word "abandon."

But it is claimed that this contract between Hogan and Howard was purely a personal affair, and that Hogan had a right to abandon the pier at any time, and that upon such abandonment the lease or agreement was terminated, and Hogan as effectually entitled to the absolute and unqualified possession as though the whole term of ten years had expired.

This is too broad a view, and I think must be qualified by the observations already made. It seems to me if valuable legal rights can thus be abandoned, it would be a hopeless task for creditors to attempt to enforce their just claims; for if I am right in the foregoing remarks, the act of Howard amounts to nothing more than a voluntary conveyance of this property to Hogan. It was done evidently without consideration and most plainly to prevent Gaskill from enforcing his lien.

But there is another consideration which it is impossible to overcome; that is, the effectual security of the lien itself, from the time of filing, by virtue of the statute. This lien was filed long before the alleged abandonment. The rights thereby secured to the lien claimant were the rights of the owner; no more, no less. The owner could in nowise abridge or abandon them to the injury of the lien claimant. If all others should fail, this view must prevail.

It seems to be my duty to advise an order denying the injunction and dismissing the order to show cause, with costs.

RODDY et al., Trustees,

v.

BRICK et al.

1. An instrument, purporting to be a bill of sale, construed by the intention of the parties as shown by the facts and held to be a chattel mortgage.
2. The following principles applied in determining whether certain machines and machinery in a foundry building were, as between mortgagor and mortgagee of the realty, fixtures or chattels, namely: when a building is erected for a particular purpose and machinery is placed therein to effectuate that purpose and is reasonably necessary therefor and is, in some substantial manner, attached to the land or the building and, consequently, to the freehold, so as to give the idea of permanency and to evince an intention of making a fixture of it, the courts incline to regard such machinery as a part of the realty, irrespective of weight or size, unless the size be such that the machine cannot be removed without removing or damaging the building; but the fact that machines in a building are essential to the successful conduct of the business carried on therein, and the intention of the owner of the concern in the construction of the building and in placing machinery therein are not conclusive that such machines are fixtures; and the fact that a machine may be removed without injury to itself or to the building does not determine it to be a chattel.

(Filed November 22, 1896.)

BILL to foreclose a mortgage. Decree of sale advised.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. A. V. Schenck, for complainants.

Mr. J. D. Bedle, for defendant Campbell.

Mr. W. P. Wilson, for defendant.

Bird, V. C., delivered the following opinion:

This bill is filed to foreclose a mortgage bearing date the 17th day of May, 1890, and recorded on the 17th day of June in the same year, in the county wherein the mortgaged premises are situated. This mortgage was given by Riley A. Brick and wife to the complainants, as trustees, to secure the payment of one hundred bonds, given by the said Brick payable in five years, with interest semi-annually on the first days of January and July, on condition that if default be made in the payment of any interest or any part thereof, on the day when the same was payable, and should remain unpaid for the space of thirty days, then the principal of said bonds should become due.

The property covered by the mortgage is first described as follows: "All that certain lot or parcel of ground, with the buildings and improvements thereon erected, situate," etc., with a more particular description by courses and distances, containing 4½ acres. It makes no mention of the property which is in dispute, which the complainants claim is part of the real estate, as being fixtures, and which the defendant Campbell claims is personal property.

The bill alleges that at the time of the execution and delivery of the said mortgage, the said premises were designed for and used as an iron foundry for the casting and making of water pipe and gas pipe, and that there was, at that time, machinery and fixtures of a permanent nature used in the said business and attached to the realty and intended to be, and actually were included in the said mortgage, and as such did pass as a part of the real estate to the complainants.

The articles claimed by the complainants are: "One large steam crane, one jack, one steam engine and boiler, one large lathe, one small lathe, one planer, one drill press, one drill upright, one Mackenzie blower, two small pumps in machine shop, shafting, belting, etc., one large truck scale (for weighing cars and contents), one wire rope and drum, one jig saw and stand in blacksmith shop, one pair of bellows, two anvils, one large anvil, railroad track and smith at foundry in machine shop, one iron hoisting block and chain, one wood hoisting block and rope, one wood hoisting block and small."

The bill states that the whole number of bonds (that is, 100) was issued, and that many of them are held entirely by persons unknown, and that no interest has been paid since January 1, 1884, and that therefore the whole amount of principal and interest has become due.

The bill also shows that on the 29th day of May, 1880, the said Brick and wife made and delivered to the defendant Campbell a mortgage upon the same premises to secure the sum of $10,000.

The bill also shows that on the 24th day of June, 1882, the said Brick conveyed all the said mortgaged premises to the said Campbell; and also that on the 29th day of May, 1880, the said Campbell executed a bill of sale, to the said Brick, for said articles and many others, which was filed in the clerk's office on the 16th of August, 1880, and also a certain other bill of sale dated January 5, 1882, which was recorded January 6, 1882, and also recorded December 22, 1882, and the 18th of December, 1883, which were given to the said Brick, by the said Campbell, to complete the sale and transfer of the chattels therein mentioned by said Campbell to said Brick, each one containing a distinct proviso that in case default be made by said Brick in the payment of four several notes, given in consideration of said sale or any part thereof; then said sale should be void and the said chattels should revert to Campbell and it should be lawful for him to take possession of them.

As intimated, the articles above enumerated are all named in this bill of sale. Campbell claims two cranes (one steam and one jack), one engine and boiler and one blower, by virtue of the proviso in said bill of sale; insisting that the title did not pass thereby, and could not, in law, until all the consideration money was paid; whereas, the complainants claim that they have all been attached to the realty and are fixtures, and that the taking of a chattel mortgage or treating the bill of sale as a chattel mortgage estops Campbell from claiming under bill of sale.

First. Did the title pass, and was the instrument called a bill of sale intended to be used as a mortgage to secure the payment of the purchase money only? I think it was intended to be used as a mortgage only. It is true, the language used, which is: "In case of default, this conveyance to be void and of no effect, and the possession of the goods herein described shall revert to the said party of the first part," is very clear and emphatic; yet a copy of this bill of sale Campbell had recorded in 1882, after having it acknowledged, both by himself and Brick, and after making thereon an affidavit by himself, in which he declares himself to be "the mortgagee in the within described chattel mortgage."

This must be taken to show what the parties intended. Campbell called it a mortgage, when giving it character under oath. I cannot see how the court can now give the instrument any other name. And if there be any doubt, the law prefers treating such instruments as securities.

Mr. Justice Story in Flagg v. Mann, 2 Sum. 480-533, so declares. I quote: "It has been said that the true test whether the conveyance in this case was a mortgage or not is to ascertain whether it was a security for the payment of any money or not * * * whether the conveyance is a security for the performance or non-performance of any act or thing. If the transaction resolves itself into a security, whatever may be its form it is in equity a mortgage. If it be not a security, then it may be an absolute sale or a conditional purchase." Again; "It is well known that courts of equity lean against construing contracts to be conditional sales; and, therefore, unless the transaction be clearly made out to be of that nature, it is always construed to be a mortgage. So Lord Hardwicke laid down the doctrine (Longuet v. Seaven, 1 Ves. 406), and it has never been departed from. The onus probandi then is on the defendants to establish it to be a conditional sale. If it be doubtful, then it must be construed to be a mortgage." Id. 535.

And this view of the law is not at all in conflict with the case of Cole v. Berry, 13 Vroom, 308, where the rights of the vendor, when it is intended that possession shall pass to the vendee, but not the title to the thing agreed to be sold, is most clearly defined.

The doctrine which is involved in the present case is discussed in Jones on Chattel Mortgages, §§ 26-32. In section 30 he declares the law to be the same as laid down by Mr. Justice Story in Flagg v. Mann et al., supra; but I believe he does not notice this case in his treatise.

If the parties had stood by the original bill of sale, with the distinct agreement that the title should not pass until all the consideration money was paid, no question could fairly have been raised as to the articles included therein and now in this foundry whether, independently of this question, they be considered fixtures or not. Attaching them to the freehold, however securely, would not deprive the true owner of them. See Ewell, Fixtures, 54.

But having come to the conclusion that the parties intended to treat this property as a security for debt and that Campbell is to be regarded as a mortgagee, I must inquire, second, whether the articles above named or any of them are fixtures or not. In view of the apparent uncertainty of the law on the subject, the question before me is quite embarrassing. However, let me take the facts and apply the law as I understand it.

Brick was desirous of establishing the foundry business to make water and gas pipe. For this purpose, he bought the land covered by the mortgage, and to carry it on issued the bonds secured thereby, and from time to time raised money on them. Campbell was the owner of a large stock of machinery valued at $30,000, which he sold to Brick for that sum. This is the same machinery named in the bill of sale. At the time of the sale it was all located in Campbell's shop at Bricksbury in a distant county. Several of the articles named in the bill of sale (including two cranes, one engine and boiler and one blower) were transferred to the foundry built by Brick. The evidence leaves no doubt that they were purchased for that purpose, and that Campbell so understood it.

I think the case shows that Campbell also knew what Brick intended to manufacture and what use he intended to make of the machinery which he had bought. The building erected for the reception of the machinery was a mere shell, consisting of posts, joists, rafters, roofing and clapboards. The land on which it stands is said to be of no value for any other purpose. At the time of the execution of the mortgage, the building was not complete nor was any of the machinery on the premises until about one month after it was completed. What Brick has done with all the other articles included in the bill of sale does not distinctly appear. It does not appear whether Campbell can realize his claim from them or not.

The different articles are connected with the building as now shown. The cranes have in each end a three inch iron pin. This pin rests in a socket in a large iron plate, both below and above. The plate below rests on brick work let into the ground and is made secure by iron bolts, running up through the brick work and plate, and by screws. The plate above is fastened to the joists or girders of the building by bolts and nuts. In this position the cranes are used in manufacturing and moving the pipe. It seems that they or similar ones are absolutely necessary in conducting the business. The steam engine rests upon a brick foundation let into the ground, about two feet in width by twelve in length and carried above the ground three feet. It is held in its position by bolts running through the brick work and the bed plate of the engine, and nuts screwed on top. This engine supplies steam to two boilers, and the power by which the entire business is carried on. The power is applied by means of shafting and belting. The shafting is all connected with the building by means of hangers, in the manner everywhere seen, I think. The steam boilers are secured in the same manner that the engine is, but they are more securely bricked in.

The McKenzie blower, a large iron box with a fan in it, to create a blast to melt the iron, is fastened to timbers imbedded in the ground by bolts and is connected with the shafting by belting, and so put in motion. The large planer sits on timbers and is kept in position by its own weight. The hoisting block and chain, used for raising material to a given height, and weighing about a ton and a half, is placed in position for use, by means of a large hook and eye, the eye being fastened into the building above. The hook can be readily lifted from the eye.

The turning lathes are set on timbers and are not otherwise fastened to the building; one of them is about fourteen feet long, and both are operated by belting and shafting. Their own weight keeps them in position. The drill press is supported in place by its own weight and is operated as are the lathes. The rope machines are quite certainly connected with the building. The railroad track and switch are iron rails and bars fastened to cross-ties, which are imbedded in the ground. The weighing scales are set on a foundation built in the ground and are fastened to the foundation by bolts. The bellows are used with the forge and the forge is of brick and mortar carried above the ground about eighteen inches. The pump is fastened to a bed plate of wood, as a witness says, "in a hole in the ground covered with boards, and there is a bed plate at the bottom and the pump is made fast to it." The anvils are fastened by spikes to large blocks of wood which are let into the ground.

It is urged that each of the machines named is essential to the successful management of the concern. This I concur in. But that alone does not settle the question between mortgagor and mortgagee, nor between the mortgagee and judgment creditors, nor between the mortgagee and the assignee of the mortgagor. If Campbell cannot hold any of these articles, should they be held not to be fixtures, because his alleged chattel mortgage is not a lawful lien, he may still claim them as such assignee.

Again; it is said that the intention of the party in the construction of a building and in placing machinery therein is a safe criterion. This principle is often invoked but it is not always controlling. There is no doubt that Brick purchased every machine and placed them in his foundry with the view of using them there, just as he did the building itself for the land, in the manufacture of pipe. But the cases all show that notwithstanding this, many machines large and small, heavy as well as light, placed in buildings erected expressly for them or similar ones, cannot be held by the mortgagee. It is only necessary to refer to the case of Penn Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Semple, 11 Stew. Eq. 575, decided by the court of errors, and the cases referred to in the opinion of Justice Knapp.

Nor does the fact that a machine may be removed without injury to itself or the building, determine its character to be a chattel or not a fixture. For illustration take the engine used in this foundry: I suppose it can be taken from its foundation, by unscrewing the nuts, and carried away without doing any special damage to the freehold; yet it has been the judgment of all courts that when engines and boilers are annexed to the freehold as these are, by bolts and screws imbedded in masonry, they are to be considered fixtures. This principle applies with equal certainty and force to the cranes in dispute in the case before me.

I am impressed with another fact in connection with the cranes; that is, that as to the large ones, at least, the building must have been constructed with reference to them; for they reach from the ground floor or mason work on which they rest to the joists or girders which support the roof, about forty feet above and which one witness says were so placed and arranged as to receive and hold the cranes.

My conclusion is that the articles named are fixtures, excepting the planer, the hoisting block and chain, the lathes and the drill press. Counsel for complainants regarded these four chattels as fixtures, and relied upon Galveston R. R. Co. v. Cowdrey, 11 Wall. 459, 482 [78 U. S. bk. 20, L. ed. 199, 206], but quite clearly there is no strong analogy here. It seems to me that I cannot aim at anything like harmony or consistency in the law on this perplexing subject, without placing the four articles last named in the list of chattels rather than fixtures.

Nor is the view above expressed as to the articles regarded as fixtures at all in conflict with Early v. Burtis, 13 Stew. 501. In that case the facts were that the steam boiler was taken out of the building for repair, and was moved from place to place in the building, and rested on a brick foundation without bolts or any other attachment to the soil.

It would seem that when a building is erected for a particular purpose and machinery is placed therein to effectuate that purpose, and is reasonably necessary therefor, and is in some substantial manner attached to the land or the building and consequently to the freehold, so as to give one the idea of permanency and to evince an intention of making a fixture of it, the courts incline to regard such machinery as part of the realty, irrespective of weight or size, unless the size be such that the machine cannot be removed without removing or damaging the building.

I will advise accordingly.

The decree will direct a sale, and if money enough is raised to discharge all of the bonds and complainants' costs, then all the outstanding bonds and such costs will be paid, except the twenty-three which are claimed by Mrs. Brick, and the amount due or claimed to be on those will be paid into court to await the further order of the court. If money enough to pay all be not raised by a sale, then an equal proportion will be paid on the former and the balance paid into court, there to remain until such further order.

James C. LORD'S EXRS. et al.,

v.

CARBON IRON MANUFACTURING CO.

- *1. For a simple trespass, which is complete when the force by which it is committed ceases, and which is continuous in nothing but the consequences which may flow from it subsequent to its commission, the only remedy known to the law is an action of trespass, in which the person injured must recover his damages once for all.
2. The jurisdiction of courts of equity in cases of trespass is purely preventive; they may restrain a threatened trespass, if the injury likely to ensue will be irreparable, or they may enjoin the continuance or repetition of a trespass; but for a completed trespass, which as a legal wrong is complete when protection is sought, they can give no redress whatever.
3. A court of equity cannot award pecuniary damages in redress of a trespass.
4. A court of equity has no authority to impose an easement on the land of a trespasser, in redress of the wrong done by the trespass.
5. As a general rule, the only legal duty which a trespasser incurs by his wrongful act, where his trespass is complete when judicial aid is invoked, is a liability to reimburse the person injured, in money, for the loss which his trespass has caused.
6. If an upper mine owner breaks through a barrier which was left by the lower mine owner for the purpose of protecting his mine against the water which otherwise would flow from the upper into the lower mine, the trespasser is answerable for the damages, including the cost of restoring the barrier; but the trespass in such case imposes no legal duty upon the trespasser to either close the opening, or to prevent the water in his mine from flowing through the opening into the lower mine.

*Head notes by VAN FLEET, V. C.

7. The flowage of water from the upper mine into the lower, through an opening thus made, is neither the continuance of a trespass nor of a nuisance, and gives no distinct ground of action.
8. If the damages resulting from a trespass are aggravated or increased by the folly, willful obstinacy, or gross carelessness of the injured person, such part of his loss as is directly attributable to his own fault cannot be recovered.
9. Where one person makes a grant of land to another, reserving the minerals in the land, a covenant will be implied, in the absence of all words to that effect and solely from the nature of the transaction, that the grantor, in removing the minerals reserved, shall leave or provide sufficient support for the surface to prevent its subsidence.
10. Land on a lower level is under a natural servitude to that located above it, to receive the water flowing down to it naturally.
11. For damages resulting from natural causes, or from lawful acts done in a proper manner, the law gives no redress, such losses being regarded as damnum absque injuria; but where one of two adjoining mine owners conducts water into his neighbor's mine, which would not otherwise go there, or causes it to go there at different times and in greater quantities than it would go there naturally, he commits a legal wrong.
12. The owner of mineral land has a right to take away the whole of the minerals in his land, for such is the natural course of user of such land; and if in the course of such user water accumulates on his land, either on the surface or underground, and then passes off by the operation of the laws of nature into the land of his neighbor, his neighbor has no legal cause of complaint.

(Filed November 30, 1886.)

ON final hearing on bill and answer and proofs taken in open court. Bill dismissed.

The facts are set forth in the opinion of the Vice Chancellor.

Messrs. S. H. Little and Theodore Little, for complainants:

Cited Thomas Iron Co. v. Allentown Mining Co. 1 Stew. Eq. 77.

Mr. Henry C. Pitney, for defendant.

Van Fleet, V. C., delivered the following opinion:

The questions in dispute in this case relate to the rights and duties of persons owning adjoining mines. The litigants own adjacent iron mines in the County of Morris. They have both worked the same vein of ore, but at different levels and at different times, the defendant's mine being above that of the complainants, and having been first worked in order of time. The main purpose of the complainants' suit is to procure a decree which will protect them against injuries, which they allege they now suffer, from the flowing of water from the defendant's mine into theirs, and which will also give them protection against injuries which they say they will inevitably sustain in the future, if the defendant is allowed to do what it threatens, namely: reduce the pillars and walls of its mine and let its surface subside. The complainants ask protection, it will be observed, against both present and prospective injury.

The facts on which the complainants rest their right to be relieved against present injury may be summarized as follows: the Carbon Iron Company was the predecessor in title of the defendant; it owned the mine now owned by the defendant up to June, 1878, when, under a decree of this court, directing the sale of certain mortgaged premises, this mine, with other lands, was conveyed to the defendant.

The Carbon Iron Company while it owned the defendant's mine, worked over the boundary line and took ore from the complainants' land. The time when this trespass was committed is not fixed with entire certainty. The bill does not allege when it was committed; it simply says that the Carbon Iron Company, while in possession, committed a trespass by working over the line. The answer, however, says that it was committed somewhere about the year 1872, and the proofs render it tolerably clear that it was committed near that time, certainly prior to 1875. The point where it was committed is about 100 feet, measured vertically, below the surface.

There is a dispute between the parties as to the true location of the division line, and a large amount of evidence was submitted by each in support of their respective claims; but, without expressing an opinion as to which claim is vindicated by the evidence, I shall, for the purposes of this discussion, treat the line claimed by the complainants as the true one. Adopting their line as the true one, the wrongful act of the Carbon Iron Company, which the complainants seek to make in part the basis of the relief they ask against the defendant, consisted in making an excavation or hole in the complainants' land 100 feet below the surface, for a distance of about 47 feet beyond the property line. A second trespass was committed in 1881. The defendant's lessees were the wrong doers in this instance. This trespass was committed at a point about 200 feet, vertical measurement, below the surface, and consisted in making an excavation beyond the division line for a distance of about 30 feet.

The two wrongful acts just described form the sole foundation of the complainants' right to relief against present injury. Neither the defendant, nor those who preceded it in title, nor those who have succeeded to any of its rights, have, by the exercise of force or violence, committed any other wrong against the complainants. It is not claimed that these trespasses, at the time they were committed, did the complainants any immediate irreparable injury, or even serious harm, but it is consequences which have since flowed from them, consequences produced by the complainants' own subsequent acts, which have inflicted the injuries against which they ask protection.

The complainants did not begin to open their mine until the fall of 1880. They then sunk a shaft at a point where they knew it must, if carried down on the vein, strike the excavation which the Carbon Iron Company had previously made in its land, and that an opening between the two mines would thus be made, and that when it was made the inevitable result would be, if no barrier was erected to bay back the water rising in the defendant's mine, that the water would flow down into their mine.

The location of their shaft was judiciously selected. It was placed where it could be constructed with the least expense and be used to the greatest advantage. Their superintendent, however, says, and he is the person who selected the site for the shaft, that he expected, when he located the shaft, that in sinking it he would break into the excavation made by the Carbon Iron Company; and that he knew if he did, an opportunity would be afforded to the complainants to turn the water rising in their mine, above that point, into the defendant's mine; and he also says that he thought, if at any subsequent time it should become necessary to protect the complainants' mine against the water rising in the defendant's mine, that he could do it by building a dam across the opening.

The first opening between the two mines was made in sinking the shaft, in the manner in which the complainants' superintendent expected it would be made. And the second was made by the complainants' miners in blasting. A hole was drilled immediately above where the second excavation, across the line, had been made and was then charged with powder and fired. The blast was not successful. Two of the complainants' miners say that they supposed the reason why it was not successful was that the bottom of the drill hole happened to be near a crevice or fissure in the rock, and that when the powder exploded, the force produced spent itself in this opening.

A new bottom was then made for the hole and it was again charged with powder, and when this second charge exploded, a hole as large as a man's head was made between the two mines. This hole was afterwards enlarged by the use of picks, so that an ordinary person could pass through it from one mine to the other. At the time this last opening was made the complainants' mine had no means of ventilation except through its shaft and the upper opening made into the defendant's mine. One of the miners who assisted in making the second opening says that the complainants' mine needed ventilation, and that after the second opening was made its ventilation was much better than it was before.

The surface above the mines is low and wet, and they both, consequently, carry a large quantity of water. They are both wet mines. Through the two openings, made in the manner just described, all the water rising in the defendant's mine above the openings is given a free passage into the complainants' mine, and it is against the injury inflicted by this flowage that the complainants ask protection. They insist that upon the facts above stated they are entitled to an injunction restraining the defendant from permitting the water rising in the defendant's mine from flowing through these openings into theirs. The complainants' right to the relief they ask, it will be perceived, stands distinctly and exclusively on two simple trespasses, neither of which was committed by the defendant.

The material question then would seem to be, Has this court any power, for injuries like those from which the complainants are now suffering, and which proceed from causes like those which produce the complainants' injuries, to give redress by the exercise of its prohibitory power? For a simple trespass, which as a legal wrong is complete when the force by which it is committed ceases, and which is continuous in nothing but the consequences which may flow from it subsequent to its commission, the only remedy known to the law is an action of trespass in which the person injured must recover his damages once for all. The damages recovered in a suit founded on such a cause of action, extinguish the cause of action; and the sum recovered must, therefore, necessarily embrace compensation for all the injury, whether it be past, present or future, certain or contingent, known or unknown.

Courts of equity, in cases of trespass, exercise a limited and not a general jurisdiction. They may prevent or stop a trespass, but they cannot otherwise redress a wrong of that kind. They may restrain a threatened trespass, if the injury likely to ensue will be irreparable, or they may enjoin the continuance or repetition of a trespass; but for a completed trespass, which is finished and ended when protection is sought, they can give no redress whatever. And the reason is manifest; their injunction being purely preventive, if the wrong is already done when their power is invoked, they cannot prevent the wrong. The doing of that which is already done cannot be prevented. For a past trespass, which as a legal wrong is complete when redress is sought, no redress can be given except compensation in money, by way of damages, and redress in that form cannot be administered by a court of equity. In cases where the damages are not susceptible of exact estimation, and where no standard of measurement exists, except such as an experienced judgment will approve, it has been declared by the highest court of this State that this court cannot admeasure them, but their admeasurement, in all such cases, belongs exclusively to the common-law courts. Palys v. Jewett, 5 Stew. 312.

Therefore, if the wrong which forms the ground of this action had been committed on the surface, and had consisted of an excavation made in the complainants' land, and also of the removal of a solid stone wall, erected by the complainants on their own land to prevent the water of a pond standing on the defendant's land from overflowing theirs, and the effect of the defendant's wrongful acts in making the excavation and removing the wall, had been to produce a continuous discharge of the water of the pond over the complainants' land, which would continue, constantly inflicting additional injury, so long as the wall was not restored, and the complainants had failed to apply for protection while the wrong was in progress, but came seeking it after all force and violence had ceased, and after the defendant's trespass, as a legal wrong, was fully completed, though its injurious consequences were still in progress, I consider it entirely clear on principle that, under such a condition of facts, this court would be powerless to give the complainants any relief whatever. It is certain that the trespass could not be restrained, for, as already remarked, it is impossible to restrain or prevent the doing of that which has already been done. It is equally certain that this court has no power to decree the payment of pecuniary damages in satisfaction of such a wrong.

And I know of no power in this court, or in any other, which gives it authority, when one person has made an excavation in the land of another, to command the aggressor to go back and fill up the excavation and restore the land to its original condition. Such a decree, would, I think, be entirely anomalous, having the support of neither precedent nor principle. And it would produce this incongruous state of affairs: to redress the first trespass, the court would command the aggressor to commit a second.

Nor do I think that this court has power, in such a case, to compel the wrong doer to erect a wall on his own land to protect the injured party against the consequences of his wrongful act. The practical effect of such an exercise of power, it will be observed, would be to fasten a perpetual easement on the lands of the aggressor, as a remedy for a trespass committed by him on the land of his neighbor. I have never understood that it was possible for any such consequence to flow from a trespass nor that it was possible for an easement to have its origin in such a source. Acts which are wrongful in their origin may be repeated so frequently and so long as to raise the presumption of a grant, and thus to transform what was originally wrongful into a right; but I know of no act which a wrong doer may do on the land of another which will give the person injured a right of any kind in the land of the wrong doer.

It would seem, therefore, to be entirely clear that if the trespasses on which the complainants ground their right to relief had been committed on the surface, this court would have been without the slightest pretense of jurisdiction over the case, and that the only remedy to which the complainants could, in that case, have had recourse would have been an action at law. But the complainants say that their right in this respect is changed by the place where the trespasses were committed and by the character and consequences of the trespasses. The proposition on which they rest their right to a remedy in equity is this: that the defendant by its trespasses having placed the two mines in such position or relation to each other that water rising in the defendant's mine must necessarily, by force of the law of gravitation, flow into that of the complainants, it thereby imposed upon itself, as a consequence of its wrong, a legal duty to prevent the water accumulating in its mine from flowing into the complainants' mine; and that, inasadequate protection against the injuries which will arise from the violation of this duty, by an injunction commanding the defendant to prevent the water in its mine from flowing into the complainants' mine, their right to relief in equity is clear, for the reason that a court of equity is the only tribunal which can effectually and adequately redress their wrong.

This proposition, it will be observed, goes to the length of declaring that it is a settled rule of law that a trespass which is complete in everything except its damnifying consequences, when suit is brought, will, in a case like the present, raise a duty against the person committing it to do something more, in making redress for it, than to pay pecuniary damages. No such duty, it is clear, exists by force of any general principle; and if it exists at all, it must be as an exception to some general rule. According to the rule which prevails generally if not universally, in such cases, the only legal duty which a trespasser incurs by his wrongful act, where his act as a legal wrong is complete when judicial aid is invoked, is a liability to reimburse the injured person, in money, for all loss, both direct and consequential, which his trespass has caused.

If A breaks the windows of B's house, and a rain storm should afterwards occur before B could, by the exercise of reasonable diligence, have the windows repaired, and his house should in consequence be seriously injured by the rain, B, in a suit against A, would be entitled to recover all the damages which his house had sustained, as well those resulting from the destruction of the windows as those subsequently caused by the rain. But B could not leave his windows in the insecure condition in which A's wrongful act put them, and then maintain an action against A for not repairing them. To allow B to maintain an action against A for not repairing the windows would involve this absurdity: A would have no right to enter B's close to repair the windows—if he went there, even for that purpose, he would commit a further trespass—and so if B should be allowed to maintain an action against A for not repairing the windows, his action would rest on A's not doing that which he had no right to do.

The only judicial hint ever given, so far as I am aware, that it was possible for a duty, like that which the complainants charge against the defendant, to spring from a trespass, was thrown out by Chief Baron Pollock, in disposing of a demurrer to a declaration, in Firmstone v. Wheeley, 2 Dowl. & Lownd. 208.

The declaration alleged that the defendant had committed a trespass on the plaintiff's land, by removing a barrier which the plaintiff had left there to protect his mine against water accumulating in the defendant's mine, and that in consequence of the defendant's trespass, the water in his mine, which the barrier would have held back if it had been left undisturbed, now flowed into the plaintiff's mine. The declaration then charged that it became the defendant's duty, in consequence of his having unlawfully removed the only barrier between the two mines, to so deal with the water accumulating in his mine as to prevent it from flowing into the mine of the plaintiff. The Chief Baron, in deciding the question raised by the demurrer said:

"There may, perhaps, be a difference as regards the law between the barrier of a mine and a fence above ground. If a wall is knocked down, the owner may maintain an action of trespass, but he cannot, by omitting to rebuild it, hold the defendant always responsible for any consequential damages. But here, the plaintiff says that the removal of the barrier is irreparable, and, therefore, the duty alleged in this declaration may well arise."

This, it will be seen, is at most a mere intimation that such may be the law. The case does not decide that a trespass will create any such duty, and it has never been so understood. Lord Denman, in speaking of it in Clegg v. Dearden, 12 Ad. & El. N. S. 601, said that it had not been determined in that case that any such duty or obligation would flow from a trespass; and in Smith v. Kenrick, 7 Man. G. & S. 564, the court, in reviewing the last remark attributed to the Chief Baron, said that the case could hardly be treated as a decision.

If these criticisms of Firmstone v. Wheeley do not show that no such duty exists, they are certainly sufficient to raise serious doubts respecting its existence. Whether it exists or not is a disputed question of law; and while that remains the case no injunction or other equitable relief can be granted. So long as the defendant's duty is in doubt there must also be doubt respecting the complainants' legal right; for if the defendant is not subject to the duty claimed, the complainants are without legal right; and, where, as in this case, a complainant asks protection against injury arising from the violation of a legal right, he is not entitled to what he asks, unless he can show that the right on which his title to relief rests is settled as a matter of law.

There is, however, authority declaring directly that no such duty exists. To this extent I think the law pertinent to this branch of the case must be considered settled; that for wrongs like those of which the complainants complain, there is but a single remedy and that is an action of trespass; and that the only duty which a wrong doer incurs by the commission of such wrongs is a liability to answer in damages for the loss his wrongs have caused.

These are the doctrines established by Clegg v. Dearden, supra. The plaintiff's right of action in that case rested on the same duty which the complainants here seek to fasten upon the defendant. The defendant had broken down a barrier which the plaintiff had left on his land to protect his mine against water rising in the defendant's mine. The parties owned adjoining mines, the plaintiff's being the lower of the two. The plaintiff brought an action of trespass against the defendant, had a recovery and his damages were subsequently paid. The plaintiff afterwards suffered further damages, damages which were not covered by the previous recovery; and to recover such subsequent damages he brought an action on the case against the defendant for wrongfully keeping open and continuing the aperture between the two mines which he had made in breaking down the plaintiff's barrier. The case was submitted, on a special verdict, to the court of Queen's Bench for judgment, whether, on the facts above stated, the plaintiff could recover. The court held that he could not. It was said, leaving the aperture open, in consequence of which the water continued to flow from the defendant's mine into the plaintiff's, afforded no distinct ground of action, as for the continuance of a trespass or of a nuisance; the flowing of the water, and the damage thereby caused to the plaintiff was merely consequential to the making of the aperture, and for that the plaintiff had already received compensation. The pith of Lord Denman's argument against the plaintiff's right to recover was expressed as follows:

"There is a legal obligation to discontinue a trespass or remove a nuisance; but there is no such obligation upon a trespasser to replace what he has pulled down or destroyed upon the land of another, though he is liable in an action of trespass to compensate in damages for the loss sustained. The defendant, having made an excavation and aperture in the plaintiff's land was liable to an action of trespass, but no cause of action arises from his omitting to re-enter the plaintiff's land and fill up the excavation. Such an omission is neither a continuation of a trespass, nor of a nuisance, nor is it a breach of any legal duty."

Substantially the same views were expressed by the court in Smith v. Kenrick, supra.

The law as established by Clegg v. Dearden was adopted and enforced in Williams v. Pomeroy Coal Co. 37 Ohio St. 588. The defendants in that case, while working out the coal in their land, broke over the line and took coal belonging to the adjacent owner for a distance of from thirty-six to thirty-nine feet. This trespass was committed in 1861 and the defendants abandoned their mine in 1862. In 1864 the plaintiff acquired title to the land upon which the defendants' trespass had been committed. In 1868 the plaintiff's workmen, while taking out his coal, broke into the excavation made by the defendants, and through the opening thus made, the water which had collected in the defendants' mine was let into the plaintiff's mine and flooded it. The plaintiff subsequently, and after the right of action for the trespass committed in 1864 had become barred by statute, brought an action to recover the damages which he had sustained by the flooding of his mine. He insisted that the defendants' wrong was, in legal substance, a continuing nuisance; that while it was true their wrong had its origin in the trespass committed in 1861, yet its injurious consequences did not cease with the trespass, but were continuous, those most remote causing the utter ruin of his mine, and the damnifying consequences of the wrong should, therefore, be treated like the injuries inflicted by other continuing nuisances, and be adjudged to be the proper basis of successive actions. The court refused to adopt this view; but on the contrary held that the case was one of simple trespass and not of nuisance, and that any bar or extinguishment of the right of action for the trespass, whether it arose from lapse of time or a prior recovery, absolved the defendants from all liability for the trespass or any of its consequences.

A recent decision of the Supreme Court of Michigan adopts the doctrine laid down in these two cases in all its length and breadth. The case referred to is the National Copper Company v. Minnesota Mining Company, 56 Mich. —. The plaintiff and defendant owned adjoining copper mines, each holding their land in fee. The plaintiff, in working out its ore, left a wall of rock, from fifteen to eighteen feet thick, next to the defendant's mine. The defendant left no barrier, but in taking out its ore worked not only up to the boundary line but over it, breaking into the plaintiff's mine at two different points, at one of which its trespass extended over on the plaintiff's land about twenty feet. The plaintiff subsequently in making blasts in its mine, broke into the excavations, and openings were thus made between the two mines, by which the water in the defendant's mine was let into that of the plaintiff. The defendant afterwards abandoned its mine, first robbing it, by taking out all the ore which had been left for supports. In consequence of the removal of the supports, the surface of the defendant's mine caved in, and depressions were thus made, into which the water produced by rains and melting snow collected, and then sank into the defendant's mine, and from there flowed through these openings, into the plaintiff's mine. The plaintiff, after its right of action for the original trespass was barred by statute, brought an action against the defendant. It put its right to maintain its action on two grounds: first, that the defendant's trespass was a continuing wrong; and second, that the defendant having wrongfully removed the barrier which the plaintiff had left for the protection of its mine, and thereby caused the water in the defendant's mine, which the barrier would, if it had been left undisturbed, have kept there, to flow into the plaintiff's mine, thereby, as a legal consequence of its wrong, imposed upon itself an obligation either to close the openings, or to prevent the water in its mine from flowing through them into the plaintiff's mine. The plaintiff recovered a judgment for a large sum in the court of original jurisdiction. The case was then removed to the supreme court, and there both grounds taken by the plaintiff were declared fallacious. Chief Justice Cooley, who pronounced the opinion of the court, said, in discussing the plaintiff's first ground:

"The case before us was one of admitted trespass, from which immediate damage resulted. Had suit been brought at that time, all the natural and probable damage to result from the wrongful act would have been taken into account, and the plaintiff would have recovered it. But there was no continuous trespass from that time on. The defendant had built no structure on the plaintiff's premises, was occupying no part of them with anything it had placed there, and was in no way interrupting the plaintiff's occupation or enjoyment. All it had left there was a hole in the wall. But there is no analogy between leaving a hole in a wall on another's premises, and leaving houses or other obstructions there to incumber or hinder his occupation. Physical hindrances are a continuance of the original wrongful force; but the hole is only the consequence of a wrongful force, which ceased to operate the moment the hole was made."

The Chief Justice then discusses the second ground taken by the plaintiff, with more elaboration and a greater wealth of illustration than is used in either Clegg v. Dearden, or Williams v. Pomeroy Coal Company, but he rests his repudiation of it at last upon the principle established by those cases.

On the important question whether the remedy given by the common law, in cases of this kind, where the damages flowing from a trespass contemporaneous with its commission, or shortly afterwards, may be very insignificant in comparison with those which may result from it, at a date long subsequent to its commission, is adequate to enable a court of law to do full and complete justice to the person aggrieved, the Chief Justice speaks as follows:

"The wrong to the plaintiff consisted in breaking down the wall which had been left by it in its operations. If any damage might possibly result from this which was not then so far probable that a jury could have taken it into account in awarding damages, the plaintiff was not without redress. It would have been entitled in a suit then brought to recover the costs of restoring the barrier which had been taken away; and if it had done so, and made the restoration, the damage now complained of could not have happened. It thus appears that complete redress could have been had in a suit then brought, and that being the case, the plaintiff is not entitled to recover now for an injury for which an award of the means of prevention was within the right of action which was suffered to become barred! The right which then existed, being a right to recover for all the injury that had been suffered, including the loss of the dividing barrier, it would not have been competent for the plaintiff, had suit then been brought, to leave the loss of the barrier out of account, awaiting possible special damages to flow therefrom as a ground for a nonsuit. The wrong which had then been committed was indivisible, and the bar of the statute must be as broad as the remedy was which it extinguishes."

These adjudications make it entirely clear that the wrongful acts imputed to the defendant imposed no such duty upon it as that which the complainants seek to fasten upon it; and they also demonstrate that the only remedy to which the complainants could ever have had recourse, for the redress of the wrongs of which they complain, was an action of trespass.

So far the case has been considered as though the defendant had itself committed the trespasses of which complaint is made, and also as though the damages, against which protection is sought, were all caused by the unlawful acts of the defendant, and were, therefore, legally chargeable against it. This, however, is not the fact.

The defendant committed neither trespass; nor is it true that all the damages the complainants have since sustained resulted from the trespasses. They were to a large extent self-inflicted. As already remarked, the proofs show that the complainants' shaft was judiciously located, and also that in carrying their shaft down it was impossible to avoid breaking into the upper excavation. But so long as their mine did not extend below the first excavation, an opening between the two mines, at this point, could do the complainants no harm, but, on the contrary, would be advantageous. It would provide them with a way by which their mine could be relieved of all the water accumulating in it, above this point, without pumping it to the surface. Their superintendent says that this was one of the advantages which he had in view in selecting the site for the shaft. The injury which the complainants' mine now suffers from this opening is inflicted at a point far below the opening, and is caused by the flowage of water, rising in the defendant's mine, through the opening, into the complainants' mine.

The complainants carried their mine on down below the opening, not only with full knowledge that the opening was there, but also knowing what would be the inevitable effect upon their mine, if they sunk it below the opening, without first erecting a barrier across the opening. The erection of a barrier at this point was one of the things which the complainants' superintendent had in contemplation when he selected the site for the shaft. He says that he intended, if it became necessary for the protection of the complainants' mine after an opening had been made, to build a barrier across the opening, and that he thought that this course would be less expensive than to sink the shaft at any other point, or to so alter the course of the shaft as to avoid breaking into the excavation.

In view of these facts, there can be no dispute that the injuries against which the complainants seek protection are largely, if not entirely, due to causes which the complainants have themselves created. It is certain that if they had not sunk their mine below the opening, or if, before carrying it below that point, they had erected a sufficient barrier across the opening, none of the injuries of which they now complain could have happened. Their injuries have been caused by what they did and what they omitted to do. And this is true of both sources of injury, of both the upper and lower opening. The complainants had an unquestionable right to sink their mine below the opening; but the fact that they knew that the opening was there, and that if they left the opening in just the condition they found it, they would expose their mine to constant and serious danger, made it their duty to do what they could to protect their mine against injury from this source. A wrong doer is not liable for such damage as the injured person may easily avoid by his own act. The rule is settled that if the damages resulting from a trespass are aggravated or increased by the folly, willful obstinacy or gross carelessness of the person injured, such part of his loss as is directly attributable to his own fault cannot be recovered. 1 Suth. Dam. 148; Field, Dam. § 126; Loker v. Damon, 17 Pick. 284.

For these reasons I am of opinion that the first measure of relief asked by the complainants must be denied.

The threatened or prospective injury against which the complainants ask protection is that which they fear their mine will sustain in case the surface of the defendant's mine subsides. The complainants allege that the defendant intends to reduce the pillars which were left in its mine, while it was working it, for the support of the stratum immediately above them, and that it also intends to take the ore from the walls of its mine; that the pillars and walls are now too weak to furnish sufficient support for the stratum above them, and that if their strength is further impaired by the removal of additional ore, the inevitable effect will be the caving in of the surface of the defendant's mine, and that the cavity thus made will serve as a conduit to pass into the complainants' mine a large quantity of surface water, which, if the surface is left in its natural condition, will flow off over the surface and never reach the complainants' mine.

The complainants also allege that as the Rockaway River flows near the workings of the defendant's mine there will be great danger, in case a subsidence occurs, that the water of the river will be precipitated into the cavity made by the subsidence and from there into the defendant's mine, and thence through the two openings into the complainants' mine.

The defendant does not deny that it intended to remove, according to the customary methods, all the ore which remains in its mine, and which can be removed with profit; nor does it deny that the removal of the ore may cause the surface of the mine to subside, nor that in case a subsidence takes place, some damage may not be done to the complainants' mine; but it insists that if any damage should result to the complainants' mine, from that cause, it cannot be held answerable for it, either here or elsewhere.

The defendant does, however, deny that, in case the surface of its mine should subside, the slightest damage will thereby be created, or that the water of the Rockaway River may be thrown into the complainants' mine; and the proofs in support of its averment in that regard seem to render it perfectly clear that there is not, at present, the least reason to fear that the complainants will ever suffer any injury from that cause.

The first question then, which this branch of the case would seem to present, is this: Has the defendant a right by law to remove all the ore from its mine, regardless of the effect which the removal may have on the mine of the complainants? It is to be assumed, of course, that the work necessary to be done in the removal of the ore is to be done in a skillful and proper manner. The parties to this litigation stand free from all covenant obligations to each other. They each own their land in fee and have all the property rights in it which an absolute and independent title can give.

There can be no doubt that the rule is settled that where one person makes a grant of land to another, reserving the minerals in the land, a covenant will be implied, in the absence of all words to that effect and solely from the nature of the transaction, that the grantor in removing the minerals reserved shall leave or provide sufficient support for the surface to prevent its subsidence. And the same implication will arise where grants are made of different strata, one above the other, to different persons. This rule is founded on the familiar maxim that whoever grants a thing, shall be understood to grant also whatever is indispensable to the full beneficial enjoyment of the thing granted. Harris v. Ryding, 5 Mees. & Wels. 60; Hilton

v. Lord Granville, 5 Ad. & El. N. S. 701; Mundy v. Duke of Rutland, L. R. 28 Ch. Div. 81. But it is manifest that this rule has no application to this case.

The two general rules which must control the decision of this branch of the case may be stated as follows: first, land on a lower level is under a natural servitude to that located above it, to receive the water flowing down to it naturally; and second, for damages resulting from natural causes, or from lawful acts done in a proper manner, the law gives no redress, such losses being regarded as damnum absque injuria; but where one of two adjoining mine owners conducts water into his neighbor's mine, which would not otherwise go there, or causes it to go there at different times and in larger quantities than it would go there naturally, he commits a wrong which the law will redress. The second of these rules states the principle to be deduced from two adjudications which have received the approval of the highest judicial tribunal of Great Britain. They are both cited in Rylands v. Fletcher, L. R. 3 H. L. 880, as correct expositions of the law.

The first declares that it is the natural right of each of the owners of two adjacent mines, neither being subject to any servitude to the other, to work his own in the manner most convenient and beneficial to himself, although the natural consequence may be that some prejudice will accrue to the owner of the adjoining mine, so long as that does not arise from negligent or malicious conduct. Smith v. Kenrick, 7 C. B. 515.

And the second says that the occupier of the higher mine has no right to be an active agent in sending water down into the lower mine. The lower mine is subject to no servitude of receiving water, conducted by men from the higher. Each mine owner has all rights of property in his mine and among them, the right to get all minerals therefrom, provided he works with skill and in the usual manner. And if, while the occupier of a higher mine exercises that right, nature causes water to flow to a lower mine, he is not responsible for this operation of nature. If the owner of the lower mine intends to guard against this operation, he must leave a barrier at the upper part of his mine to bay back the water of his higher neighbor. The law imposing these regulations for the enjoyment of somewhat conflicting interests does not authorize the occupier of the higher mine to interfere with the gravitation of the water, so as to make it more injurious to the lower mine, or advantageous to himself. Baird v. Williamson, 15 C. B. N. S. 876.

And here it may not be improper to say that the value of the minerals in the soil of Great Britain, and the importance of mining as one of the great industries of that country, as well as the frequency with which its courts have been called upon to decide controversies respecting the rights and duties of mine owners, render it quite certain that questions like the one under consideration have received the very best consideration which it was possible to give them, and the decisions of the courts of that country, on such questions, are therefore entitled to the very highest respect.

The application of the leading principle established by the two cases just cited to the case in hand has been made easy and simple by a judgment pronounced by the House of Lords in 1876. That case and the one under consideration are identical in all their material parts, except in that case a subsidence had actually taken place, and some of the injury consequent to the subsidence had been actually sustained, while here damage is simply apprehended. The following are material facts of that case, as given in the opinion of Lord Blackburn, who pronounced the judgment of the House of Lords: the plaintiff and defendant were the lessees of the minerals under two adjacent parts of the same estate. The defendant's seam of coal cropped out at the surface and lay at a high inclination, dipping towards the seam in the plaintiff's holding, and entering the plaintiff's seam at a point many fathoms below the surface, so that any water which fell on or percolated into the defendant's holding would necessarily, by force of gravitation, descend to the plaintiff's holding, unless stopped by the minerals or soil from doing so. The soil above the coal was stiff and impervious to water, so that, while it remained undisturbed, the greater part of the rainfall flowed away over the surface, very little filtering down to the seam, which was in consequence a very dry seam; the impervious strata above, while it remained undisturbed, forming what might be called a roof, practically water tight, over the coal. The defendant altered this state of affairs. He worked out his coal, carrying away the whole of it, and as a necessary result the surface sank. At the upper part, where the seam cropped out to the surface, the subsidence was so great over about five acres, that the surface sank into pits and cracked into open fissures, through which the rain, which fell on those five acres, flowed down into the defendant's workings; and the coal in these workings having been removed, the water in the defendant's mine flowed down towards the plaintiff's holding, and in consequence a considerable quantity of water which, while the roof remained in its original state, a water tight roof, had flowed away over the surface, descended into the plaintiff's mine, and he was in consequence put to additional expense in freeing his mine from water. To recover compensation for the loss thus sustained, the plaintiff brought an action. He was defeated in the courts below and then carried his case to the House of Lords.

Lord Blackburn, in pronouncing judgment, stated that it seemed to him the question to be decided was whether the loss the plaintiff had sustained was not damnum absque injuria against which he was bound to protect himself in the best way he could, or whether the defendant, while working the upper mine was under any obligation to the plaintiff, to preserve or restore the impervious roof, which, while it existed, prevented the greater part of the rainfall from descending to the plaintiff's mine. He then said:

"The general rule of law is that the owner of one piece of land has a right to use it, in the natural course of user, unless in doing so he interferes with some right created either by law or contract; and as a branch of that law, the owner of mineral land has a right to take away the whole of the minerals in his land, for such is the natural course of the user of mineral land; and a servitude to prevent such an user must be founded on something more than neighborhood."

Quoting then from Lord Cairns, in Rylands v. Fletcher, he said that the occupier of a close may use it for any purpose for which it may, in the ordinary course of the enjoyment of land, be used; and that if, in the course of such user, water accumulates on his land, either on the surface or underground, and then by the operation of the laws of nature passes off into the close of the plaintiff, the plaintiff has no legal cause of complaint. He also said:

"I may observe that I cannot see any principle on which an obligation to restore the surface to its natural state of water tightness, for the benefit of the owner of the coal on one dip, can be founded which would not equally give rise to an obligation to make the underground workings as water-tight as they were before the coal was removed." Wilson v. Waddell, L. R. 2 App. Cas. 95.

Subsequently the same tribunal declared, in Fletcher v. Smith, L. R. 2 App. Cas. 781, that after the decision in Wilson v. Waddell, the court could not be asked to hold that a defendant was liable, as for a wrongful act, for removing the coal from his land, and thereby opening the soil above his mine, so as to let through into the plaintiff's mine the rain water which might fall on the surface of the defendant's mine. And just in this connection I think it should be noticed that all the injuries which the complainants fear, but have not suffered, had actually been sustained by the plaintiffs in the National Copper Company v. Minnesota Mining Company, supra, and yet the court was compelled to declare in that case that, as the plaintiffs had lost their right of action for the trespass, they were remediless.

These adjudications are directly in point: they stand upon a principle universally recognized as just, namely: the right of every land owner to have the full, free and perfect enjoyment of his land, for all purposes for which land may rightfully be held and enjoyed; and they demonstrate, beyond all question, that if this right be accorded to the defendant in this case, the complainants are without the least title to any kind of equitable relief.

The question, whether if the defendant removes the ore remaining in its mine, and a subsidence shall in consequence take place, and the injuries, which the complainants now fear, shall actually happen, they may then have a right to maintain an action against the defendant, under the doctrine laid down in Backhouse v. Bonomi, 9 H. L. Cas. 508; and Mitchell v. Darley Main Colliery Co., L. R. 14 Q. B. Div. 127 (and which doctrine is stated more clearly and forcibly by Chief Justice Cockburn in Lamb v. Walker, L. R. 8 Q. B. Div. 389, than it has ever been stated by any other judge), cannot be considered now, and probably may not be a proper subject for the consideration of this court until it has been considered and determined by the Supreme Court of this State.

My judgment on the whole case is that the complainants are not entitled to either measure of relief asked; and their bill must therefore be dismissed, with costs.

SERGEANT
v.
METTLER et al.

1. Although the court would not, in a suit to foreclose a junior mortgage, make a decree against the holder of an admittedly prior mortgage, still the holder of a lien subsequent to the junior mortgage has no standing to move to dismiss the bill because it seeks to have the junior mortgage given a preference in payment over the prior mortgage.
2. In such a suit the rights of all parties, so far as stated in the bill, can be protected under a prayer for general relief.

(Filed November 27, 1886.)

ON motion to dismiss bill. Denied.

The case is stated in the conclusions of the Vice Chancellor.

Messrs. Hazelhurst and Riehl, for the motion.

Mr. W. D. Holt, contra.

Bird, V. C., filed the following conclusions:

This bill is filed to foreclose a second mortgage. The first mortgagee is made a party and the priority of his mortgage is distinctly admitted. Arnet has a lien on the premises which the complainant alleges is subsequent to his mortgage. The complainant prays that the defendants may be decreed to pay the amount due to him, and in default thereof that they be foreclosed of the equity of redemption, and that the mortgaged premises be sold and he paid the amount due to him; together with the general prayer for further and other relief, etc.

The defendant Arnet now moves to dismiss the bill, because "There being a prior incumbrance upon the premises * * * the said complainant prays that the said premises be sold and he be paid the amount of his said mortgage with interest and costs; which said relief in the nature of the case and under the circumstances cannot be granted."

In other words, the complainant in this special prayer asks for that which the court will not grant. He asks that a prior mortgagee, whose mortgage he admits, may be decreed to pay his mortgage or be foreclosed.

The case of Gihon v. Belleville White Lead Co. 8 Halst. Ch. 581, is relied on in support of the motion. In that case the complainant, who held a subsequent lien, stated the existence of the prior mortgages, but did not admit such priority. I think this fact makes a material difference. I am quite certain that no court would make a decree against a party to a suit, whatever the prayer might be, if the complainant distinctly stated that such party had a just claim and that such claim was entitled to priority, as has been most clearly done in the case before me.

It is also to be noticed that in that case the holder of the prior mortgages came in and demurred, while in this case the holder of the lien which is alleged to be subsequent makes the motion, and in his argument claims the same benefit as though he were the first mortgagee.

N. J.

This I think he is not entitled to do. But as has been intimated there is the prayer for general relief, which in our practice is broad enough to protect or save the rights of all the parties so far as they are stated in the bill.

The motion must be denied, with costs.

Fannie C. FISHER

v.
James A. FISHER.

A will contained the following: "I give, devise and bequeath to my beloved wife all my estate, both real and personal, to her, her heirs and assigns, to have and to hold the same to her, her heirs and assigns forever; in trust, nevertheless, that she shall only have and hold the same for her benefit during her natural life as trustee, for my child or children; and, in case of her death, then all shall go to my child or children, to be divided between them, share and share alike; and this trust is to be continued, if necessary, to her executors or administrators." The testator left one child, a minor, and real estate. Held:
(a) That the devise to the widow was in fee, in trust for her own benefit for life, with remainder to the child;
(b) That whether she has power to sell the real estate or not depends upon the necessities of the trust and, were she to sell, the purchaser would take the property with notice of the trust.

(Decided ——— 1886.)

BILL for the construction of a will. On final hearing.

Mr. R. E. Chetwood, for complainant.

Runyon, Chancellor, delivered the following opinion:

The bill seeks construction of the will of James W. Fisher, deceased. After directing payment of his debts and funeral expenses, the testator provided as follows:

"I give, devise and bequeath to my beloved wife all my estate, both real and personal, to her, her heirs and assigns, to have and to hold the same to her, her heirs and assigns forever; in trust, nevertheless, that she shall only have and hold the same for her benefit during her natural life, as trustee for my child or children; and, in case of her death, then all shall go to my child or children, to be divided between them, share and share alike; and this trust is to be continued, if necessary, to her executors or administrators. This will is to devise all estate in possession, reversion or expectancy."

He then appointed his wife and his friend, Robert E. Chetwood, executors. The latter renounced; the former proved the will. The testator left but one child, the defendant, a minor under fourteen years of age. He left real estate; and the object of this suit is to get the decree of this court declaring what the estate of the widow is in the real estate under the gift to her in the section above quoted, and whether she has power to sell the real estate. The devise is to her in fee, but in trust for her own benefit for life, with remainder to the child; that is, she has the legal estate in fee and an equitable estate for life only, and the child has an equitable remainder in fee.

Although the gift is by its terms "for her benefit during her natural life as trustee for," the testator's "child or children," it is obvious that the testator did not intend, by the words "as trustee for my child or children," to grant or restrict the beneficial use of the property to the children during the widow's lifetime; for that would not have been for her benefit, but for the benefit of the child or children. What he meant was that she was to have the beneficial use of the property for life only, at the same time holding the property in trust for his child or children, who were to be entitled to it at her death. By the words "in case of her death," he meant upon her decease. It is quite clear, on the authority of the adjudged cases also, that the beneficial interest of the widow, under the devise, is an estate for life. Theob. Wills. 200-203; Wallace v. Dold, 3 Leigh, 258.

The will vests in the widow the legal estate in fee, by technical words. But whether she has power to sell the real estate or not depends, notwithstanding that fact, upon the necessities of the trust. The testator does not appear to have contemplated a sale of the property, for he gives it to her in trust, to have and to hold it for her benefit during her natural life, as trustee for his child or children; and on her death it is to go to the child or children.

The general rule is that whether there are words of inheritance or not in the gift, the trustee will take an estate adequate to the execution of the trust, and no more nor less. Perry, Trusts, § 320.

Were the trustee to sell, the purchaser would take the property with notice of the trust. Her title being derived from the will, the purchaser would be chargeable with notice of the trust from that instrument.

Phoebe S. DROST

v.

Calvin CORLE, Exr.

Where a husband received money and a note belonging to his wife upon an express agreement between her and him that he would hold them in trust for her, but which upon his death went into his estate, the widow has no remedy at law against the estate of her late husband to recover them. She has a remedy in equity alone.

(Decided ——— 1888.)

ON demurrer to bill. Overruled.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. John Schomp, for demurrant.

Messrs. A. Dixon and J. L. Griggs, for complainant:

In a doubtful case the court will not decide the question raised by demurrer to the bill, but will overrule the demurrer.

Brown v. Edwards, 2 Ves. 243; Mortimer v. Hartly, 3 DeG. & Sm. 321; Evans v. Evans, 620

18 Jur. 666; Dickinson, Ch. Prec. 163, note 6.

Where a demurrer is frivolous or intended for delay it should be overruled.

Rev. title, Chancery, p. 108, § 26.

Where a demurrer is too extensive it should be overruled.

Lindeley v. Personette, 8 Stew. 355; Vail v. Errs. v. Cent. R. R. of N. J. 8 C. E. Green, 466.

At common law the chose in action of a married woman remained hers until reduced to possession by the husband. Reduction to possession is a matter of intention by the husband.

Stall v. Fulton, 1 Vroom, 430.

Courts of equity apply the Statute of Limitations by analogy.

Horner v. Webster, 4 Vroom, 387, 406.

An action cannot be maintained at law by the wife against her husband's representatives, for money received by him in his lifetime, as so much money had and received for her use. Id.; Gould v. Gould, 8 Stew. 37.

Her remedy is a bill in equity for an accounting.

Horner v. Webster, supra; Black v. Black, 3 Stew. 215, 226; Vreeland v. Schoonmaker, 1 C. E. Green, 512, 522; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 1372, 1373; 2 Kent. Com. 164.

When a husband receives money from his wife during coverture, with the understanding that he was to hold it for her, his estate must account in equity at the suit of the widow.

Gray v. Gray, 12 Stew. 511; Treash v. Wirtz, 7 Stew. 124; Middaugh v. Trimmer, 7 Stew. 82; Vreeland v. Schoonmaker, 1 C. E. Green, 512; Clauson v. Riley, 7 Stew. 348; Greiner v. Greiner, 8 Stew. 134, 140; Personette v. Personette, 8 Stew. 472.

Reduction to possession, with the wife's consent, for the purpose of reinvestment, does not vest title in husband.

Vreeland v. Schoonmaker, supra.

Where title by gift of wife is set up, the gift must be shown to have been free and voluntary.

Black v. Black, 3 Stew. 215, 219; Clancy, Mar. Wom. 347.

Runyon, Chancellor, delivered the opinion of the court:

This suit is brought by a widow against the estate of her late husband. The bill states that the marriage took place in 1864, and the husband died in 1885; that in 1864 the wife received from her brother, for an indebtedness from him to her, $1,500, part of it ($1,000) by the note of one Abraham C. Whitenack, to her brother's order and by him indorsed, and the balance ($500) in cash; that the note was delivered and the money paid to her husband, who received them for her upon an express agreement between her and him that he would hold them in trust for her; that he subsequently exchanged the note for another one made by Whitenack for the same amount but payable to his (the husband's) order; that he invested the $500, and received the interest on both sums, from the time he received the note and cash from her brother up to the time of his death, and invested it; and that the $1,000 note given by Whitenack to him was, after his death, appraised as part of his estate, as were also the $500.

The ground of demurrer is that the complainant has an adequate remedy at law. It is very clear that she has no remedy at law, but has a remedy in this court alone. Horner v. Webster, 4 Vroom, 387; Gray v. Gray, 12 Stew. 511; Tresch v. Wirtz, 7 Stew. 124.

The demurrer will be overruled as frivolous.

Emma I. TOFFEY

v.

William ATCHESON.

*1. The first section of the Statute of 1880, P. L. p. 255, declaring that no decree for deficiency shall be made in a foreclosure suit, is valid.

2. Notwithstanding the constitutional provision, that the Legislature shall not pass any law depriving a party of any remedy for enforcing a contract which existed when the contract was made, it is competent for the Legislature to change the practice of the courts; and any legislation which merely affects the pursuit of remedies for enforcing contracts is not within the constitutional prohibition.

(Decided December 6, 1886.)

ON demurrer to bill in equity to foreclose a mortgage. Sustained.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Vice Chancellor.

Mr. W. P. Douglass, for demurrant:

The first section of the Act of 1880, P. L. 1880, p. 255, provides that "In all proceedings to foreclose mortgages hereafter commenced, no decree shall be rendered therein for any balance of money which may be due complainant, over and above proceeds of the sale or sales of the mortgaged property; and no execution shall issue for the collection of such balance under such foreclosure proceedings."

This abolishes decrees for deficiency in foreclosure suits in this State.

Newark Sav. Inst. v. Forman, 6 Stew. 436.

But the complainant is not thereby deprived of any remedy which he might have had at the time of making the contract. He may proceed in equity by separate bill, if a deficiency is subsequently ascertained to exist.

Allen v. Allen, 7 Stew. 493.

The fact that the amended second and third sections of the Act of 1880 (amended by Act of 1881, p. 184) have been declared unconstitutional does not make the first section obnoxious to the same charge. It can stand alone, and as it stands merely regulates but does not destroy the remedy.

The court will give effect to that part of a statute which is not obnoxious to the Constitution.

The opinion of Vice Chancellor Dodd in Allen v. Allen was adopted by Vice Chancellor Bird in Chancellor v. Naphagen, affirmed by the Court of Errors and Appeal, in 14 Stew. 369, 2 Cent. Rep. 209.

Mr. M. T. Newbold, for complainant.

*Head notes by VAN FLEET, V. C.

Van Fleet, V. C., delivered the following opinion:

This is a foreclosure suit. The complainant, in addition to the ordinary decree condemning the mortgaged premises to sale, asks that a decree be made adjudging that the defendant is liable for any deficiency which may exist, in case the mortgaged premises shall be sold for a sum less than the amount due on her mortgage. Her mortgage was made in 1869.

During the same year the mortgagor sold the mortgaged premises to the defendant; and by the deed by which they were conveyed to him the defendant assumed the payment of the complainant's mortgage, and thereby, as between the mortgagor and himself, became the principal debtor, and as such stood bound to discharge the mortgage debt in exoneration of the mortgagor.

These facts, according to the former practice of the court, would unquestionably be sufficient to entitle the complainant to the decree she asks. Klapworth v. Dressler, 2 Beas. 32; Crowell v. Currier, 12 C. E. Green, 152; S. C. on appeal, Id. 650.

But a statute was passed in 1880 which declares that in all proceedings to foreclose mortgages, commenced after it takes effect, no decree for deficiency shall be made. P. L. p. 255.

If this statute is valid, it is clear that no such decree as the complainant asks can be made. The complainant, however, disputes the validity of this statute, her insistence being that it is void under that provision of our Constitution which declares that the Legislature shall not pass any law impairing the obligation of contracts, or depriving a party of any remedy for enforcing a contract which existed when the contract was made. Const. art. IV, § 7, p. 3.

This objection is not new. It has been made twice before. First in Newark Savings Institution v. Forman, 6 Stew. 436, where the chancellor held that, although the statute prohibits the entry of a decree for deficiency, in a suit to foreclose a mortgage, on a purely legal liability (as, for example, against the obligor making the bond accompanying the mortgage, or against a guarantor of the mortgage debt), and thus takes away the complainant's equitable remedy, it was nevertheless valid, for it does not deprive the complainant of his legal remedy. The statute leaves that in full vigor, and it was held to be a valid exercise of legislative power for the Legislature (where both a legal and equitable remedy exists for the same cause of action) to abolish the equitable remedy, provided the legal remedy is left in full force, and provided also that in taking the equitable remedy away, the suitor is deprived of no right of recourse, to either person or property, for the collection of his debt which his remedy in equity gives him and his remedy at law does not.

And next in Allen v. Allen, 7 Stew. 493, where, on a precisely similar state of facts with that existing in the case under consideration, Vice Chancellor Dodd held that the statute was valid. The ground on which he put his judgment was that the statute simply regulates the remedy but does not destroy it or take it away.

By the uniform course of decision of the question as to how far legislative power is restrained by this provision of the Constitution it has been held that it is entirely competent for the Legislature to change the practice of the courts, and that any legislation which merely effects the pursuit of remedies for enforcing existing contracts is not within the prohibition of this provision. Potts v. New Jersey Arms etc. Co. 2 C. E. Green, 395; Rader v. Road District, 7 Vroom, 278; Newark Savings Institution v. Forman, supra.

All that this statute attempts to do is to prescribe a new rule of practice. By the practice inaugurated by the court in Klapicorth v. Dressler, supra, it was made competent for a complainant in a foreclosure suit (where the grantee of his mortgagor had bound himself to pay the mortgage debt, and thus made himself the principal in respect to such debt and so liable over to the mortgagor for deficiency, in case the mortgaged premises were not sold for a sum sufficient to discharge the mortgage debt) to have the question of such person's liability for deficiency decided in that suit, before it was known whether there would be a deficiency or not, and also before any right of action for deficiency had accrued.

This course of practice, while appearing somewhat incongruous, inasmuch as it put it in the power of a complainant to compel a defendant to litigate the question whether he was liable or not, before the fact on which his liability depended had occurred, was nevertheless highly advantageous to the defendant. It placed him in a position where he could know, before the sale of the mortgaged premises, just what his liability was; and he was thus afforded an opportunity, before the sale of the mortgaged premises, to adopt such measures as might be necessary for his protection. The statute changes this course of practice. It does not take away a mortgaged right to a decree for deficiency that remains in full force, but it does declare that hereafter he shall not have a right to a decree adjudging that a defendant is liable for deficiency until a deficiency actually exists; in other words, that he must wait for his remedy until he has suffered a wrong. The constitutionality of the statute is, in my judgment, free from the slightest doubt.

A further objection is made. The second and third sections of this statute, as amended by an Act passed in 1881, P. L. p. 184, have been declared unconstitutional. Baldwin v. Flagg, 14 Vroom, 495; Coddington v. Exrs. of Bispham, 9 Stew. 574; Morris v. Carter, 17 Vroom, 260.

The complainant insists that the sections which have been pronounced unconstitutional are so closely connected with the main object of the action under consideration and form so essential a part of the general legislative scheme that if a part of the statute falls, the whole must go down. There is nothing in this objection. The section under consideration stands wholly independent of the other two. The two parts of the statute deal with entirely different subject matters, and stand as distinct as they would if they had been the subject of separate statutes, passed at different times. The chancellor passed upon this objection in Newark Savings Institution v. Forman, supra, and held it to be groundless.

The statute upon which the demurrer in this case is founded having been held to be valid, the demurrer must be sustained, with costs.

CAROLINE MORGAN'S EXECUTOR

v.

JOHN MORGAN'S TRUSTEE.

1. A will contained the following: "Second, I, give, devise and bequeath unto my beloved wife, Caroline Morgan, all of my household goods and furniture, also one third of the income or interest of my estate during her widowhood, in lieu of dower." Held, that "also" was equivalent to "in like manner," and that therefore the gift of the household goods and furniture was during widowhood only.
2. The widow having died before the rents for the portion of the current year up to her death became due, and it appearing that the gift thereof was intended for support,—held, that the rents should be apportioned.

(Decided ——— 1886.)

SUIT for the construction of a will. Heard on bill and answer.

The facts are stated in the conclusions filed by the Vice Chancellor.

Mr. S. P. Jones, for complainant:

The question upon which the parties differ and which the court is asked to solve, is:

"What estate did Caroline Morgan take in the household goods and furniture under the second clause of her husband's will, according to the true intent and meaning of said clause?"

The complainant claims that the estate taken was an absolute one, and that the true construction of said second clause gives to it that effect, and no other.

The justice of this claim is based upon the following propositions:

1. That the said clause, when correctly read, according to the punctuation marks therein, and the rules of grammar, vests in the said Caroline Morgan, the absolute title to said household goods and furniture.

2. That the absence of the word "use" or other word or words of limitation in connection with the devise of said furniture, forbids the supposition of any purpose or wish in the mind of the testator to convey any other interest than absolute.

3. That no mention of said furniture is made in any subsequent part of the will, nor do the terms used in the residuary clause, taken either together or separately, suggest any contemplation in the mind of the testator of this furniture becoming at any time a part of his residuary estate.

4. That the application to the devise of the furniture, of a condition attached to and making part of another gift (entirely unconnected with said furniture, both in character and enjoyment) devised in the same clause, is unreasonable, inconsistent with the obvious intent of the testator, and unwarranted by the rules of construction.

5. That there is nothing within the whole will that destroys the presumption that the true intent of the testator in regard to said furniture was that expressed in the words used in said devise according to their strict and primary acceptance; and that said words should be construed in their strict and primary sense.

We have no means of ascertaining the intention of the testator, as expressed in the second clause, except from the language of the will.

Punctuation may be regarded as a guide to the construction, when no other means of solving an ambiguity can be found.

Wigram, Wills, title, Construction, p. 29.

As to the intention as shown by said clause, when proper effect is given to the punctuation thereof, and its correct grammatical reading: the clause is composed of three separate sentences according to the punctuation: 1. "I, give, devise and bequeath unto my beloved wife Caroline Morgan all of my household goods and furniture." 2. "Also one third of all the income or interest of my estate during her widowhood." 3. "in lieu of dower."

There are two distinct gifts mentioned in the clause: one in the first sentence, and another in the second sentence.

The condition upon which the two gifts are to be taken is stated in the third sentence of said clause, viz.: "in lieu of dower."

Other than this general condition, the gift mentioned in the second sentence (or its enjoyment) is limited, viz.: "one third of the income or interest of my estate during her widowhood."

The gift mentioned in the first sentence (being of the furniture) is unrestricted, except by the general condition "in lieu of dower."

This is not a mere conjectural hypothesis of the testator's intention, but is the plain and obvious sense of the language of the clause.

"It is the duty of the court to construe the will in the light of the terms used—and give to them their legal and natural import," says the court of errors in Graydon's Exrs. v. Graydon, 10 C. E. Green, 561.

The language of the clause above quoted, is ample to vest the household goods and furniture absolutely in the widow.

In Sherman v. Wooster, 26 Iowa, 272, it was held by the court where the expression was "to my wife one half of my real estate, also all my personal property during her natural life," that the wife took one half of the real estate in fee, that the expression "during her natural life" was limited to the personality. In punctuation, etc., that case was less distinct and certain than this, although in the generality of expression exactly parallel.

See also Van Houten v. Post, 12 Stew. 51.

The presence of the word "use" or other word or words of limitation, in a devise or conveyance of a particular thing, is necessary to create a limited estate therein to restrict the title and enjoyment, or to make the estate in the same anything less than absolute and complete, unless that construction is overcome by a very clear intention to the contrary, removing all doubt derived from other parts of the instrument.

There is no gift over of said household goods and furniture, either in express words or by implication, no mention of the same being made in any subsequent part of the will. Nor do the terms used in the residuary clause, taken either together or separately, suggest any contemplation in the mind of the testator—of this furniture becoming at any time a part of his residuary estate, or make disposition of same.

Even if it were a gift for life, without any limitation over, such a bequest would be absolute.

Smith's App. 23 Pa. 9; Bromfield's Est. 8 Watts, 465; Diehl's App. 36 Pa. 120; Silk Knitters' App. 45 Pa. 365; Groves' Est. 58 Pa. 429.

The application, to the devise of the furniture, of a condition attached to and making part of another gift (in the same clause) is inconsistent with the obvious intent of the testator, and unwarranted by the rules of construction.

One of the rules of construction laid down by Jarman is that several independent devises, not grammatically connected, or united by the expression of a common purpose, must be construed separately, and without relation to each other, unless a design to connect them be very plain and apparent.

3 Jarman, Wills, p. 708, 5th Am. ed. 1881; Compton v. Compton, 9 East, 267.

The principle certainly applies to this question. Here are two entirely distinct things devised in the same clause, upon a common condition, viz.: "in lieu of dower;" the two gifts are widely different and bear no relation whatever to each other; the enjoyment of one does not in any manner affect or conflict with the enjoyment of the other; they are far removed in their character. Why, therefore, should a certain express condition attached to one apply by implication to the other of said gifts, which, if taken absolutely, disappoints no part of the will? In the absence of express words to that effect why should this result be supposed to follow? With what show of reason can such a hypothesis be demonstrated? What warrant is there for holding, on the language used, that such was the testator's intention? We see none whatever.

A testator is presumed to have an additional purpose for each additional expression.

2 Jarman, Wills, 62.

"Though a will must be construed as an entirety, yet the legal construction of one section cannot be controlled by guesses as to the intent of the testator, arising from the disposition of his property in the remaining sections."

Gulick v. Gulick's Exrs. 12 C. E. Green, 498; 2 Roper, Legacies, p. 1462.

There is nothing within the whole will that overcomes the presumption that the true intent of the testator in regard to said furniture was that expressed in the words used in said devise, according to their strict and primary acceptance.

The words used in said clause should be construed in their strict and primary sense.

A will, statute or other document, is construed according to the primary sense of the words used, except where a rule of law, the context, external circumstances, or a rule of construction, is inconsistent with such interpretation.

Wigram, Wills, title, Intention, p. 28; Cromer v. Pinckney, 3 Barb. Ch. 466; Grey v. Pearson, 6 H. L. Cas. 61.

The words, in general, are to be taken in their ordinary and grammatical sense, unless a clear intention to use them in another can be collected, and that other can be ascertained.

8 Jarm. Rules of Construction, p. 707.

To change the express and definite words of a bequest it must clearly appear that the testator did not intend what he said, and this by the provisions of the will.

Hayes' Exrs. v. Hayes, 6 C. E. Green, 267. See also Hance v. West, 3 Vroom, 233; Casper v. Walker, 6 Stew. 38.

All doubts must be resolved in favor of the testator's having said exactly what he meant, and plain, clear words, read in their ordinary sense, must always control in searching for the intention of a testator, unless repugnant to other words equally plain and clear in another part of the will.

Courter v. Stagg, 12 C. E. Green, 305; Graydon's Exrs. v. Graydon, 10 C. E. Green, 561; Hand v. Marcy, 1 Stew. 59; 1 Redf. Wills. 421, 635.

In the absence of something in the context, in the circumstances of the case, to exclude the natural import of the words of a will, the court is bound to give them effect according to their plain, grammatical sense.

Burnet v. Burnet, 3 Stew. 597.

The construction of a will depends upon the intention of the testator, to be ascertained from a full view of everything contained within "the four corners of the instrument." And the natural construction of the words will be adopted, unless there is such an impracticability of so construing them as to authorize their rejection; or such uncertainty that no effect can be given to them in that sense.

Mowatt v. Carow, 7 Paige, 828; Chambers v. Bairdsford, 18 Ves. 363, 374.

Under the intestate laws the widow would have been entitled to one third of the personal estate absolutely, and one third of the income from the real estate during her life time. In the absence of any expressed contrary intent, it must be assumed that the testator intended to give her a fair equivalent for this.

Merkel's App. 1 East. Rep. 638.

The personal estate of John Morgan is shown by the inventory to amount to $4,475.56; one third of this amount equals $1,491.85.

The value of the furniture in question, as shown by inventory and stated in defendant's answer, is $1,110.25, which is less than one third of the value of the personal property of which testator died possessed.

In view of the language of said second clause of the said will of John Morgan, read according to the grammatical sense of the words used, and the punctuation of said clause, in the absence of anything in the context of the whole will to exclude the natural import of said words, or to establish the presumption of any intent of the testator contrary to that given by the sense of said words, and in the light of the various authorities quoted and cited, which sustain that construction, the complainant respectfully submits that it is obvious that the true intent of the testator with regard to his household goods and furniture was to give the same to his wife absolutely and without condition.

Mr. P. L. Voorhees, for defendant.

Bird, V. C., filed the following conclusions:

John Morgan made his last will, providing for his funeral expenses and the payment of his debts. He then said:

"Second, I, give, devise and bequeath unto my beloved wife, Caroline Morgan, all of my household goods and furniture, also one third of the income or interest of my estate during her widowhood, in lieu of dower."

In a separate paragraph he gave the sum of $100 to the Camden City Dispensary. In another paragraph he gave to Sarah Horner $2.50 per week during her natural life, to be paid her in monthly portions. In another separate paragraph he gave all the residue and remainder of his estate, real and personal and mixed, whatsoever and wheresoever, to his trustee, among other things, to pay for the maintenance and education of his son until he arrived at the age of twenty-one years, when the balance remaining was to be paid to said son.

He appointed his wife guardian of his said son, Jonathan Burr, the defendant, trustee, and his said wife and said Burr executrix and executor of his will. The wife survived him, took possession of the household goods and furniture mentioned in the paragraph above quoted, and made her will, disposing of all her personal estate. The executor of her will claims the goods and furniture named in the paragraph above, and also the rents for that portion of the current year up to the time of her death, although not due until after her death, by the terms of the lease.

Is her executor entitled to such goods and furniture, and to such an apportionment of the rents? are the questions submitted. The complainant, who has the affirmative, relies chiefly upon the construction of the clause giving said goods and furniture. He insists that it cannot be read, with due regard to the punctuation, without concluding that the testator intended to make an absolute gift of the said goods and furniture; that it is plain, from this division of the paragraph, that the testator only intended the interest of his real estate to go to his wife during widowhood.

I am not much impressed in this case with this argument; for the use of the comma seems to have been without regard to any rule; for it will appear that he separates the "I," at the very beginning, from all the rest of the sentence, which use of the comma is similarly displayed throughout the whole instrument. I cannot understand how a principle can aid in the construction of a will when the testator wholly disregards that principle.

The testator says: "I, give, devise and bequeath my household goods and furniture, also one third of all the income to my wife during her widowhood, in lieu of dower." It seems to me that the entire gift was intended to be limited to the period of her widowhood. He gives the goods, and also the interest of his estate, and adds, "during her widowhood."

The word "also" signifies the same as "in like manner." And this view seems to be sustained by the authorities.

In 8 Vin. Abr. 214, Q. a. it is declared:

"If a man devise black acre to one in tail, and also white acre, the devisee shall have an estate tail in white acre also, for this is all one sentence, and so the words which make the limitation of the estate go to both."

In Fenny v. Ehoestace, 4 Maule & Sel. 58, it appears the testator said: "I give unto my nephew, Collyer, all that my home and premises at Pittston, in the occupation of R. Reed; I also give unto my nephew, John Collyer, all that my land in the Parishes of Riddlestone and Aubury, in the occupation of J. Tomkins, to my said nephew, John Collyer, his heirs, assigns forever." The devisee took a fee in both. The words expressing a quantity of estate were reserved till the last. In that case the punctuation is much more servicable, the two members of the sentence making the devises being separated by a semicolon.

This view is sustained in the case of Giles v. Melsom, L. R. 6 H. L. 24. "The proviso being at the end of all the devises must have a meaning applicable to all, and not be treated as if placed at the end of one, and thus made applicable to one only. See also 2 Jarm. Wills, 75; Child v. Elsworth, 2 DeG. M. & G. 679.

Richards v. Baker, 3 Atk. 321, fully sustains this view. Leeke v. Bennet, 1 Atk. 470.

Sherman v. Wooster, 26 Iowa, 272, is in conflict with the foregoing authorities. The testator said: "The residue of my estate, real and personal I give, bequeath and dispose of as follows, to wit: to my wife, one half of my real estate also all my personal property during her natural life, and, at her decease, to be equally divided between my two daughters; the one half of my real estate I bequeath to my two daughters and their heirs." It was held that the fee in the land passed by the devise, and that the words "during her natural life" were limited to the personal property. From this view Dillon, Chief Justice, dissented, and said that the wife took only a life estate in the land.

The complainant relies also upon Van Houten v. Post, 12 Stew. Eq. 51. I think nothing can be plainer or more satisfactory to the mind than the opinion of the chancellor in that case; but it does not seem to me to be in any sense like the one I am considering. In that case the testator gave nine acres of land, definitely locating it, and also personal property, "to be left to discharge my debts, and so much of the real property to discharge the remainder of my debts, if any wanting, and the remainder of my property, of what nature soever, during widowhood." It was held that the widow took the fee in the lot first named. This the testator must have intended, for he limits all the rest of the gift to the widow for life.

I conclude that the widow took only a life estate. I think the rent should be apportioned. At law this cannot be done; but it is most equitable that it should be, especially where it is plain that the gift is intended for support, although it may not so be expressed in words.

See Re Lackwanna Iron & Coal Co's Case, 10 Stew. Eq. 26; Vernon v. Vernon, 2 Bro. C. C. 659; Paget v. Gee, Amb. 198; S. C. 3 Swans. 694; Monson v. Essex, 8 L. J. Ch. 169.

I will advise a decree in accordance with these views.

Warren MARSH, Exr.,

v.

Andrew LOVE.

A testator directed his executors to convert real estate into money, "such sale or sales to be made in one year after my decease, and sooner if deemed desirable by them," and gave the proceeds—after paying legacies which were charged thereon and expenses, and after investing a specified sum to raise an income for his wife—to his sons in equal shares. Held, that the limitation of the sales to one year after the testator's death was directory merely and not of the essence of the power to sell, and, therefore, that the power could be exercised after the expiration of the limited period.
N. J.

(Decided December 9, 1886.)

BILL for specific performance. On final hearing on bill and answer. Decree for performance.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. C. Marsh, for complainant.

Mr. W. L. Hetfield, for defendant.

Runyon, Chancellor, delivered the following opinion:

This is a suit for specific performance of a written contract of sale of land in Plainfield, made between the parties, by which the complainant, surviving executor of Frazee Marsh, deceased, agreed to sell to the defendant, and the latter agreed to purchase. The defendant refuses to comply with his agreement, upon the ground that the complainant cannot convey to him a good title for the property, because, although the will confers upon the executors power of sale, it limits its exercise, as he alleges, to the period of one year after the testator's death, which took place in 1874.

The sale was made in 1886. By the will, which is dated May 22, 1869, the testator directed that his debts and funeral expenses be paid, and he then proceeded as follows: "I hereby order and direct my executors, herein-after mentioned, to invest upon good security $4,000 ($2,000 of which being now invested in stock of the First National Bank, Plainfield, New Jersey, the balance to be made up from what money I may have on hand at my decease, or from the sale of my property), the interest and income therefrom to be paid to my wife, Mary C. Marsh, half yearly, so long as she shall remain my widow."

After giving specific legacies to his wife and making specific devises of real estate to two of his sons and giving pecuniary legacies to his other four sons, he proceeded as follows: "I hereby order and direct my executors, hereinafter named, and the survivor of them, to sell and dispose of all my real and personal estate, not hereinbefore disposed of, either at public auction or private contract, whichever may be thought by them most advantageous to the interest of my estate, and to make, execute and deliver good and sufficient deeds for said real estate to the purchaser or purchasers thereof; such sale or sales to be made in one year after my decease, and sooner if deemed desirable by them; and the net proceeds arising from such sale or sales, after paying the legacies above mentioned and all expenses of settling my estate and investing the said $4,000 for the use of my said wife, as mentioned in article second, herein contained,

I give and bequeath to my six sons, Albert, Washington, Warren, Aaron, Alexander and Randolph, to be divided equally between them, share and share alike," etc. The real estate in question was not specifically devised.

When the will was made (in 1869) real estate in Plainfield was readily salable at high prices; but at the date of the testator's death (in 1874) it had greatly depreciated in salable value, and then and for several years thereafter, the executors found it impossible to make sale of the property in question, except at great sacrifice. Besides making continuous diligent effort to sell it at private sale for a fair price, they offered it for sale at public auction in 1880, and got but a single bid; and that was in their judgment far below the value of the property, and they therefore refused to sell it at that price. They and the survivor of them continued to endeavor to sell it at a fair price, but were unable to do so up to the time when the latter sold it (at public auction) to the defendant. The premises are the only remaining assets out of which to raise $2,000 of the fund to be invested for the widow.

The testator directs his executors and the survivor of them to convert absolutely his real estate not specifically devised, and gives the proceeds, after paying thereout the legacies and all expenses of settling his estate and after investing the $4,000, to his six sons in equal shares. After the death of his wife, he gives the $4,000 to them in like manner. Two thousand of the $4,000 must be raised out of the proceeds of the sale. The legacies are all charged upon the land. There is no evidence whatever of any intention to limit the exercise of the power of sale to the period of one year after the testator's decease.

The rule of construction of such powers is that the limitation is directory merely, unless it appears from the will that the testator intended that it should be of the essence of the power. Where it is merely directory the power may be exercised after the expiration of the limited period, but where the limitation is of the essence of the power, the power must be executed within the prescribed period. Perry, Trusts, § 771; Pearce v. Gardner, 10 Hare, 287; Cuff v. Hall, 1 Jur. N. S. 972; Shalter's App. 43 Pa. 83; Chasmar v. Bucken, 10 Stew. 415.

It is urged by the defendant's counsel that the language of the power in this case shows an intention to limit the exercise of it to the period of one year from the time of the testator's death. This construction is based upon the words "and sooner" in the clause of limitation. The whole clause is: "Such sale or sales to be made in one year after my decease, and sooner, if deemed desirable by them." But the words "and sooner," were evidently used to prevent the executors from construing the limitation of one year as it would have stood without those words, as postponing the sale for the year; or, in other words, as prohibiting them from selling at any time within the year.

The direction in Pearce v. Gardner was to sell with all convenient speed and within five years.

In Cuff v. Hall the trustees were authorized to postpone the sales, but not for a longer period than ten years.

In Shalter's App. the language was "so that it be done within one year after my decease." The use of the words "and sooner" does not warrant the construction for which the defendant's counsel contends.

But further; the power is coupled with a trust in which others besides the surviving executor, are interested; and, therefore, if he be derelict in the performance of his duty to sell, he may, in the interest of the other beneficiaries, be compelled by this court to sell.

There will be a decree for the specific performance by the defendant, of his contract.

IMPORTERS & TRADERS NATIONAL BANK of New York

v.

Isaac LITTELL and Wife et al.

1. In a creditor's bill the complainant is entitled to a discovery as to the consideration of a mortgage given by the debtor, and, where it is said to have been given to indemnify the sureties for him as guardian, to a discovery of the extent of liability of the sureties and of the estate held by him as guardian.
2. Whether the debtor is able to pay his debts or not is a pertinent inquiry in a creditors' bill.
3. Where the bill seeks to set aside a deed made by the debtor and his wife, for fraud, the wife is a proper party defendant.
4. A complainant in a creditor's bill may properly make everyone a party who is a participator in the fraud therein alleged. He has a right to do this for the purpose of discovery; and the defendants cannot object to the bill for multifariousness, so long as the matters contained in the bill are pertinent to the imputed fraud.

(Decided ——— — 1886.)

CREDITORS' bill. On special demurrers to bill. Overruled.

The facts and questions raised are stated in the opinion.

Mr. R. E. Chetwood, for demurrants.

Mr. W. T. Day, for complainant.

Runyon, Chancellor, delivered the following opinion:

The bill states that the defendant Isaac Littell was, on or before the first day of February, 1884, the owner in fee of seven different tracts of land described in the bill; that on or about the first day of March in that year, he was indebted to the complainant in the sum of $13,500 and upwards, for the recovery of which it then began a suit against him in the supreme court of this State, and afterwards and on or about the 6th of June, 1885, recovered a judgment against him in that court, for $14,687.85 damages and $55.97 costs; that, the judgment remaining unpaid, it issued execution June 9, 1885, against his goods and lands, which was returned wholly unsatisfied; and on or about the 17th of June, 1885, the complainant issued two other like writs, one an alias and the other a testatum, the former to the sheriff of Union, and the latter to the sheriff of Middlesex; that under the alias the sheriff of Union levied upon certain goods and chattels, but not enough to satisfy the execution; and being unable to find more, he then levied upon the first six of the tracts described in the bill; and that under the testatum the sheriff of Middlesex, being unable to find any goods to levy upon in his county, levied upon the seventh tract; that the first and second tracts described in the bill are worth about $8,000, the third about $5,000 (it is subject to a first mortgage held by Ebenezer Ludlow for $2,900), the fourth about $1,500 (it is incumbered by the taxes of ten years or more of the City of Rahway), the fifth and sixth, which are one property, about $1,500, and the seventh about $2,500 (it is subject to a first mortgage of $1,000, held by Ebenezer Ludlow); and that on or about June 25, 1894, Littell mortgaged all of the tracts to Daniel S. Scudder and Ebenezer Ludlow for $80,000, and the third, fourth and fifth tracts to Augusta Squire, trustee, for $2,000, and the first and second tracts to Adelaide Littell, by two mortgages, one for $1,675, and the other for $1,800; and that she, on the 26th of June, 1884, assigned the mortgage of $1,675 to Littell's wife, Phebe C. Littell.

The bill charges that all those mortgages were without consideration and fraudulent, and made for the purpose of hindering, delaying and defeating the complainant in the collection of its debt due from Littell. It also states that afterwards, by deed dated February 6, 1885, Littell and his wife conveyed the first and second tracts to Lewis P. Clark, for the consideration, as stated in the deed, of $6,000; that Littell, by deed dated the 11th day of the same month, conveyed the fourth tract to William Ryno, for the consideration, as stated in the deed, of $5,000; and, by deed dated the 10th of the same month, conveyed the fifth and sixth tracts to Ann E. Dunn, sister of his wife, for the consideration, according to the deed, of $2,000.

The bill charges that those deeds to Clark, Ryno and Dunn were all without consideration and fraudulent, and made to hinder, delay and defeat the complainant in the collection of its debt from Littell, and that if any money passed between the parties, on the making of those conveyances, it was by way of advance and not payment of purchase money.

The bill further states that the complainant is informed that Scudder and Ludlow, to whom the mortgage for $80,000 was given, are Littell's sureties in a guardian's bond given by him as guardian for several infant wards, and that it is pretended that that mortgage was given to secure them from loss by reason of such suretyship; and the bill prays that Littell may discover by whom and when he was appointed guardian; what are the ages and residences of the wards; what estate (showing in detail) he has in his hands as such guardian, and how it is held or invested, and in what manner and amounts it, or the income therefrom, is paid to or on account of the wards, and all other facts in reference to the management of the trust.

The bill, averring that Littell is insolvent and would not scruple, in order to defeat the complainant in the collection of its debt, to convert to his own use a part of the estate, leaving his sureties to collect any money they might be required to pay, out of the mortgage, claims that the complainant is entitled to an injunction restraining Littell from wasting or appropriating to his own use any part of the estate of the wards, and to an account from time to time in this court as to how he is fulfilling his trust, in order that the complainant's security under its judgment may be protected.

It also states that the complainant has no certain knowledge or information as to the terms of the trust, if any, under which Augusta Squire holds the mortgage given to her as trustee, or who are the cestuis que trust thereunder; that the complainant has been informed that Augusta Squire, Abel V. Shotwell, Israel Vail, Harriet Vail and Sarah Marsh claim some interest under that mortgage, and it prays discovery on that head.

It further states that Littell had, on or about the 28th of June, 1884, certain goods, which he then mortgaged to George W. Force for $1,200; and it charges that the mortgage was fraudulent, and that if not, then Force, who has suffered Littell to possess and consume part of the mortgaged property since the making of the mortgage, should be compelled to credit the value of that part upon his mortgage; and it prays a discovery on that subject.

It also states that under the alias execution the sheriff of Union levied upon the remaining goods.

The bill prays that the defendants may answer without oath, and especially that they may discover and set forth the real estate belonging to Littell. Also that Littell and his wife and Adelaide Littell, Scudder, Ludlow and Clark may make discovery as to the real estate conveyed to Clark; and that Littell, Scudder, Ludlow, Augusta Squire, Sarah Marsh, Abel V. Shotwell, Israel Vail, Harriet Vail, William Ryno and Ann E. Dunn may discover and set forth the real estate conveyed to Ryno and Dunn, as stated in the bill; what disposition has been made of it or what incumbrance put thereon; in whose possession it has been since March 1, 1884, and whether it is incumbered, and if so, how, in whose favor, by whom, and to what amount; also that they may discover whether the conveyances and mortgages mentioned in the bill were made of the real estate, and if so, for and upon what consideration, and to whom and when and by whom it was paid; and who has possessed and occupied the property and received the rents, issues and profits since such conveyances; and whether the defendants or some of them do not or did not, at some time heretofore, hold the property in trust for Littell or somebody else, and for whom; and if so, how the trusts were created or were manifested at the time of the filing of the bill, and when they were created or reduced to writing, if they have indeed been reduced to writing; and under what agreement, arrangement or understanding, express or implied, the conveyances of the lands and the mortgages were made or assigned to them, and with what intention; and what reason Littell gave to them for desiring them to take the conveyances and mortgages, and whether he is insolvent; and it prays that the defendants, or some of them, may be decreed to pay the complainant's judgment, etc., etc.

Littell demurs specially to the bill, on the ground that the complainant is not entitled to a discovery as to the estate which he holds as guardian, nor to an injunction to restrain him from wasting or appropriating his wards' estate to his own use; nor to an accounting in regard to that estate from time to time; nor to a discovery as to whether he is insolvent, because, as he insists, the fact is immaterial.

It is clear that the complainant is entitled to a discovery as to the consideration of the $80,000 mortgage given by Littell to Scudder and Ludlow. It is said to have been given merely to indemnify them as his sureties against liability for him in his performance of his duty as guardian. It is highly important to the complainant to know whether such liability, in fact, exists at all, and if so, what is the extent thereof; and to that end the discovery sought is eminently desirable and necessary.

The bill suggests that if it shall prove that the mortgagees are indeed Littell's sureties, and are secured by the mortgage against loss from his misconduct in regard to the estate of his wards, and he is insolvent, he may be induced to appropriate some part of the estate to his own use, and so, for his own advantage and to the prejudice of the complainant, throw a burden upon the mortgaged premises, which, as between it and him, they ought not to bear; and it insists that in case the validity of the mortgage shall be established, the complainant will be entitled to the protection of this court in the premises, and to an account, from time to time, of his dealings with and the condition of the trust estate or estates.

This claim of right to auxiliary equitable relief in a certain contingency, the establishment as valid of a mortgage attacked for fraud, whether such relief be by injunction or accounting, is not a ground of demurrer. The objection made to the call for an answer as to the insolvency of Littell is that the bill is based upon the assumption of his insolvency, and therefore the inquiry is irrelevant.

It may be very important for the complainant to establish the fact of Littell's insolvency at the time when he made the mortgages and conveyances which are attacked by the bill; and the complainant has a right to call for an answer upon that head in order that it may be spared the necessity of adducing proof. Reed v. Cumberland Ins. Co. 9 Stew. Eq. 393.

Whether the debtor is able to pay his debt or not is a pertinent inquiry in a creditor's bill.

Phebe C. Littell, Adelaide Littell, Daniel S. Scudder and Ebenezer Ludlow demur, upon the ground that the bill calls for an answer from them as to a transaction in which they are not shown to have taken any part or to be in any way interested, viz.: the conveyance by Littell and wife to Clark, and that it calls for an answer from them as to the real estate of Littell; also because it calls for answer from Scudder and Ludlow in reference to the real estate conveyed by Littell to Ryno and Dunn, and whether Littell is insolvent.

The ground of objection is that the matters as to which inquiry is so made are immaterial and irrelevant and are not and cannot be within the knowledge of the demurrants. Phebe C. Littell, according to the bill, joined her husband in the deed to Clark. She is a proper defendant to a suit to set aside that deed for fraud. Randolph v. Daly, 1 C. E. Green, 313.

All the matters to which objection is made by her and her codemurrants are relevant; and it is enough to say that the demurrants are proper parties to the suit and cannot object to the bill upon the ground of multifariousness, so long as the matters contained in the bill are pertinent to the imputed fraud.

A complainant in a creditors' bill may properly make everyone a party who is a participant in the fraud. He has a right to do this for the purpose of discovery. Robinson v. Davis, 8 Stock. 302; Randolph v. Daly, ubi supra; Miller v. Jamison, 9 C. E. Green, 41; Bermes v. Frick, 11 Stew. Eq. 88.

Obviously, all the answer that can be required of a defendant, as to matters which are not within his knowledge, information, remembrance or belief, is an asseveration or averment that for that reason he cannot make discovery.

The demurrers will be overruled.

Jacob H. CHAMBERLAIN et al., Complainants,
v.

ELIZABETHPORT STEAM CORDAGE CO. et al.

1. The imposition of the burden of a railroad operated by steam upon land in and constituting part of a street is a taking, for that purpose, of the property of the persons along the line of the street who own the land to its center, subject to the right of way of the public therein.
2. The land of the street cannot be lawfully taken for such use, if private, without the consent of such owners; nor can it be lawfully taken for such use, if public, without due compensation.
3. The charter of the City of Elizabeth giving power to the city council to grant the right to lay down railroad tracks in the streets, as it makes no provision for compensation to the owners of the land, does not give authority to the city to exercise the right of eminent domain.

(Decided — — 1886.)

BILL to restrain the laying of a steam railroad in a street, without the consent of or compensation to the adjoining land owners, who own to the center of the street. Relief granted.

The facts appear in the opinion.

Mr. R. V. Lindabury, for complainants.
Mr. J. Alward, for defendants.

Runyon, Chancellor, delivered the following opinion:

The bill states that the complainants are, and have been for at least three years past, the owners in fee of a lot of land at the corner of Elizabeth Avenue and Butler Street in the City of Elizabeth, on which are two houses and a barn; that the defendants have begun to build in that city a railroad for cars to be drawn by steam locomotive engines, which is to run from the defendants' land near Smith Street (which is the next street parallel to Butler Street on the southeast) through and upon Smith Street to Elizabeth Avenue; thence along and upon the avenue to Butler Street, and in front of the complainants' land, to a point about 100 feet from the corner of that street and the avenue; and that the complainants' property has a frontage on Butler Street of about 135 feet, and on Elizabeth Avenue of about 76 feet. The defendants' property is on the opposite corner of the avenue and Butler Street.

The bill alleges that if the road be constructed as proposed, it will be laid upon the land of the complainants in front of their lot in and constituting part of the street, and will do great damage to the complainants' property. The defendants, by their answer, admit that they have begun to build the road as stated in the bill, and substantially admit also that they intend, if not prevented from doing so, to complete and operate the road; the cars upon which are to be drawn by steam locomotives. They deny that the road or the operation thereof as proposed will injure the complainants' property, and they claim that they have a lawful right to lay the track and operate the road, under authority given them to do so by ordinance of the City of Elizabeth.

The complainants' land is bounded in their deeds therefor on two sides by the side lines of Elizabeth Avenue and Butler Street, respectively. By legal presumption they own the land in front of their property to the middle of the street, subject to the right of way.

The imposition of the burden of a railroad operated by steam, upon the latter land (in and constituting part of the street) is a taking of their property for that purpose, and it cannot be lawfully taken for such use, if private, without their consent. Nor can it be lawfully taken for such use, if public, without due compensation. Starr v. Camden & Atlantic R. R. Co. 4 Zab. 592; Hinchman v. Paterson Horse R. R. Co. 2 C. E. Green, 75.

The defendant Company is not a railroad company, but is a manufacturing firm called the Elizabethport Cordage Company, and the other defendants are the individuals who compose that firm. They have no authority to lay and operate the road, except that given by the city ordinance before mentioned.

In Montgomery v. Trenton, 7 Vroom, 79, the City of Trenton had given permission by ordinance to certain persons to lay for their private use a railroad track at grade across a public street. It was held that the city had no authority, under the general power in its charter to regulate streets, to make the grant. But by the charter of the City of Elizabeth the city council has power, not only to pass ordinances to regulate the streets but also to grant to corporations or persons the right to lay down railroad tracks in the streets, highways and alleys, and to regulate the running of cars thereon, provided that no such right shall ever be given by the city council until a majority of the owners of the lands in front of any such railroad, and along which the same may be intended to be run or be constructed, shall first consent, in writing, to the laying and constructing thereof, such consent to be filed in the clerk's office of the city before making the grant. P. L. of 1868 p. 119.

The defendants insist that, under that provision of the charter, the city has authority to grant the right to lay in the street the tracks of railroads to be operated by steam. But the charter makes no provision for compensation to the owners of the land upon which the railroads may be laid. Hence, it is to be presumed that the Legislature did not intend to give authority to the city to exercise the right of eminent domain. Carson v. Coleman, 3 Stock. 106; Boston & Lowell R. R. Corp. v. Salem & Lowell R. R. Co. 2 Gray, 1; Mills, Em. Dom. § 128.

The Legislature itself has no power to take private land for public use without providing for compensation. It is probable that the grant in the charter of the power to authorize the laying of railroads has reference to horse railroads merely. The complainants are entitled to the protection of this court against the unlawful taking of their property.

There will be a decree accordingly.

Charles G. ENDICOTT

v.

Mordecai T. ENDICOTT et al.

1. A will directed that testator's "entire estate be and remain the same as it now is, real, personal or mixed, including the furniture," etc., to be occupied by his wife during her life; and that at her decease the homestead, furniture, etc., should be used by testator's daughters, during life, or while unmarried. Held, that the words "the homestead" were manifestly omitted by mistake from the provision for the wife, and that it was the intention that the homestead should be occupied by her for life; that the term "furniture" embraces everything about the house that has been usually enjoyed therewith; that the provision for the wife was in lieu of dower and, accepting it, she was not entitled to the $200 exemption; and that, as life tenant, she was bound to pay taxes and make repairs, but not to insure.
2. The will also provided that the executors should invest a specified sum and pay the interest annually to testator's daughters "for their support and maintenance in keeping such home as aforesaid." Held, that it was testator's intention that this gift should take effect when the use of the homestead by the daughters should begin, and not at testator's death, and that it should cease when such use should cease; that it was a special trust and not an absolute gift, and that therefore the daughters were not entitled to the fund itself.
3. The will devised the homestead, when it should be no longer used by the daughters, "to such child or children at that time living, and their heirs and assigns forever, and the representatives of any deceased child to have the share of his or her parent." Held, that the intent was to give the property to those of testator's children who should be alive at the termination of the use by the daughters, and the issue of those of his children who should then be dead, per stirpes; and that neither the gift to the daughters nor that in remainder was vested.

4. Held also, that the right of occupation given to the daughters was intended as a personal right, and that therefore they could not rent the premises; and that, while occupying them, they were liable to pay taxes, etc., as life tenants.

(Decided — — 1886.)

BILL for construction of will, etc. On final hearing on pleadings and stipulation of counsel.

Mr. F. McGee, for complainant.

Mr. P. L. Voorhees, for defendants.

Runyon, Chancellor, delivered the following opinion:

Thomas D. Endicott, late of May's Landing, in Atlantic County, died May 28, 1884. He left a widow and four sons and five daughters. His personal estate was appraised at $31,926.29; and his real estate, including his homestead, valued at about $2,000, was of the value of about $6,000. The following are the parts of his will in respect to which a judicial construction and interpretation are sought:

"Second. It is my will, and I do order, that my entire estate be and remain the same as it now is, real, personal or mixed, including the furniture, etc., to be occupied by my beloved wife, Ann Endicott, for and during her natural life. And I further order my executors, hereinafter named, to pay over to my beloved wife, Ann Endicott, the sum of $800 per year, for each and every year so long as she lives, out of the rents, interest, issues and profits thereof.

"Third. That at the decease of my beloved wife, Ann Endicott, the homestead whereon I now reside, including the furniture, etc., to become and be used by my beloved daughters, viz.: Catharine, Elizabeth and Hannah, as and for a home of and for all or either of them as may then be unmarried; or if either or any of them marry and become widowed whilst said homestead be used or occupied as aforesaid, then to be a home for either or any of them so bereft during such widowhood.

"Fourth. It is my will, and I do hereby order and direct my said executors, hereinafter named, to place the sum of $5,000 at interest, on some good security, and to pay the interest annually over to my beloved daughters, viz.: Catharine, Elizabeth and Hannah, for their support and maintenance in keeping such home as aforesaid.

"Fifth. And when said homestead shall be no longer used or occupied as aforesaid by either or any of my beloved daughters above named, then I give and devise the same to such child or children at that time living and their heirs and assigns forever, and the representatives of any deceased child to have the share of his or her parent.

"Sixth. And my will is that any balance that may remain of the general income, rents, interest, issues and profits of my estate, not herein disposed of, it is my will the same be placed at interest on good security, or otherwise invested by my executors, as may seem to them safe and more advantageous to the estate and increase of the same.

"Seventh. But should both of my executors, hereinafter named, be removed by death, then the administrator cum testamento annexo to place said balance at interest on real security, and in no other way whatsoever invest the same."

The scheme of this will is to keep all the estate, except the homestead and furniture, invested during the life of the widow, and to pay her $800 a year for life, out of the rents, interest and income, she to have the right to occupy the homestead and use the furniture for life. At her death the homestead and furniture are to be used as a home by Catharine, Elizabeth and Hannah, if unmarried; and if any of them, having been married, shall become a widow during such occupation and use, such widow or widows is or are also to have the right to occupy the homestead and use the furniture with her or their sister or sisters. And in order to furnish the three daughters with the means of support there and keeping up the property and paying taxes upon it, $5,000 are to be invested at the testator's widow's death, and the interest is to be paid to them annually. The rest of the estate is to be kept well invested by the executors until such right of occupation shall be at an end, and then the homestead is to be divided among all of the testator's children who shall be then living and the heirs of any deceased child or children, such heirs taking per stirpes the share of the parent or parents. The property, other than the homestead and furniture and the $5,000, is to be divided among the testator's children at the death of the widow, and the $5,000 when the daughters cease to occupy the homestead.

In the first sentence of the second section of the will the words "the homestead" have manifestly been omitted by mistake. The intention was, it is clear, to provide that the homestead, including the furniture, etc., should be occupied by the widow for life.

The term "furniture" embraces everything about the house that has been usually enjoyed therewith, including plate, linen, china and pictures. 2 Jarm. Wills, R. & T. ed. 352.

The gift, in the third section, of the use of the homestead and furniture is, as already indicated, for the purpose of providing a home for Catharine, Elizabeth and Hannah, if they should be unmarried at the widow's death, or for such of them as shall then be unmarried, and also for any or either of them who having married shall have become widowed, or shall, during such occupation by the other or others of the three daughters, become widowed.

The fourth section provides that the executors shall invest $5,000 and pay the interest annually to Catharine, Elizabeth and Hannah, "for their support and maintenance in keeping such home as aforesaid." The expressed object of this provision shows that it was the intention of the testator that the gift should take effect when the use and enjoyment of the homestead and furniture by Catharine, Elizabeth and Hannah, or such of them as should be entitled thereto under the third section, should begin, and not before that time, and that it should cease when that use and enjoyment came to an end. The gift is expressly for the purpose of supporting and maintaining them in keeping the homestead as a home.

It is insisted, on behalf of Catharine, Elizabeth and Hannah, that the gift is to take effect and the enjoyment to begin at the death of the testator, and that it is, in effect, an absolute gift of $5,000 to them, and that they are entitled to it now. But the expression of the purpose and object for which the interest of the fund is given is fatal to all of those propositions. To enable Catharine, Elizabeth and Hannah, or such of them as should have the use and enjoyment of the homestead, to pay taxes, etc., during their occupation, after the death of the widow, and to assist them in supporting themselves in the homestead the testator creates and places in the hands of trustees a fund, of which the interest alone is to go to those daughters while living there. The trust is not a simple trust, where the trustee is a mere passive depositary, but it is a special one, one in which the machinery of a trustee is introduced for the execution of a purpose particularly pointed out, and the trustee is called upon to exert himself in the execution of the settlor's intention. Lewin, Trusts, 21; Cooper v. Cooper, 9 Stew. 121.

To hand over to the cestuis que trust in this case the $5,000 would defeat the testator's purpose. To effectuate his intention the fund must be invested and the interest paid over annually.

Again; it is urged that the gift of the income of the fund is unlimited, and that therefore Catharine, Elizabeth and Hannah are entitled to the fund itself. But, as has already been said, the gift is not unlimited, but is to terminate with the use and enjoyment of the homestead by the beneficiaries.

By the fifth section of the will, it is provided as follows:

"And when said homestead shall be no longer used or occupied as aforesaid by either or any of my beloved daughters above named, then I give and devise the same to such child or children at that time living, and their heirs and assigns forever; and the representatives of any deceased child to have the share of his or her parent."

Catharine, Elizabeth and Hannah insist that the gift is to them, and that it is vested. The testator, by the expression "child or children," referred to all of his children, and the word "such" was not used in the sense of "said" or "before mentioned," but with reference to the subsequent qualification of survivorship. What he meant was to give the property to those of his children who should be alive at the termination of the use and enjoyment of the homestead by Catharine, Elizabeth and Hannah, and the issue of those of his children who should then be dead, such issue to take per stirpes. Had he intended to give the property to Catharine, Elizabeth and Hannah alone, he would most probably have done so by devising it to them expressly, subject to their use and enjoyment of it as a home; and he would have said "to such of my said three daughters," etc., and not "to such child or children," etc.

It is also urged that the remainder is vested; that, although it would otherwise be held to be contingent, the presence of the word "assigns" makes it a vested remainder. The gift is to those of the children who shall be alive at the time when the use and enjoyment by Catharine, Elizabeth and Hannah shall cease, and to the issue of those who shall then have died. The words "and assigns" were used to indicate the absolute character of the estate, a fee, which the remaindermen are to take. They have no significance beyond that. Wms. Real Prop. 121; Re Walton's Est. 8 DeG. M. & G. 178. They were entirely unnecessary. The estate is a contingent estate.

By the sixth section the testator directs that any balance that may remain of the general income, rents, interest and profits of his estate, not previously disposed of in the will, be invested. The balance here mentioned is that which will remain after payment of the annuity of $800 to the widow. At her death, that annuity ceases, and then the $5,000 are to be invested; but all the rest of the estate except the homestead and furniture, will be at once distributable according to law.

Catharine, Elizabeth and Hannah insist that the gift of the use of the furniture to them is unlimited, and therefore absolute. The gift is not unlimited. The bequest of the use of the furniture is expressly to provide a home for them in the homestead. If, at the death of the widow they be all dead or all married, the provision will not take effect at all. Whenever their use of the homestead shall cease, their right to the furniture will be at an end. The homestead and the furniture are given together for the same purpose.

The question is submitted to the decision of the court, whether the widow is not entitled to dower and to the $200 exemption. It is quite clear that both of those claims are inconsistent with the provisions of the will. The testator orders that all his property of every kind shall remain as it is; that his widow shall have the use of the homestead and furniture for life, and an annuity of $800, also for life, out of the rents, interest, issues and profits of all the rest of his estate; and directs that the surplus of interest, etc., over her annuity, be invested for the benefit and increase of his estate. Besides the homestead, he owned real estate in Newton and real estate in Jersey City. The rents and profits of those properties are, by the will, with the rest of his estate except the homestead and furniture, charged with her annuity. She was put to her election between the provision made for her by the will and her dower. Colgate's Est. v. Colgate, 8 C. E. Green, 872.

The claim for the $200 exemption is, as will have been seen, in conflict with the provisions of the will. It therefore cannot be allowed. Rev. 763 § 58.

The question whether the right of occupation given to Catharine, Elizabeth and Hannah is personal, or whether they may rent the property, is also presented for decision. Whether the donee of the use and occupancy of a house is confined to a personal use, so that he is debarred from letting the property during the continuance of his interest, is a question of intention. If it appears, from the terms of the gift or the context of the will, that a personal use only was intended, the enjoyment of the gift will be confined accordingly. Ingersoll v. Ingersoll, 9 Stew. 127; Maclaren v. Stainton, 4 Jur. N. S. 199; Stone v. Parker, 29 L. J. Ch. 874; Kingman v. Kingman, 121 Mass. 249; Maack v. Nason, 21 Vt. 115.

In Ingersoll v. Ingersoll the devise was of the privilege of occupying so much of the house in which the testator then lived as the donee might need during the time she should remain his widow. It was held that her use was to be personal. And it was so held in Maack v. Nason, where the testator gave his daughter the right to live and remain in his house so long as she should remain unmarried.

In the case under adjudication, the gift was expressly for a home for the donees. This implies a personal use. The three daughters, or such of them as shall use the homestead, will be liable to pay the taxes and to bear the other burdens which the law imposes upon life tenants of real property.

The widow, as life tenant of the homestead, is bound to pay taxes and to make repairs, but she is not bound to insure.

James P. WESTERVELT, Complainant,

Ida E. VOORHIS et al.

1. By the common law the priority of liens, whether by mortgage or judgment, is governed exclusively by the date of their acquisition, the first in order of time standing first in order of rank.
2. An unregistered mortgage executed by an ancestor, although prior in date to a judgment recovered against his heir in the ancestor's lifetime, does not on the ancestor's death become void under the twenty-second section of the statute concerning mortgages.
3. A mortgage and judgment, in order to stand in the relation of being prior and subsequent to each other, must embrace or cover the same land.

(Decided December 1, 1886.)

BILL to foreclose a mortgage. On final hearing on bill and answer and facts admitted. Decree for complainant.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the Vice Chancellor.

Mr. T. C. Simonton, Jr., for complainant:

Charles H. Voorhis inherited his interest of the mortgaged premises, subject to the lien of complainant's mortgage, although it was not recorded. For the statute (Rev. 706, § 22) provides that such mortgage, as between the parties and their heirs is valid and operative.

The defendant's judgment became a lien on the interest that descended to Charles H. Voorhis at his father's death, which interest was subject to complainant's mortgage. The subsequent judgment creditor whose judgment becomes a prior lien, if the mortgage is not recorded before the entry of the judgment, is the judgment creditor of the mortgagor, not a subsequent judgment creditor of a person not then the owner of the mortgaged premises and who afterwards may become the owner as heir; for the statute prescribes that unless the mortgage is recorded or lodged for that purpose, at or before the time of the entry of the judgment, the mortgage will be void and of no effect unless such judgment creditor have notice of the mortgage. The notice must be notice at the time of the entry of the judgment.

Condit v. Wilson, 9 Stew. 370; Sharp v. Shea, 5 Stew. 65.

In this case Ida E. Voorhis, judgment creditor, could not have notice of the existence of the mortgage on land that at the time of the entry of her judgment did not belong to a judgment debtor.

The whole object of the Registration Act is to protect subsequent purchasers and incumbents against previous deeds and mortgages which are not recorded.

2 Washb. Real Prop. p. 140.

Mr. Charles H. Voorhis, for defendant, Ida E. Voorhis:

A judgment creditor need not part with anything. The phrase "for a valuable consideration" does not apply to a judgment creditor.

Condit v. Wilson, 9 Stew. 374.

That Ida E. did not become the creditor of Charles H. upon the faith or credit that he owned the lands in question can raise no equity against her.

Vreeland v. Clafin, 9 C. E. Green, 315.

"As to third persons acquiring subsequent liens on property; the record is their proper resort for information and they must be permitted to rely on it with confidence."

Halsted's Digest, 637; Rutgers v. Kingland, 3 Halst. Ch. 187; S. C. on app. Id. 658.

Ida E. is a bona fide purchaser without notice "for valuable consideration" from the apparent owner, by the record, free of the mortgage.

Rev. 1043 § 7; Sharp v. Shea, 5 Stew. 66.

"An unrecorded deed is not valid after the death of the grantor, as against one holding a recorded deed from the grantor's heir, without notice of the former deed."

Earle v. Fiske, 103 Mass. 492.

Van Fleet, V. C., delivered the following opinion;

The question to be decided in this case is whether the mortgage on which the complainant's action is founded is void or not, as against the defendant.

The complainant seeks to foreclose a mortgage made to him by Henry H. Voorhis on the third of June, 1883, to secure $1,000. The mortgage was not recorded at the time of its execution, nor for more than two years afterwards. The mortgagor died intestate January 30, 1885. On his death, the mortgaged premises descended to his four children, of whom Charles H. Voorhis was one.

The defendant Ida E. Voorhis on the 28th of December, 1884, recovered a judgment against Charles H. Voorhis in the supreme court of this State for $14,000; and his interest in the mortgaged premises was subsequently, on the 4th of June, 1885, conveyed to her in execution of a sheriff's sale made under her judgment. The complainant's mortgage was not recorded until the 19th of February, 1885. The defense is that the complainant's mortgage is void as against the judgment under which the defendant claims title to one fourth of the mortgaged premises.

By the common law and in the absence of statutory regulation the priority of liens, whether by mortgage or judgment, is governed exclusively by the date of their acquisition, the first in order of time standing first in order of rank. Unless, therefore, the common-law rights of the parties to this suit have been changed by statute, there can be no doubt that the complainant's mortgage is both valid against and prior to the defendant's judgment.

The defendant, however, insists that the complainant's mortgage is rendered a nullity, as against her judgment, by the twenty-second section of the statute concerning mortgages. This section in substance declares that every mortgage of land shall be void and of no effect against a subsequent judgment creditor not having notice thereof, unless such mortgage be recorded or lodged for that purpose, at or before the time of entering such judgment; provided, nevertheless, that such mortgage, as between the parties and their heirs, shall be valid and operative. Rev. 706.

The mortgage in question is undoubtedly valid against Charles H. Voorhis, the judgment debtor; it is made so by the express words of the statute. As heir, he could take nothing from his ancestor, until his ancestor's debts were paid. So long as the title to lands descended remains in the heir, the debts of the ancestor constitute a lien thereon. Rev. 768, § 77, Haston v. Castner, 4 Stew. 697.

And as a general rule, a judgment creditor can take nothing for the satisfaction of his debt which his debtor cannot himself sell and make a good title to as against his creditors. Speaking generally, the limit of his right as a creditor is to sell by judicial process only such property for the satisfaction of his debt as his debtor could himself sell. It must be admitted, however, that this statute has changed this rule and has given a judgment creditor, in a certain contingency, a right to sell property for the satisfaction of his debt, which his debtor could not himself sell, and to sell the same free from the lien of a prior unregistered mortgage executed thereon by his debtor. But in order to possess this right he must be a judgment creditor of the person who executed the prior unregistered mortgage, and not a judgment creditor of some person who may at some future time after entry of his judgment become the owner; by descent of the mortgaged premises.

That this is the meaning of the statute seems to me too obvious for debate. There are some things so plain that any attempt by argument to make them more explicit serves rather to obscure than to elucidate. Prior to the enactment of this statute it was possible for a dishonest man, after having mortgaged his lands for all they were worth, to procure an additional loan upon them, by falsely representing that they were unincumbered, and thus defraud the last mortgagee. The evil which needed correction consisted in this: that all prior liens, although secret and unknown, were valid and entitled to be paid according to their priority. The remedy which the statute applies is to compel a mortgagee to give notoriety to the fact that he has a lien, by requiring him to record his mortgage, under the penalty of losing his priority as against subsequent lien holders, acquiring liens in ignorance of his.

The nullification is effected by the entry of the judgment. If the prior mortgage is not recorded or lodged for that purpose, at or before the time of entering the subsequent judgment the mortgage becomes void, at once, on the entry of the judgment. But if, when the judgment is entered, the mortgaged premises are owned by one person, and the judgment is entered against another and different person, so that the judgment is not a lien on the mortgaged premises, the mortgage and judgment do not stand in the relation of successive liens, so that one can be prior to the other.

The obvious design of the statute is to protect a subsequent incumbrancer against a prior unregistered incumbrance, where both incumbrancers have liens on the same lands; but where two persons have liens against different debtors, and embracing or affecting different tracts of land, their liens stand wholly independent of each other, and neither is prior or subsequent to the other. Legislation which in such case should declare either void against the other would be both useless and absurd.

The defense, it is obvious, comes within neither the words, the spirit nor the policy of the statute, and must therefore be pronounced groundless.

The complainant is entitled to a decree.

William G. NIXON, Complainant,
v.

Benjamin R. WALTER et ux., et al.

1. A bill is not maintainable under the Act "to compel the determination of claims to real estate in certain cases, and to quiet the title to the same" (Rev. p. 1189), unless complainant is in peaceable possession of the land under a claim of ownership; but the proceeding may, if the facts warrant it, be supported as a suit quia timet, irrespective of the statute.
2. Equity will set aside, as a cloud upon title, a deed purporting to convey a part of complainant's land, being a strip of water front bounded by the high water line, where in fact the land intended to be conveyed was other and different land which, from the receding of the high water line through natural causes, has been submerged and has disappeared, and extrinsic evidence is necessary to show the fact.
3. The description in a deed "high water line" or its equivalent (here, "the beach"), is a fixed and permanent one, bounding the land conveyed by the high water line existing at the date of the deed; if the high water line subsequently recedes by natural causes, the land submerged is lost to the grantee in the deed.

4. The removal, by defendant, of sand from the strip of land the title to which complainant desires to have cleared, and payment of taxes thereon, are not evidence of possession thereof by defendant.

(Decided ——— — 1886.)

BILL to quiet title. On final hearing on pleadings and proofs. Relief granted.
Mr. S. H. Grey, for complainant.
Mr. D. J. Pancoast, for answering defendant.

Runyon, Chancellor, delivered the following opinion:

This suit is brought under the Act "to compel the determination of claims to real estate in certain cases, and to quiet the title to the same." Rev. p. 1189.

The bill alleges that the complainant, ever since the conveyance of the property in question to him, has been in peaceable possession thereof, claiming to own and owning the same in fee simple. One of the defendants has answered. She denies that the complainant is or ever has been in possession of the property, under or by virtue of his conveyance, or in any other way or manner; and she alleges that she and those under whom she claims title have had possession for over twenty years, and have been accustomed to use the property for the only purpose for which it has been or is valuable, viz.: digging and removing sand for molding and other purposes. There is no proof in the cause that the complainant is or ever has been in possession of the property.

In order to maintain a suit under the statute it is necessary that the complainant be in peaceable possession of the land under a claim of ownership. The statute was passed for the relief of a class of persons who, up to that time, had been without remedy; those who, being in peaceable possession of land of which they believed themselves to be the owners, were vexed and injured by claims of title to, or interest in or incumbrance upon it by others, or by denials of or imputations upon their title, and there was no suit pending to enforce or test the validity of such claim, or to silence such denial or clear up such doubts. Such persons had no means of removing the cloud, except under peculiar circumstances, and could not bring their title to a test.

The complainant, by the allegations of his bill, has brought himself within the provisions of the statute; but the jurisdictional averment of possession was liable to be controverted, and it was controverted and issue joined upon it. It was, thereupon, incumbent upon him to establish its truth. Not only has he not done so, but he has made no attempt whatever in that direction. His suit, therefore, cannot be maintained under the statute. But it can be supported as a suit quia timet, irrespective of the statute.

The complainant claims to be the owner of land bounded by the line of high water in Delaware Bay and Maurice River Cove. He states that the defendants claim to be the lawful owners of part thereof, viz.: a strip six rods wide, the whole length thereof, bounded on high water mark. He insists that they have no title whatever to that strip, but that the strip which was conveyed by the deeds under which they claim title, and which was between his land and high water mark, as it stood when the title to the strip, as a separate tract, originated, has been submerged by the encroachment of the waters of the bay, which have covered it entirely.

A court of equity will set aside a deed as a cloud upon title where it is invalid, and extrinsic evidence is necessary to show its invalidity; especially if such evidence be oral testimony. Here are deeds which, upon their face, convey title to part of the complainant's land, while, if the complainant is right, they in fact convey and were intended to convey other and different land which, from natural causes, has disappeared, temporarily if not permanently; and it is necessary to produce extrinsic evidence by the testimony of witnesses testifying as to their personal knowledge of the locality, derived from long observation, to show the fact—to show where the line of high water is at this time, and that it has shifted inland more than six rods since the making of the original conveyances for the strip as a separate tract under which the answering defendant claims title. It is true that if the answering defendant is in possession, the complainant might bring an action of ejectment to try the title, and so bring her claim to a legal test.

The evidence on the subject of the possession is that the answering defendant or those under whom she claims have from time to time dug and removed sand for sale from the land in question (which is a mere uninclosed and unoccupied sand bank), and have paid taxes for the property, and that she and others claiming with her under the same claim of title brought suit against some other person or persons for trespass on the property, and recovered in the action.

The removal of sand was, if the complainant was the owner of the property, a trespass merely; and the payment of tax, either irrespective of or in connection with such removal, is not evidence of possession. Other persons who made no claim of title also have taken the sand from time to time without leave or license. The witness who testifies that the answering defendant and those who claim with her, under the same claim of title, took sand, says that a good many persons trespassed upon the property and took the sand without leave.

But in my view of the case the complainant's right to maintain this suit does not depend upon the decision of the question whether he could maintain an action at law to test the defendant's claim. He does not admit, but denies, that the defendants have ever had possession. If the land is his, and they have an apparent but unreal title to it, he is entitled to relief in this court. Under such circumstances, the relief which is appropriate is such as this court can best give. What is required to relieve the complainant is a decree that the answering defendant has no title under her deeds to the land described in his deeds, to declare and establish the rights of the parties with reference to the present situation.

There can be no doubt, and indeed the fact is not denied, that the six rod strip which was the subject of the conveyance under which the answering defendant claims, has been, since the time when some of those conveyances were made, covered by the waters of the bay, by the encroachment thereof. The answering defendant claims that, notwithstanding that fact, she has title to a six rod strip answering the description, taking the present high water line as the boundary on the bay. That claim cannot be supported. The deeds under which she claims convey a strip of land by explicit boundaries, one of which was the high water line. By the term "beach," in the expression "back of the beach," was meant high water line. Trustees of East Hampton v. Kirk, 68 N. Y. 459.

Had there been accretions to the strip by imperceptible degrees, the owners of the property would have been entitled to them. On the other hand if, by encroachment of the waters of the bay, it has been and is submerged and lost, the loss fell, not on the adjoining owner, but on those who owned the land submerged.

It was held, in Scrutton v. Brown, 4 Barn. & Cress. 485, that the grantee of the shore of navigable waters does not take a fixed freehold, but one that shifts as the shore recedes or advances; but there the grant was of the shore, the land between high and low water marks; a shifting thing, not, as here, of a strip bounded by the shore.

In Cook v. McClure, 58 N. Y. 437, where a boundary line was "along the high water mark" of a pond, it was held that the line thus given was a fixed and permanent one, the line of high water at the date of the deed, and did not follow the changes of the high water mark of the pond.

In this case the six rod strip was, when it was first conveyed, a definite parcel of land. It has been covered by the waters of the bay, so that that which was the high water or beach line when the original conveyance for the strip as a separate tract under which the answering defendant derives her title was given, is now at least six rods below the present high water or beach line. Such being the fact, she has no title under her deed to any part of the land covered by the complainant's deeds.

The following is the history and derivation of the titles: April 18, 1735, Samuel Cotton located a tract of marsh by virtue of a deed of right. The tract was said to contain about 8,200 acres, and the strip was included in it. In 1764, the sheriff of Cumberland, under execution, sold and conveyed the tract to Robert Towers and John Towers. It appears that in 1768, they conveyed to Silas Parvin an undivided one third of the beach, which is in the deed described as follows: beginning at the mouth of a creek (said to be Broad Oyster Creek) next above False Egg Island Point; thence, to extend down the several courses of the bay to the mouth of Egg Island Thoroughfare; thence, along the same thoroughfare, to the mouth of a small creek or gut, nearly opposite the northeast part of Egg Island; thence up the creek or gut, ten rods from the bay; thence, to continue a course ten rods from the bay, from the side of the thoroughfare up to near the upper point of Egg Island Thoroughfare; thence, six rods wide, on the marsh on the back of the beach, and to continue the same breadth on the back of the beach, up the bay, to the creek next False Island Point, and thence down the said creek to the place of beginning; containing two hundred acres, more or less.

In 1785, Clarence Parvin, the only child and heir of Silas Parvin, who had died intestate, conveyed that third of the beach to Robert Towers, Jr. In 1787, the sheriff of Cumberland sold and conveyed that third, under execution against Robert Towers, Jr., to Robert Towers, Sr. The latter was, before that time, owner of half of the marsh and one third of the beach. By this conveyance he became the owner of two thirds of the beach.

By his will, made in 1791, he gave all his lands to his three daughters, Margaret and Elizabeth Towers and Sarah Evans. Margaret died after his death, and her two sisters inherited her share. Elizabeth subsequently devised her interest to her surviving sister, Mrs. Evans. She died intestate, and her only son and heir, Robert T. Evans, inherited from her the half of the marsh and two thirds of the beach. By his deed, made in 1845, he conveyed those interests to James Dunlap. The beach is in that deed described as in the above mentioned deed from Clarence Parvin, and the marsh is described as follows: bounded on the easterly side by Dividing Creek; on the north-west by Broad Oyster Creek; on the south-easterly by the aforesaid tract of two hundred acres and Delaware Bay, and on the northerly side by ———; containing 3,000 acres, excepting five acres sold to the United States for a lighthouse.

John Towers, Sr., by his will, made in 1778, devised his interest in the marsh and beach to his son, John Towers, Jr., and he conveyed it, in 1810, to Philip Walter, four of whose "children, grandchildren and devisees," conveyed that property to the other, Peter B. Walter, in 1833, and he conveyed, in 1846, to George Sheppard, all his right and title to a tract of marsh "beginning at a post standing on the west side of Dividing Creek, by the mouth of a small creek, being the third creek from the mouth of said Dividing Creek on the west side thereof; from thence, north-westwardly, thirty-five degrees five chains, to a post for a corner; thence, west, northerly six degrees ninety-five chains, to a post standing by Ononocan Creek; thence, down the same creek, bounding thereon, to the mouth of the thoroughfare; thence, down along the same thoroughfare, bounding therewith, to the Broad Oyster Creek; thence, down the same creek, to the bay; thence, down the bay on the several courses and distances thereof, to the mouth of Dividing Creek aforesaid; thence, up the said Dividing Creek, bounding thereon, to the beginning; containing thirty-two hundred acres, more or less."

George Sheppard, in June, 1848, conveyed his interest (one undivided half) in the marsh to James Dunlap (who already owned the other undivided half), by deed which describes the marsh as being bounded on the southeast side by a tract of land containing two hundred acres, more or less, belonging to Arthur McCarney, and also by Delaware Bay. The tract of five acres sold to the United States Government for a lighthouse was excepted. Dunlap, in July, 1848, conveyed his undivided two thirds of the beach to Arthur McCarney, and George Sheppard, in December, 1848, conveyed his third of the beach to him, so that in 1848, McCaerney became the owner of the whole of the beach. The land so conveyed is, according to the description in those deeds to McCaerney, a strip of "sand beach" six rods wide "on the back of the beach." The description is as follows: "beginning at the mouth of the creek formerly called Broad Oyster Creek, and runs thence, down Delaware Bay the several courses and distances thereof, to Egg Island Point; thence, down the point to Maurice River Cove; thence, down the cove to Oronoken Creek; thence, up said creek, six rods on the back of the beach, to Egg Island Point, and to continue the same breadth, six rods, on the back of the beach, to Broad Oyster Creek; thence, down the same creek to the beginning; containing two hundred acres, more or less." McCaerney then, in 1848, owned the strip, and Dunlap owned the marsh.

In 1850 McCaerney conveyed the beach, or six rod strip, to Benjamin R. and Washington Walter. The property is described in that deed as a sand bank or tract of land situate, etc., and is conveyed by the same description last quoted.

Washington Walter died intestate and without issue, and his brother Benjamin inherited his interest. Benjamin died intestate. His heirs at law were Benjamin R. Walter, Jr., Caroline Voorhees, Rebecca Sheppard, Emma Neal, Mary Jane Leidy, Anna R. Berry, Albert W. Nichols, Emma Larkin, Mary Morgan, Sarah James and Mary Horn. In 1878, the United States Government took, by condemnation, the title of those heirs at law to a strip six rods wide, along the shore in front of the lighthouse property at Egg Island Point. In 1854, Dunlap, who owned all the marsh, conveyed an undivided half of it to Furman L. and Lewis Mulford. Part of the description in the deed is as follows: "thence, down said creek (Broad Oyster Creek), bounding thereon, to a stake standing six rods on the back of the beach; thence, down Delaware Bay the several courses and distances thereof, six rods back of the beach, to the mouth of Ockonock (Oronoken) Creek; thence, down on the said Ockonock Creek to Maurice River Cove; thence, down said cove to the mouth of Dividing Creek; thence, up said creek to the place of beginning."

The deed states that the property described is the same which was conveyed to Dunlap by Evans and Sheppard, as before mentioned. Dunlap evidently intended to convey to the Mulfords half of all he had. In May, 1866, Dunlap and the Mulfords conveyed one fourth of their interests in the marsh to Jacob Sutton; and in May, 1867, Dunlap conveyed his remaining interest to the Mulfords. The deed to them describes the marsh, in the general description, as being bounded on the southeast by Delaware Bay; but in the particular description the fourth course runs "along the thoroughfare to Broad Oyster Creek, and thence, down the creek, to a stake standing six rods inside the beach, as per survey made by Ephraim B. Lawrence in 1849, and thence, down the bay the several courses of said survey, to the mouth of Dividing Creek; thence, up said creek, to the place of beginning." By this deed the grantors evidently intended to convey one fourth of all their interest in the whole of the marsh property.

Sutton, in 1870, conveyed his interest, the before mentioned one fourth of the marsh, to Thomas E. Fleetwood, who, in 1880, conveyed it (except about twenty acres, which he and the Mulfords had conveyed to the United States Government) to Lewis Mulford.

The Mulfords, in March, 1881, conveyed the marsh to the complainant by the same description as that contained in the deed from Dunlap to them. The deed excepts from the conveyance the land sold to the United States Government, the five acres and the twenty acres, also land conveyed to David Compton, and land conveyed to George Moore. Furman L. Mulford died March 23, 1881, the next day after the date of the before mentioned deed to the complainant. He left a will, made in 1878, by which he devised all his interest in the marsh to Lewis Mulford.

In March, 1883, Lewis Mulford, by a deed of confirmation, declaring that there was a mistake in the description of the deed from the Mulfords to the complainant, and that the grantors intended to convey all the marsh, down to high water mark in the bay, without excepting or recognizing the existence of any such beach as that described in the before mentioned deeds to McCaerney (which beach, it declared, had been washed away, and was covered by the waters of the bay), and that the mistake in bounding the marsh, in the deed of 1881, upon the strip, was caused by taking the description from a deed made when part of the strip still remained, confirmed the property to the complainant by a description bounding the land by high water mark on the bay and Maurice River Cove, from the mouth of Broad Oyster Creek to the mouth of Dividing Creek.

It will be seen that in 1768 Robert and John Towers and Silas Parvin owned the whole tract, including both marsh and beach. Each had an equal undivided third. In 1785, Clarence Parvin conveyed his interest in the strip of beach to Robert Towers, Jr., whose title thereto was conveyed, by sheriff's deed, in 1787, to Robert Towers, Sr., who was then, after the delivery of that deed to him, the owner of two thirds of the beach. He was also the owner of half the marsh. The rest of each was owned by John Towers. It was not until 1848 when Sheppard and Dunlap, respectively, conveyed to McCaerney their interests in the beach, that a conveyance of that land, or any interest therein, not accompanied by a conveyance of an interest in the marsh, was made to any one. But then, and subsequently, it was conveyed separately.

The proof is clear that the whole of the strip has been washed away and covered by the waters of the bay. There is no contrariety in the evidence. Daniel M. Loper testifies that, in his judgment, the encroachment along the beach, from Broad Oyster Creek to Oronoken Creek, within the last forty years, is three times as much as six rods. George Shropshire says that there have been more than six rods washed away around the marsh in the last twenty-five years. Thomas Hand says that from Broad Oyster Creek to Oronoken the beach has gone away more than one hundred yards. Thomas Garrison and James G. Gandy also testify to the encroachment, and William B. Trenchard, a surveyor, testifies to it according to measurement and comparison with the maps. One of the maps was made by E. B. Lawrence, a surveyor, for Dunlap, in 1849, and the other is a reduced copy of it. Mr. Trenchard says that the greatest difference between high water at this time and high water in 1849, as shown on the original map, along the whole of the shore from Broad Oyster Creek to Oronoken Creek, is eleven chains, or forty-four rods, and the least, two chains, or eight rods.

It is urged that the recognitions of the existence of the strip, in the deeds to the Mulfords, estop the complainant, who holds under them, from denying it. But it is entirely clear that there is no ground whatever for this claim. The conveyances made by Dunlap to the Mulfords and Sutton were all made after he had conveyed away his interest in the strip. The question is not whether the strip was not, at some time, conveyed, nor as to its dimensions and location when it subsisted, but whether what was conveyed still subsists.

The claim of title by adverse possession set up in the answer has not been sustained. The evidence of possession before referred to is not sufficient to establish such title. Cobb v. Davenport, 8 Vroom, 369, 385; 8 Washb. Real Prop. 140; Wheeler v. Spinola, 54 N. Y. 377.

There will be a decree declaring that the deeds under which the answering defendant claims convey no title to the land conveyed by the deeds of the Mulfords to the complainant, or any part thereof.

The complainant is entitled to costs.

Lydia G. FROST et al.,

v.

James C. DENMAN et al.

An executor who has discharged his duty with fidelity and economy, and with advantage to the estate, should not be held to have forfeited his right to commissions, merely because he had retained in hand larger balances accrued from the estate than were required to meet expenses; and, it appearing that he had not used such balances for his own private purposes, he should be charged with simple interest only, thereon.

(Decided ——— 1886.)

BILL for accounting. On exceptions to master's report, by both sides. Complainants' exceptions overruled; defendants' exceptions allowed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Joseph Alward, for complainants.

Mr. P. H. Gilhooly, for defendants:

A direct and positive answer to a bill responsive to the charges must prevail, unless overcome by two witnesses, or one witness supported by circumstances equivalent to evidence.

Brown v. Bulkley, 1 McCart. 294; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. 1528.

The complainant calling upon the defendant to answer an allegation of fact admits the answer to be evidence of the fact.

N. J.

Brown v. Bulkley and 2 Story, supra; Price v. Lytton, 3 Russ. 206.

He thereby makes the defendant his own witness.

Wilson's Exrs. v. Cobb's Exrs. 1 Stew. 177, 180; Bird v. Styles, 3 C. E. Green, 297.

The uncorroborated testimony of the complainant is insufficient to overcome a responsive answer.

DeHart v. Baird, 4 C. E. Green, 423; Calkins v. Landis, 6 C. E. Green, 183; Stearns v. Stearns, 8 C. E. Green, 167; Zane v. Cawley, 6 C. E. Green, 180.

Commissions of administrator are allowed when earned.

Re Barclow, 2 Stew. 284; Mathis v. Mathis, 8 Harr. (N. J.) 59.

Where yearly accounts are required to be rendered, and interest charged on balance, full commissions should be allowed on each year's receipts and disbursements.

Hancox v. Meeker, 95 N. Y. 589; Vanderheyden v. Vanderheyden, 2 Paige, 287; Halsey v. Van Amringe, 6 Paige, 17; Re Atkinson, Id. 216; Re Kellogg, 7 Paige, 266; Wheelwright v. Wheelwright, 2 Redf. 501; Redf. Surr. 704; Dayton, Surrogates, 535.

No interest will be charged where the administrator pays over the funds received within a reasonable time.

Lynn's App. 31 Pa. 44.

In taking an account the trust funds received during the year are unproductive, until the close of the year.

Pettus v. Clawson, 4 Rich. Eq. 92; Clarkson v. De Peyster, 2 Wend. 78; Luken's App. 47 Pa. 356; Boynton v. Dyer, 18 Pick. 1; 8 Wms. Exrs. *p. 1844, note a.

An administrator is to be charged with interest on the amount remaining after deducting commissions.

Callaghan v. Hall, 1 Serg. & R. 241; Shepherd's Exr. v. Stark, 3 Munt. (Va.) 41; Burwell's Exrs. v. Anderson's Admrs. 3 Leigh, 348.

Commissions to accountant are due at the time at which the services for which they are allowed are performed.

Parker's Est. 64 Pa. 307; Davis' App. 23 Pa. 206.

Respecting the allowance of commissions to executors and administrators, see Pomeroy v. Mills, 10 Stew. 578; Aldridge v. McClelland, 9 Stew. 288; Reynolds v. Jackson, 9 Stew. 515; Re Wolfe, 7 Stew. 223; Orphan's Court Act, § 113; Tucker v. Tucker, 6 Stew. 235; Wilson v. Staats, 6 Stew. 524; Squier v. Squier, 3 Stew. 627; Re Barclow, 2 Stew. 282; S. C. 9 Stew. 611; McKnight's Exrs. v. Walsh, 8 C. E. Green, 186; S. C. 9 C. E. Green, 498; Re Marcy, 9 C. E. Green, 451; Lathrop v. Smalley's Exr. 8 C. E. Green, 192; Fowler v. Colt, 7 C. E. Green, 44; Frey v. Frey's Admr. 2 C. E. Green, 71.

There is a right of appeal on questions of commission.

Anderson v. Berry, 2 McCart. 232.

The supreme court cannot alter commissions after final account has been passed.

Post v. Stevens, 2 Beas. 293.

No interest is to be allowed on balances during pendency of the account in the courts.

Hoopes v. Brinton, 8 Watts, 78; Wendell v. French, 19 N. H. 205; Duncan v. Dent, 5 Rich. Eq. 7.

Unless use is made of the money during the interval.

Stearns v. Brown, 1 Pick. 530.

Simple interest is allowed on balances.

Hill, Trusts, 548, note, see 874.

As to when interest will be allowed, see:

Mount v. Van Ness, 8 Stew. 118; Re Doremus, 6 Stew. 234; Aldridge v. McClelland, 9 Stew. 288; Re Barcelow, 9 Stew. 611; Van Houten v. Post, 5 Stew. 709; Holcombe v. Holcombe, 2 Beas. 413; King v. Berry, 2 Green, Ch. 261; Schouler, Exrs. § 538; Id. note 2; Voorhees v. Stoothoff, 6 Halst. 192; Mathis v. Mathis, 3 Harr. (N. J.) 61.

Compound interest allowed, when.

Perrine v. Petty, 7 Stew. 194; Salisbury v. Colt, 12 C. E. Green, 492, 495, affirming Fowle v. Colt, 10 C. E. Green, 202, and Fowle v. Colt, 7 C. E. Green, 44; McKnight's Exrs. v. Walsh, 9 C. E. Green, 498; Barney v. Saunders, 16 How. 542 (57 U. S. bk. 14, L. ed. 1051); Lathrop v. Smalley's Exrs. 8 C. E. Green, 192; Frey v. Adms. of Frey, 2 C. E. Green, 71; Craig v. Manning, 4 Halst. Ch. 813; Coddington v. Stone, 9 Stew. 362.

Pending an accounting simple interest only will be charged.

Van Houten v. Post, 5 Stew. 709; Re Mott, 11 C. E. Green, 509.

An executor is not charged with interest on a balance retained under a fair apprehension of his right to it.

8 Wms. Exrs. 1845; Forward v. Forward, 6 Allen, 494.

Executors may retain money to meet contingencies.

Lloyd's Estate, 82 Pa. 143; Pace v. Burton, 1 McCart. 247; Sprail v. Cannon, 2 Devereaux & B. (N. C.) 400; Doster v. Arnold, 60 Ga. 816.

Ranyon, Chancellor, delivered the following opinion:

The bill was filed against James C. Denman, surviving executor of Major Denman, deceased, for an account, etc. Mr. Denman answered; and upon bill and answer an order of reference to a master to take the account was entered. To the master's report both sides have excepted; the complainants, to the allowance of commissions to the executor, and the executor's representative (the executor died after the taking of the account had been begun), to the charge of compound interest made against the executor, on the balances in his hands, from 1870 to 1878. He claims also that if the account be taken with annual rests, the executor should be credited in each year with his commissions earned in the year.

The executor appears to have discharged his duty with fidelity and economy, and with much advantage to the estate. The master reports that the executor had the management and disposal of a large number of building lots; that he managed the estate with care and prudence, and negotiated advantageous sales; that there were over ninety sales and about fifty mortgages taken for purchase money; that there are no charges for commissions to agents for negotiating those sales, and that the executor collected rents and interest and paid taxes and assessments (the property was in the City of Elizabeth) and other bills, and made payments to the devisees from time to time; the whole amount of payments and allowances being nearly $74,000. The master thinks that the executor ought to have commissions.

The executor has had charge of the estate since 1854, when his coexecutor (who up to the time of his death had sole charge of it) died. Nor does the executor appear to have done anything in his administration to forfeit his right or claim to commissions. None of the charges made against him in the bill have been established. The complainants insist that he has not kept proper books of account. He has kept books of his transactions, which although kept in a simple way are intelligible and are sufficient to show his dealings, and he has made a full account. The balances, from 1870, were larger than he ought to have kept in hand. After retaining enough to meet the charges (taxes, assessments, etc.) against the property, he should either have distributed the rest among the devisees or should have invested it.

But there is no evidence that he used the money for his own private purposes. The bill charges that he has so used it, and it calls for an answer on oath. He has answered explicitly and positively that he has not done so. Not only is the answer not overcome by proof, but there is no evidence whatever to the contrary. The executor should, under the circumstances, pay simple interest only (King v. Berry, 2 Green, Ch. 261) on yearly balances after 1870, after deducting a proper sum ($1,500 a year would be a reasonable amount) as a fund to meet expenses.

The exceptions of the complainants will be overruled, with costs, and those of the other side will be allowed, with costs.

SUPREME COURT.

George M. TROUTMAN, Plff. in Err.,
v.

STATE of New Jersey.

The agent of the owner renting a house knowingly for the purpose of a brothel may be indicted as the keeper of such house.

(Decided November 17, 1886.)

ERROR to the Monmouth Quarter Sessions, to review a conviction on an indictment for keeping a disorderly house. Affirmed.

The facts and questions presented are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. George C. Beekman and Henry G. Clayton, for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Charles Haight, Prosecutor of Pleas, and John W. Swartz, for the State:

An agent letting a house to be kept as a bawdy house is, equally with the one who keeps it, liable to indictment.

State v. Williams, 1 Vroom, 105.

Letting a house to a woman of ill fame, knowing her to be such, is an indictable offense at common law.

See Commonwealth v. Harrington, 3 Pick. 26; Brooks v. State, 2 Yerg. 482.

*Head note by BEASLEY, Ch. J.

The procurer is guilty.

1 Bish. Crim. Law, § 886.

The prosecution may prove the reputation of the keeper of the house, and of the inmates, for the purpose of assisting to establish the character of the house.

2 Whart. Crim. L. 8th ed. §§ 1451, 1452; Whart. Crim. Ev. 8th ed. § 261; O'Brien v. People, 28 Mich. 213; State v. Smith, 28 Minn. 193.

Beasley, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant was indicted in the usual form, as the keeper of a disorderly house. It appeared upon the trial that he was the agent of the landlord of the premises; and, as has been found by the jury, that "having the control and renting" of such premises he had, at the time stated, rented the same with the knowledge that the house was to be kept as a house of prostitution, and that it was so kept by the tenant.

The first objection urged against the course of proceedings, which resulted in a conviction, was that a person who rents a house as the representative of the owner does not become in any sense the keeper of such house and cannot be indicted as such. But if this argument be tenable, neither is the landlord himself, with the object to promote social disorder, indictable in that character. In one sense he is no more the keeper of the house so demised than the agent is who procured the tenant. But in the view of the criminal law all persons who assist, aid or contribute to the erection of a public nuisance are principals and may be prosecuted as such.

It is obvious that the agent must stand on the same footing as the owner, for if he has knowledge of the unlawful use to be made of the property, and the owner is in ignorance, he, the agent, and the tenant would alone be the breakers of the law. A case in point is that of People v. Frick, 4 Denio, 129, the indictment being against the landlord as the keeper of the house.

The court said: "In this case the owner of the property, as well as the woman, has been directly charged with keeping the house. The indictment is right; and we think the instructions given to the jury were substantially correct. The man who demises a house to be kept as a disorderly house and which is kept with his knowledge * * * may well be called the keeper of the house and be punished as such."

The rule of law thus stated was cited with approval in the case of State v. Williams, 1 Vroom, 106, and in this latter case it is assumed that the owner may be charged as the keeper of the house. The principle underlying these decisions is that the owner contributes by his act to the production of the nuisance; and as there are no accessories in misdemeanors he thereby becomes a principal, and may be indicted in that character. It is plain that the agent of the owner stands within the scope of the principle. The charge of the judge upon this matter was, therefore, unobjectionable.

The next objection to the conduct of the cause was that the State was permitted to prove that the house in question had been kept during two years previous to the renting in question, by the tenant to whom the defendant made the demise, as a house of prostitution, and that the defendant on sundry occasions had been there during such prior years. This evidence was admitted in order to prove the defendant's scienter, and it was proper for that purpose.

If the defendant was aware that the person to whom he, as agent, let the premises had for the two antecedent years acted the part of a prostitute and converted the house into a brothel, there could be no doubt, with respect to his knowledge, that by continuing such tenancy he was aiding in the perpetuation of a nuisance. The state of the defendant's mind when he made the demise in question could hardly be proved, except by showing that he was conversant with the antecedents of the tenant as connected with the premises. The evidence followed the usual line and was altogether legal.

The judgment should be affirmed.

STATE, Oliver DUNSTER, Prosecutor,
v.

Calvin D. SMITH, Collector of Bernards Township, Somerset County.

*1. The power of a township committee to assign limits and divisions of the highways, under section 37 of the Road Act, could not be exercised in any township where the overseer was elected by the inhabitants of the road district, after such an election, during that year.

2. It is proper for a township committee to refuse to recognize a claim for work done by a road overseer in the absence of or in excess of an appropriation to his district.

(Decided December 1, 1886.)

ON certiorari bringing up an assessment for taxes against the prosecutor, and the proceedings thereon. Affirmed.

The facts and questions presented are stated in the opinion.

Argued before Scudder and Reed, JJ.

Mr. John A. Frech, for prosecutor.

Mr. Alvah A. Clark, for defendant.

Reed, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The question argued in the briefs of counsel is whether the prosecutor, who is the overseer of a road district in the Township of Bernards in the County of Somerset, was entitled to an allowance of $31.50 from his tax bill for the year 1888, on account of his having worked out that amount upon the roads in his district.

He was assessed for the year 1882 the sum of $224.64 of which $83.56 was for roads. He claims that he had done, as overseer of District No. 8 in the said township, work amounting to $31.50 and that he was entitled to an allowance of that amount for his tax bill; which allowance was refused by the township committee. The committee refused to recognize an expenditure in excess of $18. He paid the remainder of the tax, and now claims that this court should exert some judicial action to remedy an alleged error in not allowing the additional $18.50 of his claim. He grounds his claim to the entire amount upon the fact that he was elected an overseer of Road District No. 3, at a meeting of the voters of that district held in the spring of 1883.

*Head notes by REED, J.

By the provisions of an Act of 1861 (P. L. 1861, p. 156) it was provided that the overseers of the highways in certain townships, including Bernards, should be elected by the legal voters of the several districts as they may be arranged from time to time by the township committee. The Act provided for the posting of notices and for the time at which said meeting should be held, namely: the Saturday next previous to the annual town meetings in said townships.

By an Act (P. L. 1879, p. 178) the time for holding such election was changed to Friday next preceding the second Tuesday of April.

By an Act (P. L. 1880, p. 56) the time was changed to Thursday next succeeding the regular annual meeting which by the Township Act (Rev. p. 1202, § 50) is held on the second Tuesday in March. It provides that the existing overseer shall set up two notices in two public places in the road district, five days before the day of the meeting; and in case of a failure to give such notice, then the township committee is to appoint the overseer.

There is some evidence that the prosecutor was elected in 1883 an overseer of District No. 3. He took upon himself the unquestioned execution of the office and I shall regard his incumbency of that office as a recognized fact in this case. The township committee on March 28, 1883, changed the limits of District No. 3, by cutting the territory over which it ran into two districts; or, speaking more accurately, by carving another district out of the old territory, which new district they numbered 56. At the same meeting the committee apportioned to the new district No. 3 the sum of $46, and to the new district No. 56 the sum of $41.

The prosecutor, however, proceeded as if no change had been made. He says that he worked the roads within the whole of the old territory, and did himself and hired work done to the amount of $80, and should have been credited with that amount.

His contention is that after he was elected, there was no power in the township committee to make any alteration in his district, and also that he had no notice of such change.

The township committee has the power to assign the limits and divisions of the highways within the townships. Rev. p. 1002, § 37.

Unless the Acts which provide for the election of overseers in the Township of Bernards, or by implication repealed the provisions for the assignment of districts, the latter power existed at the time it was exercised. I say unless section 37 in this respect was repealed by implication, for there are no express words of repeal in the subsequent Acts. Such implied repeal must be gathered from the impolicy of changing the limits of a district in which an overseer has been elected by the inhabitants of the district.

This question has no importance beyond the solution of the rights of the parties in the present case, for the matter has since then been regulated by the Act of 1885, p. 12, which provides for the making of the assignment in January or February of any year to take effect on or before the first of the following March.

I am of the opinion that the power to alter the limits of a district was not abrogated by the fact that the office of overseer was filled by the votes of the inhabitants of a district, instead of the votes of the inhabitants of the township. But I think that the power of the committee to make such alteration was at an end whenever under the former law it had made an assignment of an overseer to a particular district or under the new system a person had been elected for any district.

It could never have been the intention of the Legislature to provide that the people of the district should select their officer, and yet leave in the hands of the township committee the power to nullify the selection by stripping such officer of half his territory or by adding to it other territory peopled by voters who had had no voice in his selection. The result in either instance would be that the overseer would work a district of which he had been elected overseer by voters other than the legal voters of the district.

I conclude, therefore, that the attempt to divide his district was nugatory.

But there is another difficulty which confronts the prosecutor.

No apportionment in excess of $46 was made to his district; nor do I think he stands in a position to claim both appropriations. He knew of the action of the committee in regard to the change of the district. The evidence taken in the cause satisfies me that he received the notice of the attempted change. Under the circumstances, the appropriation in two sums to two districts supposedly existing was quite different from an appropriation of a single sum.

The right of an overseer to rely upon an appropriation by a committee rests upon a clearly proved act of the committee setting apart the amount for the specific purpose. The overseer cannot rely upon the fact that there have been previous appropriations of a certain amount and upon the probability that such amount will not be changed. He is bound to know the exact sum appropriated to his district for the then present year. If he chooses to expend money in ignorance of whether there is any appropriation, or if so to what amount, he does so at his own risk. Callahan v. Township of Morris, 1 Vroom, 187.

This the prosecutor did. He made no inquiry about the appropriation. He knew there had been a change in the district announced by the committee, and he concluded to ignore the committee's action and rely upon the fact that about $80 was usually appropriated to that district.

The action of the committee in refusing to recognize his claim for an amount in excess of his part of the appropriation was correct and is affirmed, with costs.

LEFFERTS, Piff. in Err.,

STATE of New Jersey.

- *1. The testimony of a person in regard to his own signature is not evidence of a grade superior to the testimony of a witness acquainted with the handwriting of such person.
2. The defendant in a criminal case produced written complaints and, being a witness, testified that such complaints were signed by the prosecutor in his presence; the court refused to receive the same thus proved, and required the prosecutor in such complaints to be called to prove his own signature; such prosecutor was produced and was a witness hostile to the defense. Held, that such judicial action was error, entitling the defendant to a reversal of the judgment.
3. A bill of exceptions is amendable.

(Decided November 17, 1886.)

ERROR to the Quarter Sessions of Middlesex County, to review a judgment on conviction on an indictment. Reversed.

Statement by Beasley, Ch. J.:

The indictment charged a justice of the peace with having obtained money of one Margaret McCarten by falsely pretending that "Three several complaints in writing, under oath, had been filed before him, charging her with having sold to sundry persons intoxicating drinks, she having no license, such complaints being the commencement of prosecutions to recover certain penalties denounced by the city ordinances;" and that the said justice obtained from the said Margaret the penalty, and costs, in one of such prosecutions. The indictment then negated the filing and existence of such complaints.

Mr. Schenck, for plaintiff in error.

Mr. J. Kearney Rice, for defendant in error.

Beasley, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The State alleged that the defendant, being a justice of the peace, had obtained money from the person named in the indictment, by falsely pretending that there were three complaints against such person filed with him by virtue of a municipal ordinance that denounced penalties against persons selling intoxicating liquors without license. It was charged that by this fraudulent fiction the defendant had been paid, by the party that pretended to be incriminated, one of such penalties. The indictment then averred that no such complaint had ever been made before the defendant.

At the trial, in the course of his defense, the defendant produced his docket and likewise three papers that purported to be such complaints as were referred to in the indictment, and being examined on his own behalf as a witness, he stated that these documents were signed and sworn to by the person whose name was subscribed to them as prosecutor. The complaints thus proved were offered in evidence and were rejected by the court, on the ground that the best evidence of their authenticity had not been produced; such evidence, in the judicial estimation, being that of the prosecutor who had made such complaints and had put his name to them. This view was plainly erroneous. The testimony of the man who signed the documents, with respect to the genuineness of his signature, was not of a higher grade of evidence than the testimony of a man who had seen him make such signature or who was acquainted with his writing and deposed as to his opinion. The rule adopted by the court would require, in proving a promissory note or other unattested writing, the production of the maker of the instrument to the exclusion of all other evidence, as primary proof. The rejection of these papers under the conditions stated was erroneous.

It is true that the papers in question were subsequently admitted in evidence, but such introduction was allowed only after the defendant had been obliged by the ruling of the court to call the person who had subscribed the complaints and who was a witness hostile to the defense, and who by his testimony had cast suspicion upon the papers referred to. The substance of his testimony was to the effect that he could not tell whether the signatures were his or not, that he had never knowingly made such complaints, as he was friendly with the person against whom they purported to have been made.

It is manifest that such testimony, impairing as it did the essential fact of his defense, was highly prejudicial to the defendant on the merits of the case. That the court announced that the defendant might treat this witness as a hostile witness did not repair the wrong; he might not have been prepared to show that the witness had made statements out of court inconsistent with his testimony or that his reputation for veracity was bad, even if such circumstances existed.

The judgment must be reversed.

The question of the amendability of the bill of exceptions is not necessarily involved in the present decision. The bill was amended at the instance of the State, and the case has been decided in favor of the defendant on the basis presented in the amended bill. In the absence of such emendation the facts would have made a case somewhat stronger for the defense. Our decision being adverse to the State, taking the matter in this stronger aspect in favor of the prosecution, it is not necessary for the court to consider it in its weaker aspect. Nevertheless, as the matter is of importance in practice and as it has been examined by the court, it has been thought proper to express our view upon the subject.

In this case the bill of exceptions as originally signed and sealed by the court of quarter sessions stated that the three complaints already mentioned were rejected when offered by the defense; but it failed to state, as was proper, that they were afterwards admitted and were placed before the jury. The State giving notice to the defendant, of the motion, applied to the court of quarter sessions to amend the bill, so as to make it embrace the matter inadvertently omitted. The amendment was made and the legality of that act was challenged by the counsel of the defendant in his argument before this court. But the denial of the right to amend a bill of exceptions does not seem to be countenanced by any rule of practice or principle of jurisprudence. If such a power does not exist, such a condition of affairs is anomalous and does not accord with the usual course when error has been discovered in the other parts of judicial procedure.

* Head notes by BEASLEY, Ch. J.

Originally at common law it would seem as though every step of a suit, from its commencement to its close, was alterable by the court, for it required an Act of Parliament in the time of Edward the First to prevent the exercise of such power with respect to judgments that had been formally enrolled. But this statutory restriction went no further than that, and from that era to the present almost all the other proceedings in a suit at law have been amended in the most liberal manner by the English courts. The same practice has prevailed in this Commonwealth, as is exemplified by a train of decisions. Thus a faulty verdict, although accredited by a justice, signed by the judge, has been always deemed amendable and the record has been remitted to that end by a court of error. Delaware etc. R. R. Co. v. Toffey, 9 Vroom, 525.

In the case of Appgar's Admr. v. Hiler, 4 Zab. 808, this course was taken with a judgment that had been improperly entered. There are many similar and analogous cases in our reports to which it is unnecessary to refer.

This being the condition of the law with respect to the correction of judicial proceedings in these important respects, it seems difficult to suggest any reasonable ground on which it can be claimed that a bill of exception is exempt from such a beneficial control. If a mistake has been found in a bill of exceptions, why should it not be expunged and the statement verified?

In the case in the Exchequer Chamber, of Mersey Docks and Harbour Board v. Hurlst. & N. 339, this question was argued, and Chief Justice Cockburn in the course of the argument suggested, as a reason why the power perhaps did not exist, this consideration: "If a judge is at liberty to amend a bill of exceptions after he has sealed it, it might happen that the bill of exceptions, when sealed, contained the real directions given to the jury; and any misdirection might be avoided by altering the bill of exceptions and inserting the direction which ought to have been given."

But if there is a probability that there would, in some cases, be danger that a judge would thus vitiate a bill of exceptions, is there not a similar danger with reference to the other parts of the proceedings? And if the faculty of rectification is to be withheld, on the ground indicated in the former class of cases, ought it not to be withheld in every case? May not the unworthy judge falsify the justice, in the judgment as well as the bill of exceptions? In point of fact no part of the proceedings appears to be less exposed to falsification than this latter document, for it relates to matters taking place in open court, and which have been committed to writing and judicially attested. The allegation that error has intervened could in such case be made neither with plausibility nor with impunity.

All judicial powers are liable to be abused, but such possible abuse has never prevented their delegation. The authority now being considered is a prerogative highly important to a just administration of the law. That a litigant should lose his judgment from the inadvertence of his opponent's counsel, in misstating or in omitting to state some necessary part in the bill of exceptions, such inadvertence being unnoticed by the judge, would be a hardship that could not occur in any legal system containing proper adjustments and safeguards. Our scheme of law is not defamed by the presence of such an imperfection. The bill of exceptions is correctible as all other procedures in a suit are correctible. Even if such power of rectification were not inherent in the general rules of judicial practice, it would necessarily be held to have been introduced into our legal methods by the provision contained in the 188th section of our Practice Act, which declares that it shall be lawful for the court or judge to amend all defects and errors in any proceeding in civil causes, whether there is anything in writing to amend by or not.

STATE, John MICHAELIS, Prosecutor,

BOARD of FIRE COMMISSIONERS of JERSEY CITY.

1. The transfer of an employee in the the Jersey City Fire Department from his position of engineer to that of stoker, which last position is attended with different duties and decreased pay, is invalid under the Act (P. L. 1885, p. 130) regulating the terms of officers and men in fire departments.
2. Such employee is protected, although he was appointed without filing an application sworn to and having a physician's certificate showing his physical condition, according to the requirements of a rule adopted by a preceding board of fire commissioners.

(Decided December 1, 1886.)

CERTIORARI to review proceedings of Board of Fire Commissioners of Jersey City. Proceedings set aside.

The prosecutor brings up certain proceedings to remove him from the office or employment as engineer of Engine Company No. 1 to the position of stoker of Engine Company No. 8.

Argued before Dixon and Reed, JJ.

Mr. Chas. H. Voorhis, for prosecutor:

The transfer was void. It removes firemen from higher to lower office, contrary to Laws 1885, p. 130, prescribing tenure of office of firemen.

Fitzgerald v. New Brunswick, 18 Vroom, 479.

The Board's rule, requiring an application properly sworn to and a physician's certificate of physical condition, was waived as to prosecutor. He has served for years under his appointment; the Board has accepted his services and paid him therefor.

Mr. A. L. McDermott, for defendant.

Reed, J., delivered the opinion of the court: The prosecutor attacks the resolution of the Board of Fire Commissioners of Jersey City which made the transfer above mentioned. He claims that by the terms of the Act of 1885 (P. L. 1885, p. 130) no power was vested in the Board to make the transfer.

This Act provides that the officers and men employed by municipal authority in the fire department of any city shall severally hold their respective offices and continue in their respective employments during good behavior, efficiency and residence in said city. It then provides for the removal of such officers or employees for certain causes.

I think that he held his employment as engineer protected by the terms of that Act; and any attempt to transfer him without his consent was a removal from office or employment.

The place of stoker was a different position, inferior in dignity, dissimilar in its work and attended with decreased wages. It was, within the meaning of the Act, a different employment or office.

The defendants, however, contend that he never held the position of engineer by municipal authority. He was promoted to his position as engineer June 1, 1885. But it is in evidence that there was at that time in existence a rule of the Board which reads thus: "No appointment in this department shall be legal until the applicant has filed an application properly sworn to and having a physician's certificate attached thereto showing his physical condition." This rule of the Board was adopted in August, 1881, and has never been readopted or rescinded since.

Inasmuch as the power to appoint and remove officers was (until the Act of 1885) lodged in the board of each year, without any restriction except such as the board of that year might adopt, no resolution of a board of 1881 could restrict the power of appointment of the Board of 1885.

There is no evidence of any action of the Board of the last named year, in reference to the resolution. In fact it seems to have been disregarded.

Besides, the rule seems to have prescribed what was to be done by a candidate before he could be considered eligible to be appointed.

It seems to have been a rule which was designed for the convenience of the Board, and which it could in its discretion disregard.

Certainly, after permitting an appointee to exercise an employment and receive pay for months it can hardly be said that they have not waived the performance of the preparatory steps which the rule contemplates.

If the appointee is physically unfit to perform the duties attached to his employment, he is removable under the Act of 1885.

The resolution is set aside.

Samuel LEWIS et al.,

v.

Paul HASKEL.

*A sheriff who, in answer to a rule to bring in the body of a defendant, returns

*Head note and statement by REED, J.

N. J.

that he discharged the defendant from custody upon his giving bond and complying with the requirements of the Insolvent Debtors' Act, will not be amerced.

(Decided November 18, 1886.)

RULE on sheriff to show cause. Discharged. Haskell, the defendant, was arrested by the sheriff of Middlesex County by virtue of a writ of capias ad respondendum. He was admitted to bail by the sheriff on the 14th day of December, 1885. He failed to put in special bail and on January 2, 1886, the sheriff was ruled to bring in the body of the defendant so as to have it before the court on January 18, 1886.

The sheriff on June 7 returned the rule with the following indorsement:

"The said defendant having made out and delivered to me a true and perfect inventory, under oath, of all his goods and chattels, rights and credits, lands, tenements, hereditaments and real estate, and having also given bond to the plaintiffs, with sufficient security, with such condition as is required by the Act entitled 'An Act for the Relief of Persons Imprisoned on Civil Process', approved March 27, 1874, I, therefore, in pursuance of the provisions of the said Act, discharge the defendant from custody, and do forthwith return the same with the said bond and inventory.

Dated May 7, 1886.

Patrick Convery, Sheriff.

Returnable January 18, 1886."

On January 27, a rule was entered that the sheriff show cause before this court why he should not be amerced in any sum not exceeding the plaintiffs' debt, with costs.

Argued before Depue, Dixon and Reed, JJ.

Mr. James S. Wright, for the rule.

Mr. Robert Adrain, contra.

Reed, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The rule upon the sheriff to show cause why he should not be amerced was taken under the provisions of section 77 of the Practice Act, Rev. p. 861. It provides that if, on a return that he hath taken the body, or C. C., the sheriff or other officer shall not return bail and a copy of the bail bond, or if the plaintiff be dissatisfied with the bail taken by such sheriff or other officer and the defendant shall fail to appear and give special bail within the time prescribed, the court or a judge shall order, by a rule of court, such sheriff or officer to bring in the body of the defendant at a certain time in said rule specified; and if said sheriff or officer fail to do so he shall be amerced by the court at the next term in any sum not exceeding the plaintiff's debt or demand, with costs.

As already appears the plaintiffs did not take an assignment of the bail bond taken by the sheriff; the defendant did not appear and give special bail at the prescribed time; and the sheriff, when ruled to bring in the body, failed to do so. He rests his defense to the rule for amercement upon his discharge of the defendant, in accordance with the requirements of section 2 of the Act for the relief of persons imprisoned on civil process. Rev. p. 497.

This is the language of that section:

person or persons who may be arrested or held in custody by any sheriff or other officer, in any civil action upon mesne process or processes of execution or upon an attachment for not performing an award, or who may be surrendered in discharge of his or their bail, shall be discharged from arrest or custody of such officer," provided he shall do certain things which were done by the present defendant before his discharge.

The question mooted is whether the return of the sheriff shows a sufficient excuse for not bringing in the body, in accordance with the provisions of section 77 of the Practice Act.

The provision contained in section 77 is substantially the twenty-sixth section of the Act of 1879, drawn by Judge Patterson and found in his revision. The practice relative to bail before that Act was passed was that of the Court of Kings Bench.

This was asserted in the case of Armstrong v. Davis, Coxe, 110, decided in the year 1791. In drafting the statute Judge Patterson was guided by the practice of that court. Parker v. Ogden, 1 Pennington, 147.

In the interpretation of the statute, then, we are to read it in connection with the practice of the Court of Kings Bench which the Act was intended to codify.

The course of procedure in the several English courts varied somewhat in details but were substantially identical.

It was well settled that upon the issuance of a capias ad respondendum to the sheriff, he was required by statute to take bail if responsible sureties were offered; and if such security was not proffered, he was required to take the defendant into actual custody.

After the sheriff had discharged the defendant upon bail, his control over the person of the defendant ceased.

The bail so taken was to the sheriff; and that officer was responsible for the appearance of the defendant upon the return of the writ. This responsibility was ended if the defendant did one of two things: either surrendered himself, and was accepted by the sheriff before the return day of the writ, or appeared within a stipulated time and gave special bail.

As already appears, the capias ad respondendum was in the present case returned C. C., which meant that the defendant had given bail to the sheriff, and the defendant did not put in special bail upon the return of the writ. A rule was taken upon the sheriff to bring in the body of the defendant.

Under the practice of the Court of Kings Bench the rule itself conferred no power upon the sheriff over the person of the defendant. It was intended to fix the liability of the sheriff for his failure to have the defendant in court at the time of the return of the writ or the failure to put in special bail. It was a warning to the sheriff, to the effect that inasmuch as he had returned the defendant in custody he should bring him into court within a specified time, or proceedings would be taken against him for his default. He could answer the rule by bringing the body into court or by putting in special bail. 1 Tidd, Pr. p. 311.

While he had no power to arrest the defendant, there were methods provided by which he could obtain the custody of the body. He could put in special bail himself without defendant's consent; and the sureties could immediately surrender the defendant; and these sureties might do this without having justified. Berchere v. Coloor, Str. 876; Wats. Sheriffs, p. 120.

The sureties on the bail to the sheriff having no power to surrender their principal (1 Chitty, 329) could also put in special bail, either before or after the return of the capias ad respondendum (but not before the return, under our statute), for the purpose of having the latter sureties surrender the defendant. Petersdorf, Bail, p. 288; 1 Tidd, Pr. p. 248.

Such surrender relieved the sureties upon the bail bond to the sheriff from responsibility, as the surrender of the principal is considered equivalent to putting in special bail. Petersdorf, Bail, p. 397.

Therefore the sheriff should, as soon as he is served with the rule to bring in the body, give notice thereof to the bail and to the defendant, in order that bail may be put in and perfected, or the defendant may be rendered in discharge of his bail; which being done the rule is complied with. Wats. Sheriffs, p. 121.

So it is perceived that when the rule has been taken upon the sheriff and he had not the body in actual custody, either he or the bail to the sheriff or the defendant can put in and perfect special bail; and this is an answer to the rule. Or either the sheriff or the bail to him can put in special bail, who can at once surrender the defendant into custody of the sheriff who can return the body into court; which is also an answer to the rule.

He is not, however, bound to bring the defendant actually into court. If he show that he is in custody, it is sufficient. McLeod v. Marsden, Barnes, 27.

It is perceived, therefore, that it is possible for the sheriff to have had the body in custody upon the return of the rule, either by an accepted surrender of the defendant by his own act before the return of the capias ad respondendum (Florence v. Shumar, 5 Vroom, 455), or, by a surrender by special bail put in by the sheriff or the bail below, at any time before the return of the rule.

In the first instance, the defendant would have been in custody under mesne process, and in the second by surrender in discharge of his sureties, both of which junctures of affairs are mentioned in the second section of the Insolvent Debtors' Act, as conditions upon the existence of which a person can seek his discharge under the Act.

The return of the sheriff is in effect that he had the defendant in custody in the course of the proceeding set on foot to secure the defendant's presence to answer the action against him, and that being so held in custody the defendant complied with all the formalities requisite to entitle him to his discharge.

In exercising the power to amerce the sheriff in the amount of the plaintiffs' claim it should be clear that he has been in default. His return presents if true (and we must assume its truth) a legal excuse for failing to have the defendant in court on the return day of the rule; and the rule to show cause why the officer should not be amerced is discharged.

PENNSYLVANIA.
SUPREME COURT.

C. A. GODCHARLES & Co., Pliffs. in Err.,
v.
Frank WIGEMAN.

1. A custom making 2240 pounds a ton is not good when opposed to a statute making 2000 pounds a legal ton.
2. Rules posted up on an employer's premises based upon such a custom are not binding upon the employees, unless by special contract or knowledge which will raise a presumption of contract.
3. A statute which prevents persons who are sui juris from making their own contracts is an infringement of the constitutional rights of citizens of the United States, and is consequently void.
4. Sections 1, 2, 3 and 4, of the Act of June 29, 1881, providing that all persons, firms, etc., engaged in mining coal, ore, etc., shall settle with their employees at least once a month and pay them in lawful money, or by cash orders, is unconstitutional and void.

(Decided October 4, 1886.)

ERROR to the Common Pleas of Northumberland County, to review a judgment on a verdict for plaintiff in an action of assumption. Reversed.

Wigeman claimed to recover from Godcharles & Co., the defendants, whose business was that of rolling iron and manufacturing nails, payment for puddling iron at the rate of $4 per ton of 2,000 pounds.

On the trial of the case before Rockefeller, P. J., the plaintiff testified that he went to work for the defendants as a puddler in their rolling mills on March 29, 1883; that his employer "told him that he would give him $4 a ton on the condition same as he hired all the men;" that plaintiff quit on January 1, 1884, in consequence of a notice posted up in the mills, reducing the wages to $3.60 per ton.

The defendants offered evidence to prove that before and during the time the plaintiff was employed a set of rules was posted in their mills providing, inter alia, that the price for puddling would be "$4 per ton of 2240 pounds," and that that was what the other puddlers received. The plaintiff denied all knowledge of this rule. The defendants also offered, as an offset to the plaintiff's claim, orders for coal and other articles, which were honored by the parties on whom they were drawn and afterwards paid by the defendants. These orders were in the following form: "William P. Stout, let Frank Wigeman have coal to the amount of $4.25. [Signed] C. A. Godcharles & Co." The defendants also offered as a further set-off, assigned claims for goods purchased by the plaintiff from Albert Johnson, a storekeeper. During the time of plaintiff's employment, the defendants had regular monthly pay days, when they furnished each employee with an envelope with indorsements made in the following manner: "Mr. F. Wigeman;" and in one column: "Drugs, $1.10; coal, $4.25; store, A. J. $20; cash, $3; rent, $5;" and in another column: "cash, $13.25." This latter amount, whatever it might be in any case, was paid to the employee. The court excluded these offers of set-off, on the ground that they were prohibited by the Act of June 29, 1881, P. L. 147. Sixth and seventh assignments of error.

The first section of the Act enacts that "All persons, firms, companies, corporations or associations in this Commonwealth, engaged in mining coal, ore or other mineral, or in the manufacture of them or either of them, or manufacturing iron or steel or both, or any other kind of manufacturing, shall pay their employees as provided in this Act."

Section 2. "All persons, firms, companies, corporations or associations engaged in the business aforesaid, shall settle with their employees at least once in each month and pay them the amounts due them for their work or services in lawful money of the United States, or by a cash order as described and required in section 3 of this Act; Provided, That nothing herein contained shall affect the right of an employee to assign the whole or any part of his claim against his employer."

Section 3. "It shall not be lawful for any person, firm, company, corporation or association, their clerk, agent, officer or servant in this State to issue for payment of labor any order or other paper whatsoever, unless the same purports to be redeemable for its face value in lawful money of the United States, bearing interest at legal rate, made payable to employee or bearer and redeemable within the period of thirty days by the person, firm, company, corporation or association giving, making or issuing the same. And any person, firm, company, corporation or association engaged in the business aforesaid, their clerks, agents, officer or servant who shall issue for payment of labor any paper or order other than the one herein specified, in violation of this section, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $100, in the discretion of the court, which shall go to the common school fund of the district wherein the crime shall have been committed."

Defendants' counsel offered to prove that it is the universal custom in mills of the character of that owned by defendants, in Pennsylvania, to fix the rate of wages for puddling, at so much for 2240 pounds: the evidence that plaintiff recognized this custom and acted upon it, by settling with defendants on their several pay days upon this basis, being already in. This for the purpose of showing the contract between the parties, as to the amount of wages the plaintiff was to receive. Objected to.

Per Curiam: The evidence of a custom to pay for puddling at a rate different from what the law of the State declares shall be a ton we think is inadmissible to bind the plaintiff. But if this mill had rules stating the price to be paid for puddling a ton of 2240 pounds, and the plaintiff knew of these rules, I think he would be bound. The objections are sustained the evidence rejected. First, second and third assignments of error.

*Cf. Millett v. People (Ill.) 5 West. Rep. 155.

The defendants requested the court to charge the jury, inter alia, as follows:

1. If the jury believe that it is the universal custom in mills of the character of defendants' to have rules fixing the terms upon which puddling is done, and if the jury believe that the rules of defendants' mill were conspicuously posted in the mill and office, it was the duty of the plaintiff seeking employment at the mill to inquire what the rules of the mill were; and the fact that the rules were so posted would affect him with notice as to what they were, and he would be bound by them.

Ans. This perhaps would be so if there was any evidence that the plaintiff knew of the existence of such a custom; but in the absence of such evidence, I cannot say that as a matter of law the mere posting of the rules in conspicuous places in the mill and office would affect the plaintiff with notice as to what they were, and that he would be bound by them.
Fourth assignment of error.

2. If the jury believe that one of the rules of defendants' mill was that 2240 pounds of iron should be puddled for a ton, and that plaintiff at the time of hiring with defendants had either actual or constructive notice of such rules, this rule then became a part of the contract and plaintiff must make 2240 pounds for a ton.

Ans. This is so if the plaintiff had actual notice of such rule. You have the evidence as to the posting of the rules in conspicuous places in and about the defendants' mill, and you are to determine from all the evidence in the case whether the plaintiff had notice of the rule.
Fifth assignment of error.

Messrs. P. L. Hackenberg & Son and William F. Derr, for plaintiffs in error:

Where a custom to do a thing in a certain manner or upon certain terms exists in any particular business or trade, those engaged in that business or trade are presumed to contract with reference to that custom; and the proof of such custom is evidence to go to the jury, as to the intention of the parties at the time the contract was made.

Sampson v. Gazzam, 30 Am. Dec. 583; Thompson v. Hamilton, 23 Am. Dec. 621; Wilcocks v. Phillips' Exrs. Wall. Jr. 64; McMasters v. Pa. R. R. Co. 69 Pa. 377.

The purpose of proving the custom was to affect the plaintiff with notice of the rules; to impose upon him the duty of inquiry, and thus affect him with constructive notice of these rules.

Lincoln Bank v. Page, 6 Am. Dec. 53; McMasters v. Pa. R. R. Co. supra; Whitesell v. Crane, 8 Watts & S. 373; Hottenstein v. Lerch, 12 W. N. C. 6; Leonard's App. 95 Pa. 196; Wright v. Trainer, 1 W. N. C. 198.

The Act of June 29, 1881, is unconstitutional and void, as being in conflict with article 3, § 7, of the Constitution, which declares, among other things: "The General Assembly shall not pass any local or special law, regulating labor, trade, mining or manufacturing, granting to any corporation, or individual, any special or exclusive privilege or immunity."

It is an Act regulating labor, mining and manufacturing; and it also grants to individuals special or exclusive privileges or immunities; and it at the same time imposes on other individuals, associations or corporations, special and exceptional duties and obligations.

The title of the Act, "To secure to operatives and laborers engaged in and about coal mines, manufactories of iron and steel, and all other manufactories, the payment of their wages," etc., sufficiently stamps upon it its special or objectionable character, and the title must be read as a part of the Act. The first and second sections preserve this express limitation in their application to laborers in manufactories and mines.

There seems to have been an effort to save the third section from the evil of special legislation, by giving it a general application, but it must be construed with reference to the title to the Act, or it becomes unconstitutional, on the ground that its subject matter is not expressed in the title.

Sedgwick says the best definition is that given by Dwarrris: "That public Acts relate to the public at large, and private acts concern the particular interests or benefit of certain individuals or of particular classes of men."

See also 1 Bl. Com. 39; 1 Kent, Com. 460; 2 Const. Debates, 590.

Messrs. M. L. Snyder and C. R. Savidge, for defendant in error:

By Act of April 15, 1834, § 17, P. L. 527, 2000 pounds make a ton. It is error to admit evidence of custom to control a statute.

Evans v. Myers, 25 Pa. 114; Weaver v. Fegely, 29 Pa. 27.

In the absence of positive enactment, custom in regard to trade, etc., would perhaps prevail, and further than this the authorities do not go.

In Wright v. Trainer, 1 W. N. C. 198, the rules were known to the employee.

The Act applies to any kind of manufactory, and is therefore a general enactment.

We have the decision of Judge Ewing, of Allegheny County, one of the strongest judges in the State, in the case of Kettering v. Imperial Coal Co. 15 Pittsb. Legal Jour. 359, sustaining the constitutionality of the Act.

Mr. Justice Gordon delivered the opinion of the court:

The first five assignments of error cannot be sustained. They are in fact, but five exceptions to a single ruling of the court, or what might properly have been embraced in one ruling. The offer, with its variations, was to prove a custom among iron mills, of the character of that owned by the defendants, making the ton 2240 pounds; but the court held that the custom if proved was not good, because opposed to the statute which fixes the legal ton at 2000 pounds, and that the former could not be imposed on the plaintiff, except by proof of a special contract or of such knowledge by him of the rules of the establishment as would raise the presumption that he was working under them; hence, the proposed evidence was rejected.

It requires no argument to establish the correctness of this ruling; hence, we attempt none. The seventh assignment must be sustained. The orders given by the defendants and received by the plaintiff constituted a proper set-off.

The first, second, third and fourth sections of the Act of June 29, 1881, are utterly unconstitutional and void, inasmuch as by them an attempt has been made by the Legislature to do what, in this country, cannot be done; that is, prevent persons who are sui juris from making their own contracts.

The Act is an infringement alike of the rights of the employer and the employee; more than this, it is an insulting attempt to put the laborer under a legislative tutelage which is not only degrading to his manhood but subversive of his rights as a citizen of the United States. He may sell his labor for what he thinks best, whether money or goods, just as his employer may sell his iron or coal; and any and every law that proposes to prevent him from so doing is an infringement of his constitutional privileges, and consequently vicious and void.

The judgment of the court below is now reversed and a new venire ordered.

William H. BUSH, Plf. in Err.,
v.

James H. BREINIG.

1. A contract made by a person so intoxicated as not to know the consequences of his acts is voidable and may be avoided by himself, although the intoxication was voluntary and not procured by the circumvention of the other party to the contract, and unknown to him.
2. The drunkenness must be such that the party undertaking the contract did not know what he was doing; such as to suspend the use of reason and understanding.
3. Money paid in part performance of such a voidable contract can be recovered back.
4. In an action to recover back hand money paid at the time of signing the conditions of the sale of real estate, at auction, the question to be submitted to the jury is the capacity of the plaintiff to make a contract at the time of signing the agreement and paying the money, and not his capacity at the time of the bid.
5. The allowance of a question, objected to on the ground that it was admitted out of order, but which proves to be harmless by the subsequent testimony, is no ground for reversal, although the question may also be objectionable in form.

(Decided October 4, 1886.)

ERROR to the Common Pleas of Lehigh County, to review a judgment on a verdict for plaintiff in an action of assumpsit. Affirmed.

The following facts appeared on the trial before ALBRIGHT, P. J.:

On October 4, 1883, the defendant, Bush, offered real estate at public sale. The plaintiff made a bid of $13,400, and the property was struck down to him. About an hour later he signed the conditions of sale and a note for $845, and paid $495 down, these amounts making 10 per cent of the purchase money, as required by the conditions of sale. This suit was brought November 24, 1883, to recover back the hand money, on the ground that the plaintiff was so intoxicated at the time of the payment of the money that he could make no contract.

The court charged the jury, inter alia, as follows:

"[The money which Mr. Breinig paid, he paid in affirmance of the contract which was made to purchase this hotel property; and the only ground which he has laid, supported by evidence, upon which he can recover it is that the contract did not bind him, because he was intoxicated to such a degree that he did not know what he was doing at the time he paid the money and signed the conditions of sale. Under the evidence we have, Mr. Breinig is bound by the contract, and is obliged to fulfill it; he certainly cannot sue in avoidance of his contract; he cannot recover back the money now in question, unless he can show that it was not his contract. The law is that where a party, when he enters into a contract, is in such a state of drunkenness as not to know what he is doing, the contract is void, and he cannot be compelled to perform it.]

"Drunkenness, to relieve a party from his contract, must be so complete as to have suspended the use of reason and understanding. It is not enough to entitle a party to repudiate the contract to show that he had been drinking. He must show that his mind was so impaired by the use of the intoxicant that he no longer had the power to exercise reason and understanding. If that is shown, then the contract as between the parties to it cannot be enforced. [You will inquire, gentlemen, whether the plaintiff has proved that he was so drunk, at the time he paid the money and signed the conditions of sale, that he did not know what he was doing. Had he the use of reason and understanding? If he had been drinking and still knew what he was doing, then he is bound, and the point of time you are to direct your inquiry to is the time when the money was paid and the conditions signed. The question is, Was he then capable of making a binding contract?]"

"Evidence has been received here bearing upon his condition a little earlier in the afternoon, and also later on in the afternoon and evening. It was received on the theory that it had a bearing on his condition at the time the money was paid, and in view of the plaintiff's own testimony that he drank nothing afterwards on that afternoon. The defendant, however, asserts that he has proved that he drank afterwards. Then, gentlemen, viewing the testimony in that way, you will inquire whether it is proved that Mr. Breinig, at the time he paid the money, was so drunk that he did not know what he was doing. Witnesses have testified as to how often he drank that afternoon; when the drinks were taken; and witnesses also on both sides have testified that they saw Mr. Breinig that afternoon, before and after the paying of the money. You will inquire what is proved, bearing in mind that the burden is upon the plaintiff to show that he is to be relieved from the contract on the ground of drunkenness. If he has not shown that, he will fail in his action, and your verdict will be in favor of the defendant."

The defendant's points were as follows:

1. In the absence of unfair advantage, the drunkenness which will relieve the party from his contract must be such as utterly deprives the party of his reason and understanding.

Ans. The alleged drunkenness of plaintiff, to relieve him from the contract, must have been such that he did not know what he was doing; it must have been such as to suspend the use of reason and understanding; further answer is declined.

2. A contract reasonable in itself entered into by a person in a state of excitement from excessive drink will not be avoided in law or equity.

Ans. Affirmed. Excitement from excessive drink alone will not avoid the contract. The reasonableness of this contract, however, as this case is presented, has nothing to do with the question in this case.

8. If the jury believe that at this public sale the plaintiff purchased the property of the defendant and entered into the conditions of sale and paid the down money sought to be recovered, and the fact of intoxication was unknown to the defendant and his agents, he will be held to the terms of the contract.

Ans. Negatived.

4. If the jury believe that the plaintiff purchased the property understanding the conditions of sale, and the contract of purchase was read to the plaintiff, he cannot now disaffirm the contract and recover back the money.

Ans. Negatived.

The assignments of error specified the answers to the points, the portions of the charge in brackets above, and the allowance of the following question to the plaintiff:

Question. What did Mr. Bush tell you while you were in an intoxicated condition, in regard to this property, when you walked out to the shed?

Objected to on the ground that there is no evidence of intoxication.

The Court: The court understands the plaintiff's allegation to be that at this point of time the plaintiff was intoxicated. In view of that position this question may be answered. The objection is overruled and a bill sealed for the defendant.

Ans. He told me there was a fortune in it, if I would buy this property.

Messrs. Harry G. Stiles and John D. Stiles, for plaintiff in error:

"Drunkenness must rise to that degree which may be called excessive, where the party is utterly deprived of the use of his reason and understanding."

Story, Eq. § 231.

When the property was struck down was the point of time when the plaintiff became liable to comply with the conditions of sale.

McClure v. Mausell, 4 Brewst. 126.

An agreement by a person in a state of complete intoxication is void.

Pitt v. Smith, 8 Camp. 33.

Where in a suit for a specific performance of an agreement the defense set up was incapacity at the time of executing it, on the ground of intoxication, held, that it could not assist in getting rid of the agreement on the mere ground of intoxication, no fraud having been alleged.

Shaw v. Thackray, 17 Jur. 1045.

The courts as a matter of public policy decline, on the one hand, to lend their assistance to a person who has obtained an agreement or deed from another in a state of intoxication; and, on the other hand, they are equally unwilling to assist the intoxicated party to get rid of his agreement or deed, merely on the ground of his intoxication at the time.

Cooke v. Clayworth, 18 Ves. 12; Newland, Cont. chap. 22, p. 365; Rich v. Sydenham, 1 Ch. Cas. 202; 1 Madd. Ch. Pr. 239; State Bank v. McCoy, 69 Pa. 204.

The brief interval between the bid and its acceptance is the reasonable time which the law allows for inquiry, consideration, correction of mistakes and retraction. When the bid is thus withdrawn before acceptance there is no contract; and if not withdrawn, the contract stands and the purchaser is held to his bid.

Fisher v. Seltzer, 23 Pa. 308.

To render a contract obligatory, it must be acceded to by both parties at the time.

Johnston v. Fessler, 7 Watts, 48.

A purchaser having paid part of the purchase money, and refusing to comply, cannot recover back what he has advanced, the vendor being willing to do his part.

Hansbrough v. Peck, 5 Wall. 497 (72 U. S. bk. 18, L. ed. 520); 7 Am. Law Reg. and notes, 74-80; Rounds v. Barter, 4 Greenl. 454; Morton v. Chandler, 6 Greenl. 142.

In Booser v. Cessna, 62 Pa. 148, the defendant bid at public sale $2,600 for a tract of land; he paid nothing and signed no conditions. The property was resold and brought $491.50 less than the first sale. The vendor sued the first vendee for the difference. It was held that the contract was binding, and that vendee must respond in damages.

See Poulson v. Ellis, 60 Pa. 134, where it is held that money paid on account of purchase money could be recovered only on the ground of mutual rescission; also Mellingar v. Duly, 56 Pa. 245.

In Payne v. Cave, Benj. Sales, 62, citing 3 T. R. 148, it was held that a bidder at an auction may retract his bidding any time before the hammer is down.

So also Warlow v. Harrison, decided in the Queen's Bench and afterwards in the Exchequer Chamber, cited in Benjamin on Sales, 626.

Mr. Marcus C. L. Kline, for defendant in error:

To relieve a party from a contract on the grounds of intoxication, he must at the time be incapable of clearly perceiving and assenting, and must be intoxicated to such a degree that the party cannot assent understandingly.

Van Wyck v. Brasher, 81 N. Y. 262; French v. French, 8 Ohio, 214; 31 Am. Dec. 441; Wade v. Colvert, 12 Am. Dec. 652; Bates v. Ball, 72 Ill. 108; Gore v. Gibson, 13 Mees. & Welsb. 623; State Bank v. McCoy, 69 Pa. 204; 1 Chitty, Cont. 11th Am. ed. p. 192; 2 Kent, Com. p. 452-584; Benj. Sales, § 33, p. 42.

The rule now is that such an intoxication as entirely deprives a party of the use of his reason must avoid an engagement entered into by him while in this state, even although it be procured by his own folly, and although no actual fraud be intended or practiced.

1 Chitty, Cont. 11th Am. ed. p. 192; Bar- rett v. Buxton, 2 Aikens, 167; 16 Am. Dec. 601; 1 Chitty, Cont. p. 192; Seymour v. Delancy, 3 Cow. 445; Wigglesworth v. Steers, 1 Hen. & Munf. 70; 3 Am. Dec. 602.

Bush must have had notice of his condition, having seen him drink, by his manner, hand writing, and other attendant circumstances. Notice may be inferred from circumstances sufficiently strong to cast a shade on the transaction.

Story, Notes, § 198; Cone v. Baldwin, 12 Pick. 545.

In Gore v. Gibson, 18 Mees. & Welsb. 623, Parke, B., says: "A person who takes an obligation from another under such circumstances is guilty of actual fraud."

See also State Bank v. McCoy, 69 Pa. 208.

A parol contract for the purchase of land may be disaffirmed; on it there is no legal liability to take and pay for the land. Damages can only be recovered on the parol agreement.

Browne, Stat. Frauds, 8d ed. § 134; Wilson v. Clarke, 1 Watts & S. 554; Bousser v. Cesena, 62 Pa. 148.

A sale of lands by public auction is within the Statute of Frauds.

1 Chitty, Cont. 11th Am. ed. p. 418; Walker v. Constable, 1 Bos. & Pull. 806; White v. Proctor, 4 Taunt. 209; 1 Sugd. Vend. & P. 18th Am. ed. 42-148; Browne on the Statute of Frauds, 8d ed. §§ 264, 265.

A vendor cannot maintain an action to recover the purchase money on a verbal agreement for the sale of land, not put in writing according to the statute.

Meason v. Kaine, 63 Pa. 335; Wilson v. Clarke, 1 Watts & S. 554; Browne, Stat. of Frauds, 8d ed. § 134.

A contract for the purchase of land, not put in writing, passes to the purchaser no interest in the land, and furnishes no right in law or equity to demand a specific performance.

Bender's Admrs. v. Bender, 37 Pa. 37.

In Pennsylvania a parol contract for the sale of land is not absolutely void; the statute restrains the effect.

Kurtz v. Cummings, 24 Pa. 37.

Chief Justice Shaw, in Gill v. Bicknell, 2 Cush. 358, says: "It is now well settled by authorities that a sale of real estate at auction, where the name of the bidder is entered by the auctioneer, or by his clerk under his direction, on the spot, and such entry is so connected with the subject and terms of the sale as to make a part of the memorandum, is a contract in writing so as to take the case out of the Statute of Frauds."

In Morton v. Dean, 13 Met. 385, it was held that the putting down the name of a bidder was not a sufficient memorandum because it was not under such a caption, and did not definitely refer to any catalogue, advertisement, written or printed, or conditions of sale, as to make them part of the memorandum.

See also 1 Chitty, Cont. pp. 418, 414, 11th ed.

"As sales at auction are clearly within the Statute of Frauds (Hinde v. Whitehouse, 7 East, 568; Kenworthy v. Scofield, 2 Barn. & C. 945; Brent v. Green, 6 Leigh, 16), the assent would not be binding unless in writing, if the case came within the terms of that Statute."

1 Pars. Cont. p. 479.

PA.

Payne v. Cave, 3 Term R. 148, and Warlow v. Harrison, cited in Benjamin on Sales, pages 62 and 626, cited by the plaintiff in error, have no application to the case at hand. They determine disputes in relation to the sales of personal property. There is a wide difference in the law relating to the sales of realty and personalty by reason of the Statute of Frauds. The purchaser of personalty at parol sale may be held for the contract price; the purchaser of realty at parol sale cannot be held for the contract price.

The deposit may be recovered upon the common count for money had and received, although the contract for sale was under seal.

1 Chitty, Cont. p. 439; Greville v. Da Costa, Peake, Add. Cas. 118.

Mr. Justice Trunkley delivered the opinion of the court:

When the plaintiff's bid was accepted the bargain was struck, and there was an oral agreement for the sale and purchase of the land on the terms stated in the conditions of sale. That agreement was not void, but voidable. Neither party could have compelled specific performance. Either would have a right of action for damages resulting from nonperformance by the other; but the vendor could not tender a deed and recover the purchase money, for that would be enforcing specific performance; he could only recover the actual loss.

Upon the signing of the conditions, prima facie there was a contract that could be specifically enforced. Money paid on either the oral or written contract could not be recovered unless there was cause for rescission. Here, it is conceded that there was an oral contract; but the plaintiff denies that he made a written contract and paid money and a note thereon, because at the time his signatures and money were given he was incapable of making a contract by reason of drunkenness. If he was without reason and understanding, the payment of the money ought not to be treated as voluntary, nor his signature as creating a new obligation. The conditions of sale may have been read in his hearing at the auction, and he may have understood them when he bid; but he paid no money until the time of signing the alleged contract, and if he was then bereft of reason, he may avoid the apparent obligation made while in that condition.

It is not a question whether what he did was the carrying out of a fair and reasonable oral contract, or whether the property was worth the sum bid; it is a question of his capacity to make a contract at the time he signed the conditions and paid the money. The subject of the contract was not necessary for himself or family; he took nothing into his possession and therefore had nothing to restore in the act of rescission; and he brought suit so promptly that at the trial the question of delay in rescinding was not raised.

The rule formerly was that intoxication was no excuse and created no privilege or plea in avoidance of a contract, but it is now settled according to the dictates of good sense and common justice that a contract made by a person so destitute of reason as not to know the consequences of his contract, though his incompetency be produced by intoxication, is voidable, and may be avoided by himself, though the intoxication was voluntary, and not procured by the circumvention of the other party. 2 Kent, Com. p. 451.

A drunkard when in a complete state of intoxication, so as not to know what he is doing, has no capacity to contract in general; but his contract is voidable only and not void, and may therefore be ratified by him when he becomes sober. Benj. Sales, § 38.

The learned judge of the common pleas instructed the jury that the plaintiff could recover only on the ground that the contract did not bind him because he was intoxicated to a degree that he did not know what he was doing at the time he affixed his seal and gave the money; that if he was in such a state of drunkenness as not to know what he was doing, he cannot be compelled to perform the contract; and that if at the time of signing the contract he was able to comprehend the nature and effect thereof, the alleged intoxication is no defense. All that accords with principles so well settled as to be found in approved text books. They apply to a case like this; not where an intoxicated man gave his negotiable paper which had passed to an innocent holder for value, as was the case in State Bank v. McCoy, 69 Pa. 204.

In answer to the defendant's first point the court charged that the drunkenness of the plaintiff to relieve him from the contract must have been such that he did not know what he was doing; it must have been such as to suspend the use of reason and understanding. There is no error in that. True, the word "utterly" is omitted, which is used in the defining of the state of drunkenness, in Story, Eq. Jur. § 281; but the sense is not materially different; and that word is omitted by many in the attempt to define the degree of intoxication, and absence of reason.

The point was well answered; its simple affirmation might have misled the jury; "unfair advantage" was not a question submitted.

The fifth assignment is not sustained. Although the question ought not to have been allowed when put, for the reason stated in the objection, very soon there was testimony that the witness was intoxicated at the time referred to in the question. No objection was made to its form and its admission out of order was harmless.

None of the remaining assignments require special remark.

Judgment affirmed.

APPEAL OF S. P. JOHNSON, Guardian of the Minor Children of P. J. Falconer.

1. The orphans' court in its limited sphere is a court of equity powers, and in all matters within its jurisdiction has full authority to grant relief.
2. The orphans' court has the power of reviewing and modifying its proceedings and decrees for mistake involving injury.
3. It may set aside a private sale previously ordered by it of the real estate of a minor after deed made by his guardian for the mutual mistake of the parties in the amount of the land sold.

4. The petition in such case should set out the title of the minor and show that it was derived by descent or last will.

(Decided October 4, 1886.)

A PPEAL from a decree of the Orphans' Court of Warren County, setting aside a guardian's private sale of real estate made by a guardian with the approval of the court, Affirmed.

The petition of the original guardian (subsequently succeeded by the present appellant) praying an order to make such sale was as follows:

"The petition of G. C. James, guardian of Patrick H. Frank E., and Rose T. Falconer, minor children of P. J. Falconer, deceased, respectfully represents: That the said minor children are seised in fee of, and in a certain piece or parcel of land situate in Limestone Township, Warren County, Pennsylvania, in the northwest corner of tract No. 5234, bounded on the northeast by the line of said tract, on the south by the Forest County line, and on the northwest by tract No. 5233, being that part of said tract No. 5234 lying in Warren County, and containing 200 acres, be the same more or less. Your petitioner says he has been offered the sum of $2,000 for said land, by W. A. Grove and J. G. Dale, and that the sale can be effected provided an order or decree can be obtained from this honorable court, authorizing a private sale thereof. Your petitioner further says that the price or sum offered is satisfactory to him, and that he believes it is as much if not more than it would bring if sold at public sale, and that it is for the interest and advantage of said minors that the same should be sold. He therefore prays your honorable court to grant him an order to sell the said land to the proposed purchasers for the said sum of $2,000 cash in hand.

Warren County, ss:

G. C. James, being duly sworn, says that the facts set forth in the foregoing petition are true and correct, to the best of his knowledge and belief.

G. C. James, Guardian.

Sworn and subscribed before me this 7th day of April, A. D. 1882.

G. W. Kinnear, Clerk, O. C."

The facts are fully stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Johnson, Lindsey & Parmlee, for appellant:

The orphans' court has no power to grant the relief prayed for and no right to interfere to help purchasers out of the consequences of their own mistakes, when the transaction, as in this instance, is completed to the last requisites of a judicial sale—the delivery of the deed, the confirmation of the sale and the payment of the whole of the purchase money.

Brightly, Eq. Jur. §§ 915, 916; Commonwealth v. Judges, 4 Pa. 303; Brinker v. Brinker, 7 Pa. 55; Ake's App. 74 Pa. 116.

The supreme court, in the case of Evans v. Maury, 18 W. N. C. 377, 3 Cent. Rep. 137, in reversing the action of the court below in setting aside, on motion, a sheriff's sale after confirmation and delivery of the deed to the purchaser, has reviewed and answered the cases which the appellees rely on as establishing a contrary doctrine. This court says substantially that the power of the court to summarily interfere, for the correction of supposed evils, ceases with the delivery of the deed.

"A confirmation by the orphans' court of a sale of real estate by an executor, made in pursuance of its authority, is not complete until the purchase money be paid and a deed delivered."

Leshey v. Gardner, 8 Watts & S. 314; McRee's Est. 6 Phila. 75.

"The sale, even after confirmation, does not divert the title of the heirs of the decedent until a deed has been executed and delivered."

Demmy's App. 43 Pa. 168.

A completed orphans' court sale is a judicial sale, to which the rule of caveat emptor applies.

Scott, Intestate Law, p. 367, 368; For v. Mensch, 8 Watts & S. 446; King v. Gunnison, 4 Pa. 172; Kennedy's App. 4 Pa. 153; Sackett v. Twining, 18 Pa. 202; Bickley v. Biddle, 83 Pa. 276; Schug's App. 14 W. N. C. 49; Rorer, Jud. Sales, 161, 167-9; Rawle, Cov. title, 622, note.

In the case of Miles v. Dizen, 6 Watts, 148, this court says that even if an administrator has made false representations as to quantity, etc., before his sale, as the purchaser had no right to rely on them, his only redress, if he did not get what he was thus led to suppose he was buying, was by application to the orphans' court before confirmation to set aside the sale.

Penn Square Build. Association's App. *81 Pa. 330; Simmond's Est. 19 Pa. 441; Dellaren's App. 16 W. N. C. 87.

In Gilmore v. Rodgers, 41 Pa. 120, this court, speaking of a decree of confirmation of a sale, says: "Standing unreversed and unappealed from, and the time for an appeal having gone by, which, by the 8th section of the Act (of April 18, 1853), in question, is twenty days, the decree is now, so far as appears in this case, unimpeachable."

Messrs. Osmar & Freeman and W. G. Trunkay, for appellees:

By the second section of the Act of March 29, 1853, the orphans' court is "declared to be a court of record, with all the qualities and incidents of a court of record at common law."

2 Purd. Dig. 11th ed. 1279, pl. 3; P. L. 190.

While it is true that it is a court of limited jurisdiction, if regard be had to the derivation of its powers, and the subjects of its jurisdiction, yet within its appointed orbit its jurisdiction is exclusive, and therefore necessarily as extensive as the demands of justice.

Shollenberger's App. 21 Pa. 337.

In matters within its jurisdiction, it proceeds on the same principles as a court of chancery; and it is essentially such in its proceedings and decrees, within the limited sphere of its jurisdiction.

Guier v. Kelly, 2 Binn. 299; Commonwealth v. Judges, 4 Pa. 301; Kitera's Est. 17 Pa. 423; Bright, Eq. Jur. 680, 681, §§ 916, 917. See also Brinker v. Brinker, 7 Pa. 53, 55; George's App. 12 Pa. 260.

The exceptions to the conclusiveness of decrees of the orphans' court therefore are, as in other courts, fraud, gross mistake or misapprehension amounting to fraud, and want of jurisdiction.

Mitchell v. Kinteer, 5 Pa. 216; Jackson v. Summerville, 13 Pa. 359; George's App. 12 Pa.

260; Milne's App. 99 Pa. 483; Torrance v. Torrance, 53 Pa. 505.

Courts will relieve against mistakes, resulting in injury, occasioned by the misconduct or misrepresentations of the officer conducting the sale, or even of third persons.

Schug's App. 14 W. N. C. 49; DeHaven's App. 16 W. N. C. 87; Moulton's Est. 12 W. N. C. 307; Johnson's Est. 15 Phila. 543; Campbell v. Gardner, 11 N. J. Eq. 423; Woodward v. Bullock, 27 N. J. Eq. 507; Hayes v. Stiger, 29 N. J. Eq. 196; Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Goddard, 83 N. J. Eq. 482; Collier v. Whipple, 13 Wend. 224; Tripp v. Cook, 26 Wend. 143; Veeder v. Fonda, 3 Paige, 94.

Courts of equity have power to set aside sales made under their authority, after confirmation, payment of purchase money and delivery of the deed, on the ground of accident, misapprehension or mistake of fact, resulting in injury.

Collier v. Whipple, Tripp v. Cook, Veeder v. Fonda and Campbell v. Gardner, supra; King v. Platt, 37 N. Y. 155; Brown v. Elliott, 17 N. J. Eq. 353; Klopping v. Stellmacher, 21 N. J. Eq. 328; Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Goddard, Id. 482; Heintze v. Bentley, 34 Id. 562; Gove v. Colborn, 37 Id. 319.

The rule of caveat emptor applies with as much if not greater force to contracts between individuals as it does to judicial sales. When a contract between individuals for the sale of land in gross has been fully executed by payment of purchase money and delivery of the deed, where the deficiency is so great as to naturally raise the presumption of fraud, imposition, or gross mistake in the very essence of the contract, courts of equity will not enforce the rule of caveat emptor, but grant the purchaser relief.

Stebbins v. Eddy, 4 Mason, 414, 420; Kreiter v. Bomberger, 82 Pa. 59; Glen v. Glen, 4 Serg. & R. 488; Harrison v. Talbot, 2 Dana (Ky.) 265; Portman v. Mill, 2 Russ. Ch. 570.

Reasonable diligence is all that is required, and a party will not be deprived of his right to equitable relief, simply because he has not exercised the highest possible degree of care.

Bisp. Eq. 3d ed. 247; Jenks v. Fritz, 7 Watts & S. 201, 203; Snyder v. Ives, 42 Iowa, 162; Bright, Eq. Jur. 63, § 48.

The power of the orphans' court to set aside a sale of real estate, made in pursuance of its own order, is a matter that rests within the sound discretion of the court, and its exercise, as a general rule, will not be reviewed, unless the record shows palpable and gross abuse.

Bowers' App. 84 Pa. 311; Haslage's App. 87 Pa. 440; Neeld's App. 70 Pa. 113.

In order to give the orphans' court jurisdiction to decree a sale under the provisions of the Act of April 18, 1853, most clearly the petition for leave to sell must state that the real estate with respect to which application is made, was acquired either by "descent," or "by last will."

Torrance v. Torrance, 53 Pa. 505; Jones v. Jones, 12 Pa. 355; Hampton v. Speckenagle, 9 Serg. & R. 212, 221; Scott, Intestate Law, 366-7 and authorities cited; 15 Am. Law Reg. N. S. 213, note by Judge Redfield; Denning v. Corwin, 11 Wend. 647; 1 Sm. Lead. Cas. 6th Am. ed. part II, *816, 833 et seq.; Overseers v. Overseers, 23 N. J. Law, 169, 173; Turner v.

Bank of North America, 4 Dall. 8, 11 (4 U. S. bk. 1, L. ed. 718, 719); Robertson v. Crease, 97 U. S. 646, 649 (Bk. 24, L. ed. 1057, 1058); Eaton v. Badger, 38 N. H. 228, 237; Morse v. Presby, 5 Foster (N. H.) 302; Striker v. Kelly, 7 Hill, 9.

Mr. Justice Paxson delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an appeal from a decree of the orphans' court setting aside a private sale of real estate made by G. C. James as guardian of the minor children of P. J. Falconer, deceased. The sale was made under the authority and approval of the orphans' court; it had been confirmed, the purchase money paid and the deed delivered to the purchasers.

About two years after the sale the purchasers presented their petition to the orphans' court, praying that the sale be set aside and the purchase money refunded by S. P. Johnson, the present guardian, who succeeded G. C. James in the said trust. The court below referred the petition to an auditor (who is erroneously termed examiner and master throughout the proceedings), who after taking testimony reported a decree in accordance with the prayer of the petition, which report was substantially sustained by the court and a decree made setting aside the sale.

The ground upon which both the auditor and the court below proceeded was that there was a mutual mistake in regard to the quantity of land. That there was a mutual mistake, and of a very serious character, was found by the auditor and is not denied. Indeed, the auditor's findings of fact were accepted by both sides and are not now disputed. The land was sold as a tract of timber land, containing 200 acres at $10 per acre. In point of fact, as found by actual survey, there were but 52 acres and some perches. No fraud in fact was imputed to the guardian in making the sale. He appears to have had no knowledge as to the quantity of land. The sale was effected by one Z. H. Eddy, who was a surveyor and the grandfather of the minor children. He professed to have measured one of the lines and said there were 212 acres in the tract, but would sell it for 200. Eddy appears to have been a go-between; the auditor finds he was not the agent of the guardian, and he does not appear to have been the agent of the purchasers. The latter relied upon his representations as to quantity in good faith and did not discover the mistake until they had sold off 100 acres, when in surveying the tract in order to set off the part sold, they discovered that it contained altogether but about 52 acres. The guardian was at once notified of the deficiency and a demand made to have the mistake rectified. Some negotiation followed, resulting in nothing, when this petition was filed in the court below.

If the orphans' court possessed the power to set aside the sale under the circumstances, it was certainly a clear case in which to exercise it. It was so gross a mistake as to amount to a legal fraud.

The decree of the orphan's court restores the parties to the position they occupied before the sale. The guardian gets back the land in the condition it was when sold, and he is required to return the money to the purchasers. There is no interference with the rights of third parties. That the guardian cannot retain the money in equity and good conscience is too plain for argument. The whole matter comes down to a mere question of the power of the orphans' court.

A number of authorities were cited on both sides, a few only of which have any bearing upon the case. Many of them were applications to set aside sales before confirmation and payment of the purchase money; others were applications to set aside sales made by the sheriff. The power of the common pleas to set aside a sheriff's sale after confirmation, delivery of the deed and payment of the purchase money, was considered in the recent case of Evans v. Maury, 18 W. N. C. 377, 3 Cent. Rep. 137.

In that case the application was made by the defendant in the execution, alleging a fraud practiced upon him by the purchaser at the sheriff's sale, who was also the execution creditor. The proceeding was upon a rule to show cause why the confirmation should not be opened, the sale set aside, and the deed delivered up to be canceled. We held, for the reasons there stated, that the court could not, in this summary manner, deprive the purchaser of his property, but must be left to his remedy by bill in equity, or by ejectment. Some stress was laid upon the fact that the proceeding was summary in its nature, depriving the party of his right to a trial by jury, or of the careful consideration of the case which would follow a bill in equity and a reference to a master, in both of which forms of procedure the whole proceedings could be reviewed in an orderly manner by this court. The further reason was given that after the confirmation of the sale, delivery of the deed, and payment of the purchase money, the matter was ended and the court lost its grasp of the case. The parties and the subject matter were out of court. Moreover, there was no pretense that a fraud had been practiced upon the court. Under such circumstances, to bring a party into court by no other process than a rule to show cause, and upon such a rule to wrest from him his title to real estate, seemed to us an unwarranted exercise of power.

It requires but a moment's consideration to see that the facts of that case bear but little analogy to the case in hand. In Evans v. Maury the proceeding was upon the common-law side of the court, and was completed. Neither the parties, the subject-matter nor the fund were in court which, without any fraud practiced upon it, had given final judgment, and in effect dismissed the parties without day. In the case in hand, the proceeding was not in the form of a rule to show cause, but was a petition in the orphans' court; a court which, in its limited sphere, is a court of equity powers, and in all matters within its jurisdiction has as full authority to grant relief as any chancellor ever had. It was proceeded in precisely as if a bill had been filed on the equity side of the common pleas. There was the petition, which in the orphans' court is the equivalent of a bill in equity in the common pleas; there was an answer and a reference to an auditor to find the facts, and if desired, an issue might have been demanded and sent to the common pleas for trial; so that, so far as the form of proceeding is concerned, it differs in no essential degree from a bill in equity filed in the common pleas. No one doubts that relief could have been given in such a case in the latter form of proceeding.

Moreover, the orphans' court still retains its grasp over the guardian and the fund. Both are absolutely within its control. The purchase money for this land was paid to the former guardian and is now held by the present guardian. If he cannot retain it in equity and good conscience, who is better fitted to say so than the court which controls both the guardian and the fund? It would be a lame conclusion to refer such a question to a common-law court, or to another court of equity, whose equity powers in this particular matter are no greater than those of the orphans' court itself.

We must not lose sight of the fact that it is the purchasers who invoke the action of the orphans' court. They come into court and tender back the deed or a reconveyance of the property, and ask to have a palpable error corrected by which they have been obliged to pay a considerable sum of money for which it is admitted they have received no consideration. Surely the guardian, who acts under the control of that court, has no standing to object to its jurisdiction in a matter which affects the execution of the trust and the disposition of the funds in his hands. We are not embarrassed by the possible case of a purchaser who has paid his money and received his deed, and who objects to his property being wrested from him by that court.

The precise point involved has not been ruled in this State. Perhaps the nearest approach to it is George's App. 12 Pa. 260, where it was held that a bill of review, to correct a clear mistake in fact, on which a decree in partition was made, will lie more than three years after the decree, purchasers not having become interested in the estate.

It was said in that case by Justice Bell: "It must be admitted that a court of chancery would not in a case like this, entertain a bill of review; for here is neither suggestion of new matter discovered since the decree published, nor the averment of error apparent upon its face, one of which is said to be necessary to found such a prayer; 2 Madd. Ch. 537 et seq.; Wilson v. Webb, 2 Cox, 3; O'Brien v. O'Connor, 2 Ball & B. 154; nor can the decree complained of be regarded as wholly against the complainant; a feature also essential to a review in equity. Glover v. Portington, Freeman, Ch. 182; S. C. 1 Ch. Cas. 51.

"But where it is shown an injurious mistake exists, though in part ascribable to the party averring it, we do not think the orphans' court ought to be deterred from its correction by the sole fact that it is not apparent in the unassisted record. * * * In regard to the subject more immediately before us, we have recently had occasion to observe, more than once, that the orphans' court has from the beginning exercised the power of reviewing and modifying its proceedings and decrees, as an authority necessarily inherent and essential to the right discharge of its duties. On this point no statutory direction was given till the Act of October, 1840, which, however, is confined to reviews of alleged errors in the settled accounts of executors, administrators and guardians. This limits the period within which a review may be had in such cases to five years, but it leaves untouched the pre-existing practice in all other instances. Being thus unrestrained by the written law, I see no objection to the liberal exercise of the right to rehear and redress for the correction of manifest mistake, involving injury, tempered, however, by the application of a sound discretion, seeking to protect the rights of third persons, and which, in most cases, would dictate a refusal to interfere when the relative position of the original parties was materially changed, or the interests of third persons might be put to hazard."

The petition in this case is in the nature of a bill of review, a proceeding which it is believed the orphans' court has ample power to entertain. As was observed by Justice Bell in George's App. above cited, the power of reviewing its decrees had been exercised by the orphans' court prior to the passage of the Act of 1840. The object of said Act was to limit the exercise of this power to five years in certain cases, but it leaves untouched the pre-existing practice in all other cases. See also Downing's Est. 5 Watts, 90; Briggs' App. Id. 91; Clauser's Est. 1 Watts & S. 215; Stoever's App. 3 Watts & S. 154; Bunting's App. 4 Watts & S. 469; Pennypacker's App. 14 Pa. 430.

In the recent case of Milne's App. 99 Pa. 483, it was said by our brother Gordon that "We have no doubt about the power of the orphans' court to revise and correct its former adjudications, if in those adjudications it discovered a palpable mistake, produced either by its own inadvertence or by the blunder of the parties. A sense of fair dealing and justice would be authority enough in the absence of any other, for so holding. Nevertheless, other authority will be found, and that directly in point, in George's App. 12 Pa. 260, where the subject is so fully discussed that further argument from us is unnecessary."

This language is applicable here. It is no answer to this to say that Milne's App. was a bill of review under the Act of 1840, to correct an error in a previously confirmed administrator's account, for the Act of 1840, as before observed, did not confer a new power upon the orphans' court; it merely gave a bill of review as a matter of right in certain cases, and limited the time within which it might be exercised in those cases.

We are of opinion that the orphans' court has ample power to make the decree complained of. We also think it was not only justified upon the merits, but that it was required by the principles of common honesty. It would be a reproach to the law were it to fail to correct such a mistake as is disclosed by this record.

We desire to say also, in order to avoid misapprehension in the future, that it is at least doubtful whether the petition filed in this case upon which the sale was had, sets out sufficient facts to give the court below jurisdiction. It is admitted that the petition was filed under the Act of 1853. Indeed I do not know of any other Act which gives the orphans' court the power to order a private sale of the real estate of a minor. Said Act provides: "In all cases where real estate shall have been acquired by descent or last will, the orphans' court, and in all other cases the court of common pleas of the respective counties of this Commonwealth, shall have jurisdiction to decree the sale * * * of such real estate."

The petition in this case is of the most informal character, and does not set out any explanation of the title, nor is there even an averment that the title of the minors was derived by descent or last will, which is absolutely essential to give the orphans' court jurisdiction. Such a loose way of dealing in matters affecting the title to real estate is not to be commended, and may lead to serious trouble hereafter.

The decree is affirmed and the appeal dismissed, at the costs of the appellant.

John W. MATTERN, Plff. in Err.,

v.

Nathan G. McDIVITT, Admr. of David Whitesel, Deceased.

1. Mutual accounts, to prevent the operation of the Statute of Limitations, must be such as concern the trade of merchandise, and upon which an action would lie.
2. Where there is a book account on one side and a demand on the other, to toll the statute the demand must also be a book account.
3. The cases of Van Swearingen v. Harris, 1 Watts & S. 356; Adams v. Carroll, 85 Pa. 209, and Chambers v. Marks, 25 Pa. 296, explained.
4. A demand by an attorney at law, for professional services, will not toll the statute on a claim by the client, based on a demand for farm produce furnished.
5. The refusal by a party to a suit to produce at the trial thereof papers then admitted to be in his possession, having been duly notified so to do, but no order to produce them having been asked for—does not justify denunciation by the court in its charge, by reason of the tendency of such denunciation to mislead and prejudice the jury.
6. A rule of court providing that a copy of a book account sued on, duly filed and verified by affidavit, shall be admitted in evidence without further proof, unless the defendant file an affidavit that he believes injustice will be done if the plaintiff be not held to strict proof of his claim, construed and held to apply to a case where the suit is by an administrator on a decedent's book account.

(Decided October 4, 1886.)

ERROR to the Common Pleas of Huntingdon County, to review a judgment on a verdict for plaintiff in an action of debt. Reversed.

This action was brought May 22, 1882, on a book account beginning November 21, 1867, and ending June 18, 1879, against John W. Mattern, attorney at law, for farm produce furnished by plaintiff's intestate, who died in June, 1881.

The account, verified by affidavit of the administrator, was duly filed in accordance with the following rule of court:

"When the action is brought in whole or in part on a book account, if the plaintiff shall file with his declaration a copy of his book entries, with a statement of the credits to which he admits the defendant to be entitled, verified by an affidavit setting forth: that the copy of the charges filed is correctly taken from the plaintiff's book of original entries; that such charges were made at or about the time of their respective dates; that the goods were sold and delivered or the work done, at or about the time the charges were made in the book; that the charges are correct and the account just, and that the defendant is not entitled to any credits or to any other than there given, the account shall be deemed admitted; and on the trial such copy and statement, so verified and filed, shall be read to the jury, and shall be evidence of all such items as the book or books, if produced and duly proven, would be evidence; unless the defendant before or at the time of putting in his plea shall file his affidavit that he verily believes that injustice will be done to him, unless the plaintiff be compelled to produce his books, and subject himself to a cross examination, or held to strict proof of his claim; in which case such verified statement and copy shall not be received as evidence."

Pleas, nil debet, payment with leave, etc., and the Statute of Limitations.

The book account, sworn to by the administrator, was admitted in evidence, under objection that the rule of court did not apply to the book account of a decedent. First assignment of error.

Defendant claimed set-off by reason of professional services rendered the decedent. There was testimony showing that defendant was counsel for decedent in three suits against him, begun in 1877; that one was decided by arbitration in that year and no appeal taken; that another was marked "continued" January 21, 1879, and that the third was marked "continued," January 12, 1880.

The defendant was duly notified to produce at the trial all books or papers in his possession, explaining the matters in question in the cause. He admitted the possession of receipts from decedent, but refused to produce them. No order for their production was asked for.

The court, Hoy, P. J., charged, inter alia, as follows:

"[It is argued here that there were payments and credits on this account which would take it out of the statute, and receipts that are within the knowledge and in possession of the defendant. The defendant admitted on the witness stand that he had receipts from this plaintiff's intestate, David Whitesel.]

"Mr. Whitesel is dead and cannot appear before you, to give his version of the affair. If he were here, there would be less difficulty in arriving at what is the truth and real facts connected with the account, and these receipts if produced might throw much light upon it. But the receipts were not produced. He admitted on the stand that he had them, and on request of counsel for plaintiff to produce them, refused to do so. This conduct we say, gentlemen of the jury, is for your consideration.

"It is a very pertinent inquiry in a case like this, we think, whether it is honest and fair for a lawyer, who is the defendant, to go upon the stand and admit under oath that he has receipts in his possession of a man that is dead, and refuses to deliver them in court at the trial. It certainly does not go to show that he desired a fair and equitable trial of the case. [Where a man admits that he has papers in his possession that will throw light upon and explain accounts and papers of a dead man's estate, and refuses to produce them when called upon for the purpose, such conduct is neither fair, just nor honest; and we say to you that we have no patience with such conduct and think it is highly reprehensible.] Courts cannot and will not, we think, encourage any such conduct as that. There was, however, no way, as the case was presented, to compel the defendant to produce the receipts, or it would have been done. We do not think that it is creditable in anybody to withhold that which might throw light on a case of this kind on the one side or the other. * * * [But we say, according to the record and evidence, those services closed on the 12th of January, 1880; at that time John W. Matern had a claim against David Whitesel for services. So far as the record and the evidence in this case show, that was the end of his services rendered to this decedent.]" The second assignment of error specified the portions of the charge above in brackets.

The court further charged, inter alia, as follows:

"The plaintiff would be entitled to recover, in this case, whatever his account amounts to for six years back from the 12th of January, 1880, which would take you back to January, 12, 1874. You will go back to that time and include all the accounts up to the 12th of January, 1880." Third assignment of error.

The fourth and fifth assignments of error were to the same effect.

Messrs. R. Bruce Petriken and John W. Matern, for plaintiff in error:

Cited and relied upon Act March 27, 1713, §1; Hay v. Kramer, 2 Watts & S. 137; Lowber v. Smith, 7 Pa. 381; Marseilles v. Kenton's Exrs. 17 Pa. 238; Ingram v. Sherard, 17 Serg. & R. 347; Adams v. Carroll, 85 Pa. 214; Overton v. Tracey, 14 Serg. & R. 323; Evans v. See, 23 Pa. 88; Wickersham v. Russell, 51 Pa. 71; Foster v. Jack, 4 Watts, 334; Lichty v. Hugus, 55 Pa. 434; Chambers v. Marks, 25 Pa. 296; Hale's Exrs. v. Ard's Exrs. 48 Pa. 22.

Messrs. J. R. Simpson and Jno. M. Bailey, for defendant in error:

The court below is the best exponent of its own rules and its construction is accepted by the higher court as conclusive.

Duiley v. Green, 15 Pa. 118-128; Coleman v. Nantz, 68 Pa. 178; Gannon v. Fritz, 79 Pa. 303.

An administrator may make the affidavit.

Schupp v. Schupp, 17 W. N. C. 236; McCloy v. Maffett's Admrs. 59 Pa. 344.

To take an account out of the Statute of Limitations that would be otherwise barred by it "there must be mutual demands; each party must have a demand or right of action against the other."

Adams v. Carroll, 85 Pa. 209.

It is settled in Pennsylvania that an attorney has a right of action for his professional services.

Balsbaugh v. Frazer, 19 Pa. 95.

Notwithstanding the evidence of a reciprocal demand was introduced by defendant, it becomes evidence for the plaintiff.

Moses v. Bradley, 3 Whart. 272; Porter v. Seiler, 23 Pa. 424.

"Where there have been mutual accounts between the parties within six years, the Statute of Limitations does not apply to any part of either account."

Chambers v. Marks, 25 Pa. 296; Van Swearingen v. Harris, 1 Watts & S. 356.

Where a party suppresses evidence in his power, the presumption is that if produced it would make against him.

Church v. Church, 25 Pa. 278.

Testimony often consists in what is not proved as well as what is proved.

Frick v. Barbour, 64 Pa. 120.

Mr. Justice Trunkey delivered the opinion of the court:

"All actions upon account and upon the case, other than such accounts as concern the trade of merchandise between merchant and merchant, their factors or servants," shall be commenced or sued within six years next after the cause of such action or suit, and not after. This limitation in the Statute of 1713 is in identical phrase with the Statute of 21 James 1, chap. 16, upon the same subject, and had the courts construed it in accord with the legislative will as expressed, there would have been no difficulty in understanding it in the same way as it was finally understood in England, where it was settled that a transaction will not constitute an account, within the meaning of the exception, unless it is such that it would sustain an action of account, or an action on the case for not accounting. Inglis v. Haigh, 8 Mees. & W. 769; Cottam v. Partridge, 4 Scott, N. R. 819.

In commenting upon the Statute of Maine, the exception being in the same words, Chief Justice Marshall remarked: "It may reasonably be conceived that the Legislature had in contemplation to except those actions only for which account would lie. Be this as it may, the words certainly require that the action should be founded on an account. The account must be one 'which concerns the trade of merchandise.' * * * It is not an exemption from the Act attached to the merchant merely as a personal privilege, but an exemption which is conferred on the business as well as on the persons between whom that business is carried on. The account must concern the trade of merchandise; and this trade must be not an ordinary traffic between a merchant and any ordinary customer, but between merchant and merchant. This 'trade of merchandise' which can furnish an account protected by the exception, must be not only between merchant and merchant, but between the plaintiff and defendant." Spring v. Gray's Exrs. 6 Pet. 164 [31 U. S. bk. 8, L. ed. 358].

While the decisions of this court upon the statute are to be followed, it is well to keep the statute itself in view, not only for better understanding of judicial expression, but for guidance on points not yet adjudicated.

Among the cases relied on by the plaintiff to sustain the ruling of the court below is Van Schoerengen v. Harris, 1 Watts & S. 856, where the entire opinion touching the interpretation of the statute is as follows: "When there are mutual demands, if any item of such account be within six years before the commencement of the suit, such item is deemed equivalent to a subsequent promise reviving the debt. * * * It takes the case out of the statute, and it is immaterial whether the parties are merchants or not, as it goes on the ground of implied promise."

The latest case cited by him, Adams v. Carroll, 85 Pa. 209, rules that to constitute mutual accounts there must be mutual demands. And the exception to the statute has no application where the demand is altogether on one side although payments on account have been made.

He also refers to Chambers v. Marks, 25 Pa. 296, which reiterates that where there have been mutual accounts between two persons within six years, the statute does not apply to any part of either account; and it is added that a credit, to have the effect of taking an account out of the operation of the statute, must be proved to have been intended as a payment on the account.

It is manifest that the word "demand" in the cases cited is used in the sense of "account." It was never meant that where there was an account on one side, that a demand on the other, founded on note, bond, record or the like, constituted mutual accounts between the parties, within the exception.

In Louber v. Smith, 7 Pa. 381, the subject of the exception is defined thus: "A mutual account is when each has a demand or right of action against the other; as, for example, when A and B, dealing together, A sells B an article of furniture, or any other commodity, and afterwards B sells A property of the same or a different description, this constitutes a reciprocal demand, because A and B have a demand or right of action against each other. But this is not so when the sale is only by one to the other, whether it is to be paid for in cash or in kind; the manner of payment can surely make no difference. Nor will an overpayment alter this result."

As defined the account on each side relates to trade in merchandise. This may include labor or anything that is provable by book or original entry. Such account on one side is not enough. A demand on the other side founded on anything else "than such accounts as concern the trade of merchandise," is not sufficient to bring the account of the other within the exception.

The plaintiff's account consists of more than two score of items, beginning November 21, 1867, and ending June 18, 1879. There is no proof that during all that time the defendant sold and delivered anything to the plaintiff which is the subject of account as the word is used in the statute. There is testimony tending to show that the defendant performed professional services as attorney at law for the decedent in his lifetime, the value of which he claims as a set off. These services were rendered in suits at law, begun in 1877, and the court below assumed that the relation of attorney and client ceased on January 12, 1880. If this was so, the defendant's right of action for the value of the services accrued on that date. Footer v. Jack, 4 Watts, 384; Lichty v. Huges, 55 Pa. 484.

Is such a demand an account that concerns the trade of merchandise? No decision of this court compels us to say so and, in the teeth of the statute, to declare that it takes the plaintiff's account out of its operation. The plaintiff's demand is for a particular service, which no more constitutes an account than would a demand for loaned money. If not sued, or pleaded as a set-off, within six years from the time it became due, the statute would bar recovery. It had no effect upon the running of the statute against the plaintiff's account. Mutual demands or debts do not extinguish each other. Nor does either prevent the statute running against the other, unless both are such accounts as bring the case within the exception.

We discover no evidence to justify the court in instructing the jury that the defendant's services closed and he had a right of action on the 12th of January, 1880. But this is of little moment. The grave error was in instructing the jury that the case came within the exception in the Statute of Limitations. The second, third, fourth and fifth specifications of error are sustained.

The extracts from the charge set out in the first assignment were more likely to prejudice the jury against the defendant when read with the context than if read by themselves. The portion of the charge where these extracts occurred was well calculated to lead the jury to consider the court's opinion of the defendant's conduct, that it was unfair, unjust, dishonest and highly reprehensible, and that courts will not encourage any such conduct.

Moreover, the jury must have understood that there was no way to compel the defendant to produce books and papers containing pertinent evidence, or it would have been done. Of course the learned judge knew that the plaintiff had been content in serving a notice on the defendant to produce books and papers, which merely laid ground for him to prove contents in case they were not produced; and no steps had been taken for an order to produce such books or papers. The denunciation of the defendant by the learned judge was uncalled for by anything in the testimony or record, and must have had a tendency to mislead the jury from the evidence to the court's expressions respecting the defendant's conduct. Stokes v. Miller, 10 W. N. C. 241; Linn v. Commonwealth, 96 Pa. 285.

There was no error in the admission of the copy of the account which was filed with the declaration, as provided by the rule of court.

Judgment reversed and a venire facias de novo awarded.

LEHIGH VALLEY R. R. CO., Plff. in Err.,
v.

Ernestina GREINER et al.

1. A person who occupies a place of known danger upon a railroad car, after he has been warned of the dangerous character of the same, is guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law; and his widow and heirs will be precluded from claiming damages, for his death, when caused by injuries received while in such a position.

2. In a question of negligence where the facts and inferences therefrom are undisputed and are such that a rule of duty may be accurately defined, the question is for the court and not for the jury.

(Decided October 4, 1886.)

ERROR to the Common Pleas of Luzerne County, to review a judgment on a verdict in favor of plaintiffs in an action on the case for negligence of defendant, causing the death of plaintiffs' intestate. Reversed.

The plaintiffs' intestate, John C. Greiner, was employed by defendant Company in its repair shops at North Wilkesbarre. A shifting engine with a small platform car attached as a tender, and a long open car with benches in it called a "gondola" was by permission of the Company run from the shops to the lower part of the city for the purpose of carrying the workmen to their homes.

The engineer and brakemen on this train were in the regular employ of the Company but were paid additional compensation for this service by contribution levied on the persons who rode. The train had no regular schedule time and was run purposely to accommodate the men and stopped at those parts of the route where the men were in the habit of getting off.

The long, open car stood on a truck eleven inches higher than the truck of the tender, or tank car.

Greiner was in the habit of riding on the rear end of the tender, sitting on the platform, ten inches wide, with his feet dangling over the side or placed in the iron step depending from the side of the platform. He had been repeatedly warned that this was a dangerous place. Drummheller, the master mechanic, had told him not to sit there. The other men who used the train had also warned him that this was a dangerous place.

On the afternoon of the day when the accident happened which caused his death the train started from the shops as usual, except that it was about an hour earlier. There was room in the gondola car and in the tender where some of the men then, and habitually, sat. The engine stopped as usual at the places where the men got off, not at any regular stopping place or stations; and while standing at a private telegraph station of the Company it was run into by an engine which had been taken from the shops without authority, by a fireman who was running it down, for his own accommodation, to a switch below that point.

The gondola, or long open car, being higher than the tank car, was tilted up so that its forward bumpers were pushed over and upon the platform of the latter; and Greiner, who was sitting upon the platform, with his feet dangling over the side, was caught between the side of the car and the bumpers of the gondola, and so injured that he died within a few hours.

This action was brought by his widow and heirs to recover damages therefor.

On the trial before Rice, P. J., the jury rendered a verdict for plaintiffs, upon which judgment was entered; and defendant took this writ, assigning, inter alia, as error:

4. The action of the court in negating defendant's fourth and fifth points which were as follows:

4. That from the uncontradicted evidence, the deceased was, at the time of the accident, in a place of known danger, where he persisted in remaining in spite of repeated warnings; and that his negligence contributed to cause the accident by which he lost his life, and therefore the plaintiffs cannot recover. 5. That under all the evidence in the case the plaintiffs cannot recover.

5. The answer of the court to defendant's sixth point, which point and answer were as follows: If the jury believe the testimony of the witnesses in the case, the following facts have been established:

1. That at the time John Charles Greiner was killed, he was sitting between the tank car and gondola on a platform ten inches wide. 2. That the position was dangerous. 3. That he had been frequently warned not to occupy that place because it was dangerous. That under such a state of facts the said Greiner's conduct contributed to bring about the injury that caused his death and therefore the plaintiffs cannot recover in this suit.

Answer: We decline to charge as requested in that point, not because the jury may not be justified in inferring that the deceased was guilty of contributory negligence from these facts, but because it undertakes to have the court state, as matter of law, that contributory negligence would result from these facts, when we think it should be submitted to you as a question of fact. The point is therefore answered in the negative.

The evidence relied upon by defendant to support its fourth, fifth and sixth points is set forth in the opinion.

Messrs. H. W. Palmer and E. P. & J. V. Darling, for plaintiff in error:

It is not necessary to consider the relation of the deceased, Greiner, to the fireman, whose alleged negligence caused the accident; although this case is clearly to be distinguished from O'Donnell v. R. R. Co. 59 Pa. 239.

Even conceding Greiner to have been a passenger; the case is one of clear and undoubted contributory negligence on his part. He had been repeatedly warned of the dangerous character of the place where he sat.

R. R. Co. v. Jones, 95 U. S. 439 (Bk. 24, L. ed. 506); Camden & At. R. R. Co. v. Hoosey, 99 Pa. 492.

Riding upon the engine, even with the consent of the engineer, has been held negligence in se.

Illinois Cent. R. R. Co. v. Doggett, 34 Iowa, 284.

In Little Rock & Fort Smith R. Co. v. Miles, 13 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 10, the plaintiff in shipping a car load of cattle was directed by the station agent, with whom he had arranged the shipment, to ride on the top of the car in which his cattle were. He did so and was injured by the train running off the track. It was held that he was guilty of contributory negligence and could not recover.

In this State it has been held contributory negligence for a passenger to ride in a baggage car, even with the assent of the conductor in charge of the train.

Pa. R. R. Co. v. Langdon, 92 Pa. 21.

The rule laid down in that case is the same as that adopted by Mr. Wharton (Whart. Neg. § 367), and both the rule and the reasoning of Mr. Justice Paxson in his opinion have received the unqualified approval of the later text writers.

See Beach, Cont. Neg. §§ 54, 55.

Where a traveler voluntarily puts his arm out of a window, it must be regarded as negligence in se; and when that is the state of the evidence, it is the duty of the court to declare the act negligence in law. The negligence consisted in putting his limbs where they ought not to be and where they were liable to be broken without his ability to know whether danger was approaching.

Pittsburg & C. R. R. Co. v. McClurg, 56 Pa. 298.

On the same general point see Kentucky Cent. R. R. Co. v. Thomas, 79 Ky. 160; Houston & Tex. Cent. R. R. Co. v. Clemmons, 55 Tex. 88; Peoria & R. I. R. R. Co. v. Lane, 83 Ill. 448; Taylor v. Danville, O. & Ohio R. R. Co. 10 Bradw. (Ill.) 311.

It has been held that the Act of April 4, 1868, § 1, P. L. 58, Purd. Dig. 1268, pl. 6, applies to a person permitted to travel upon the railroad of a company, as a mail agent of the government.

Pa. R. R. Co. v. Price, 96 Pa. 256.

In Hand v. London, etc. R. Co. Q. B. May, 6, 1867, cited in 2 Wood, Railway Law, 1044, it was held that a person traveling as an employee is not a passenger.

The negligence complained of was that of a coemployee. The weight of authority is to the effect that all who work for a common master, or who are subject to a common control, or derive their compensation from a common source, and are engaged in the same general employment, working to accomplish the same general end, although it may be in different departments or grades of it, are coemployees who are held in law to assume the risk of one another's negligence.

Beach, Cont. Neg. § 109.

There may be a common employment, notwithstanding the two are employed in entirely different and separate departments of the common employment.

Thus, an engineer and a telegraph operator.

Slater v. Jewett, 85 N. Y. 61.

An engineer of a switch engine and a car repairer.

Boldt v. New York C. R. R. Co. 18 N. Y. 482; Chicago, etc. R. R. Co. v. Murphy, 53 Ill. 386; Valdez v. Ohio, etc. R. Co. 85 Ill. 500.

An engineer and the servants of a contractor, engaged in furnishing wood to the railroad under the contract, being on the same train.

Chicago, etc. R. R. Co. v. Keefe, 47 Ill. 108; Ryan v. Cumberland, etc. R. R. Co. 23 Pa. 384.

If the rule were otherwise, "How," says the court in the case last cited, "could the wearied laborer be allowed to ride home with the driver, without danger that the employer should be called to account for an accidental tilting of the cart?"

A conductor and a brakeman on another train.

Pittsburg, etc. R. R. Co. v. Devinney, 17 Ohio, 197.

A conductor and the servants of a contractor working upon his train.

Illinois, etc. R. R. Co. v. Cox, 21 Ill. 20.

A conductor and a station baggage master.

Colorado, etc. R. R. Co. v. Martin, 4 W. C. Rep. 563.

A brakeman and a car inspector.

Mackin v. Boston, etc. R. R. Co. 135 Mass. 201; Smith v. Potter, 46 Mich. 258; Ballou v. Chicago, etc. R. Co. 54 Wis. 259.

A brakeman and the mechanics in a repair shop.

Wonder v. Baltimore, etc. R. R. Co. 32 Md. 418; Bezel v. New York, etc. R. R. Co. 70 N. Y. 171.

A carpenter or other employees of a railroad and the men in charge of the train on which they are carried to their work.

Seaver v. Boston, etc. R. R. Co. 14 Gray, 466; Gillshannon v. Stony Brook R. R. Corp. 10 Cush. 228; Morgan v. Vale of Neath R. Co. 5 Best & S. 736; S. C. L. R. 1 Q. B. 149, and 14 Week Rep. 144; Vick v. N. Y. etc. R. R. 95 N. Y. 267; Brick v. Rochester, etc. R. R. 98 N. Y. 211.

Car repairer of cars on track in yard and "car dropper."

Campbell v. Pa. R. R. Co. 17 W. N. C. 73; S. C. 2 Cent. Rep. 46, and cases cited.

The general rule is that where a servant in the employment of his master does an act which he is not employed to do, the master is not responsible.

Towanda Coal Co. v. Heeman, 86 Pa. 418; Sheridan v. Charlick, 4 Daly, 388, cited and approved in Towanda Coal Co. v. Heeman, supra; Bard v. Yohn, 26 Pa. 482.

It was not necessary to show a want of authority from the Company to run the engine.

Flower v. Pa. etc. R. R. Co. 69 Pa. 210.

Messrs. S. J. Strauss and John Lynch, for defendants in error:

If the act of Carman in running the engine was unauthorized, it was a matter for positive proof in defense and for the jury.

Lackawanna & B. R. Co. v. Chenevix, 52 Pa. 382; Whart. Neg. §§ 167, 171, 179.

The moment Greiner quit work for the day and left the shop on his way home, the relation of master and servant between him and the Company ceased. He was no longer, if so at any time, a fellow servant of Carman.

Baird v. Pettit, 70 Pa. 477.

"A passenger is a person who rides upon the company's trains, with its assent, not at the time being in its employ; and any evidence which shows such assent is sufficient to create the relation."

Pa. R. R. Co. v. Price, 96 Pa. 256; Wood, Ry. Law, § 298, p. 1045; Phila. etc. R. R. Co. v. Derby, 14 How. 468 (55 U. S. bk. 14, L. ed. 802); Wood, Ry. Law, 1040, note 2.

It is sufficient that a person is upon the train with the assent of the company, although he is to be carried free.

Phila. etc. R. R. Co. v. Derby, supra; Crosby v. Pa. R. R. Co. 86 Pa. 189.

Greiner had quit work for the day, at the shops where he was employed. He was no longer "engaged or employed," and was not therefore included in the "third class" designated by Mr. Justice Paxson in Pa. R. R. Co. v. Price, 96 Pa. 256.

See also Baird v. Pettit, 70 Pa. 477.

"No matter how negligent I may have been in putting myself in a particular position, I can recover for injuries inflicted on me by a party who could have avoided injuring me by the exercise of the ordinary care which is usual with prudent persons under the circumstances."

Whart. Neg. §§ 325-327. See also Priest v. Nichols, 116 Mass. 401.

Where a passenger upon a railway car was himself guilty of a want of care, but it did not contribute to the accident whereby he was injured, or only remotely contributed to it, he will not thereby be prevented from recovering.

Thirteenth, etc. R. Co. v. Boudrou, 92 Pa. 475; Creed v. Pa. R. R. Co. 86 Pa. 139.

To defeat recovery the negligence of the party injured must have been of such a character as to draw on him the injury.

Whart. Neg. § 130.

The doctrine of contributory negligence ceases when the person inflicting the injury was guilty of gross negligence.

Whart. Neg. § 131.

The plaintiffs' case did not establish negligence on the part of Greiner which contributed to his injury. That was a part of the defense, and was therefore for the jury.

Weiss v. Pa. R. R. Co. 79 Pa. 387; Pa. R. R. Co. v. Weber, 76 Pa. 157; Schum v. Pa. R. R. Co. 16 W. N. C. 305; Johnson v. West Chester & Phila. R. R. Co. 70 Pa. 857; Germantown, etc. R. Co. v. Walling, 97 Pa. 55.

Where a man is guilty of negligence which produces mischief to another, he has no right to say part of that mischief would not have occurred, if you had not been guilty of wrong; when the plaintiff's negligence forms no part of the immediate cause of the accident it cannot be set up.

Greenland v. Chaplin, 5 Wels. H. & G. 243.

So where plaintiff, contrary to the rules of the company, is in one part of the mine where he is injured by insufficient machinery, this is no defense.

Shearm. & Redf. Neg. p. 32, note 2.

While standing on the platform of one of a train of cars going very slowly over a long bridge in Pennsylvania just after leaving the depot, plaintiff was injured by a collision resulting from a defect in a car. He sued the company. Held, that under all the circumstances the question of his contributory negligence was for the jury.

Goodrich v. Pa. & N. Y. R. R. & Canal Co. 29 Hun, 50.

A passenger on a ferry boat approaching the landing bridge stood outside of the chain. The boat collided with the wharf or bridge; the passenger was injured. Held, not a question of contributory negligence and for the jury.

28 Alb. L. J. 3. See also Stringham v. Stewart, 1 Cent. Rep. 779.

A company which, although not doing a general business as a carrier of passengers, uses a track, an engine and cars to carry its workmen to and from their work, and allows other passengers to ride, and receives payment for such carrying, is bound to keep its means of transportation reasonably safe and sufficient, and is liable to a person who, while carried for pay on its engine, is injured by a defect which might have been prevented.

PA.

Millwood Coal and Coke Co. v. Madison, 1 Cent. Rep. 836.

It is not contributory negligence per se for a passenger to ride on the lower step of the front platform of a crowded street car without objection by the driver.

West Phila. Pass. R. Co. v. Gallagher, 16 W. N. C. 418.

Mr. Justice Clark delivered the opinion of the court:

It is a principle of law, well settled in this State, that where a man negligently and without excuse places himself in a position of known danger, and thereby suffers an injury at the hands of another, either wholly or partially by means of his own act, he cannot recover damages for the injury sustained. The contributory negligence which prevents recovery for an injury, however, must be such as co-operates in causing the injury, and without which the injury would not have happened. Gould v. McKenna, 86 Pa. 302.

The true test is found in the affirmative of the question, Did the plaintiff's negligence directly contribute in any degree, to the production of the injury complained of? If it did, then there can be no recovery; if it did not, it is not to be considered. Creed v. Pa. R. R. Co. 86 Pa. 139; Phila. City Pass. R. Co. v. Boudrou, 92 Pa. 480.

The question of negligence is ordinarily a question of fact and ought to be submitted, under proper instructions, to the determination of a jury. Where the facts are disputed, where there is any reasonable doubt as to the inference to be drawn from them, or where the measure of duty is ordinary and reasonable care and the degree varies according to the circumstances, the question cannot, in the nature of the case, be considered by the court, it must be submitted to the jury. Gramlich v. Wurst, 86 Pa. 78.

But where the facts and the inferences therefrom are undisputed, where the precise measure of duty is determinate, the same under all circumstances, where a rule of duty in a given exigency may be certified and accurately defined, the question is for the court and not the jury. McCully v. Clarke, 40 Pa. 406; Reeves v. R. R. Co. 30 Pa. 454; Schum v. Pa. R. R. Co. 107 Pa. 8.

It has been held in a number of cases that it is the plain, imperative duty of a traveler, before crossing the track of a railroad, to stop, look and listen for approaching trains; and his failure so to do in case of injury has been declared, not to be evidence of negligence merely, but negligence per se, and therefore a question for the court. R. R. Co. v. Heileman, 49 Pa. 60; Pa. R. R. Co. v. Beale, 73 Pa. 504; Reading & C. R. R. Co. v. Ritchie, 102 Pa. 425.

So, in O'Donnell v. Allegheny Valley R. R. Co. 59 Pa. 239, it was held that, regardless of the rules of a railroad company, the baggage car of a passenger train is an improper place for a passenger to ride, unless under the circumstances it appears that he is riding there by the permission of the conductor and for the benefit of the company.

In Pa. R. R. Co. v. Langdon, 92 Pa. 21, it was said the baggage car is a known place of danger; it differs from the cowcatcher and the platform in this respect only in degree; and a passenger who voluntarily left his proper place in the passenger car of a railroad company, in violation of the rules, to ride in the baggage car, or other known place of danger, could not recover for an injury thus received partially in consequence of his own act.

So in Camden & At. R. R. Co. v. Hoosey, 99 Pa. 492, a passenger, owing to the crowded condition of the cars, was unable to find a seat; although there was standing room inside, he stepped outside under the pretense of finding a seat in another car, but remained upon the platform, where by a jolt of the cars he was thrown to the ground and injured; it was held that he had been guilty of such contributory negligence as to preclude his right of recovery, and that the court should so have instructed the jury. "Assuming for the present," says our brother Sterrett in that case, "that the company was justly chargeable with negligence resulting in injury to the plaintiff below, and that under the circumstances he was not guilty of contributory negligence, in passing from car to car in search of a seat while the train was in rapid motion, can it be pretended that it would not be gross negligence in him to voluntarily take a position near the outer edge of the platform and remain there until by an ordinary jolt of the car he lost his equilibrium and was thrown off?"

So in Payne v. Reese, 12 W. N. C. 97, an employee of a mining company while engaged in the performance of his duties, fell into a hole in the ground caused by steam escaping from an underground waste way, and it was held, Gordon, J., that if at the time and place of the injury, the plaintiff saw the steam issuing from the ground and deliberately walked into it, and was thus precipitated into the excavation, he was, as matter of law, guilty of negligence which contributed to the accident, and that he could not recover.

In Phila. W. & B. R. R. Co. v. Stinger, 78 Pa. 219, it is declared to be the duty of an engineer, when his train is approaching a public highway, if danger is to be apprehended, to give a proper warning, by the whistle or otherwise, and that a failure so to do is negligence per se.

On the other hand, in Pa. R. R. Co. v. Barnett, 59 Pa. 265, it was said to be negligence to sound the alarm whistle under a bridge, while a traveler was in the act of passing over it.

In all these cases the act complained of, whether of omission or commission, was an act unaffected by any circumstance which might vary or shift the standard or degree of care; and in cases of this character when the facts and inferences fairly arising therefrom are undisputed, the question of negligence is one for the court and not for the jury.

In the case at bar it is undisputed that Greiner, at the time of the injury, was riding on the rear end of the tender, sitting upon the platform, which was only ten inches wide, with his legs and feet extending down over the end of the platform at the side of the tender. This was, of course, a place of known danger; any man of common sense must have known that this was a place of great peril, and especially was this so, on account of the peculiar construction of the gondola, and of the tender, of which the deceased had been informed; the former stood upon a truck eleven inches higher than the latter; so that, in the event of a slight collision, the truck of the gondola was liable to mount and ride upon the truck of the tender.

As was said in Little Rock, etc. R. Co. v. Miles, 13 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 10: "There are certain portions of every railroad train which are so obviously dangerous for a passenger to occupy and so plainly not designed for his reception that his presence there will constitute contributory negligence as a matter of law, and preclude him from claiming damages for injuries received while in such position; a passenger who voluntarily and unnecessarily rides upon the engine or the tender, or upon the pilot or bumper of the locomotive, or upon the top of a car, or upon the platform, cannot be said to be in the exercise of that caution and discretion which the law requires of all persons who are of full age, of sound mind and of ordinary intelligence."

The gondola had been fitted up expressly for the purpose; it was provided with seats for the workmen to occupy, and it is not alleged that there was insufficient room for all; there was no necessity and therefore no excuse for anyone to leave the place provided, to sit upon the narrow platform of the tender. Nor is it disputed that Greiner had been warned, repeatedly warned, of the danger he incurred. His fellow workmen on many different occasions, some of them referring to their experience as railroad men, told him not to sit there; that it was a dangerous place; to some, he said he could get off easier, to others, that he could take care of himself and to others, it was none of their business. Matthew Watt told him it was a dangerous place; he showed him how little it required to raise the gondola over the bumper or platform of the tender in front of it, not more than a couple of inches, and that if the engine should run off the track, or any accident occur and he should happen to lose his hold and fall off, he was in a place of the greatest danger. The answer he made to this was "Mind your own business."

Mr. Drumbheller, the master mechanic, testifies:

Q. Where do you work?

A. At the Lehigh Valley shops.

Q. What is your business there?

A. Master mechanic.

Q. How long have you been there at work?

A. I have been there since the shop has been built, since '72 or '71.

Q. Were you acquainted with Greiner?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Whether in coming down on that train had you noticed him sitting between the cars?

A. I have, yes, sir.

Q. Did you ever say anything to him on the subject?

A. I did.

Q. State what you said to him?

A. I told him that was a dangerous place; it was dangerous for him to sit there.

Q. Did you tell him that more than once?

A. I did.

Q. How many times?

A. I cannot tell you how many times, a number of times, though.

Q. Was it a dangerous place?

A. It was a dangerous place. He was in danger of dropping off on to the rail and having the rear car run over him.

Q. Was it dangerous on any other account?

A. There was danger of being run into—anything like that, the cars colliding, being in between them.

Q. Whether that is not the most dangerous place on the train?

A. I should think so. I should consider it so.

Q. What did Greiner say when you warned him that that was a dangerous place?

A. Oh, he said that he was all safe there; would leave the place reluctantly; that was on one or two occasions he done that.

Q. That is to say, when you spoke to him he got out of it?

A. Yes, he got out, but he got out reluctantly; he thought he was safe there, perfectly safe.

Q. That is what he said, is it?

A. Yes, sir.

He was, therefore, at the time of the injury in a place of known danger; he had been repeatedly warned of the fact; he was ordered by his employer to occupy some other place, which order he sometimes sullenly obeyed. He put himself in this place of danger voluntarily, and recklessly and persistently continued to occupy it, in violation of the express direction of Mr. Drumheller, and in disregard of the often repeated warnings of his friends and fellow workmen. It is beyond all contradiction that the occupancy of this place of danger caused or contributed to his death; if he had been sitting on the gondola, or even upon the engine or the tender, he could not have been harmed, the only effect of the collision being to cause the gondola to ride on the platform of the tender, where the deceased was sitting.

Very similar to this is the case of R. R. Co. v. Jones, 95 U. S. 439 [Bk. 24, L. ed. 506]; Jones was one of a party of men employed by a railroad company in constructing and repairing its roadway. They were usually conveyed by the company to and from the place where their services were required, and a box car was assigned to their use. Although on several occasions forbidden to do so, and warned of the danger, Jones on returning from work one evening rode on the pilot or bumper of the locomotive when the train, in passing through a tunnel, collided with cars standing on the track, and he was injured. There was ample room for him in the box car; all in it were unhurt. It was held that as he would not have been injured had he used ordinary care and caution, he was not entitled to recover against the company.

Mr. Justice Swayne, delivering the opinion of the court, says: "The plaintiff had been warned against riding on the pilot and forbidden to do so. It was next to the cowcatcher, and obviously a place of peril, especially in case of collision. There was room for him in the box car. He should have taken his place there. He could have gone into the box car in as little if not less time than it took to climb to the pilot. The knowledge, assent or direction of the company's agents as to what he did is immaterial. If told to get on anywhere, that the train was late and that he must hurry, this was no justification for taking such a risk. As well might he have obeyed a suggestion to ride on the cowcatcher, or put himself on the track before the advancing wheels of the locomotive. The company, though bound to a high degree of care, did not insure his safety. He was not an infant nor non compos. The liability of the company was conditioned upon the exercise of reasonable and proper care and caution on his part. Without the latter, the former could not arise. He and another who rode beside him were the only persons hurt upon the train. All those in the box car, where he should have been, were uninjured. He would have escaped also if he had been there. His injury was due to his own recklessness and folly. He was himself the author of his misfortune. This is shown with as near an approach to a demonstration as anything short of mathematics will permit."

If the testimony in this case is true, and it is neither contradictory nor conflicting, nor are the witnesses discredited, Greiner was, without doubt, guilty of the grossest negligence, and the court should have so instructed the jury.

The fourth and fifth assignments of error are therefore sustained.

The view we have taken of this case renders it wholly unnecessary that we should consider the remaining questions upon the record.

The judgment is reversed.

Lewis HECK, Plff. in Err.,
v.

Eugene BORDA.

1. A lease of an iron property, which was to continue as long as a royalty of $1,000 a year was paid and which gave the lessor the option to terminate the lease upon the nonpayment of the royalty and further contained a provision for expending 25 per cent more than the first year's royalty in putting the furnace in working order, is a lease from year to year and not a lease at will.
2. In an action upon a covenant in such a lease, it was error for the court below to grant a nonsuit on the ground that it was a lease at will and that the tenant, before breach, had assigned his interest; the case should have been submitted to the jury on the evidence tending to prove breach of covenant.

(Decided October 4, 1886.)

ERROR to Common Pleas No. 3 of Philadelphia County, to review a judgment of compulsory nonsuit. Reversed.

This was an action of covenant brought by Lewis Heck, the lessor, against Eugene Borda, the lessee, for a loss by fire. The claim is based on the two following covenants:

"Should this lease terminate from any cause, the said party of the second part agrees to leave the property in as good condition as when put in blast, wear and tear excepted."

"In case of stoppage, the party of the second part agrees to furnish a watchman, or protect the property by insurance."

The material provisions of the lease are set out fully in the opinion.

The lessee, Borda, remained in possession under the lease until 1882, when he transferred the lease to Knotwell who went into possession and afterward, on May 11, 1882, the furnace property was injured by fire. Whereupon this suit was brought on the above covenants.

It was conceded that the fire took place during a "stoppage" and that there was no insurance, and there was some evidence that no watchman had been employed by the defendant.

The defendant, at the conclusion of the plaintiff's testimony, moved for a compulsory nonsuit, on the ground that the lease created an estate at will only and that the assignment prior to the fire put an end to it. The nonsuit was granted and subsequently the court in banc refused to take it off. Plaintiff took this writ assigning for error this action of the court.

Mr. J. Howard Gendell, for plaintiff in error:

It may be conceded that an estate at will is so infirm in its nature that it cannot be assigned, but an assignment with notice to the landlord puts an end to it. But this rule applies only to estates at will of the simplest kind; that is, to those which are absolutely terminable at any time, at the mere will or caprice of either party, without prior notice, according to the definition in Co. Litt. 55 a.

Any strengthening whatever of the tenant's estate will give him an interest which can be assigned. No one, for instance, doubts the assignability of an estate from year to year.

Taylor, Land. & T. § 58; 4 Kent, Com. 114.

There is nothing in the words of the lease or in the mode of creating the estate to prevent it being an estate for life. The words, "lease," "lessor," "lessee," "demise," "grant," etc., etc., apply to estates for life as well as to those for years, etc.

2 Bl. Com. 317, 318; Litt. 57 (Co. Litt. 42 b.)

Where no definite term is mentioned, the grant is construed to convey the largest estate possible; i. e., where there are no words of inheritance, an estate for life.

2 Bl. Com. 120, 121; 4 Kent, Com. 25; Taylor, Land. & T. § 52.

Every indefinite estate is an estate for life, although it may terminate earlier, even if the termination is by the act or default of the lessee. This rule is quoted in all the text books, from 2 Bl. Com. 121, Co. Litt. 42 a.

Among the examples of life estates given by Coke (supra) are these—"If a man grant an estate to a woman dum sola fuit, or durante viduitate, or quamdiu se bene gesserit, * * * or so long as the grantee dwell in such a house, or so long as he pay £10, * * * or for any like uncertain time, which time as Bracton saith, is tempus indeterminatum."

"If a man make a lease of a manor that at the time of the lease is worth £20 per annum to another, till £100 be paid, in this case because the annual profits of the land are uncertain he hath an estate for life."

This passage from Co. Litt. is cited as law in all the text books.

Woodfall, Land. & T. 5th Lond. ed. 1843, 70; Taylor, Land. & T. § 53; Wood, Land. & T. § 56; 4 Kent, Com. 26; Bisset, Life Est. 7; Cruise, Real Prop. 106, §§ 6-8; 1 Washb. Real Prop. 88, 89.

Our case falls within the very words of one of the examples given. The estate was to continue as long as the lessee paid a certain sum.

A lease to a tenant as long as he may desire to use the house for a drug store creates an estate for life, determinable by failure to use it.

Thomas v. Thomas, 2 C. E. Green, 256.

So, a lease during the time that salt works should be erected and used on the land creates an estate for life, subject to be defeated.

Hurd v. Cushing, 7 Pick. 169.

The introduction of words of inheritance would make the estate a fee simple determinable. A demise to A. B., his heirs and assigns for such time as he pays rent, etc., is a perpetual lease. On default, the lessor only and not the lessee may elect to consider it forfeited.

Folts v. Huntley, 7 Wend. 210.

A lease for 100 years, with provision that the lessee, his heirs and assigns, may hold the premises so long as he and they shall think proper after the expiration of the term, at the same rent, is not determinable by the lessor after the end of the term; at least not without making compensation for improvements.

Lewis v. Effinger, 30 Pa. 281, 286.

If we are wrong respecting the life interest, this is at least an estate from year to year, and therefore assignable.

Taylor, Land. & T. § 58; 4 Kent, Com. 114.

"At this day a tenancy at will cannot arise without express grant or contract. All general tenancies * * * are by implication and constructively from year to year."

2 Preston, Abstracts of Title, 25.

There are no express words in this lease reducing the term from such an estate to one at will only. The presumption is that it is from year to year.

Wood, Land. & T. § 22, p. 66.

A tenancy at will exists only nominally, and is, in fact, a tenancy from year to year.

Logan v. Herron, 8 Serg. & R. 478; Clark v. Smith, 25 Pa. 137.

In no authority is the rule stated weaker than in Taylor's Landlord & Tenant, §§ 55, 59 and 61, in which it is said in substance that if any circumstances, payment of rent or otherwise, appear referable to an annual holding, the term is from year to year, and not at will.

Certain cases in Massachusetts were cited by the defendant in the court below. These are not authority, for in Massachusetts and Maine there is no tenancy from year to year.

Taylor, Land. & T. § 61.

It is admitted to be a breach of the covenant to restore in good condition, unless that covenant is affected by a subsequent clause.

Hoy v. Holt, 91 Pa. 88.

That subsequent clause "In case of destruction by fire or storm, necessitating the stoppage of the furnace, the repairs of the same will be a matter of mutual agreement." Being an independent covenant, it neither supercedes, qualifies, nor restricts the prior covenant. A covenant to repair is neither superseded, nor qualified, nor restricted as to amount by a covenant to insure for a specified amount.

Dugby v. Atkinson, 4 Campb. 275.

The covenant to furnish a watchman or protect by insurance was also broken. The burden of proof of compliance with this covenant was on defendant. Where a matter is peculiarly within the knowledge of the other party, he must prove it.

Greenl. Ev. §§ 74, 79.

Messrs. Crawford & Dallas, for defendant in error:

"Leases for an uncertain time are prima facie leases at will."

Wood, Land. & T. ed. 1881, p. 32.

"A person who goes in under an agreement that he may occupy * * * until a certain contingency happens, and generally, without stopping to recapitulate all the special instances in which a tenancy at will may arise, it may be said that in all cases, where a person enters into the possession of the premises of another by his permission, no definite term of occupancy binding upon the parties being agreed upon, he is a mere tenant at will, and this, too, irrespective of the question whether he occupies rent free, or pays rent therefor."

Id. p. 38, 84.

"In order to create a tenancy into a tenancy for an uncertain period from year to year, there must be a reservation of an annual rent; and unless there is such a reservation, the tenancy is prima facie only a tenancy at will."

Id. pp. 84-6.

"The courts latterly are inclined to construe all leases at will at an annual rent, as leases from year to year. But when the lease in terms creates only a tenancy at will, the fact that rent is reserved, and paid in pursuance of such reservation, does not change the character of the tenancy. The intention of the parties if clearly expressed will control."

Id. pp. 87-8, referring to Bastow v. Cor, 11 Q. B. 122, where the court held that the meaning of the reservation is that the tenant shall pay at such rate during the time for which he may occupy.

The reservation of a yearly rent is not inconsistent with a tenancy at will.

Dixie v. Davies, 7 Wels. H. & G. 89; Co. Litt. 556; Walker v. Giles, 6 C. B. 662.

In Murray v. Cherrington, 99 Mass. 229, a written lease of a house at a certain annual rent for a term to begin when said house is suitable for occupancy by the lessee, and undefined in duration, except by a stipulation that if, after two years from the time when the lessee should move in, the lessor should wish to live there, he might do so, and the lessee might then retain, if he should desire, certain rooms "for such term as may be agreeable to us both," was held to create only a tenancy at will and the provision respecting the two years was held not to change that construction.

This lease was in writing, and it is only parol leases that are by statute made leases at will only, in Massachusetts, where leases from year to year do exist. The plaintiff in error is in error in stating that there is no tenancy from year to year there. See the references to his citation of Taylor, Land. & T. p. 61; Aukley v. Warner, 11 Gray, 48.

See also Gardner v. Hazleton, 121 Mass. 494; Say v. Stoddard, 27 Ohio St. 478; Lewis v. Effinger, 30 Pa. 281-5; and Effinger v. Lewis, 32 Pa. 367.

It is the lessee's will which was exercised here, so that it is not material to consider the effect of the will of the lessor.

The suggestion that if the tenancy were at the will of the lessee, by the old law it must also be at the will of the lessor (Wood on Landlord & Tenant, page 81 and references there), and therefore the lessor could, after the lessee had made large expenditures for material, terminate the lease to the lessee's great injury, is an error, as in Pennsylvania a lease at the will of the lessee would not have that consequence.

Lewis v. Effinger and Effinger v. Lewis.

If it were a license merely, revocable at will, if on the faith of it the licensee had made large expenditures, the licensee would have an equity against revocation without compensation, an estoppel founded on equity only, not a common-law term of years under a lease, although such a lease or license would still be at the will of the lessee or licensee.

It is not disputed that a tenant at will may end his tenancy at any time he pleases, instantly, and without notice. And any act of the tenant declaring it at an end, or inconsistent with his tenancy, as by assignment and notice thereof to his landlord, will terminate it.

Wood, Land. & T. pp. 47, 49.

And the defendant's letter of May 11, 1882, one year before the fire, declared both his termination of his own tenancy and his assignment to Knotwell.

Notwithstanding the prevalent theory that the general rule is well expressed by saying that the burden of proof lies on the party who asserts the affirmative of the issue, yet the true view is that the burden is upon the party undertaking to prove a point. Whether the party desiring the judgment of the court asserts an affirmative or a negative proposition, on him lies the burden of proof. And such is the Roman law.

Wharton on Evidence, 2d ed. §§ 353-355.

Whenever the plaintiff bases his action on a negative allegation, the burden is on him to prove such allegation.

Id. note 1, p. 308; Id. § 357; and cases referred to; 1 Phillips, Evidence, *812; Amos v. Hughes, 1 Moody & R. 464; Mills v. Barber, 1 Mees. & W. 427; Peck v. Houghtaling, 35 Mich. 127.

See also Sonard v. Leggett, 7 Carr. & P. 615; Belcher v. McIntosh, 8 Carr. & P. 720; Osborn v. Thompson, 9 Carr. & P. 337; Shilcock v. Passman, 7 Carr. & P. 291; Bell v. Reed, 4 Binn. 127; Chambers v. Jaynes, 4 Pa. 39; Sartwell v. Wilcox, 20 Pa. 117; Hubbard v. Wheeler, 17 Pa. 425; Patterson v. Bank, 4 Watts & S. 42.

Mr. Justice Sterrett delivered the opinion of the court:

This action of covenant by lessor against lessee, for damages by fire, is based on the two following covenants in the lease, viz.: 1. "Should this lease terminate from any cause the said party of the second part agrees to leave the property in as good condition as when put in blast, wear and tear excepted." 2. "In case of stoppage the party of the second part agrees to furnish a watchman, or protect the property by insurance."

The lease under seal, dated January 17, 1882, was duly executed, acknowledged and recorded. After describing the demised premises, consisting of about fifteen acres of land on which were erected a blast furnace and other buildings used in connection therewith, the lease provides as follows: "This lease or grant to continue as long as the said party of the first part receives a revenue of no less than $1,000 a year royalty on account of iron made, or on account of iron to be made; and the said party of the first part further agrees that he will at any time within three years of this date sell and convey by good and sufficient warrantee deeds, all of the above described property for the sum of twenty thousand dollars ($20,000) payable, etc. * * * and the party of the first part further agrees that he will allow one half of the expense of putting the furnace in working condition; provided however that his half shall not exceed $1,250." In consideration thereof the lessee agrees to pay "fifty cents per ton of twenty-two hundred and sixty-eight pounds for each and every ton he may make at said furnace. Payments to be made at the furnace office on or before the 15th day of each month."

"The amount to be expended in putting the furnace in working order (the half of which as herein before stated is not to exceed $1,250) is to be paid out of the first accruing rent."

"It is also expressly understood that in case the party of the second part fail to pay to the party of the first part a royalty of at least $1,000 per year, this lease shall at the option of the party of the first part become null and void."

If the lease gave defendant no greater interest in the premises than a mere tenancy at will, it must be conceded that the judgment of nonsuit was rightly entered; but, on the other hand, if it vested in him at least a tenancy from year to year, as we think it did, the case should have been submitted to the jury on the evidence tending to prove the breaches of covenant declared on. It is unnecessary to refer to the evidence tending to sustain the breaches assigned. Suffice it to say, the testimony on that subject is quite sufficient to have warranted its submission to the jury.

The provisions of the lease above quoted clearly show it was intended to create at least a tenancy from year to year. It is to continue as long as the royalty of $1,000 a year is paid. The express authority to terminate the lease in the event of nonpayment of the minimum annual royalty tends also to exclude the inference of power to terminate it at will. It cannot be an estate at will unless terminable at the will of either party. The provision of expending 25 per cent more than the first year's minimum royalty in putting the furnace in working order also shows conclusively that the tenancy at will was not contemplated by the parties. The lease given in evidence should have been construed to be a lease from year to year, and the case should have been submitted to the jury on the evidence tending to prove breaches of covenant on the part of the lessee.

Judgment reversed and a procedendo awarded.

Clinton LEVAN et al., Plffs. in Err.,

Mary A. MILHOLLAND et al.

1. A judgment against administrators de bonis non, of a deviser, with notice to his devisees for life and in remainder, under section 24 of Act of June 16, 1836, Purd. Dig. 108, pl. 28, has all the effect of a judgment de terris; and a sheriff's sale under such judgment divests a title under the devise.

2. In actions against executors or administrators of a decedent who has left real estate, where the plaintiff intends to charge such real estate with the payment of his debts, the widow and heirs or devisees, or the guardians of such as are minors, are proper parties.

3. A sheriff's return, that he served the summons in a case on the guardian of a minor, cannot be contradicted in a collateral action.

4. A reversal of a judgment, after a sheriff's sale of real estate thereon, cannot affect the title of the purchasers at such sale.

5. After acknowledgment of a sheriff's deed the title of the sheriff's vendee cannot be affected by mere irregularities, however gross.

6. An erroneous judgment or an irregular execution, not void, can be set aside only by direct and appropriate action by parties having an interest in the same, and not by a collateral attack under cover of any other proceeding.

(Decided October 4, 1886.)

ERROR to the Common Pleas of Berks County, to review a judgment in favor of defendants in ejectment. Affirmed.

The facts and questions raised are stated in the opinion.

Mr. E. H. Deysher, for plaintiffs in error:

The Act of February 24, 1834, § 34, P. L. 77, provides that "In all actions against the executors or administrators of a decedent who shall have left real estate, where the plaintiff intends to charge such real estate with the payment of his debt, the widow and heirs or devisees, and the guardians of such as are minors, shall be made parties thereto. * * * And if notice of such writ shall not be served on such widow and heirs or devisees and their guardians, the judgment obtained in such action shall not be levied or paid out of the real estate of such widow, heirs or devisees as shall not have been served with notice of such writ."

The plaintiff should first proceed on a judgment against the executor or administrator. Having obtained such a judgment, the next step is a scire facias against the owners of the land.

Atherton v. Atherton, 2 Pa. 112.

The record of the action admitted in evidence shows upon its face that a rule to arbitrate was taken in the action before a guardian was appointed for the minor children of Albert Miller, and before application to the court for the appointment of such guardian, and that at no time during these proceedings was there an appearance for them by guardian or otherwise, and that it does not show that at any time was there a guardian appointed for them. This method of procedure is in direct violation and utter disregard of the provisions of the Act of June 13, 1836, § 88, art. III, P. L. 587.

The return of the sheriff was not conclusive as to the guardianship of Bright, as was held by the court below.

Act March 29, 1882, §§ 2, 5, P. L. 190; Meredith v. Shevall, 1 Penr. & W. 495; Coulter v. Selby, 39 Pa. 358; Mitchell v. Hamilton, 8 Pa. 486; Dengler v. Kiehner, 13 Pa. 88; Drum v. Kelly, 34 Pa. 415.

The purchaser of the real estate at a sheriff's sale, based upon the judgment, was bound to take notice of the defects appearing upon the face of the proceedings in which it was obtained. The rule of caveat emptor applies to sheriffs' sales. In a sheriff's sale there is no warranty of title.

Smith v. Painter, 5 Serg. & R. 223.

Messrs. Louis Richards and Cyrus G. Derr, for defendants in error:

The award of arbitrators in the case of Solomon Ely against the administrator cum testamento annexo of Anthony F. Miller, deceased, and against his devisees, has the effect of a judgment of the court.

Sec. 24, Compulsory Arbitration Act, June 16, 1886, Purd. Dig. 108, pl. 28.

The joining, as defendants, of the devisees with the administrator cum testamento annexo in the action of Solomon Ely was, under the provisions of the Act of February 24, 1884, § 34 Purd. Dig. 530, pl. 112, correct and proper.

Murphy's App. 8 Watts & S. 165; Atherton v. Atherton, 2 Pa. 112; Dingman v. Amstink, 77 Pa. 114.

A mistake in practice will not render a judgment void, nor will it avoid the title of a purchaser at a sheriff's sale, held pursuant to process issued upon such judgment.

Freem. Judg. § 185; Act 1705, § 9, Purd. Dig. 597, pl. 152; Speer v. Sample, 4 Watts, 376; McFee v. Harris, 25 Pa. 102; Wilkinson's App. 65 Pa. 189; Atkinson v. Tomlinson, 91 Pa. 284; Hering v. Chambers, 108 Pa. 172.

The return of the sheriff that he had served the summons personally on "Francis Bright, guardian of the minor children of Albert Miller," etc., was conclusive of the fact that Francis Bright was the guardian of the said children; and the said return cannot be contradicted.

Kleckner v. Lehigh Co. 6 Whart. 66; Kennard v. R. R. Co. 1 Phila. 41; Patton v. Ins. Co. 1 Phila. 896; Commonwealth v. R. R. Co. 1 Pears. 241; Mentz v. Hamman, 5 Whart. 150; Flick v. Trozsell, 7 Watts & S. 65; Zion Church v. St. Peter's Church, 5 Watts & S. 215; Bennwood Iron Works v. Hutchinson, 12 W. N. C. 495; Troubat & H. Pr. § 260; Act June 18, 1886, § 82, Purd. Dig. 71, pl. 6; Freem. Judg. § 181.

Mr. Justice Sterrett delivered the opinion of the court:

Both parties to this action of ejectment claim under Andrew F. Miller, who in 1868 devised the land in controversy to his wife and sister for their joint lives and the life of the survivor, with remainder in fee to the children of Albert Miller, who were then minors, but are now adult plaintiffs, claiming as devisees in remainder. The defendants claim through a sheriff's sale on a judgment against the administrator de bonis non, etc., of Andrew F. Miller, the devisor, with notice to his devisees for life and in remainder.

In the suit against the administrator, the summons was returned by the sheriff, served on the administrator, de bonis non, etc., the life tenants, and "Francis Bright, guardian of the minor children of Albert Miller." Arbitrators, chosen after due notice, awarded in favor of plaintiff and against the defendants in that suit. The award unappealed from had all the effect of a formal judgment de terris. A writ of feri facias was issued, and in due course a writ of renditioni exponas was issued, on which the property was sold to Benjamin Tyson for $78,000. The purchase money having been paid to the sheriff, part of it was applied to judgments obtained against Andrew F. Miller, the devisor, in his lifetime, and the residue was ordered paid to the administrator de bonis non, etc., upon his giving bond as required by Act of Assembly.

Under the devise to them in remainder, plaintiffs of course have a prima facie case; but defendants, having acquired title by mesne conveyances from the purchaser at sheriff's sale, contend that they are invested with such title as the devisor had at and immediately preceding his decease; and consequently the title which otherwise would have been complete under the devise was divested by the sheriff's sale. This position is undoubtedly correct, unless there is some radical defect in the judgment itself, or in the proceedings thereunder, that rendered the sheriff's sale not merely irregular and voidable, but absolutely void.

It is claimed by plaintiffs, in the first place, that they were improperly joined as defendants in the original suit against the administrator de bonis non, and for this they rely mainly on what was said in Atherton v. Atherton, 2 Pa. 112, as to the proper practice in such cases.

The Act of 1884 provides that "In all actions against the executors or administrators of a decedent who shall have left real estate, where the plaintiff intends to charge such real estate with the payment of his debts, the widow and heirs or devisees, or the guardian of such as are minors, shall be made parties thereto," etc. The course pursued in the case at bar would appear to be strictly conformable to the Act; but, assuming the correct practice to be as stated in the case above cited, making the devisees defendants with the administrator de bonis non, was at most an error in practice, which might have been corrected, but which, passing unnoticed, did not affect the validity of the judgment. The court undoubtedly had jurisdiction of all the parties as well as of the subject matter; and conceding for the sake of argument that there were irregularities or even errors that might have been corrected if they had been complained of in time, it does not follow that either the judgment or the proceeding thereunder was void. That question has been so often considered and uniformly decided against the contention of plaintiffs that it is useless further to discuss the matter.

Another ground of objection to the judgment, not apparent on the face of the record, is that the devisees in remainder, the present plaintiffs, had no guardian at the time the summons, according to the return of the sheriff, purports to have been served on "Francis Bright, guardian," etc.; and they proposed to prove, in direct contradiction of the sheriff's return, that such was the fact. It is scarcely necessary to say that the conclusive effect of the sheriff's return cannot be evaded in that way. If it could, what security would there be in titles based on sheriffs' and other judicial sales? The most that can possibly be said of the judgment, on which the property was sold, is that it might have been reversed, if its regularity had been called in question; but even the reversal of the judgment after the sale could not affect the title of defendants as purchasers at the sheriff's sale.

The Act of 1705 provides "That if any of the said judgments which do or shall warrant the awarding of the said writs of execution, whereupon any lands, tenements or hereditaments have been or shall be sold, shall at any times hereafter be reversed for any error or errors, then and in every such case none of the said lands, tenements or hereditaments, so as aforesaid taken or sold, or to be taken or sold upon executions, nor any part thereof, shall be restored, nor the sheriff's deed or delivery thereof awarded; but restitution in such cases only of the money or price for which such lands were or shall be sold."

The record of the judgment in question discloses nothing that was clearly erroneous, certainly nothing that rendered the judgment void or insufficient to sustain the execution. Being thus regular on its face, the purchaser was not bound to inquire as to the truth of what is there averred. He had a right to accept all the essential averments as verity.

In Speer v. Sample, 4 Watts, 376, it was adjudged that "An execution issued upon a judgment after the death of the defendant is not absolutely void, but only voidable; and a sale of land upon such execution vests in the purchaser a good title."

In the interest of debtors and on grounds of public policy courts have always inclined to sustain judicial sales, especially when made under the judgments or decrees of courts possessing general jurisdiction of the subject and after being fairly carried into execution. After acknowledgment of a sheriff's deed in open court, the title of the sheriff's vendee cannot be affected by mere irregularities however gross. McFee v. Harris, 25 Pa. 102.

The same principle is reiterated in many cases, among which are: Wilkinson's App. 65 Pa. 189; Atkinson v. Tomlinson, 91 Pa. 284; Hering v. Chambers, 103 Pa. 172.

In Wilkinson's App. supra, an execution had been issued on award of arbitrators, immediately after filing the award and before the time for appeal had elapsed, and the court in sustaining the sheriff's sale made by virtue of the execution said: "It is settled, if anything can be, that an erroneous judgment or an irregular execution (not void) can be set aside only by direct and appropriate action by parties having an interest in the same and not by a collateral attack under cover of any other proceeding."

A return of nulla bona to the writ of fieri facias was not a prerequisite to the issuing of the venditioni exponas.

It is unnecessary to notice the remaining specifications of error. There is no merit in either of them.

Judgment affirmed

APPEAL OF James HOAR and Adam D. Swope.

Persons who would be first entitled to letters of administration in case of intestacy are, unless disqualified, entitled to letters of administration pendente lite granted in the case of a contested will.

(Decided October 4, 1886.)

A PPEAL from a decree of the Orphans' Court of Lancaster County, revoking letters of administration granted to appellants by the register. Reversed.

November 18, 1885, John B. Hoar died, leaving eight children. His will dated December 19, 1881, named William C. Hoar his brother, as executor. Probate thereof was resisted before the Register of Wills of Lancaster County by a portion of the children, on the ground of want of testamentary capacity. The register after a hearing refused to admit the will to probate, and also to grant letters of administration to the executor named therein, but granted letters to James Hoar, the eldest son, and Adam D. Swope, a son-in-law of decedent. On appeal by a portion of the children to the orphans' court these letters were revoked and the register was directed to grant letters of administration pendente lite to William C. Hoar, whereupon said James Hoar and Adam D. Swope appealed.

Messrs. D. G. Eshleman, Z. Swope and B. Frank Eshleman, for appellant.
Mr. A. C. Reinoehl, for appellee.

Mr. Justice Green delivered the opinion of the court:

When the register of wills granted letters of administration pendente lite to the appellants, he certainly had abundant authority of law for his action. Had it been a case of unquestioned intestacy he would have been obliged under the Act of March 15, 1832, par. 22, Purd. Dig. 410, to appoint James Hoar or some one in the same class and not disqualified. As James Hoar was not disqualified there was no reason why he should not be appointed, and as Swope was a son-in-law and not disqualified there was good reason for his appointment also.

As the alleged will of the decedent was not probated and a contest over its validity was initiated, there was no sufficient reason for passing by those entitled in case of intestacy and there was nothing to impeach the correctness of the register's action in granting letters to the appellants. We think therefore the learned court below was in error in reversing the appointment made by the register and we feel it to be our duty to reverse the decree of the orphans' court granting letters pendente lite to William C. Hoar, who is not one of the class of those entitled, and to reinstate the persons appointed by the register.

Now October 4, 1886, the decree of the Orphans' Court is reversed, and it is ordered that the Register grant letters of administration pendente lite to James Hoar and Adam D. Swope upon their giving bond in the sum of $20,000, to be approved by him. The costs of the appeal to be paid by the appellee.

APPEAL OF C. M. REED et al.

1. The special Act of February 20, 1867, repealing so much of an Act as authorized the treasurer of Washington County to grant a license to vend intoxicating liquors by the quart, is inoperative, and does not prevent the granting of licenses to sell intoxicating liquors by the quart in said county, the Act of 1856 having already repealed the Act relating to treasurer's license and vested the power to license in the court of quarter sessions.
2. The omission of the word "moral," in the certificate accompanying the applicant's petition, is not a fatal defect.

3. The action of the court in granting or refusing licenses under the Act of March 22, 1867, being a matter in the discretion of the court, and no appeal being allowed, will not be reviewed.
4. The necessity for a license, under the Act of 1867, is to be ascertained by the number and character of the petitioners for and against each application.
5. The petitions must be directed for or against a particular application or they may be disregarded.
6. The petitioners may be male or female, if they are citizens.

(Decided November 1, 1886.)

NOTE.—Probably no question of practice in the State of Pennsylvania has given rise to so much difference of opinion in the various judicial districts as the exercise of the discretion of the court in granting or withholding licenses to sell intoxicating liquors. As it is not a subject of review, the lower courts have had little light from the supreme court on the proper interpretation of the statute. The language of Judge Agnew, in Schlaudecker v. Marshall, 72 Pa. 206, has been generally accepted as expressing the duty of the court: "The discretion which the court exercises is a sound judicial discretion, upon the circumstances of each case as it is presented to the court, and not a general opinion upon the propriety or impropriety of granting licenses."

The diversity of opinion arises as to what shall influence the court in exercising this discretion, or, to state the question in another way, what, under the Act of Assembly, shall constitute the evidence of necessity, to move the discretion of the court to exercise the discretion.

The Act of March 11, 1834, empowering the court of quarter sessions to grant licenses provided, § 3, that "No court shall license any inn or tavern which shall not be necessary to accommodate the public and entertain strangers and travelers." After defining, in § 4, the fitness of the person and the accommodations required, section 5 provided that "No court shall license any person to keep an inn or tavern, unless from the petition and certificate, or from their own knowledge, or from evidence sought for and obtained, they shall be satisfied of the fitness of the person applying, and of the sufficiency of the accommodation as aforesaid."

The Act of April 14, 1855, was passed "to restrain the sale of intoxicating liquors."

The Act of March 31, 1856, "to regulate the sale of intoxicating liquors," provided that "licenses should be granted," and in section 7, that "All persons applying or making objections to applications for license may be heard by evidence, petition, remonstrance or counsel."

The Act of April 20, 1858, enacted that licenses should be granted whenever the requirements of the laws on the subject were complied with by the applicant, provided the court should grant or refuse a license in accordance with the evidence.

The Act of April 14, 1859, provided that it shall be lawful for the court "to hear petitions, in addition to that of the applicant, in favor of, and remonstrances against, the application * * * and thereupon to refuse the same whenever, in the opinion of said court, such inn, hotel or tavern, is not necessary for the accommodation of the public and entertainment of strangers and travelers;" and providing that the courts "shall have and exercise such discretion, and no other, in regard to the necessity of inns and taverns" as is given by the Act of 1834.

The Act of March 22, 1867, § 1, is as follows: "When an application is made to any court of quarter sessions of this Commonwealth for license to sell intoxicating drinks, it shall be lawful for said court to hear petitions, in addition to that of the applicant, in favor of and remonstrances against the application for such license, and in all cases to refuse the same whenever, in the opinion of the court, having due regard to the number and character of the petitioners for and against such application, such license is not necessary for the accommodation of the public and the entertainment of strangers and travelers." It will be seen that this language differs from that of the Act of 1859 in adding the clause in regard to the number and character of the petitioners, and in using the expression "such license," in place of "such inn, hotel or tavern."

The Act of March 27, 1872, known as the Local Option Act, was passed to permit voters to vote upon the question of granting licenses to sell intoxicating liquors.

The Act of April 12, 1875, repealing the Act of 1872, provided that licenses may be granted and re-enacted § 7 of the Act of 1856, in regard to evidence.

In some districts it is held that it is the necessity for the hotel and not the necessity for a license to sell liquors, which determines whether or not the license shall be granted. Justin's Application, 2 Pa. C. C. R. 22; Boldridge's Application, 2 Ches. Co. R. 237; Floyd's License, 2 Ches. Co. R. 502.

The contrary opinion relies upon the change in the language of the Act of 1867 from that of 1859, and the legislative debates showing that the change was intentional. King's Application, 2 Pa. C. C. R. 17; Derr's Application, 2 Ches. Co. R. 505; 1 Legislative Record, 523, 524; 2 Ches. Co. R. 151.

These latter citations are also referred to as holding that the necessity is to be determined according to the will of the people in the immediate neighborhood, and the discretion exercised accordingly.

The courts are not bound by the result of a simple count of the names, but may consider also their character, their business relations, their local prominence, and such other circumstances as seem to give value to their opinions, to determine the sentiment of the locality, considering adult women as well as voters. King's Application, supra. See, also, Keifer's Application, 2 Pa. C. C. R. 40.

It has been maintained, on the other hand, that to decide by the majority of petitioners for and against the application is to establish local option, and this could not be the intention of the Legislature as the Act of 1875 expressly repealed the Local Option Act of 1872. In Re License Applications, 2 Pa. C. C. R. 30.

Other cases, asserting that the standard of necessity is the accommodation of the public and entertainment of travelers, hold that the sentiment of the neighborhood should prevail, in the absence of absolute necessity or in doubtful cases. Grant's License, 2 Ches. Co. R. 73; Keifer's Application, 2 Pa. C. C. R. 40; Severn's License, 2 Pa. C. C. R. 75; Smith's License, 2 Pa. C. C. R. 74.

Necessity must be found affirmatively by the court, but former license is prima facie evidence of necessity. This, however, may be rebutted by evidence, or facts within the knowledge of the court, as decrease of travel, the custom of private entertainment of strangers by members of religious societies, etc. Severn's License, 2 Pa. C. C. R. 75; Bourjohn's Application, 2 Pa. C. C. R. 33.

Applications for renewals are granted where there are no remonstrants. Justin's Application, supra.

Where a license is revoked, a new application should be treated as for a new house; but that the house was recently licensed should be considered, on the question of necessity. Rutherford's License, 2 Pa. C. C. R. 79.

The above cases indicate the diversity of opinion existing in the various districts. The opinion of the supreme court in the case reported above is timely and will no doubt rank with Schlaudecker v. Marshall, supra, as a leading case on the subject.

[J. M.]

CERTIORARI and Appeal from a decree of the Quarter Sessions of Washington County, granting a license to vend spirituous, malt and brewed liquors by the quart. Affirmed.

The petition of Julius B. Clark represented that he was a citizen of the United States, of temperate habits and good moral character, that it was necessary for the accommodation of the public and the citizens of Washington Pa., and vicinity, that liquors be sold in the said Borough of Washington, in quantities less than a gallon. He therefore prayed the court to grant him license to sell vinous, spirituous, malt and brewed liquors, and admixtures thereof, with or without other goods, wares and merchandise, in quantities not less than a quart.

The certificate accompanying the petition, with the names of fourteen signers, certified: "That we are personally acquainted with the petitioner and know him to be a citizen of the United States whose habits are temperate and character good. And we further certify that in our opinion and from our knowledge of him, he is a proper and safe person to be licensed to vend liquors, and in the conduct of said business would observe the letter and spirit of the laws relating thereto."

A supplementary petition, signed by some 700 names, asserted "that, in their judgment, it is necessary for the accommodation of the public and the citizens of Washington, Pa., and vicinity, that the application of the said Julius B. Clark be granted."

A number of different remonstrances, signed by more than 2,000 petitioners, of whom some 1,500 were women, denied that any such necessity existed. They alleged that for all necessary purposes, mechanical, manufacturing or medicinal, alcoholic liquors could be lawfully obtained without this license. Granting the license prayed for would result simply in opening a place for supplying intoxicating liquors as a beverage, without any of the reasons which might be assigned for a hotel license. The remonstrances further asserted in substance that evil influences would result to individuals, the colleges of the town and the community at large, by the granting of the licenses.

The court, HART, P. J., granted the license, in the following opinion:

"The application in this case has been duly advertised. The papers are regular and in substantial compliance with the Act of Assembly. The evidence is uncontroverted that the applicant is a citizen of the United States, a resident of the Borough of Washington, and a man of temperate habits and good moral character; and the bond filed is in due form, and the sureties are substantial.

"But the application is met with a remonstrance, signed by men and women of the borough and vicinity, to the number of about 2,000. On the other hand it is supported by the petition in its favor of more than 700 of those who are represented as legal voters, resident within the same limits.

"These petitions for and remonstrances against the application are made, in a sense, legal evidence by the Act of Assembly—at least the court is bound to receive them, and to allow them such weight as they are fairly entitled to.

468

"It is claimed by the remonstrants that, as the granting or refusal of a license is within the discretion of the court, the judge may refuse to grant, upon such merely moral, social and economic considerations as convince his judgment that a license to vend intoxicating liquors as a beverage cannot be taken to be a necessity in any supposed case whatever, but is and must be in every case wholly unnecessary, and productive of unmixed evil. But the proposition, considered with reference to the legal discretion of the court in such cases, is untenable. If it be so that the court has an arbitrary discretion to grant or refuse licenses, without limitation or control, then, as was well observed in a recent case by the President Judge of the Twenty-Eighth Judicial District, it is in the power of the fifty or sixty quarter sessions judges of the State, outside of the large cities, to practically abrogate the license laws entirely; to substitute in their place a prohibitory law or regulation of their own, and thereby set themselves up above the only constitutional law-making power of the Commonwealth.

"But the nature of the discretion intrusted to the courts in such cases has been defined by the supreme court in Schlaudecker v. Marshall, 72 Pa. 200.

"In order to properly understand that case it is necessary to briefly outline the facts as officially reported. By special Act of May 10, 1871, the Court of Quarter Sessions of Erie County was required to appoint annually a board of licensers, with the same authority to grant licenses as the court of quarter sessions had. Schlaudecker, among others, had filed his petition in due form for an eating-house license, and a proper bond, conditioned according to law. The board declined to grant the license. Schlaudecker then obtained a rule from the court of common pleas on the board to show cause why a writ of mandamus should not issue to compel them to grant him a license. The board, in response to the rule, showed, inter alia, that there were before them, at the time they refused license to Schlaudecker, thirty-one applications for tavern license, eight for wholesale liquor license and ninety-five for eating-house license; of which the board granted twenty-five tavern licenses, six wholesale liquor licenses and thirty-nine eating-house licenses, and they say: 'Judging that they had granted a sufficient number of licenses in those different branches to accommodate the public and entertain strangers and travelers, the respondents did adjudicate upon said application (Schlaudecker's, to wit) and refused the same.' The court of common pleas, after hearing, discharged the rule and refused to grant the mandamus; and thereupon Schlaudecker sued out a writ of error. The opinion of the supreme court, affirming the action of the common pleas, was delivered on the 6th of January, 1873—the law being the same then as now in regard to the question of the discretion vested in the courts in regard to the granting and refusal of licenses—the Act of 1875 having, in my judgment, made no change in that respect.

"On the nature and true character of the discretion to be exercised by the court, Judge Le new says: 'No subject has been productive of more difference of opinion and practice than this in the different judicial districts of the State; some judges holding it to be obligatory on the court to grant every license where the applicant has brought himself within the provisions of the law as to the terms of his application, and others holding that they are not bound to grant license in any case whatsoever. Clearly, neither opinion is right; the discretion which the court exercises being a sound discretion upon the circumstances of each case as it is presented to the court, and not a general opinion upon the propriety or impropriety of granting licenses. Whether any or all licenses should be granted is a legislative and not a judicial question. Courts sit to administer the law fairly as it is given to them, and not to make or repeal it. The law of the land has determined that licenses shall exist and has imposed upon the court the duty of ascertaining the proper instances in which the license shall be granted, and therefore has given it to the court to decide upon each case as it arises in due course of law. The act of deciding is judicial and not arbitrary or willful. The discretion vested in the court is therefore a sound judicial discretion; and to be a rightful judgment it must be exercised in the particular case and upon the facts and circumstances before the court, after they have been heard and duly considered; in other words, to be exercised upon the merits of each case, according to the rule given by the Act of Assembly. To say that I will grant no license to any one, or that I will grant it to everyone, is not to decide judicially on the merits of the case, but to determine beforehand without a hearing, or else to disregard what has been heard. It is to determine, not according to law, but outside of law, and it is not a legal judgment, but the exercise of an arbitrary will.

"That the nature of the discretion, thus clearly defined by Judge Agnew has not, in the opinion of the supreme court, been changed by the Act of 1875, is apparent from Toole's App. 90 Pa. 376, decided in June, 1879.

"In the case before us the evidence is, on the one side, that there is no place within the county where liquors can now be lawfully sold as a beverage in less quantities than one gallon. On the other hand it is objected that there is no necessity for a quart license in this borough, or in any other part of the county; that the granting of such license will be productive of great and deplorable evils, and the court is asked by a very large number of citizens generally and specially by ministers of the Gospel, representing nearly all the churches of the town, by the faculty of the College, by the representatives of the Female Seminary, by the members of the Washington Temperance League and by others, to reject this application and save the community from a flood of evils which will, as they believe, surely follow the granting of the license prayed for. All these classes are certainly entitled to be heard, and, in fact, their objections and remonstrances have received the most anxious and respectful consideration. But their reasons for remonstrance are, in my opinion, such as address themselves to the conscience and judgment of the Legislature, rather than to the judicial discretion of the court. They furnish us with most weighty and convincing reasons why the existing state of the law in relation to quart licenses should be repealed; but,

PA.

I regret to say they do not, in my judgment, present any reason why, under the law as it now is, this license should not be granted.

"As the law now stands it distinctly recognizes the right of the people to use intoxicating liquors as a beverage and for domestic uses. The same law provides, among other things, for the granting of quart licenses to accommodate the public. There is, at present, no such license extant in the county. More than half the voters resident in the town and many in the vicinity have signed petitions asking that such license be now granted. The applicant appears to be a proper person with whom to intrust such license, and his papers are all in substantial compliance with the law. There is therefore in law no good reason why the court, in the exercise of a judicial—not arbitrary—discretion, should not direct the license to issue.

"At the argument of this cause, our attention was directed by counsel for remonstrants to the special Acts of 1867 for this county, as bearing upon the questions both of discretion and authority. The first of these Acts is that of January 14, 1867, P. L. 190, which provides that the quarter sessions of this county shall not be compelled to grant any tavern license 'unless satisfied that the granting of the same would be for the good of the people and promote the public welfare.'

"As this Act relates exclusively to tavern licenses, I am at a loss to perceive how, on any fair rule of interpretation, it can be construed so as to enlarge the discretion of the court in regard to the granting or refusing of quart licenses. In point of fact, it is apparent that the gentleman who drafted the bill, the late Joseph Henderson, Esq. of this bar, could not have had the subject of quart licenses in his view; for, in common with many others of that time, he was laboring under the erroneous impression that under the law as it then stood the granting of licenses to sell by the quart in this county was vested in the county treasurer. Consequently he, a few days later, had passed the special Act of February 20, 1867, P. L. 226, which provides that so much of any Act or Acts as 'authorizes the Treasurer of Washington County to grant a license to vend any intoxicating liquors by the quart or greater quantity, be, and the same is, hereby repealed.' Of course this was an entirely nugatory piece of legislation. It was merely a 'blow in the air' and accomplished nothing; and hence it is, to my mind, perfectly clear that it did not operate to take from the quarter sessions of the county the power, then and ever since entrusted to it, to grant quart licenses.

"Upon the whole case I am of opinion that the license prayed for should be granted, and it is so ordered."

The assignments of error specified the action of the court: 1, in holding that the special Act of February 20, 1867, was nugatory; 2, in refusing consideration to the remonstrances because "they do not present any reason why, under the law as it now is, this license should not be granted;" 3, in neglecting and refusing to exercise the discretion and judgment required by the Act of March 22, 1867; 4, in making the decree granting the license; and 5, in arriving at the conclusion that the papers of the petitioner "are all in substantial compliance with the law," for the reason that the word "moral" is left out of the certificate of good character.

469

Messrs. A. W. & M. C. Acheson, Aiken & Duncan and J. P. Sayer, for appellants:

"Statutes are to be construed so as may best effectuate the intention of the makers, which sometimes may be collected from the cause or occasion of passing the statute and, when discovered, it ought to be followed with judgment and discretion in the construction; though that construction may seem contrary to the letter of the statute."

Big Block Improvement Co. v. Commonwealth, 94 Pa. 455.

"For the rule is, that a statute shall be so construed that it may all stand and no part be rejected or declared inoperative."

Ihmsen v. Monongahela Nav. Co. 82 Pa. 157.

"Words which are plain enough in their ordinary sense may, when they would involve any absurdity or inconsistency or repugnance to the clear intention of the Legislature, to be collected from the whole of the Act or Acts in pari materia to be construed with it, or other legitimate grounds of interpretation, be modified or altered so as to avoid that absurdity, inconvenience or repugnance, but no further."

Miller v. Salomons, 7 Wels. Hurl. & G. 546.

"The best exponents of the legislative mind are the words of the statute, where they are free from ambiguity. But where they are not, we must resort to legislation on kindred subjects, the spirit of our institutions and the habits of the community, to discover the intent of the Legislature."

Commonwealth v. Pa. Ins. Co. 13 Pa. 166.

An examination of the special Acts of the Legislature of the years 1866 and 1867 will disclose that the intention of the Legislature was to comply with a popular demand for a restriction of the whole license system.

Acts of 1866, P. L. 333, 337, 339, 560, 658, 679, 785, 896; Acts of 1867, P. L. 40, 190, 226, 229, 372, 440, 591, 731, 740, 825, 893, 1178, 1288; and especially the Act of 1867, P. L. 190, relating to Washington County.

"A remedial Act shall be so construed as most effectually to meet the beneficial end in view and to prevent a failure of the remedy."

Dwar. Stat. p. 718.

"There can be no question that the words of a remedial statute are to be construed largely and beneficially, so as to suppress the mischief and advance the remedy. 'It is by no means unusual in construing a remedial statute,' says a late case, 'to extend the enacting words beyond their natural import and effect, in order to include cases within the same mischief.'"

Id. p. 735.

By the Act of March 22, 1867 (Purd. p. 1080, pl. 33) the Legislature threw the burden on the courts of quarter sessions, and on the people, requiring the courts to refuse license in all cases in which public sentiment, embodied in remonstrances, was against the granting of license, and denied the necessity of license in any particular application.

The court below fell into the error of rejecting and refusing consideration to the remonstrances because the denial of the necessity for license was not accompanied by good and sufficient reasons. No reasons accompanied the petitions which averred the necessity for the license. The law does not require them on either side. The question of necessity is a question of the weight of public opinion and not of evidence.

The certificate of the petitioner, signed by twelve citizens leaves out the word "moral."

Act of 1853, Purd. 1078, pl. 17.

Mr. J. M. Braden, for appellee:

The Courts of Quarter Sessions of Washington County, have jurisdiction by the Act of 1854. Where the courts have a jurisdiction it can only be taken from them by the express words of an Act of the Legislature, or by necessary implication.

Dwar. Stat. 231.

"We are to look at the words in the first instance, and when they are plain to decide on them."

Leonard v. Commonwealth, 3 Cent. Rep. 628.

When the words are plain the best rule to arrive at the meaning of the Legislature is to abide by them in their ordinary meaning and import, for they are the best exponents of the legislative mind.

Commonwealth v. Pa. Ins. Co. 13 Pa. 166; Brightly, R. 9.

The remonstrances did not deny the necessity of the license to accommodate those who desired to purchase liquors for domestic uses or use as a beverage.

The Act of 1875, 2 Purd. p. 1077, pl. 15, expressly provides that "All persons applying or making objections to applications for licenses may be heard by evidence, petition, remonstrance or counsel." The court may, therefore, hear evidence in addition to the petition and remonstrance.

In Schlaudecker v. Marshall, 72 Pa. 203, it was held that the ascertainment of the necessity of a house for public accommodation as a hotel or eating house "involves the number of each in the particular locality." The same rule would apply to applications similar to the present one.

The Act of Assembly gives no appeal and the grant or refusal of a license is entirely within the discretion of the court below.

Toole's App. 90 Pa. 376.

Error cannot be assigned for matters in the discretion of the court below.

Dubois v. Glaub, 52 Pa. 238; Waldron v. Waldron, 55 Pa. 281; Pringle v. Pringle, 59 Pa. 281.

It must be a flagrant abuse of the discretion vested in the court below which will induce the supreme court to reverse.

Christine v. Whitehill, 16 Serg. & R. 98; Robson v. Whitesides, Id. 230.

A certiorari only brings up the record for review. The opinion of the court is no part of the record. This court only examines the regularity of the proceedings, and cannot look into the evidence, though incorporated in the opinion of the court.

Shenango v. Wayne, 84 Pa. 184; Re Church Street, 54 Pa. 353; Re Kensington, etc. Turnpike Co. 97 Pa. 260.

The Act of 1856 does not require a certificate from applicants for quart licenses, similar to the one required of applicants for tavern license. It is sufficient if the applicant for quart license satisfy the court that he is a person of temperate habits and good moral character. The court so decided upon the evidence, and it is not reviewable.

Per Curiam :

It is probable that the framer of the Act of February 20, 1867, intended thereby to prevent altogether the granting of licenses to sell intoxicating liquors by the quart in the County of Washington; but if so, he made a serious mistake, for the statute as framed is wholly nugatory. The Act of 1856 had already deprived the treasurer of the power to grant such licenses, and had vested it in the quarter sessions, so that the Act of 1867, had nothing on which to operate, and was, therefore, as we have said, of no validity.

The action of the court in granting the license complained of is something that we cannot review, that being a matter of discretion, though we are satisfied that there was a misapprehension of the intent of the Act of March 22, 1867.

The legislative mind is therein very clearly expressed, and ought not to be mistaken. The court is to hear petitions in addition to that of the applicant in favor of, and remonstrances against the application for such license, and in all cases to refuse the same whenever, in the opinion of the court, having due regard to the number and character of the petitioners for and against such application, such license is not necessary for the accommodation of the public, and entertainment of strangers and travelers.

In this we see that the petitions and remonstrances are for the sole purpose of determining, without regard to the character of the applicant, whether such license is, or is not, a matter of public necessity. Furthermore, the Legislature has prescribed the method by which this necessity shall be ascertained, that is, by the number and character of those petitioning for or against such application. We may, also, here call attention to the fact that the remonstrance, as well as the additional petition, must be special, not general; that is, for or against a single or particular application; otherwise it may be disregarded. In the case in hand the remonstrance conforms to the Act, so that no objection can be taken to it in that respect. But the Act does not require that either the petitioners or remonstrants shall be voters; it is enough that they be citizens, whether male or female; hence, it is a mistake to pass over women, and count only voters.

The Act is a valuable one if properly administered, but whether it was so administered in this case, we cannot determine. The petitions, pro and con, are not matters of record, but in the nature of evidence for the information of the conscience of the court, and, as a consequence, we cannot review them, or reverse the action of the judge of the quarter sessions on a certiorari.

Moreover, no appeal has been given we have no power to take cognizance of the complaint of the appellants.

Decree affirmed, and appeal quashed.

Catharine BROSSMAN, Plff. in Err.,

LEHIGH VALLEY R. R. Co.

1. A servant who contracts for the performance of hazardous duties assumes such risks as are incident to their discharge from open and obvious causes which he has had an opportunity to understand.

2. By continuing in the master's service after learning its dangerous character, the servant takes upon himself all risks incident to the service.
3. After two months' service a freight-brakeman on a railroad will be presumed to have become acquainted with the low bridges over the track, and no action can be maintained against the railroad company if, during the discharge of his duties in the night, he is struck by a bridge and killed.
4. It is immaterial that the road on which he is employed does not use the danger signals common upon other roads, for the absence of signals did not deceive him as to the degree of danger incurred.

(Decided October 4, 1886.)

ERROR to the Common Pleas of Northampton County, to review a judgment of compulsory nonsuit in an action of trespass on the case for negligence. Affirmed.

In this action the plaintiff sought to recover damages for the death of her husband, William Brossman, who was killed by striking a bridge while employed on one of the defendant's trains as a brakeman. The facts as they appeared at the trial before Schuyler, J., are sufficiently stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Edward J. Fox & Son, for plaintiff in error:

Brossman was not guilty of contributory negligence.

No one can be charged with carelessness when he does that which his judgment approves, or where he omits to do that of which he has no time to judge. Such act or omission, if faulty, may be called a mistake, but not carelessness.

Brown v. French, 104 Pa. 604.

An error of judgment at such a time ought not to prevent a recovery.

Schall v. Cole, 107 Pa. 1.

Where in the darkness and solitude of the night one suffers grievous injury from the culpable commission or omission of another, the carelessness which would excuse ought certainly to be of a very gross character made apparent by direct and circumstantial proof.

Beatty v. Gilmore, 16 Pa. 463; Wild v. Gaslight Co. 2 Eng. C. L. 350; Hays v. Gallagher, 72 Pa. 136.

But this question was one of fact to be determined by a jury under proper instructions.

Schum v. R. R. Co. 107 Pa. 9; Born v. Plank Road Co. 12 W. N. C. 283; McIlwaine v. Lantz, Id. 267; Fritch v. Allegheny, 91 Pa. 226.

The master must adopt, provide and maintain appliances and means which will permit the servant to discharge his duties with reasonable safety and without exposure to unnecessary or extraordinary risk.

If there be any evidence of negligence on the part of a master, it must be submitted to the jury; it is error to direct a nonsuit.

Murphy v. Crossan, 98 Pa. 495; McCully v. Clarke, 40 Pa. 406; Baker v. Fehr, 97 Pa. 70; Rummell v. Dilworth, 1 Cent. Rep. 905, 908.

"One may not justifiably, or even excusably, place a dangerous pitfall, wolf trap or a spring gun, purposely to catch and injure even willful trespassers poaching upon his grounds. The common feeling of mankind, guided by the second branch of the great law of love, and the common sense of jurors must be left in such a case to pronounce upon the facts."

Hydraulic Works Co. v. Orr, 83 Pa. 386.

Where there is any doubt whether the employee was acquainted, or ought to have been acquainted, with the risks, the determination of the question is, necessarily, for the jury.

Rummell v. Dilworth, 17 W. N. C. 90, S. C. 1 Cent. Rep. 905, 908.

Messrs. R. E. Wright, Wm. Fackenthal, B. F. Fackenthal and H. S. Drinker, for defendant in error:

A person will be presumed, by remaining in employment where he is exposed to danger, to assent to the risks and hazards to which he is thereby exposed. Thus where a brakeman six feet tall who had for four years continued to brake on a portion of the railroad where bridges crossed the track but five feet above the cars, so that riding on the top of the cars it was necessary for him to stoop to pass under them, it was held that he should be deemed to have taken the risk of injury therefrom.

Wells v. R. R. Co. 2 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 248.

There is no legal obligation on the part of a railroad company to build its bridges over public roads with an elevation so great that one of its employees standing upright on the top of a car will not be endangered; and consequently, if an employee while thus standing, in the course of his business, be struck by such bridges, he cannot recover for such injury.

Baylor v. R. R. Co. 40 N. J. L. 28; R. R. Co. v. Stricker, 51 Md. 47; Rains v. R. R. Co. 71 Mo. 164; Oren v. R. R. Co. 1 Lans. 108; Sherman v. R. R. Co. 17 N. Y. 153; Faulkner v. R. R. Co. 37 N. Y. 468.

Where a person of full age and sufficient capacity continues to discharge the duties of a service which he knows to be hazardous, and continues without objection to operate machinery which he has full information exposes him to constant and certain danger, he will be presumed to take upon himself all the risks of his service.

Umback v. R. Co. 8 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 99. And see Sweeney v. R. R. Co. 8 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 151.

The contract to serve as brakeman is made with reference to things as they then exist and are known to be. The employee assumes the risk of low bridges.

Clark v. R. R. Co. 2 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 240; Clark v. R. R. Co. 18 Id. 81.

If a servant chooses to enter into an employment involving dangers of personal injury which the master might have avoided, he takes upon himself the risk of all the hazards incident to the employment, the existence and nature of which were known to him when he entered the service and which he had no reason to expect would be obviated or removed. If a servant accepts service with a knowledge of the position of structures from which he has occasion to be apprehensive of injury, he cannot require the master to make changes so as to obviate the danger or hold him liable for damages in case of injury.

Fleming v. R. R. Co. 6 N. W. Rep. 448; Gibson v. R. Co. 63 N. Y. 449; Dillon v. R. R. Co. 3 Dill. 320; Owen v. R. R. Co. 1 Lans. 108; Hayden v. Smithville Mfg. Co. 29 Conn. 548; R. R. Co. v. Welch, 52 Ill. 183; Devitt v. R. R. Co. 50 Mo. 302; Baylor v. R. R. Co. 40 N. J. L. 28; Clarke v. Holmes, 7 Hurlst. & N. 937; Woodley v. Metropolitan Dist. R. Co. L. R. 2 Exch. Div. 384.

A master is not bound, as to his servants, to employ the latest and most approved machinery, but only such as is suitable. A servant who, knowing the defective condition of the machinery, yet exposes himself to danger from it, even in the necessary execution of his duties, assumes the risk and cannot charge the master with damages resulting to him from such exposure.

Salters v. Del. & Hud. Canal Co. 3 Hun. 338; Ford v. R. R. Co. 110 Mass. 240; Dougan v. Champlain Trans. Co. 56 N. Y. 1; Wonder v. R. R. Co. 32 Md. 411; DeGraf v. R. R. Co. 3 Thomp. & C. 255.

Whenever the facts of a negligence case are undisputed and it appears clearly that the party injured has been guilty of contributory negligence, it is the right and duty of the court to take the case from the jury and to give binding instructions to find for the defendant or award a nonsuit.

R. R. Co. v. Evans, 53 Pa. 250; R. R. Co. v. Slattery, L. R. 3 App. Cas. 1155; Dascomb v. R. R. Co. 27 Barb. 221; R. R. Co. v. Stout, 17 Wall. 657 (84 U. S. bk. 21, L. ed. 745); R. R. Co. v. Van Steinberg, 17 Mich. 99; R. R. Co. v. Righter, 2 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 220; Smith v. Hestonville M. & F. Co. 2 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 12; Johnson v. R. R. Co. 8 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 471.

Mr. Justice Trunkley delivered the opinion of the court:

William Brossman had been in the employ of the defendant as brakeman on a freight train for over two months. He made one round trip each day, and his duties required him to be on the top of the box car. There was a number of bridges over the road, so low that a man could not stand erect on the car as it passed under, without striking; the bridge where the accident occurred was about four feet above the top of the cars. That Brossman knew of these bridges, including the one that threw him from the car, is as certain as that he had passed under them daily, when on duty, from the date of his employment.

At the time of the accident Brossman and Hart were together, both familiar with the situation of the bridge; the night was dark and a heavy rain falling, and neither of them gave the slightest attention to the impending danger. Hart says they were not watching for the bridge; had their minds on their work. No lights or any other signal had been on or near the bridge for more than six months—to warn the brakemen when near it.

During all the time of Brossman's service the hazards of his occupation were the same as when he was employed; no change had been made in the bridges or height of the cars. It is obvious that the bridge was dangerous to the lives of the brakemen, as all bridges are when so near the top of the cars; and it may be taken as proved that a number of men were injured and some killed by it, before the death of Brossman. It also appears that danger signals had been in use at this bridge, but some time before Brossman was employed they were abandoned; and such signals are used by some other railroad companies.

Many points in the argument on behalf of the plaintiff were pressed, much as if the deceased had stood in other relation to the defendant than employee. It is hardly necessary to remark that most decisions in cases against railroad companies, where passengers were injured or where persons were injured at street crossings and the like, have little bearing on the main question presented in this record, namely: Did the deceased, after knowledge of the hazardous duties of the place, assume the risks incident to their discharge? Upon this fact there is no conflict of testimony; he knew the danger and risks as well as anybody else, if not at the date of his employment, immediately after he began performance of its duties.

When an employee after having the opportunity of becoming acquainted with the risks of his situation accepts them, he cannot complain if subsequently injured by such exposure.

By contracting for the performance of hazardous duties, he assumes such risks as are incident to their discharge from causes open and obvious, the dangerous character of which causes he has had opportunity to ascertain. Whart. Neg. § 214. This is the general rule.

In Ballou v. R. Co. 5 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 480, the deceased was killed by reason of a defect in the ladder of a freight car, and it was held that his representative could not recover. A well prepared note, reviewing the cases upon the subject, upon the point which touches the case in hand, page 506, states the doctrine as follows: "It seems clear, if a person in the employment of a railroad company discovers that the appliances with which he is working are or have become through use unsafe, and continues, without any special order of the company and without making any complaint, to use the said appliances, that he will be held to have either run the risk of being injured, or to have been guilty of contributory negligence; and hence, in case of injury to him, occasioned by such defect, the company will not be liable. And this is true, even though the defect be such a one as under ordinary circumstances the company would be bound to repair." If a servant, after discovering the danger of using some appliance, continues to work when he must of necessity use it, he assumes the risk, and the master is discharged from liability. R. R. Co. v. Shertle, 2 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 158, note.

Thus has the rule been applied in cases of defects in the cars or appliances; but the doctrine in its application to a case like the present is settled, as well as anything can be, by repeated adjudications. And its application is less difficult in proportion as the hazard is more certain to be observed by the employee, and being unconnected with the machinery and cars. Where the service of a brakeman is extra hazardous and dangerous on account of a bridge being of insufficient height, of which the brakeman had knowledge while employed, and he continued in the service without objection, he assumed the dangers incident to the service from the bridge in question, and there can be no recovery on account of his death caused by the bridge. The negligence of the employer is waived by the employee remaining in employment without protest or promise of amendment. This waiver cannot be affected by the rapidity or promptness with which he may be required to act at the time of the accident. Wells v. R. R. Co. 56 Iowa, 520.

Where a railroad company negligently plans an obstruction over its roadway, dangerous to the lives of its employees, it fails in its duty to them and, therefore, if a person enters the service of the company in ignorance of such danger, and remains ignorant thereof until injured or killed by it, the company is liable for damages. But if the employee had knowledge of the nature and degree of the peril when he entered the service, or continued in the service after such knowledge without protest and promise of amendment, the case is different. The employer has no right to subject his employee to an unnecessary peril without his consent; but it is well settled in the courts of this country and in England that if a servant chooses to enter into an employment involving danger of personal injury, which the master might have avoided, he takes upon himself the risk of all the hazards incident to the employment, the existence and nature of which were known to him when he entered the service, and which he had no reason to expect would be obviated or removed.

If a servant accepts service with a knowledge of the position of structures from which he has occasion to be apprehensive of injury, he cannot require the master to make changes so as to obviate the danger, or hold him liable for damages in case of injury. Clark v. R. R. Co. 28 Minn. 128.

By continuing in the master's service after being fully apprised of its dangerous character, the servant takes upon himself all risks incident to such service. Unback v. R. Co. 8 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 98.

Decisions in accord with those cited are multitudinous, and the able counsel for plaintiff has adduced none to the contrary. They are too well grounded to be overruled, save by legislative power. When the hazards incident to the duties of the employee are open, before his eyes, meet him every day of his service, and would knock him down if he did not stoop to avoid them, and he continues in the service without promise of amendment, clearly, he accepts the risks of the situation. It is no matter whether danger signals are on other roads, for he was not deceived as to the degree of danger he incurred. Nor is it necessary to consider his rights, or the liability of his employer for damages in case of injury, under a different state of facts.

Judgment affirmed.

James MCGREW et al., Plffs. in Err.,
v.

A. J. FOSTER.

1. The vendee of land under an unrecorded written contract, who has never been in possession and has paid only part of the purchase money, can not, without first paying or tendering the balance of the purchase money, maintain against the legal owner trespass for cutting timber.

NOTE.—See Orne v. Coal Co. ante, 731.

2. In a contract in writing for the sale of land there is no implied covenant to give the vendee possession before the conveyance is executed.
3. A mere temporary occupancy for the purpose of making a survey or taking off timber, by one having no right of possession, is not such an actual occupancy as defeats the constructive possession of the owner.
4. Lapse of time, change of circumstances, and indifference on the part of a vendee of land, are circumstances to induce a chancellor to refuse a decree of specific performance.
5. An unexplained neglect for twenty-nine years to pay the balance of purchase money of land sold by contract in writing is laches on the part of the vendee and fatal, in a court of equity, to all his original rights under the contract.

(Decided October 4, 1883.)

ERROR to the Common Pleas of Warren County, to review a judgment on a verdict for the plaintiff in an action of trespass. Reversed.

This was an action of trespass quare clausum fregit begun by capias in 1883 to recover the penalty prescribed by the Act of March 29, 1824, § 3 (8 Sm. Laws, 283; Purd. Dig. 1635) for cutting and converting timber trees on the plaintiffs' land.

The facts as they appeared at the trial before Brown, P. J., are stated in the opinion.

The court charged, inter alia, as follows:

"We say to you that, under the undisputed evidence in the case, in our opinion the plaintiff is entitled to recover, although the deed from Ansel St. John to Thomas P. St. John, and from Thomas P. St. John to Samuel Lilly, are absolute conveyances clear from conditions or qualifications; yet, in the conveyance from Samuel Lilly to Ludlow, Martin and Sawyer, the conveyance is subject to all contracts and articles of agreement made by Lansing Wetmore. * * * Tracing their own title back to Ansel St. John, they would find the power of attorney from St. John to Lansing Wetmore, and although the record would give no information that Wetmore had ever article'd any of the land, it was noticed that Wetmore had the power to sell, which was notice that he possibly had sold some of the land described in a deed by Samuel Lilly, a contingency subject to which Lilly by his deed had expressly made his conveyance of the land. Samuel Lilly treated any contracts of sale that might have been made by Wetmore as subsisting ones, and imposed upon his vendees the obligation so to regard them. The title shown by the plaintiff gives him such a right of possession as entitles him to recover; and, as we before stated, we think that under the undisputed evidence the plaintiff is entitled to a verdict at your hands, and you will have simply to determine the amount."

The defendants' points were to the effect that the recorded conveyances from Ansel St. John to Thomas P. St. John and from Thomas P. St. John to Samuel Lilly transferred the title to the locus in quo to Lilly, as against the unrecorded contract of Samuel Ward, and therefore the plaintiff could not recover; and that there was nothing in the deed from Samuel Lilly and wife to Ludlow, Martin and Sawyer, which amounted to a reservation or exception from the grant, of the articles of agreement from Ansel St. John to Samuel Ward, or which amounted to notice to subsequent purchasers.

Ans. "The several points, in so far as they present views contrary to the general charge, are answered in the negative."

By agreement of counsel a verdict was taken for $116 single damages in favor of the plaintiff. Judgment was entered accordingly.

Whereupon the defendants took this writ, assigning as error the answer to their points and the portions of the charge quoted.

Messrs. D. L. Ball, C. H. Noyes and C. C. Thompson, for plaintiffs in error:

After such a lapse of time as to raise the presumption of law that any obligations given by the vendee for the purchase money are paid, a recital in a deed is prima facie evidence of the payment of the consideration as against an unrecorded contract with the vendor.

Brum v. Dubois, 43 Pa. 265.

It must follow that Thomas P. St. John and Samuel Lilly each acquired a good title to the land from which the timber in controversy was taken; and having a good title, Samuel Lilly could convey a good title, whether his vendees had notice of the Samuel Ward contract or not.

Bracken v. Miller, 4 Watts & S. 102; Mateer v. Hissim, 3 Pen. & W. 160; Sailor v. Hertzog, 4 Whart. 264; Church v. Ruland, 64 Pa. 444; Filby v. Miller, 25 Pa. 264; Mott v. Clark, 9 Pa. 404.

In the deed from Samuel Lilly and wife to Wetmore, Henry & Orr, this land was not reserved or excepted. The deed conveyed "all those several pieces or parcels of land, etc.," five in number. The description of each piece after the first, and also that portion claimed by the defendant in error as a reservation or exception, is introduced by the word "also." "Also" means "in like manner." In like manner as the preceding five tracts or parts of tracts were conveyed, so were conveyed "all contracts and articles of agreements for any part of the aforementioned tracts," which are not previously conveyed by specific description.

The word "also" does not take from or lessen the previous grant; nor is that part of the deed under discussion notice to subsequent purchasers of Samuel Ward's contract with St. John. It is too equivocal and uncertain to be notice to anybody, every presumption is made in favor of the subsequent purchaser; and recitals even in the very deed under which he claims are not, without caution and many exceptions, to be held equivalent to notice.

Barlow v. Beall, 20 Pa. 179; Boggs v. Varner, 6 Watts & S. 473.

The record of a deed of land, the locality of which is not given, nor any definite marks of identification, is not notice to a purchaser at a judicial sale.

Banks v. Ammon, 27 Pa. 172.

Before the plaintiff could have maintained an action of ejectment against the owner of the legal title he must have paid or tendered the purchase money.

Gore v. Kinney, 10 Watts, 139; Vincent v. Huff, 4 Serg. & R. 297; Brindle v. McIlwaine, 7 Serg. & R. 345.

The contract under which he claims gave him no right to the possession. Where the contract is silent as to possession, the vendor retains it until payment of the purchase money.

1 Sugd. Vend. p. 270, note b.; Irvine v. Bleakley, 67 Pa. 28; Smith v. Patton, 1 Serg. & R. 84; Baum v. Dubois, 43 Pa. 260; Weakland v. Hoffman, 50 Pa. 517.

The vendor had a right to enter the premises when the vendee was in default and refused to perform his contract, even if the latter had been given a right of possession, if the former could make such entry peaceably.

Welch v. Emerson, 95 Pa. 257; Bell v. Clark, 17 W. N. C. 44, 1 Cent. Rep. 852.

It is this right of possession in the owner of the legal title which entitles him to maintain ejectment against the vendee under articles. To recover in ejectment the plaintiff must have the right of entry and of possession at and before the bringing of the suit. This right he has from his legal title.

Smith v. Webster, 2 Watts, 485; Decling v. Williamson, 9 Watts, 318.

An action of ejectment by the vendor for the recovery of possession, though in some sort regarded by us as an equitable proceeding, subject to be arrested by payment of the purchase money, is yet in contemplation of law founded in the legal seisin remaining in the vendor, and drawing to it the right of possession.

Jones v. Patterson, 12 Pa. 153.

This legal title and legal seisin draws to itself the right of possession of lands of that character. Having the legal title, and the rights of entry and possession of the premises, the defendants were not trespassers in making their entry thereon. Where the right to enter upon the land of another exists, the abuse of it will not sustain an action of trespass. The remedy is case.

Edelman v. Yeakel, 27 Pa. 26.

To maintain trespass, there must be in the plaintiff either actual possession, or the right to immediate possession flowing from the right of property; and he must have been deprived of it by the tortious act of another.

Weitzel v. Marr, 46 Pa. 463; Waldron v. Haupt, 52 Pa. 409; Rifener v. Bowman, 58 Pa. 313.

The plaintiff's claim is stale. The contract under which he claims is dated the 10th of April, 1854. This suit was begun on the 12th of June, 1883. Between these two dates not one cent was paid upon the purchase money.

If a plaintiff in ejectment ask for specific execution of a contract for the sale of land, he cannot recover, if it appear that he has been guilty of laches and such conduct as was calculated to induce the other party to suppose that he has abandoned his contract; and especially if he had permitted so long a time to PA.

elapse that a legal title would be barred by the Act of Limitations. See generally upon stale claims:

Zeigler v. Houtz, 1 Watts & S. 533; Patterson v. Martz, 8 Watts, 374; Callen v. Ferguson, 29 Pa. 247; Wengert v. Zimmerman, 33 Pa. 508; Dubois v. Baum, 46 Pa. 537; Miller v. Henlan, 51 Pa. 265; Cadwalader's Appeal, 57 Pa. 158; Dohnert's Appeal, 64 Pa. 311; Russell v. Baughman, 94 Pa. 400.

In courts of equity twenty years is a positive bar to any claim.

Bull v. Towson, 4 Watts & S. 557.

Messrs. Wilbur & Schnur, for defendant in error:

The acceptance of a deed by the grantee makes its recitals evidence against him, and also against his grantees, they having notice of it, if the deed is recorded.

Schuykill R. R. Co. v. McCreery, 58 Pa. 304, 307.

Recitals are evidence against parties and privies to the conveyance.

Meals v. Brandon, 16 Pa. 225.

Whatever puts a party on inquiry amounts in judgment of law to notice, provided the inquiry becomes a duty and would lead to the knowledge of the requisite facts by the exercise of ordinary diligence and understanding.

Lodge v. Simonton, 2 Pen. & W. 445-6.

A loss from ignorance must be borne by him who refuses to investigate.

Kirk's App. 87 Pa. 247; Jaques v. Weeks, 7 Watts, 261.

A purchaser from one whose deed is unrecorded is affected with notice of an unrecorded mortgage mentioned in the receipt for purchase money, at the foot of such unrecorded deed.

Steckel v. Deah, 12 W. N. C. 180.

The owner of the legal title has no right to take possession, as against his vendee, and cut timber and set off its value against the unpaid purchase money.

Brewer v. Fleming, 51 Pa. 103; Longwell v. Bentley, 23 Pa. 102; Siter's App. 26 Pa. 180; Morgan v. Scott, 26 Pa. 51; Ives v. Creas, 5 Pa. 118.

When a contract is made for the sale of land, equity considers the vendee as the purchaser of the estate sold and the purchaser as a trustee to vendor for the purchase money. He is seised of the estate and must bear any loss and will be entitled to any benefits affecting the land.

Robb v. Mann, 11 Pa. 304; Weed v. Hall, 101 Pa. 596.

The owner of wild und cultivated land is to be deemed in possession so as to maintain trespass, until an adverse possession is clearly made out.

Baker v. King, 18 Pa. 144.

The last installment of purchase money was due Ansel St. John April 10, 1856; May 7, 1855, he conveyed this land by deed to Thomas P. St. John, and thus put it out of his power to perform his contract and make title when the last installment fell due, and was not in a position to call for specific performance on his part.

Wheeling, etc. R. R. Co. v. Gourley, 99 Pa. 176.

His only remedy after this conveyance was to sue on the articles for the purchase money and tender a deed in accordance with his covenants.

Nicol v. Carr, 35 Pa. 381.

Denying the vendee's right to perform his covenants, it does not lie in the mouths of the plaintiffs in error to say the vendee's rights are gone because he did not perform them.

Onq v. Campbell, 6 Watts, 397; Morony v. Townsend, 5 Phila. 357.

Mr. Justice Clark delivered the opinion of the court:

The facts in this case are not disputed; the title to the fifty acres of land, from which the timber in controversy was cut, was originally in E. J. Pettibone, who August 15, 1846, conveyed the same with other lands to Ansel St. John. The plaintiff below claimed title under an unrecorded contract in writing dated April 10, 1854, between Ansel St. John (executed by his attorney in fact Lansing Wetmore) and Samuel Ward, by the terms of which St. John, in consideration of the sum of $100, agreed to sell and convey to Ward, the premises now in question. The purchase money was payable, $25 in hand and $75 in two equal annual installments with interest; the deed to be delivered, free from incumbrance, upon payment of the purchase money.

The hand money was paid at the execution of the contract, but the residue of the purchase money still remains unpaid. After his purchase, Ward had a trial survey made to ascertain the lines approximately; a resurvey, however, by a regular surveyor was contemplated. He cut some timber, but never went into the actual possession, by residence or cultivation. On March 28 Samuel Ward assigned his interest to Archibald Ward, who, April 8, 1867, assigned the same interest to A. J. Foster, the plaintiff below.

The defendants claimed title through a series of recorded conveyances, embracing with other tracts the lands in dispute; in part, as follows: Ansel St. John and wife to Thomas P. St. John, dated May 7, 1855, recorded June 6, 1855; Thomas P. St. John and wife to Samuel Lilly, dated August 23, 1859, recorded September 28, 1859; Samuel Lilly and wife to A. H. Ludlow, William Martin and Adna Sawyer, dated December 7, 1859, recorded March 14, 1860. In the deed last recited, after the description of the several tracts embraced therein, is contained a clause as follows: "Also all contracts and articles of agreement for the purchase of said tracts, and all balances due and unpaid on any contracts and articles of agreement made by Lansing Wetmore for the sale of any portion of the above described tracts of land,—it being the true intent and meaning of these presents to convey to the said party of the second part, all the right, title and interest of, in and to the above described premises which was conveyed to Samuel Lilly by Thomas P. St. John by deed dated August 24, 1859."

By various conveyances in due form, and duly recorded, the title of Ludlow and Martin to the 400 acres of tract No. 223, described in the deed from Ansel St. John, became vested in the Great National Petroleum Company, and the title of Adna Sawyer in the same tract became vested in James McGrew. Each of these deeds recited a consideration, and acknowledged the receipt thereof.

The plaintiffs in error, who were the defendants below, contend: first, that Thomas P. St.

John and Samuel Lilly, under whom they claim, were bona fide purchasers for value, and that they are, therefore, not affected by the unrecorded contract of April 10, 1854; that the clause above quoted from the deed of Samuel Lilly to Ludlow, Martin and Sawyer is not a reservation or exception of the fifty acres from the grant contained in the deed, nor was it notice to subsequent purchasers of the contract with Ward upon which the plaintiff relies; and second, that in any event, before the plaintiff could bring and maintain this action, he must have paid or tendered the purchase money; that standing upon the terms of his contract, he would be met at the threshold with his own default.

It is not necessary for us to consider the first ground of this contention, as the second in our opinion is certainly decisive of the case.

In Minaker v. Morrison, 2 Yeates, 346, the general rule was declared that a purchaser of lands, who seeks redress under his articles, must bring his money into court, in order to show his readiness to perform his contract.

This case was recognized and followed in Gore v. Kinney, 10 Watts, 139, an ejectment brought by an equitable vendee against the vendor; it was there held that the plaintiff must not only tender the money due and unpaid, before suit brought, but he must have it in court, ready to be paid to the defendant, in case of a verdict for the plaintiff. Yount v. Martin, 3 Serg. & R. 432; Peebles v. Reading, 8 Serg. & R. 496, and Moody v. Vandyke, 4 Binn. 41 are cited as authority for the doctrine thus stated.

So in D'Arras v. Keyser, 26 Pa. 252, Mr. Justice Woodward, referring with approval to Gore v. Kinney, supra, says:

"There can be no question about the soundness of the principle that in an equitable action of ejectment, the plaintiff, to be entitled to recover, must not only tender the money before suit brought, but must also have it in court ready to be paid in the event of a verdict in his favor." This rule as stated, is restricted in its application, however, to cases where the defendant's possession is a lawful one, for in the case last cited it was held that if the vendee is once fairly in possession of the land under articles of purchase, and is ousted by fraud, force or other illegal means, he is entitled to recover in ejectment, without bringing the money into court.

So in Eberly v. Lehman, 100 Pa. 542, it was said that the rule did not apply when the vendor, before payment, has put the vendee into possession under the contract, and induced him to make valuable improvements, and afterward by collusion or other unfair practice regained the possession; citing Harris v. Bell, 10 Serg. & R. 39; Dixon v. Oliver, 5 Watts, 509; Grey v. Patterson, 9 Watts & S. 208; Wykoff v. Wykoff, 3 Watts & S. 481; D'Arras v. Keyser, 26 Pa. 249. To the same effect, are Heft v. McGill, 3 Pa. 256; Brewer v. Fleming, 51 Pa. 102; Chase v. Irwin, 87 Pa. 290.

Similar in some respects, to the case under consideration, is the very recent case of Bell v. Clark, 111 Pa. 92, 1 Cent. Rep. 852. Bell, by articles dated July 1, 1870, agreed with Adeline Clark, on payment of $732.48 within two years, to convey certain lands to her, of which in the meantime she was to have possession. This possession she took and maintained until within four years before suit brought, but paid no purchase money. Bell, finding the premises vacated, entered into the possession, wherefore Mrs. Clark brought ejectment.

Mr. Justice Gordon, delivering the opinion of the court, says:

"Under these circumstances, it cannot be said that, in thus resuming dominion over the property, the vendor was guilty of either a fraudulent or unlawful act." "The rule may be stated thus: where the possession of the vendor is lawful his vendee cannot maintain ejectment against him, without proof of previous tender of the purchase money, and he must also maintain that tender, by producing the money in court."

In the case at bar, there is no express covenant on part of the vendor to deliver the possession to the vendee. "As a general rule," says Agnew, J., in Weakland v. Hoffman, 50 Pa. 517, "a contract to sell does not, ipso facto, carry a right of possession until conveyance, in the absence of a covenant to let the party into possession. It is very common, it is true, to let the purchaser in upon a sale, but we know of no rule of law by which the possession, so important a security to the rights of the vendor, shall pass from him without his covenant or his consent." See also Smith v. Patton, 1 Serg. & R. 84; Baum v. Dubois, 43 Pa. 260; Irvine v. Bleakley, 67 Pa. 28.

Nor is there any evidence that actual possession was at any time taken, under or in pursuance of the contract. It appears that after his purchase, Ward made a trial survey, to ascertain the probable boundaries of his purchase, and cut some timber; whether these acts were known or approved by St. John does not appear. It is clear, however, that Ward never assumed the actual possession of the land. A mere temporary occupancy for the purpose of making a survey or taking off timber, by one having no right of possession, is not such an actual occupancy as defeats the constructive possession which the law casts upon the owner. Harlan v. Harlan, 15 Pa. 507; Brewer v. Fleming, 51 Pa. 115.

The defendant was the legal owner of the land, and as he had not conveyed or yielded the possession to any other person, he was at all times constructively in the possession. Under his title he had a right at any time to enter and occupy the land, subject of course to the equity of the vendee, to whom for any injury to the freehold he might under some circumstances be answerable, not as a trespasser, but in another form of proceeding. Edelman v. Yeakey, 27 Pa. 26.

To maintain trespass the plaintiff must either have actual possession or the immediate right to it, flowing from the right of property; and it is plain that he had neither. It is not pretended that he was at any time in the actual occupancy of the land, and he could only be entitled to that right, upon the footing of a specific performance of his contract. The contract of purchase was made in the year 1854; at which time only $25 of the purchase money was paid; no part of the residue has ever been paid, or offered to be paid; almost thirty years had elapsed before the alleged trespass was committed. During remained unoccupied since 1867, until the act appears to have been, in assertion of to that time the stripped of the time money, by the intple in amount. the vendor might have been abando certainly hesitate tance.

A vendee by arti his purchase; he w a course of conduc vendor into the bel done, and, when sources of the co demand perform of circumstances of a vendee of la duce a chancellor performance. Patt

If a party see has been guilty of excusably negliger on his part; or if, there has arisen a stances, affecting t gations of the par refuse to decree a rule is held with m out of possession. Pa. 400.

Specific perform cretion of the cha fault in the plain formance inequit

The plaintiff's been too long neg lost its vitality and after this great lap harass the title of

We are of opinio and the judgment i

ERIE CITY PAS

Minnie SCHUST.

1. The contrib parent will r infant, for in negligence of
2. No contribut imputed to a c
3. It is not erre to instruct tl evidence.

(Decid

NOTE.—Children incapable of contr of law. Kay v. R. B months old; Masch child three years ol old; Taylor v. Dela 623, eight years old. "The difficulty is

PA.

ERROR to Common Pleas of Erie County, to review a judgment on a verdict for plaintiff in an action on the case for personal injuries. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

The Court, GALBRAITH, P. J., was requested by the defendant to charge the jury, inter alia, as follows:

3. That even if the driver did see the child so close that it might reach the horses or car before they passed, it was not necessarily negligence of the driver not to stop. He was not bound to stop, if it seemed improbable to him that the child would reach the horses or car; and he had a right to presume that a child of her age would not negligently run into an apparent danger.

Ans. What would and what would not constitute negligence is a question for the jury, under all the circumstances of the case as disclosed by the evidence. It is for the jury to say whether under the facts shown there was or was not negligence. The point is refused as being for the jury and not for the court. First assignment of error.

7. If the jury believe from the evidence that the plaintiff was allowed to play in the street unattended, or was sent into the street by its parents on an errand that required her to cross the street, such act was such negligence as will prevent a recovery by the plaintiff in this case. In such a case the negligence of the parents will be imputed to the plaintiff. Refused. Second assignment of error.

8. That under all the evidence in the case the plaintiff is not entitled to recover.

Ans. This is also refused. It is for the jury to say under all the evidence whether the plaintiff is entitled to recover or not. Third assignment of error.

Mr. John P. Vincent, for plaintiff in error:

The driver had a right to presume that even a child would not heedlessly run into an apparent danger.

R. Co. v. Connell, 88 Pa. 520.

He was attending to passengers and did not see the child; there was therefore no evidence of negligence.

Woodbridge v. R. R. Co. 16 W. N. C. 55-57; R. Co. v. Connell, supra.

Whether a particular state of facts constitutes negligence is generally a question of law; whether a particular negligence contributes to the catastrophe is a question of fact. The court should, therefore, have stated the law as requested in our points and left the question of fact to the jury.

R. R. Co. v. Armstrong, 52 Pa. 282.

The consequences of negligence on the part of the parents or other person having charge or control of an infant non sui juris, and himself incapable of negligence, are imputable to the infant.

Fitzgerald v. R. Co. 8 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 310 and the following cases there cited: Hathfield v. Ruper, 21 Ind. 15; Mangam v. R. R. Co. 88 N. Y. 455; Wright v. R. R. Co. 4 Allen, 283; Callahan v. Bean, 9 Allen, 401; Holly v. Boston Gas Light Co. 8 Gray, 123; Brown v. R. Co. 58 Maine, 384; R. R. Co. v. Huffman, 28 Ind. 287; R. Co. v. Grable, 88 Ill. 441; Meeks v. R. R. Co. 52 Cal. 602.

The case of Kay v. R. R. Co. 65 Pa. 269-277, rules this case in principle.

Messrs. Benson, Brainerd & Olds, for defendant in error:

The defendant owed a duty to travelers at the crossing.

R. R. Co. v. Heilman, 49 Pa. 60, 64; Mangam v. R. R. Co. 88 N. Y. 455.

The question of the driver's negligence was properly submitted to the jury as a question of fact.

R. R. Co. v. Heilman, supra; Orissey v. R. Co. 75 Pa. 88.

A child of the age of five years and over cannot be charged with contributory negligence. Mangam v. R. R. Co. supra; R. Co. v. Connell, 88 Pa. 520; R. Co. v. Childwell, 74 Pa. 421; Kay v. R. R. Co. 65 Pa. 269; Rauch v. Lloyd, 31 Pa. 358.

Mr. Justice Trunkay delivered the opinion of the court:

At the date of the plaintiff's injury she was nearly four years of age. She was on her way to a neighboring store, having been sent alone by her parents. The injury was inflicted on the north walk of a street crossing, where people were accustomed to cross on foot. There is no evidence of special hazard at that crossing, occasioned by large amount of travel or otherwise. The driver had stopped his car at the south walk, and there was little time or distance for his team to gain much speed. He first saw the in regard to that age when it cannot be said that its capacity is such that it should or should not be held responsible as an adult. In such cases, as in all others where the matter is uncertain, it is to be tried, and tried by a jury under proper directions from the court." Duffy v. R. R. Co. 2 West. Rep. 200.

"If the plaintiff was too young and inexperienced to appreciate the danger to which he was exposed, then conduct on his part which would be negligence in one aware of the danger might not be imputed as negligence to him. But if the jury should find that he was aware of the danger to which he was exposed, any negligence on his part which contributed directly to his injury will defeat his action." Dowling v. Allen, 5 West. Rep. 372.

All that is required of a child, is care and prudence equal to its capacity. Ind. R. R. Co. v. Pitzer, 4 West. Rep. 250, and note at page 258.

The following are some of the recent cases where the question of contributory negligence was left to the jury: Mattoy v. Whittier Machine Co. 1 New Eng. Rep. 432, child six and a half years old; Nolan v. R. R. Co. 1 New Eng. Rep. 526, child seven years old; Saare v. R. Co. 2 West. Rep. 533, child ten years old.

In Messenger v. Dennie, 1 New Eng. Rep. 759, a child nine years old was held guilty of contributory negligence; in Wright v. R. R. Co. 2 New Eng. Rep. 725, child between six and seven.

The negligence of a father, driving a vehicle, is not imputed to a minor child riding with him, so as to prevent recovery by the child. R. Co. v. Radie, 1 West. Rep. 88.

The negligence of a driver will not prevent one riding with him without hire from recovering against a negligent third party. Borough of Carlisle v. Brisbane, ante, 508.

The negligence of a father in charge of his child of tender years may be imputed to the child. Stillson v. R. R. Co. 67 Mo. 671.

Allowing a child four years old to go on the street is not negligence such as to debar a recovery by the parent. Chicago v. Heising, 83 Ill. 204; Stallford v. Rubens, 1 West. Rep. 640; Collins v. R. R. Co. 2 New Eng. Rep. 649 and note. [J. M.]

child under the tongue when the horses jumped; he had given his attention to passengers between the south and north walks. Other persons saw the child in danger and endeavored to get him to stop.

At the time of the injury to this child the driver was charged not only with driving and managing the horses, but also with collecting the fare; no change box was in the car. Upon the driver rested the entire duty of collecting fares, caring for the convenience of passengers and that of proper driving. His stop at the south walk had no tendency to warn the child or anybody else to keep off the north walk or be run over. Had he kept lookout while between the crossings, he could readily have seen the child.

In response to the defendant's request, the jury were instructed [1] that if the horses were moving at a moderate rate of speed and ran upon the child before she could be seen, and without time for the driver to stop the car; or [2] if the child suddenly came in the way of the horses, unseen by the driver and without giving him time to stop the horses; or [6] if the injury did not happen from any want of ordinary care in the management of the horses at the time of the accident—the plaintiff could not recover; and upon that instruction the questions of fact were submitted. Much more was said in the general charge, but nothing to weaken the affirmance of the defendant's first, second and sixth points.

The first alleged error is that the court refused to charge "That even if the driver did see the child so close that it might reach the horses or car before they passed, it was not necessarily negligence in the driver not to stop. He was not bound to stop, if it seemed improbable to him that the child would reach the horses or car; and he had a right to presume that a child of her age would not negligently run into an apparent danger;" but instead submitted to the jury whether, under all the facts and circumstances shown, there was negligence by the defendant.

The instruction prayed in the third point was based upon the assumed fact that the driver saw the child "so close that it might reach the horses or car before they passed." In the printed argument of plaintiff in error it is said: "There is not one word of evidence in the case to show that the driver saw the child before the horses struck her."

That is true. The driver testifies that he did not see her before, and no witness says he did. Instruction upon things imagined should not be blended with instruction upon things of which there is evidence. The testimony of the driver tended to show that he was looking ahead, just as he ought to have done, at and immediately before the moment the child was struck; other testimony tended to show that he was looking back and speaking with passengers. Here was a real question for the jury, one not to be confounded with anything outside the case. The first assignment cannot be sustained.

The second assignment of error is the refusal of the defendant's seventh point, namely: "If the jury believe from the evidence that the plaintiff was allowed to play in the street unattended, or was sent into the street by its parents on an errand that required her to cross the street, such an act was such negligence as will prevent a recovery by the plaintiff in this case. In such case the negligence of the parents will be imputed to the plaintiff."

Whether the contributory negligence of a parent will bar recovery by an infant, for injury resulting from the negligence of another, is a question upon which there is conflict of decisions in the States of this country. In Pennsylvania the cases are numerous in which infants have recovered compensation for injuries caused by the negligence of others, and no action has failed because of the negligence of the parent or guardian being imputed to the child.

In Smith v. O'Connor, 48 Pa. 218, it was said: "We are asked to approve and apply the doctrine that the negligence or imprudence of the parents or guardians, in allowing a child of tender age to be exposed to injury in a highway, furnishes the same answer to an action by the child as the negligence or other fault of an adult plaintiff would in a similar case. The negligence of the parent or guardian is imputed to the child; and hence, unless the infant plaintiff has exercised the care demanded of an adult, no action can be sustained. This is holding the child responsible for the ordinary care of adults. In our opinion the rule does not rest upon sound reason." And the judgment in favor of the infant plaintiff was affirmed.

The ruling in that case has remained unquestioned until now. But one case is cited by the plaintiff in error. Fitzgerald v. R. Co. 8 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 810, with the references therein.

R. R. Co. v. Snyder, 18 Ohio St. 399, a well considered case, and cases in several other States might be cited in support of the ruling in Smith v. O'Connor.

For clear and forcible reasoning, in support of the doctrine that where the defendant, discharging his duties carefully, could have avoided injuring the child, no amount of negligence by the child's parents is a defense, reference is made to Wharton, Law of Negligence, §§ 809, 810, 811, 812.

This doctrine has been repeatedly recognized. Among the cases are Glassey v. R. Co. 57 Pa. 172, where it was decided that the father could not recover for an injury to his son of tender years, caused in part by his own imprudence, although the infant may; and R. R. Co. v. Mahoney, 57 Pa. 187, where it was remarked that if the action was by the father to recover damages by the death of the child, a very different question would be presented. To a child of plaintiff's years, no contributory negligence can be imputed.

In the refusal of the seventh and eighth points there was no error.

Judgment affirmed.

HAMBURG BANK et al., Appts.,
v.

Mahlon SEIDEL et al.

1. An assignment of a mortgage with verbal directions to the assignee to collect the debt and pay the proceeds to the assignor, if living, or to the brothers and sisters of the assignee if the assignor is dead, constitutes a special trust.

2. After the death of the assignor the orphans' court has not jurisdiction of the trust, and will not compel the assignee, who is also the assignor's administrator, to account for the proceeds.

(Decided October 4, 1886.)

A PPEAL from a decree of the Orphans' Court of Berks County, sustaining exceptions to the report of an auditor. Affirmed.

Nathan Trexler died September 26, 1881. On October 20, 1881, letters of administration were issued to his son Benjamin B. Trexler, who died April 10, 1883. Benjamin filed an account December 2, 1882, to which exceptions were filed by the Hamburg Bank and other creditors of Nathan Trexler, February 15, 1883, and by Oliver Trexler, a son and heir of Nathan Trexler on November 15, 1883.

By the account filed the estate appeared to be insolvent.

The exceptions complained inter alia that Benjamin had failed to charge himself with the proceeds of two mortgages: one for $3,780 and the other for $700.50, given by Jacob and Caroline Leibensperger to Nathan Trexler, and assigned without consideration on the 12th of April, 1881, by Nathan Trexler, the decedent, to Benjamin Trexler, for the purpose, as the exceptions alleged, of collection.

The court referred the exceptions to William M. Goodman, Esq., as auditor, to pass upon the exceptions, audit, restate and make distribution. The testimony taken by the auditor, in so far as it related to the assignment of the mortgages, is stated in the opinion.

The auditor sustained the exceptions of the creditors and Oliver Trexler, to the account, and surcharged the accountant with the proceeds of the mortgages. The orphans' court reversed this action of the auditor, and struck out the surcharge. From this decree this appeal was taken by the Hamburg Bank, by other creditors and by the administrator d. b. n.

Messrs. W. D. Horning and H. Willis Bland, for appellants:

The mother and sister of the accountant were not parties, and they had no direct interest in the result of the litigation. The distribution could not have been made to them if they had not assigned, but must have been made to the administrator d. b. n. of the decedent.

Montgomery's Est. 7 Phila. 504; Lewis v. Ewing, 18 Pa. 315; Carter v. Trueman, 7 Pa. 821; Commonwealth v. Strohecker, 9 Watts, 480; Little v. Walton, 23 Pa. 166; Bowman's App. 62 Pa. 170.

Persons merely collaterally interested may transfer and release such interest, and become thereby competent witnesses.

Forrester v. Kline, 64 Pa. 81; Carter v. Trueman, 7 Pa. 315; Steininger v. Hoch, 42 Pa. 432.

The rule in the case of Post v. Avery, 5 Watts & S. 509, and kindred cases, was not intended to render persons incompetent as witnesses who were competent at common law.

Etans v. Dela, 35 Pa. 457.

It applies only to persons who have assigned a chose in action in which the recovery would have been for their own use, if no assignment had been made. The assignor in an action in which the claim assigned comes directly in controversy cannot be a witness.

Hartman v. Keystone Ins. Co. 21 Pa. 476.

Nor assignors of a chose in action, called to assist in its recovery with their oaths.

Kirkpatrick v. Muirhead, 16 Pa. 127.

The evidence shows a substantially contemporaneous agreement between Nathan and Benjamin, that the latter should hold the mortgages for collection only. Evidence of an express agreement is not essential.

Rhines v. Baird, 41 Pa. 263; Plumer v. Guthrie, 76 Pa. 455-6; Nicolls v. McDonald, 101 Pa. 519; Kunkle v. Wolfersberger, 6 Watts, 180.

It is not on this day an open question that a conveyance absolute on its face may be shown to be a security for money loaned, and that this may be made to appear by oral testimony.

Sweetser's App. 71 Pa. 273; Kunkle v. Wolfersberger, 6 Watts, 126; Hiestor v. Madeira, 3 Watts & S. 384; Houser v. Lamont, 55 Pa. 311; Harp-er's App. 64 Pa. 315.

Parol evidence is admissible to explain a latent ambiguity.

Lycoming Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Sailer, 67 Pa. 108; Coleman v. Eberly, 76 Pa. 197.

Parol evidence is admissible, in cases of fraud, or of plain mistake in drawing a writing.

Christ v. Diffenbach, 1 Serg. & R. 464; Caulk v. Eberly, 6 Whart. 303; Morrison v. Morrison, 6 Watts & S. 516; Bollinger v. Eckert, 16 Serg. & R. 422; Gover v. Sterner, 2 Whart. 75; Chew v. Gillespie, 56 Pa. 309.

Or in case of an attempt to make a fraudulent use of it subsequently.

Oliver v. Oliver, 4 Rawle, 141; Renshaw v. Gans, 7 Pa. 117.

Conversations and negotiations leading to a written contract are admissible to prove a fraud or trust; but there should be clear evidence that the arrangement continued up to the time of executing the writing.

McGinity v. McGinity, 63 Pa. 38.

Parol evidence, may be received to explain and define the subject matter of a written agreement; Barnhart v. Riddle, 29 Pa. 92; Al-bridge v. Fishleman, 46 Pa. 420; Gould v. Lee, 55 Pa. 99; to prove a consideration not mentioned in a deed, provided it be not inconsistent with the consideration expressed in it; Lewis v. Brewster, 57 Pa. 410; to establish a trust: Cozens v. Stevenson, 5 Serg. & R. 421; to rebut a presumption or equity; Bank v. Fordyce, 9 Pa. 275; Musselman v. Stoner, 31 Pa. 265; to alter the legal operation of an instrument where it contradicts nothing expressed in the writing; Chalfant v. Williams, 35 Pa. 212; to explain a latent ambiguity; McDermott v. U. S. Ins. Co. 3 Serg. & R. 604; Iddings v. Iddings, 7 Serg. & R. 111; and to supply deficiencies in the written agreement; Miller v. Fichthorn, 31 Pa. 252; but, as a general rule, it is inadmissible to contradict or vary the terms of a written instrument. Hain v. Kilbach, 14 Serg. & R. 159; Barnhart v. Riddle, supra; Miller v. Fichthorn, supra; Harbold v. Kuster, 44 Pa. 392; Lloyd v. Farrell, 43 Pa. 73; Ansapach v. Bast, 52 Pa. 356.

In cases of fraud, accident or mistake, the rule is different. Where equity would set aside or reform the instrument on either of these grounds, parol evidence is admissible to contradict or vary the terms of the agreement as written. Christ v. Diffenbach, 1 Serg. & R. 464; Idings v. Idings, 7 Serg. & R. 111; Miller v. Henderson, 10 Serg. & R. 290; Parke v. Chadwick, 8 Watts & S. 96; Clark v. Partridge, 2 Pa. 18; Renshaw v. Gans, 7 Pa. 117; Reurich v. Swinehart, 11 Pa. 238; Lippincott v. Whitman, 88 Pa. 246.

The direction to pay to Nathan's children in case of his death was a testamentary act, and Benjamin's authority was revoked by Nathan's death.

Frederick's App. 52 Pa. 338. Note to Ellison v. Ellison, 1 White & Tudor, Lead. Cas. Eq. ed. 1876, p. 446.

The transfer of the mortgages was a legal fraud upon the creditors of Nathan Trexler.

Fowler's App. 87 Pa. 454.

The orphans' court is a court of equity.

Kitteras' App. 17 Pa. 423; Dundas' App. 78 Pa. 479-480.

Messrs. F. R. Schell and R. E. Wright & Sons, for appellees:

The right to the fund in controversy depended upon transactions had with Benjamin B. Trexler. He was deceased. His legal representatives were the "assignors of the thing or contract in action," and thus the Act of 1869 removing the disqualification of interest does not apply. The case is covered by the proviso to the Act. A witness is incompetent if the effect of his testimony may be to preserve a fund for the payment of a debt due to himself.

Paule v. Mackey, 3 Watts, 110; Mishler v. Merkle, 10 Pa. 509; Sharp v. Long, 28 Pa. 433; Hill v. Hill, 32 Pa. 511.

Where one party of the "thing" in action is dead, and his rights have passed to another, the Act of 1869 has no application.

Karns v. Tanner, 66 Pa. 297; Hess v. Gourley, 89 Pa. 195; Ewing v. Ewing, 96 Pa. 381; Hanna v. Wray, 77 Pa. 27; Gardner v. McLallen, 79 Pa. 398; Strawbridge v. Catarrach, 4 W. N. C. 176; Hunt's App. 100 Pa. 590.

The releases given to the administrator d. b. n. of Nathan Trexler, and the assignment of their shares to him individually did not make the accountant's mother and sister competent witnesses. The doctrine of Post v. Avery, 5 Watts & S. 509, is still law.

An assignment of a cause of action which is merely colorable shall not divest the title of the plaintiff so as to make him a competent witness, whatever its legal effect between the parties may be, and every assignment is to be deemed colorable when no other motive for it can be made to appear.

Post v. Avery, 5 Watts & S. 509; Seiper v. Peirce, 6 Watts & S. 555; Patterson v. Reed, 7 Watts & S. 146; McUelland v. Mahon, 1 Pa. 364; Clover v. Painter, 2 Pa. 46; Asay v. Hoover, 5 Pa. 21; Montgomery v. Grant, 57 Pa. 248; Grayson's App. 5 Pa. 395; Graves v. Griffin, 19 Pa. 176; Bailey v. Knapp, 19 Pa. 192; Lindsley v. Malone, 23 Pa. 24, and Hertz v. Snyder, 26 Pa. 511.

An assignor through whose assignment the plaintiff claims is not a competent witness, when executors, administrators, or guardians are either plaintiffs or defendants.

Vintaman v. Cronshore, 15 W. N. C. 202.

If there was anything for the heirs, the distribution under the Act of 1884 should properly have been to the administrator d. b. n.

Purd. Dig. pp. 94, 95, 99, 100, 425; Scott, Intestates, p. 518; 1 Rhone, Orphans' Court, Pr. p. 285; Commonwealth v. Strohecker, 9 Watts, 481; Carter v. Trueman, 7 Pa. 319; Lewis v. Ewing, 18 Pa. 315; Austin v. Montgomery, 7 Phila. 504; Little v. Walton, 23 Pa. 166; Bozman's App. 62 Pa. 170; Crossel v. Black, 4 Pittsb. 327.

But before the Act of 1884 this was not so. The distinction (when an administrator died) between such assets of the decedent as were administered and such as were not was clear and distinct. Such as were not administered and still existed in specie or uncollected as the decedent had left them, passed to the administrator d. b. n., and in these it might be said that the interest of the heirs was merely collateral. But such as had been administered and were in the hands of the administrator ready for distribution passed to the heirs, legatees and creditors in the proportions to which they were entitled, and the proceedings to recover them were by the heirs directly.

See Drenkle v. Sharman, 9 Watts, 489; Potts v. Smith, 3 Rawle, 361-370; Scott, Intestates, p. 518-521; Slaymaker v. Farmers Nat. Bank, 14 W. N. C. 842.

It is true the Act of 1884 changed all this, and provided that the administrator d. b. n. should be entitled to take in his hands all undivided assets, whether administered or not. But he took them for the use of the heirs, legatees and creditors.

Drenkle v. Sharman, 9 Watts, 485.

In order to convert a deed absolute upon its face into a mortgage by parol evidence, such evidence must be clear, explicit and unequivocal. Subsequent admissions and declarations of the alleged mortgagee only are not sufficient. An agreement must be proved which is substantially contemporaneous with the execution and delivery of the deed.

Nicolls v. McDonald, 101 Pa. 514.

To show by parol that a deed absolute upon its face is a mortgage the proof must be clear, explicit and unequivocal. The proof must establish an agreement substantially contemporaneous with the execution and delivery of the deed, and rely not on subsequent admissions and declarations of the mortgagee only.

Plumer v. Guthrie, 76 Pa. 441; Kutz's App. 100 Pa. 75; Phillips v. Medley, 15 W. N. C. 225.

The evidence proper to be submitted to a jury for the purpose of revoking a written agreement or altering its terms is only such as would justify a chancellor in reforming the writing, on the ground of fraud, accident or mistake, and must be clear, precise and indubitable.

Murray v. N. Y. Lack. & W. R. R. Co. 13 W. N. C. 218.

Evidence must be of what occurred at the execution of the paper.

Martin v. Berens, 67 Pa. 459.

If there was a trust created by the transfer of those mortgages, it cannot be enforced in this proceeding.

The only evidence of the nature of the trust upon which it is alleged that Benjamin was to hold the mortgages was this:

If Benjamin collected the money in Nathan's lifetime, he was to pay it to him. If he collected it after Nathan's death, he was to pay it to the brothers and sisters in equal shares.

That the brothers and sisters have ample remedy to enforce their equity under such a trust if there be one is clear upon authority.

American Law Register, January, 1884, p. 1, where Penna. cases are collected; Justice v. Tallman, 86 Pa. 147; Dock v. Boyd, 93 Pa. 92; Seventh Nat. Bank v. Cook, 23 Pa. 483; First Nat. Bank v. McMichael (Pa.), 18 Reporter, 698.

Appellants contend that the assignment of the mortgages, as modified by the alleged parol trust, was testamentary in character because not to take effect until Nathan's death, and hence revocable. Even if this were so, it never has been revoked, and hence would become operative.

Turner v. Scott, 51 Pa. 127; Scott v. Scott, 70 Pa. 246; Ritter's App. 59 Pa. 6; Book v. Book, 15 W. N. C. 150; Frederick's App. 52 Pa. 389.

There are no parties properly in court against whom the decree asked for by the appellants could be made. The administrator de bonis non might have sued to recover the assets in the hands of the decedent.

Act of February 24, 1884, § 31, Purd. 99; Scott, Intestates, p. 518; 1 Rhone, Orphans' Court, Pr. p. 285, § 143; Commonwealth v. Strohecker, 9 Watts, 481; Carter v. Trueman, 7 Pa. 319; Lewis v. Ewing, 18 Pa. 815; Austin v. Montgomery, 7 Phila. 504.

If the proceeding on the account already filed, and before an auditor, was to be followed out in lieu of a new proceeding by the administrator de bonis non, it should have been under the same Act. A scire facias should have been issued against the executors or administrators of B. B. Trexler, deceased.

Purd. p. 425, pl. 100; Id. p. 124, pl. 94, 95.

If the creditors had any standing and insolvency at the time of transfer were proven, it would not avoid the transfer so as to inure to the benefit of heirs. "None but those intended to be postponed or defrauded are within the protection of the Statute of Elizabeth."

Phippis v. Boyd, 54 Pa. 842; Bradway's Est. 1 Ashm. 212.

The representatives of a donor who has made a voluntary conveyance in fraud of creditors can only set it aside to the extent that may be required to pay such creditors.

Pringle v. Pringle, 59 Pa. 286.

Mr. Justice Sterrett delivered the opinion of the court:

Exceptions having been filed by creditors and others to the account of Benjamin B. Trexler, administrator of the estate of Nathan Trexler, deceased, an auditor was appointed by the orphans' court to pass upon the same, restate the account, if necessary, and distribute the balance. The duty of the auditor under this appointment was twofold: 1. To ascertain the correct balance due by accountant; and 2. To distribute the same among the parties entitled thereto. It is only as to the former branch of his duty that any question arises on this appeal. As to the parties who are entitled to participate in the distribution of the balance that may be found due by the accountant, there appears to be no controversy.

One of the exceptions, and the only one involved in this contention, was that accountant should be charged with the proceeds of the Leibensperger mortgages, one for $3,780 and the other for $709.50, both of which were assigned by the intestate to his son, the accountant, and collected by him.

It was alleged by exceptants that the mortgages were assigned solely for the purpose of collection, with the distinct understanding that if accountant succeeded in collecting them in his father's lifetime, the proceeds should be paid to him; if not they should be accounted for as assets of his estate. It is conceded that accountant collected the debts secured by the mortgages, and has since died without having accounted for the proceeds. The burden, of course, was on the exceptants to show that the assignment was not intended to invest accountant with the absolute ownership, or title to the mortgages in his own right, but only in trust for the purpose stated.

Accountant's mother and sister having first assigned their respective interests in the estate and executed releases to the administrator de bonis non, were called by exceptants and testified in relation to the assignment of the mortgages and the purpose for which it was made. On their testimony in connection with that of other witnesses, the learned auditor found in favor of exceptants, and accordingly surcharged accountant with the proceeds of the mortgages and interest amounting in all to $5,347.35, ascertained the balance due by him and distributed the same. The orphans' court, however, held that accountant being dead, at the time of hearing before the auditor, his mother and sister were incompetent to testify that the assignment was executed merely for the purpose of facilitating the collection of the mortgages and not with the view of transferring title absolutely to accountant.

We are not prepared to say there was any error in this: but, assuming for the sake of argument that the witnesses in question were competent, their testimony establishes a special trust that is not cognizable in the orphans' court; and for that reason, if no other, there was no error in sustaining the exceptions to the auditor's report.

As to the disposition accountant agreed to make of the mortgage money when collected, the substance of their testimony is that if Benjamin, the accountant, collected the money in his father's lifetime, he was to pay it to him. If he collected it after his father's death, he was to pay it to his brothers and sisters in equal shares. The exact language of Mary Trexler, as we find it on the record is: "My father said to him, Benjamin, that if he collected the mortgages in his lifetime he would have to pay the money over to him, my father; and if he, my father, didn't live, he would have to pay it out to his brothers and sisters. This was at the time the assignments were made; that is, my father said this in the morning, when the assignments were made in the evening of the same day. Benjamin said he would pay it over."

The widow, Mrs. Lydia Trexler, testified as follows: "I was present when my husband assigned the mortgages to Benjamin. After the mortgages were assigned, he, Benjamin, said to me the mortgages were assigned to him for collection. He said that he, Benjamin, was to pay the money back to his brothers and sisters, and if he would collect it in his father's lifetime, he would have to pay it to him." The learned auditor also found as a fact that the assignor of the mortgages intended to create a trust for the benefit of his children in case the money was not collected in his lifetime.

It is conceded the assignor of the mortgages died before they were collected. If an alternative trust, such as was testified to by the witnesses and found by the auditor, was created, it necessarily follows that accountant held the proceeds of the mortgages, not in trust for his father's estate nor for his father's creditors, but in trust for his brothers and sisters. If the assignment was made for the purpose of hindering, delaying or defrauding his creditors, they are the only parties who can assail it. His widow and heirs cannot question its validity; nor can the trustee be compelled to account in the orphans' court until the trust is first stricken down, at the instance of the assignor's creditors, as a fraud upon them to the extent of their respective claims. This has not been done; and we think there was no error in holding that the court had no jurisdiction of a trust created by accountant's intestate in favor of his children.

Decree affirmed and appeal dismissed, at the costs of appellants.

TREXLER'S APPEAL.

(Decided October 4, 1886.)

Mr. Justice Sterrett delivered the opinion of the court:

The questions involved in this appeal are the same as those presented by the record in Hamburg Bank's App. [ante, 921], and for reasons briefly given in opinion first filed in that case the appeal in this case is dismissed.

Decree affirmed and appeal dismissed at costs of appellant.

John TRUBY et al., Piffs. in Err.,
v.

J. H. PALMER et al.

SAME v. SAME.

APPEALS OF ALLEN et al. (Two cases.)

In a lease which declares that the land shall be occupied and worked for petroleum, rock or carbon oil, and shall not be occupied or used for any other purpose whatsoever; and that if no oil is found in paying quantities within four years the lease shall be null and void, "oil" is not synonymous with "gas," and accordingly the production of gas alone will not satisfy the conditions of the lease.

(Decided October 4, 1886.)

ERROR to the Common Pleas of Warren County, to review judgments discharging rules to set aside writs of habere facias possessionem upon judgments in ejectment entered for the plaintiffs on warrants of attorney. Affirmed.

affirmed.

APPEALS from decrees of the said court, discharging rules to show cause why the said judgments in ejectment should not be opened or stricken off. Affirmed.

These were two amicable actions of ejectment, by J. H. Palmer and others against John Truby and Allen & Co., in which on April 4, 1884, judgments were confessed by virtue of general powers of attorney contained in two oil leases, one of the north half and the other of the south half of the same tract of land.

With the exception of the parts of the tract to which they related, and their dates, one May 7, 1881, the other January 10, 1883, the leases were identical in terms.

By each instrument the plaintiffs leased to the defendants the land described in it, reserving the right to use the land for agriculture or any other purpose not interfering with the operations of the defendants, for the term of twenty years, provided the covenants, agreements and stipulations therein contained were faithfully kept and performed, for the exclusive purpose of occupying and working for petroleum, rock or carbon oil.

Each lease contained the usual provisions for using timber, drawing casings, plugging, payment of taxes, location of wells near boundaries, keeping records of wells, inspection by the plaintiffs, notification to the plaintiffs when oil-bearing sand was expected, commencement of operations within thirty-five days and employment of sufficient labor and material. It was also stipulated that:

"If no oil is found in paying quantities within four years from this date, this lease shall be null and void; but the parties of the second part or those claiming under them, to complete and test at least one well each and every— from the completion of the first well above stipulated to be put down, should said first well prove to be without oil in paying quantity."

Then followed a covenant for the payment of royalty.

The lease concluded with the usual agreement that a failure to comply with any of the covenants, agreements or stipulations therein contained, should forfeit the lease, and the same should become null and void; and that the parties of the second part thereby authorized the bringing of suit in ejectment against them, the entry of an appearance for them, and the confession of a judgment against them for the land described in the writ, with the same force and effect as upon service of a writ in ejectment, verdict and judgment; and that upon judgment so entered, writ or writs of possession might issue at once with fi. fa. for costs, and without stay, thereby waiving and releasing all errors therein.

Upon the filing of copies of the leases, and written confessions of judgment which contained averments, supported by affidavit, that the defendants had failed to comply with the covenants, agreements and stipulations contained in the leases (the first well drilled not being an oil-producing well and the defendants not sinking a second one) judgments were entered. Writs of habere facias possessionem at once issued; whereupon, the defendants obtained rules to show cause why the writs should not be set aside and the judgments opened.

Pending these rules the defendants obtained also rules to show cause why the judgment should not be stricken off. At the hearing of the rules the following facts appeared:

In November, 1882, while drilling the first well at the depth of about 1500 feet, a very large gas vein was struck. The flow of gas was so strong, however, that no torpedo could be exploded in the oil-bearing sand rock, to test the capacity of the well for producing oil, on account of the great danger in lowering the shell.

The lessees were hopeful that the gas might soon exhaust itself, as had often been the case in such wells, and that this well might become a paying producer. In the meantime they made an arrangement to utilize the gas, so that it might become a source of profit to both parties. They accordingly made a contract to sell a certain amount of gas, payable monthly, and in December received the first payment, and at once reported to the plaintiffs what they had done, and proposed to do, and paid Mr. Palmer his royalty of one eighth, in accordance with the terms of the lease; and he approved what they had done, and accepted the same each month, and receipted for the moneys as royalty until June, 1883, when he declined to receipt for any more.

The defendants drilled a well on the tract of land covered by the second lease which proved also a gas well and thereafter they made no more efforts to obtain oil.

The court discharged all the rules.

The defendants took these writs, assigning as error the refusal of the court to set aside the execution; and also appealed from the decrees of the court discharging the rules to show cause why the judgment should not be opened or stricken off.

Messrs. Chas. Dinsmoor, Roger Sherman and S. T. Neill, for plaintiffs in error, and appellants:

There can be no presumption prima facie that the lessee has been guilty of a violation of a covenant in the lease. The presumption is the other way.

Adams, Eject. *317.

Taking the blank in the lease, to have been intended for the word "year," and concede to the plaintiffs below the right to amend by insertion of the word "year," without which the original judgment had nothing to support it (which right to amend we deny), and they still have to meet the following fatal objections to their judgment:

There is no averment that the first well was then or is now completed, or that the same has not been put down in the shortest possible time.

There is no averment that the four years' time, given by the terms of the lease, for obtaining oil in paying quantities, have elapsed, and it affirmatively appears by the lease that they have not elapsed.

The terms of the power of attorney require the bringing of a suit in ejectment and the issuing of a writ, which has not been done.

The twelfth section of Act of March 21, 1806, 1 Purd. Dig. 635, pl. 1, seems to require the issuing of a writ of ejectment in every case, and to be mandatory.

Execution could not issue without leave of court.

Shaw v. Bayard, 4 Pa. 257; Connolly v. Miller, 95 Pa. 513.

The issuing of execution to put the tenants out of possession of the demised premises, on the bare allegation of a forfeiture claimed by their landlords, unsupported by anything except the mere averment of record, by their attorneys, is contrary to the spirit and purpose of the Statute of 8th and 9th William III, chap. 11, (Rob. Dig. 142).

It is true this statute was held not to apply to judgments entered on warrant of attorney to secure the payment of money in several installments.

Longstreth v. Gray, 1 Watts, 63 and many other cases, down to Templeton v. Shakley, 107 Pa. 877.

But in every case in this State where it has been so held, the bonds or obligations were simply for the payment of money.

Where the right to issue execution upon a judgment depends upon the existence of a fact or the performance of some collateral act, the existence of that fact or the performance of the act must be judicially determined before execution can issue.

Adams v. Bush, 5 Watts, 289; Montelius v. Montelius, Bright. 79; Holden v. Bull, 1 Penn. & W. 460; Harger v. Commissioners Washington Co. 12 Pa. 251.

In an action on a replevin bond, with warrant to confess judgment, a scire facias quare executio non must be issued.

Curtis v. Kearney, 2 Pittsb. 87; Magill v. Higgins, Id. 107.

Error lies to this court to the refusal of the court below to set aside the execution.

Jones v. Dilworth, 63 Pa. 447; Pontius v. Nesbit, 40 Pa. 309; Holden v. Bull, 1 Penn. & W. 460.

Messrs. W. W. Wilbur and R. Brown, for defendants in error, and appellees:

Where a lease is upon condition, the burden is on the lessees of showing performance.

The citations to Adams on Ejectment, by the plaintiffs in error, have no application to leaseholds in Pennsylvania, for the reason that no entry is necessary to enforce a forfeiture.

Sheaffer v. Sheaffer, 87 Pa. 525; Davis v. Moss, 38 Pa. 346.

The plain import of the averments is that the first well on each tract proved to be without oil in paying quantities when completed, and that a second well was not completed and tested in one year from the completion of the first as required by the terms of each agreement.

Although the twelfth section, Act March 21, 1806, seems mandatory that a writ must be issued in every case, yet it was decided in Massey v. Thomas, 6 Binn. 333, that an amicable action of ejectment is good, although the Act prescribes the form of the writ of ejectment and says it shall not be otherwise.

The cases of Shaw v. Bayard, 4 Pa. 257, and Connolly v. Miller, 95 Pa. 513, cited by the counsel as sustaining the position that the habere facias could not issue except by leave of the court, apply only to conditional verdicts in ejectment.

The writ may issue at once, without leave of the court. A writ of sci. fa. is unnecessary, and it was not intended by the parties when they executed the leases that one should issue before the habere facias.

The Statute 8 and 9 William II, chap. 11, § 8 (Rob. Dig. 142), neither in terms nor by the decisions of this court applies to cases where judgments are entered by warrant of attorney. Jones v. Dilworth, 68 Pa. 447; Skidmore v. Bradford, 4 Pa. 296; Reynolds v. Lowry, 6 Pa. 465; McCann v. Furlley, 26 Pa. 173.

As to the proof requisite to reform the second lease by changing the word "oil" into "gas," the only evidence given falls far short of the requisites to change the agreement. It shows no fraud or mistake, and is not of that clear and convincing kind of evidence which this court has uniformly ruled necessary for that purpose. Besides, the testimony of one party is flatly denied by the other party without the evidence equivalent to another witness; hence the facts he states are not proven.

Sowers v. Weaver, 78 Pa. 443; Penn Iron Co. v. Diller, 1 Cent. Rep. 377.

Per Curiam:

These four cases were argued together. They are based on the same original transaction. That is a written lease dated May 7, 1881. It expressly declares the property "shall be occupied and worked for petroleum, rock or carbon oil, and shall not be occupied or used for any other purpose whatsoever." And "If no oil is found in paying quantities within four years from this date, this lease shall be null and void."

Oil was not so found. It would be a clear perversion of language to hold that gas and oil are synonymous terms. The evidence is insufficient to prove that the word "gas" was omitted from the lease through fraud, accident or mistake. The doctrine of equitable estoppel is not applicable to the facts proved.

There is no error in the judgments nor in the decrees; therefore, judgments and decrees are severally affirmed and the appeals are dismissed, at the costs of the respective appellants.

PENNSYLVANIA CANAL CO., Plff. in Err.,

TOWNSHIPS OF SHIRLEY AND UNION.

A contract entered into by the supervisors of a township, with a canal company, for the use of the tow path of the canal as a public road, the contract being made by decree of court, is ultra vires, against public policy and void.

(Decided October 4, 1886.)

ERROR to the Common Pleas of Huntingdon County, to review a judgment on a verdict for defendant in an action of debt. Affirmed.

The following facts appeared on the trial before Furst, P. J.:

Viewers appointed by court reported that they laid out a public road along and upon the tow path of the plaintiff's canal. The report was confirmed nisi. Exceptions were filed and argued.

Plaintiff offered to prove that, on the hearing of the argument upon the report of the viewers laying out a public road on the towing path of the canal, and the exception of the Canal Company, the court continued the case until the PA.

following court of quarter sessions, stating that in the meantime it would expect the Canal Company and the two Townships to make an agreement for the use of the towing path, and if the agreement was not made, it would give the Townships a road over the end of the mountain. Acting upon that suggestion the petition of 103 citizens of the two Townships was presented to the court, asking for authority to make an agreement for five years, and pay $100 per annum. The court thereupon made a decree giving the authority, and afterwards the contract was made and executed, the contract reciting the decree of the court.

Plaintiff proposed to follow the offer with proof: That this decree was made by the court, and certified copies given to the supervisors of the two Townships. That after two thirds of the citizens of Union Township requested the supervisors to execute the contract, it was executed by the supervisors of both Townships. That they have had the use of the towing path ever since, and have paid the sum of $100 for one year. That the contract having been fully executed nothing remains to be done but the payment of the annual sum of $100.

The contract to follow the offer as above.

By the Court: We are of opinion that the decree of the court of May 23, 1879, did not empower the defendants to make the contract. The contract is contrary to the policy of the law and in violation of the method and only method in which public roads may be laid out and opened by authority of law under the general road laws of this Commonwealth. Said contract is ultra vires and therefore not binding on the several Townships, defendants. For these reasons we reject the offer of evidence.

First, second and third assignments of error.

Messrs. Wm. Dorris and John D. Dorris, for plaintiff in error:

"The decisions and dicta upon the subject of ultra vires are very conflicting, and some absolutely irreconcilable, while the principle itself is become, if not an excrescence upon, at least a very disturbing element in, the legal system."

Green's Brice, Ultra Vires, Preface, XI.

"The doctrine is applied only for the purpose of compelling corporations to be honest in the simplest and commonest sense of honesty."

Bradley v. Ballard, 55 Ill. 417.

By the Act of April 15, 1834, section 3, the several townships are made bodies corporate. They are enabled to take and hold real estate within their respective limits, and also personal property for the benefit of the inhabitants, for such objects and purposes and to make such contracts as may be necessary and proper for the execution of the same objects and purposes.

Dean v. New Milford, 5 Watts & S. 546.

The court had the power to confirm the report of the viewers. In the exercise of the right of eminent domain the franchise of the Canal Company could have been taken.

West Bridge Co. v. Dix, 6 How. 507 (47 U. S. bk. 12, L. ed. 535); Mills v. St. Clair Co. 8 How. 569 (49 U. S. bk. 12, L. ed. 1201).

A franchise may be condemned in the same manner as individual property.

Richmond F. & P. R. R. Co. v. Louisa R. R. Co. 13 How. 71 (54 U. S. bk. 14, L. ed. 55).

"If the county jail should be burned, or rendered uninhabitable by infectious disease, or other cause, and the commissioners, acting in good faith, should hire prisoners kept in some other suitable place, can it be doubted that the county would be liable for the debt thus incurred?"

Allegheny County v. Western Pa. Hospital, 48 Pa. 126.

Where a contract has been fully performed, either by the corporation or the other party, the one who has received the benefit will not be permitted to resist its enforcement by the plea of mere want of power.

Oil Creek, etc., R. R. Co. v. Pa. Trans. Co. 83 Pa. 166; Wright v. Pipe Line Co. 101 Pa. 207; Commonwealth v. Phila. Co. 2 Serg. & R. 198; Vankirk v. Clark, 16 Serg. & R. 290; Cooper v. Lampeter, 8 Watts, 125; Dauphin Co. v. Bleidenhart, 16 Pa. 458; Watts' Appeal, 78 Pa. 391; Whitney Arms Co. v. Barior, 63 N. Y. 62; Bigelow, Estop. p. 466; citing Ward v. Johnson, 95 Ill. 215, 280; Darst v. Gale, 88 Ill. 141; R. Co. v. McCarthy, San Antonio v. Mehaffy, Hitchcock v. Galveston, 96 U. S. 267, 312, 351 (Bk. 24, L. ed. 693, 816, 659). See also Bradley v. Ballard, 55 Ill. 417; Parish v. Wheeler, 22 N. Y. 494; Green's Brice, Ultra Vires, 2d ed. p. 729.

This rule prevails as to public or municipal corporations.

Thompson v. Lambert, 44 Iowa, 239; 1 Dillon, Mun. Corp. § 10, p. 97; Gas Co. v. San Francisco, 9 Cal. 453; Oakland Township v. Martin, 104 Pa. 805.

"When there is a de facto corporation, and the State does not interfere, its corporate existence and its ability to contract cannot be questioned in a suit brought upon an evidence of a debt given to it."

Commissioners v. Bolles, 94 U. S. 104 (Bk. 24, L. ed. 46); Spahr v. Farmers Bank, 94 Pa. 434; Oil Creek, etc., R. R. Co. v. Pa. Trans. Co. 83 Pa. 166; Parish v. Wheeler, 22 N. Y. 503.

An agreement originally ultra vires cannot be impeached after a considerable time.

Smallcombe's Case, L. R. 3 Eq. 769; 1 Add. Cont. § 124.

"The law never sustains a defense of this nature out of regard for a defendant."

Wright v. Pipe Line Co. 101 Pa. 207.

See also Farnham v. Del. & Hud. Canal Co. 61 Pa. 271; Freeland v. Pa. Cent. Ins. Co. 94 Pa. 504; Bentley v. Lamb, 17 W. N. C. 412.

Messrs. Brown, Bailey & Brown and Speer & McMurtrie, for defendants in error:

By the Act of 1834 (2 Purd. 1401), the supervisors of each township elected or appointed in pursuance of this Act, shall perform all the duties imposed by law on the supervisors of the public roads and highways.

By the Act of 1836 (2 Purd. 1278), public roads or highways laid out, approved and entered on record as aforesaid, shall * * * be effectually opened and constantly kept in repair.

By the Act of 1834 (2 Purd. 1366), supervisors may lay a tax for "laying out, opening, making, amending or repairing of roads and highways, and for the making and repairing of bridges, and for such other purposes as may be authorized by law."

But before issuing the duplicate and warrant for their collection, they shall give "notice to all persons, rated for such taxes, by advertisements or otherwise, to attend at such times and places as such supervisors may direct, so as to give such persons full opportunity to work out their respective taxes."

The opportunity to work out the taxes is a condition precedent to collection by legal process.

Miller v. Gorman, 38 Pa. 309.

Under this contract, the $100 was to be paid annually in money. There was, and there could be, no opportunity to work out this tax.

Without an order of the quarter sessions, supervisors have no more authority to open a new road, or correct errors in the opening of an old one, than have their fellow citizens.

Holden v. Cole, 1 Pa. 303; Snow v. Deerfield Township, 78 Pa. 181; Bergner v. Harrisburg, 1 Pears. 291; Addis v. Pittsburgh, 85 Pa. 373; Hague v. Philadelphia, 48 Pa. 527; School District of Erie v. Fuess, 98 Pa. 600.

A quasi municipal corporation has only the powers which are conferred by statute, and acts done by it in excess of such powers, are void.

Wimer v. Worth Township, 104 Pa. 317; Wolf v. Goddard, 9 Watts, 550.

A township is a quasi corporation.

Dill. Mun. Corp. § 10; Union Twp. v. Giboney, 94 Pa. 534.

Even exercise of legislative power on such subject is doubtful.

Mahanoy Twp. v. Comrs. 103 Pa. 362.

A ratification can only be made when the party ratifying possesses the power to perform the act ratified.

Marsh v. Fulton County, 10 Wall. 676 (71 U. S. bk. 19, L. ed. 1040).

A municipal corporation may ratify the unauthorized acts and contracts of its agents or officers, which are within the corporate powers, but not otherwise.

Dill. Mun. Corp. § 385.

Upon authorized contracts it is liable as a natural person; but upon contracts that are ultra vires there is no liability, and the corporation is not estopped to set up the defense.

Dill. Mun. Corp. § 749.

When the wing walls to a county bridge had been built by an unauthorized contract, the township was held not liable, although the public was enjoying the fruits of it.

Cooper v. Lampeter, 8 Watts, 125; Pike County v. Rowland, 94 Pa. 238.

Per Curiam:

The contract of the defendants which the plaintiff seeks to enforce is clearly ultra vires. The Act of Assembly prescribes the manner in which public roads shall be laid out and become a charge on the townships in which they are located. The towing path of the plaintiff had not in law become a public highway. It remained the property of the Canal Company. The townships in which it is located had no power to enter into this agreement for the use of it as a public road. If the supervisors can legally bind the Townships in this case, they can exercise the same power in regard to the use of every private road in the Townships. It is wholly unlike the cases of supplying a temporary jail or place of holding court, on the destruction of the established buildings.

No statute gives to the officers of a township the power claimed, and it is clearly contrary to public policy to thus enlarge their powers by construction.

Judgment affirmed.

INDEX.

The points decided are denoted by the name of the case appended or "Id.," other points indexed as "authorities cited" are such as are found in the decisions, either as dicta or argument, references to statutes, or in dissenting opinions. The supplemental index points to editorial notes and briefs of counsel.

ABANDONMENT. See MILLS AND DAMS, 7.

ACCOUNT. See AFFIDAVIT OF DEFENSE, 4, 5; EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, VIII.; GUARDIAN AND WARD, 8-8; PARTNERSHIP, 8, 7-10; PATENTS, 4-7; POOR AND POOR LAWS, 8; TRUSTS, 6.

1. Equity has jurisdiction to compel an accounting and discovery in aid thereof, and to restrain the manufacture of other than a patent article in violation of the terms of a written contract.

Bovaird v. Dick (Pa.) 40

2. A debt upon a continuous account of book entries, made in the ordinary course of dealing, is entire; and it cannot, without an agreement to that effect, be split up into separate and distinct demands, so as to form the basis of several suits.

Buck v. Wilson (Pa.) 643

3. Where there is a book account on one side, and a demand on the other, to toll the Statute of Limitations the demand must also be a book account. Id. 896

4. Mutual accounts, to prevent the operation of the Statute of Limitations, must be such as concern the trade of merchandise, and upon which an action would lie. Authorities cited. Id. 897

5. To constitute mutual accounts there must be mutual demands. Authorities cited. Id. 898

ACTION OR SUIT. See ACCOUNT; AFFIDAVIT OF DEFENSE; ANIMALS; APPEAL; ARBITRATION AND REFERENCE; ASSUMPSIT; ATTACHMENT; CERTIORARI; CLOUD ON TITLE; CONTEMPT; CONTRACT, III.; CORPORATIONS, V., COSTS; COURTS; COVENANT; CREDITORS' BILL; CRIMINAL LAW; DAMAGES; EJECTMENT; EMINENT DOMAIN; EQUITY; ERROR; EVIDENCE; EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, X.; HABEAS CORPUS; HUSBAND AND WIFE; INJUNCTION; JUDGMENT; LACHES; LIBEL AND SLANDER, MALICIOUS PROSECUTION; MANDAMUS; MORTGAGE, VI.; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, VI.; NEGLIGENCE; NON-SUIT; NUISANCE; PARTITION; PARTNERSHIP; PENALTIES; PLEADING; REPLEVIN; SEQUESTRATION; SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM; SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE; TAXES; TRESPASS; TRIAL; TROVER AND CONVERSION.

1. A debt upon a continuous account of book entries, made in the ordinary course of dealing, is entire; and it cannot, without an agreement to that effect, be split up into separate and distinct demands, so as to form the basis of several suits.

Buck v. Wilson (Pa.) 643

2. An action brought for a part of an entire and indivisible demand, and the recovery therein, will bar a subsequent demand for the residue of the same. Authorities cited. Id. 646

3. If parties contract that a debt shall fall due and be payable in installments, they have severed it; and distinct recoveries may be had for the different installments in portions of the debt, according to the agreement, without involving the whole debt; but when the consideration is fully executed, and there is no stipulation of severance, the obligation to pay is ordinarily indivisible and entire. Authorities cited. Id. 646

ADMINISTRATORS. See EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

ADULTERATION.

It is essential, to create the offense prohibited by Laws 1885, chap. 188, § 7, as amended by chap. 458, that the article not produced from milk or cream, the manufacture and sale of which is forbidden, should be in imitation or semblance of butter; and this is a question for the jury. An instruction omitting the fact of imitation is error. Earl and Andrews, JJ., dissenting from the reversal, on the ground that it had been proved and assumed on the trial that yellow coloring matter had been put in the oleomargarine in order to give it the semblance of butter.

People v. Arensburg (N. Y.) 542

ADULTERY. See HUSBAND AND WIFE, 84-86.

An indictment for adultery which charges that the defendant, being a married man and having a lawful wife living, did have carnal connection with a woman, naming her, not his lawful wife, is sufficient, without setting out the name of the defendant's wife. The indictment followed the definition in Act of March 31, 1860.

Davis v. Commonwealth (Pa.) 711

ADVANCEMENTS. See DEVISE AND LEGACY, VII.

ADVERSE POSSESSION. See LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, 9-13.

ADVICE OF COUNSEL. See MALICIOUS PROSECUTION, 8.

AFFIDAVIT. See PERJURY; PLEADING, II.

AFFIDAVIT OF DEFENSE.

1. An affidavit of defense, made and filed by one styling himself "attorney for the defendant," and alleging that he transacted all the business in the case and has full knowledge, etc., will not be received.

Griel v. Buckius (Pa.)

507

2. Where an affidavit of defense is made by a stranger, it must show upon its face sufficient reason why it was not made by the defendant himself; that a real disability on the part of the defendant existed, which prevented him from making the affidavit himself, and the circumstances giving rise to it.

Id.

3. An affidavit of defense setting forth that "the whole bill is in excess of the price agreed upon, and is extortionate, and labor and material charged for which was not furnished," is too vague and insufficient, because not specifying the amount of the excess of the quantity of labor and material charged for and not furnished.

Id.

4. Items of cash paid for the repair, or commissions charged for the sale, of real estate, are not proper subjects of book account, and are not within the affidavit of defense law.

Fenn v. Early (Pa.)

288

5. To authorize judgment, for want of affidavit of defense, against a married woman, for work or labor done or money expended in relation to her real estate, the copy of book entries filed must contain or be accompanied by an averment that the debt was contracted for an act done that was necessary for the use, enjoyment, or preservation of the wife's property.

Id.

AFFRAY. See HOMICIDE, 1, 2.

AGENTS. See PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

ALDERMEN. See JUSTICES OF THE PEACE; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 7.

ALIENATION. See DEED, 7; DOWER, II.

ALIMONY. See HUSBAND AND WIFE, 39, 40.

ALLEYS. See WAYS, 40.

AMENDMENT. See JUDGMENT, 3, 4; PLEADING, IV.

ANIMALS.

1. Injuries inflicted by animals. A person bitten by a dog may recover damages from the owner, where a previous propensity to bite mankind is shown, if it also be shown that the owner knew of such propensity; whether the previous occasions of biting were in playful mood or ferocious spirit is immaterial.

State v. McDermott (N. J.)

559

C. R., V. IV.

2. A lady who was injured by being butted by a ram while driving cows home from pasture,—Held, entitled to recover from the owner of the ram, who had a knowledge of its propensity to butt mankind, and it was immaterial whether this propensity proceeded from an ugly disposition or from the exuberance of a playful spirit. Authorities cited. Id.

560

3. Where plaintiff walking in a public street and wearing a red handkerchief was gored by a bull,—Held, he was entitled to recover of the owner, who knew of the propensity of the bull to run at anything red, although the animal was ordinarily gentle and quiet, and was not known to have gored any person previously. Authorities cited. Id.

Id.

ANNEXATION. See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, I.

APOTHECARY. See INTOXICATING LIQUORS, 9.

APPEAL.

I. WHEN LIES.

II. PRACTICE; RECORD; EXCEPTIONS.

III. QUESTIONS CONSIDERED.

See CONTEMPT, 4, 6, 8; CRIMINAL LAW, IV.; EXCEPTIONS; REPORT AND CASE MADE; REVIEW.

I. WHEN LIES.

1. An order of the orphans' court revoking an order theretofore made by it, extending the time for filing exceptions to claims against an insolvent estate, on the ground that such order was inopportune granted, being discretionary, is not appealable.

King v. Rockhill (N. J.)

836

2. An order quashing a writ of certiorari is appealable to the court of appeals when it adjudicates upon the validity of the proceeding reviewed.

People v. Comrs. of Brooklyn (N. Y.)

774

3. Chapter 418, Laws of 1886, does not authorize appeals from judgments of the City (late Marine) Court of New York directly to the court of appeals. Such judgments must still be first reviewed by the court of common pleas.

Hutkoff v. Demorest (N. Y.)

778

4. An appeal lies directly to the court of appeals from a judgment entered on a verdict after a decision by the general term reversing an order granting a new trial, and from the order of reversal.

Wiedmer v. N. Y. Elevated R. R. Co. (N. Y.)

538

5. A party appealing from a judgment entered upon the decision of the court upon a trial without a jury is not required to make and serve a case under § 997, Code Civ. Proc., but may file exceptions under § 994; and his time to do this, or to make a case under Rule 32 of the supreme court, does not begin to be limited until service upon his attorney of a copy of the decision of the court, with notice of entry of judgment thereon. The service of notice of entry of judgment, without a copy of the decision, has the effect of limiting the time to appeal only.

Schwartz v. Weber (N. Y.) 772

II. PRACTICE; RECORD; EXCEPTIONS.

6. By § 2545 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the practice upon appeals from a surrogate's decree upon the trial of an issue of fact is assimilated to that upon appeals from a judgment by a court or referee; and specific errors are required to be pointed out in order to be available on appeal.

Angevine v. Jackson (N. Y.) 795

7. A general exception to a surrogate's decree rendered upon the trial of an issue of fact is useless. Id.

8. Alleged errors in the charge are not open to review unless excepted to at the trial. A stipulation by counsel, "that a general exception should give the defendant the benefit of a particular exception to any part of the charge," will not avail.

People v. Buddensiek (N. Y.) 787

9. Where a bill of exceptions sets out two rulings of the court, but the exception taken is so ambiguous that it cannot be ascertained which of the rulings was excepted to, the court will disregard the bill altogether.

Thaw v. Ritchie (D. O.) 597

III. QUESTIONS CONSIDERED.

10. A former decision must be regarded, though it may have proceeded upon an erroneous principle. Authorities cited.

Appeal of Church (Pa.) 97

11. Parties in suits in which evidence is taken before an examiner will not be permitted to appeal to the chancellor from the decision of a vice-chancellor, nor to have a rehearing before him upon questions arising upon appeal from rulings of the examiner admitting or rejecting evidence.

Pullen v. Pullen (N. J.) 72

12. Where there is no dispute as to the right to damages because of an injunction, and there is some evidence that damages were sustained, the court of appeals, having nothing to do with the weight or cogency of evidence, will not interfere with the result reached in the lower court.

Lyon v. Hersey (N. Y.) 126

13. The court of appeals has no power to pass upon a question of fact arising upon conflicting evidence in an action originating in a surrogate's court and reviewed in the supreme court; but only to determine whether there is any evidence upon which the decision of the court below might fairly and reasonably stand. Chapter 229, Laws 1888, amending subdivision 11 of § 8847 of the Code of Civil Procedure, has not enlarged the powers of the court of appeals in this respect.

Hewlett v. Elmer (N. Y.) 851

14. An auditor's finding upon a pure question of fact, when the court is not satisfied that a mistake has been committed, must be confirmed.

Schiele's Appeal (Pa.) 667

15. To justify the supreme court in reversing. C. R., v. IV.

ing a judgment for the erroneous exclusion of evidence, it must appear that such exclusion worked an injury to the appellant.

Taylor v. Brown (Md.) 848

APPLICATION. See PAYMENT, 5.

APPOINTMENT. See EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, I.

ARBITRATION AND REFERENCE.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 888, subd. 5, a commission to take testimony out of the State can issue in a reference of a disputed claim against a decedent's estate, under Rev. Stat. pt. 2, tit. 8, art. 2, § 8687.

Paddock v. Kirkham (N. Y.) 127

ARMY AND NAVY.

The Supreme Court of the District of Columbia has no jurisdiction to restrain, by writ of prohibition or otherwise, the proceedings of a naval court martial.

United States v. Whitney (D. C.) 154

ARREST. See CONTEMPT; FALSE IMPRISONMENT; HABEAS CORPUS.

ASSESSMENTS. See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, IV.; WAYS, 9, 14-16, 20, 21.

ASSIGNMENT. See DOWER, II.; INSURANCE, 5-13; LANDLORD AND TENANT, V.; LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, 7; MASTER AND SERVANT, II.

1. Whether an assignee can sue in his own name is sometimes a technical question, and sometimes one that is essential. When it is technical, the lex fori is to decide. Authorities cited.

Glenn v. Bussey (D. C.) 614

2. The assignee of the borrower has no rights superior to those of the borrower himself.

Lancaster Co. Nat. Bank v. Huver (Pa.) 672

3. Orders drawn by a contractor upon a county treasurer, on account of work contracted to be done for the county, under a contract providing for a cancellation of the contract in case of delay on the part of the contractor, no money being at the time due on the contract, can operate only as an assignment of money expected to become due; and they become inoperative if, by force of the provisions of the contract, no money should afterwards become due to the contractor.

Conselyea v. Blanchard (N. Y.) 872

4. A promise by a contractor to pay for materials furnished, out of money to become due on his contract, does not operate as an equitable assignment of the fund, or give an equitable lien thereon. Id.

ASSIGNMENT FOR BENEFIT OF CREDITORS.

1. The title acquired by an assignee for the benefit of creditors, although good as to the property assigned, is, as to assets in other States, whose policy it is not to recognize, as against the claims of creditors of the assignor domiciled therein, the validity of general assignments with preferences, liable to be defeated by attachments sued out of the courts of such other States, by creditors domiciled therein, to recover their debts out of such assets.

Kimball v. Lee (N. J.)

332

2. Where a person appointed as trustee has negligently failed to make collections, the fact that such trustee, prior to his appointment, was the attorney for a certain creditor in actions against the insolvent, will not impose upon such creditor any liability for the negligence of such trustee.

First Nat. Bank of N. J. v. Kimball (N. J.)

591

8. In a suit by an assignee to rectify the deed of assignment, made in New York, because of the absence therefrom of words of inheritance, and to so make it that it may convey the realty in this State in fee; where defendant's object is to get a decree in his favor for a debt due by the assignor, and to collect the same out of his property situated in this State, a cross bill is not necessary. He cannot involve complainant in this suit for the purpose of establishing his debt. The allegations in the cross bill, tending to establish the debt, may be regarded, so far as complainant is concerned, as averments that defendant is a creditor in this State, and of the firm, and is therefore entitled to resist the application to rectify the deed.

Van Winkle v. Armstrong (N. J.)

538

4. A clause in a lease providing that the lessor shall have a lien for rent upon all goods and other personal property of the lessee, a retail dealer, which then are or may be thereafter put upon the premises, and providing that the lessor may, in case of default of payment of rent, take and sell such goods, etc., in the same manner as in the case of a chattel mortgage, and providing that the lessee may continue in the possession of the goods, and sell the same in the regular course of his business, and buy other goods with the proceeds, although valid as between the parties, is fraudulent on its face as to bona fide creditors of the lessee, and cannot be enforced by the lessor, as an equitable lien upon the goods, against the rights of an assignee of the lessee for the benefit of creditors in possession of the goods.

Reynolds v. Ellis (N. Y.)

232

5. Foreign assignments for creditors are not recognized as against claims of residents. Authorities cited.

Van Winkle v. Armstrong (N. J.)

538

6. A foreign attachment, issued in any county where the property of a nonresident is situated, after the execution in another State of an assignment for the benefit of creditors, but before the assignment is recorded in the county, has priority over the assignment.

Steel v. Goodwin (Pa.)

659

ASSOCIATIONS. See BUILDING ASSOCIATIONS; RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES.

ASSUMPSIT.

In assumpsit against an administrator, his bond not being in suit, judgment should be entered for the damages laid in the declaration. R., V. IV.

tion simply, and not for the penalty of the bond.

Neale v. Hermanns (Md.)

161

ATTACHMENT.

1. Where, in an attachment, under the Act of March 17, 1869, the defendant gives a bond according to § 8 of the Act, for the release of the goods attached, and subsequently the attachment is dissolved for want of sufficient evidence of fraud, the plaintiff cannot, after proceedings in personam to judgment and ineffectual execution, maintain an action of debt on the bond.

Fernau v. Butcher (Pa.)

748

2. The bond required in attachment, under Act of March 17, 1869, does not dissolve the attachment. It is superadded security, and falls with the attachment. Id.

3. Query, whether attachment, under the Act of March 17, 1869, lies when the affidavit for the writ charges fraud as to only part of the debt for which the writ issues. Id.

4. A foreign attachment, issued in any county where the property of a nonresident is situated, after the execution in another State of an assignment for the benefit of creditors, but before the assignment is recorded in the county, has priority over the assignment.

Steel v. Goodwin (Pa.)

659

5. An existing indebtedness from the defendant to the plaintiff in foreign attachment, being undisputed, the question whether the debt is or is not presently due is for the jury. Id.

6. That the debt may be shown, by evidence dehors the record, not to be presently due, is not sufficient ground for quashing a writ of foreign attachment, at the instance of the defendant's assignee for the benefit of creditors, under an assignment made in another State. Id.

7. The power to quash a writ of foreign attachment is limited to proceedings that are irregular, defective, or improper. Authorities cited. Id.

661

8. The title acquired by an assignee for the benefit of creditors, although good as to the property assigned, is, as to assets in other States, whose policy is not to recognize, as against the claims of the creditors of the assignor domiciled therein, the validity of general assignments with preferences, liable to be defeated by attachment sued out of the courts of such other States, by creditors domiciled therein, to recover their debts out of such assets.

Kimball v. Lee (N. J.)

332

9. Attachment will not lie for unliquidated damages, and hence will not lie for damages for breach of covenant in a mine lease to pay royalty for ore mined, and to remove a stipulated quantity per annum.

Heckscher v. Trotter (N. J.)

77

10. Defendant may give bond and have his personal property discharged, after appearance and plea. Id.

11. An attachment will lie where the cause of action is founded upon contract, and is of such a nature that plaintiff would formerly have been entitled to hold defendant for bail upon filing an affidavit of the cause of action. When the cause of action arises ex delicto, or is of such a nature that bail could not have been required without the order of a court or judge, resort cannot be had to this remedy. Id.

12. Attachment can be used only when the demand is for a sum certain. Authorities cited. Id. 78

13. Unliquidated damages resulting from breach of contract cannot be recovered by attachment, unless the contract affords a certain measure or standard for ascertaining the amount of damages; and such standard must be shown by the contract without the aid of extrinsic facts or circumstances. Authorities cited. Id. 79

14. Attachment will not lie for damages arising out of a breach of a covenant in a charter-party to employ a vessel at a certain sum per month for a designated voyage, the length of the voyage being conjectural, and hence the damages being uncertain. Authorities cited. Id.

15. Attachment lies for a deficiency caused by a sale of goods inferior in quality to those warranted. Authorities cited. Id.

16. Plaintiff's preliminary affidavit is not conclusive as to the nature of his claim. Authorities cited. Id. 80

ATTORNEY AND CLIENT.

1. Where a person appointed as trustee has negligently failed to make collections, the fact that such trustee, prior to his appointment, was the attorney for a certain creditor in actions against the insolvent, will not impose upon such creditor any liability for the negligence of such trustee.

First Nat. Bank of N. J. v. Kimball (N. J.) 591

2. An affidavit of defense, made and filed by one styling himself "attorney for the defendant," and alleging that he transacted all the business of the case and has full knowledge, etc., will not be received.

Griel v. Buckius (Pa.) 507

3. An attorney agreed to defend certain suits, the client agreeing to give him half of all the property or money recovered. The suit was lost. A deed procured by the attorney for one half of other property which client owned, representing that it was for his compensation under the agreement, —Held, fraudulent and void.

Cleins v. Englebrecht (N. J.) 69

4. A demand by an attorney at law for professional services will not toll the statute on a claim by the client based on a demand for farm produce furnished.

Mattern v. McDivitt (Pa.) 896

5. An attorney who causes void or irregular processes to be issued in an action, occasioning loss or injury to the party against whom it is enforced, is liable for the damages thereby occasioned.

Fischer v. Langbein (N. Y.) 215

ATTORNTMENT. See LANDLORD AND TENANT, I.

AUCTION AND AUCTIONEER.

1. An auctioneer is liable to an action by the bidder, to recover the deposit, where the latter has sufficient reason not to proceed to complete the sale, and the money has not been paid over to the principal. Authorities cited.

Read v. Riddle (N. J.) 830

2. In an action to recover back hand money paid at the time of signing the conditions of the sale of real estate, at auction, the question to be submitted to the jury is the capacity of the plaintiff to make a contract at the time of signing the agreement and paying the money, and not his capacity at the time of the bid.

Bush v. Breinig (Pa.) 889

AUTREFOIS ACQUIT AND CONVICT. See CRIMINAL LAW, I.

BAIL AND RECOGNIZANCE. See BASTARDY.

1. In an action of covenant, defendant cannot be held for bail as of course, unless the covenant be for the payment of a sum certain. Authorities cited.

Heckscher v. Trotter (N. J.) 79

2. The lien of a recognizance is indefinite, but is subject to the legal presumption of payment after twenty years. Authorities cited.

Hayes v. Bald Eagle V. R. R. Co. (Pa.) 458

3. A sheriff who, in answer to a rule to bring in the body of a defendant, returns that he discharged the defendant from custody upon his giving bond and complying with the requirements of the Insolvent Debtors' Act, will not be amerced.

Lewis v. Haskell (N. J.) 885

BAILMENT. See PLEDGE AND COLLATERAL SECURITY.

In cases of gratuitous bailment, gross negligence has been defined to mean the want of that ordinary diligence and care which a usually prudent man takes of his own property of the like description. Authorities cited.

Mark v. Hudson River Bridge Co. (N. Y.) 207

BANKRUPTCY. See INSOLVENCY.

1. A debt discharged by proceedings in bankruptcy is revived by a subsequent absolute and unconditional promise, by the debtor, to pay it, and by a partial payment.

Huffman v. Johns (Pa.) 658

2. A discharge in bankruptcy, prior to the accruing of the liability on which contribution is sought, will not avail a cosurety sued for contribution.

Wyckoff v. Gardner (N. J.) 181

3. Where the subscription price of the stock of an incorporated company is only to be paid in such installments and at such times as it may be called for, and at the time of the bankruptcy of the stockholder and his discharge in bankruptcy, no call for the payment of his subscription has been made, a call subsequently made for an unpaid installment thereof is not a provable claim against the bankrupt's estate in the bankruptcy proceedings; therefore the bankrupt's discharge is no bar to an action for such unpaid installment. Authorities cited. Id. 133

BANKS AND BANKING.

1. On a bill for account by a bank, alleging an embezzlement made by the defendant a number of years ago, and concealed by him, while cashier and president, an answer setting up the Statute of Limitations, and that the embezzlement, if any, must have been known to the officers of the bank and to the cashiers, who succeeded the defendant,—Held, sufficient.

Somerset Co. Bank v. Veghte (N. J.) 406

2. A lender who, before paying over money on a borrower's discounted note, discovers that the borrower is insolvent, may tender back the note and refuse payment of the money. The assignee of the borrower has no rights superior to the borrower.

Lancaster Co. Nat. Bank v. Huser (Pa.) 672

3. The deposit of negotiable railroad bonds with a bank, as collateral security for a debt, passes the title, as against the bank, notwithstanding the antecedent pledge of the same stock.

Gibson v. Lenhart (Pa.) 105

4. Delivery to the bank, depositee, is delivery to the pledgee. Authorities cited. Id.

5. Evidence of the antecedent pledge is inadmissible, in an action of replevin against the bank for the bonds, in the absence of mala fides or notice of the pledge on the part of the plaintiff. Id.

6. Where the bonds were deposited in the bank in a package indorsed with the pledgee's name, the bank is estopped, in an action of replevin for the bonds, from alleging that the bonds in the package are not the original bonds pledged to the plaintiff. Id.

7. A bank received a cashier's check of another bank, as a conditional payment of a debt of a third party; the latter bank made an assignment in trust for creditors, and the check was not paid on presentation. At the time of the assignment, there was, on the books of the first bank, a credit to the insolvent bank of the proceeds of notes indorsed and discounted for the latter's accommodation. In an action by the first bank against the debtor, for the debt,—Held, that this deposit was not a valid set-off against the debt.

Union Nat. Bank v. Cannonsburgh Iron Co. (Pa.) 262

8. The absence of entry of discount of renewal notes, upon the books of a bank, will not defeat an action by the bank upon these notes.

Moseby v. Bedford Co. Bank (Pa.) 268

9. The managers of a savings bank stand in the relation of trustees to the depositors, so that the Statute of Limitations will not be a bar against a charge of mismanagement on their part which occurred six years before the filing of the bill. Authorities cited.

Somerset Co. Bank v. Veghte (N. J.) 407

BASTARDY.

1. Upon conviction of fornication and bastardy, a defendant may be sentenced, under Act of March 31, 1860, to pay a fine of $100, to pay the costs of prosecution, to give bond for the performance of any subsequent order of maintenance, and to stand committed until compliance.

Commonwealth v. Cook (Pa.) 710

2. Payment of lying-in expenses and an order of maintenance are not required to be imposed as part of the sentence; or at least it is not error to refuse to impose them after the defendant has been discharged from custody under the insolvent laws. Id.

3. A defendant convicted, sentenced, and in custody, in proceedings for fornication and bastardy, may, after three months' imprisonment, obtain his discharge under the insolvent laws, without complying with any part of the sentence. Id.

BAWDY AND DISORDERLY HOUSES.

The agent of the owner renting a house knowingly for the purpose of a brothel may be indicted as the keeper of such house.

Troutman v. State (N. J.) 680

BILLS AND NOTES.

1. Receiving promissory notes on account of a claim will not imply an extension of the time of payment, or an agreement to sever the debt in an action on a book account.

Buck v. Wilson (Pa.) 643

2. The absence of entry of discount of renewal notes, upon the books of a bank, will not defeat an action by the bank upon these notes.

Moseby v. Bedford Co. Bank (Pa.) 268

3. A negotiable note made by an intoxicated man may be collected by an innocent holder for value. Authorities cited.

Bush v. Breinig (Pa.) 593

BOATS. See SHIPS AND SHIPPING.

BONDS. See ATTACHMENT; BAIL AND RECOGNIZANCE; BASTARDY; INJUNCTION, 10, 11; PARTY-WALL; PRINCIPAL AND SURETY; RAILROAD COMPANIES, 8.

1. The statute (Acts 1874, chap. 483, § 31) requires tax collectors "to pay at such times as the law shall direct," the bond given by a collector provided "for payment at such times as the county commissioners shall by law direct." Held, that the variance was immaterial.

Myers v. State (Md.) 344

2. The facts that a tax collector reappointed to office was, at the time, in default under a former appointment, and that the sureties on his new bond were not notified by the appointing authorities of his existing defalcation, will not avail as a defense to the sureties. Id.

8. Sureties on an official bond are stopped from denying the official capacity of their principal. Id.

4. The provision in the bond of a tax collector for Carroll County, that he shall "pay to the county commissioners or their order" money which he shall receive, is not impaired by the Act of 1872, chap. 282, making it the duty of the treasurer of Carroll County to "receive the proceeds of all taxes levied in the county." Payment to the treasurer is, in law, payment to the commissioners. Id.

5. A payment by a tax collector, of money collected by him on the taxes for one year, in discharge of the taxes for previous years with which he is chargeable, is a breach of his bond. Id.

6. Where suit is brought upon a bond to the Commonwealth, conditioned for the payment of certain sums at different periods to another, judgment should be entered in favor of the Commonwealth for the amount of the penalty. This is an essential prerequisite to liquidation in favor of the use plaintiff. Id.

Kiehl v. Commonwealth (Pa.) 695

7. Suit was brought on a bond to the Commonwealth to secure judgment for support of defendant's wife and children, and judgment entered for the amount then due, which was paid and satisfaction entered. Subsequent sums accruing, a second suit was brought on the bond. The court refused to allow judgment to be entered, but, on application, struck off the satisfaction, opened the judgment, and ordered that judgment should be entered for the penalty, on discontinuance of the second suit and payment of its costs. Held, although the proceedings were irregular, they should not be reversed. Id.

8. The obligors in a bond for the performance of a contract are released from liability by a new contract in relation to the same subject-matter, with different security, entered into by the parties after breach of the old contract and before notice or demand upon them.

Whelan v. Boyd (Pa.) 651

BOOK ACCOUNTS. See ACCOUNT; AFFIDAVIT OF DEFENSE, 4, 5.

BOROUGHES. See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

BOUNDARIES. See WATERS AND WATERCOURSES, 1-3.

BRIBERY.

1. The general Bribery Act embodied in the Penal Code covers the whole subject of bribery, and was intended to furnish the only rule governing the crime and punishment of bribery.

People v. Jaehne (N. Y.) 165

2. The crime of bribery, committed by a member of the common council of the city of New York, is punishable, under § 72 of the Penal Code, providing for imprisonment for not more than ten years, etc.; that section having superseded § 58 of the New York City Consolidation Act (Laws of 1882, chap. 410), providing for imprisonment not exceeding two years, etc. Rapallo and Earle, JJ., dissenting. Id.

c. R., v. IV.

3. Section 73 of the Penal Code, relating to bribery, being a later statute covering the same subject-matter as § 58 of the Consolidation Act, and embracing new provisions, operated to repeal the prior Act, although the two are not in express terms repugnant. Id.

4. In the absence of any rule of court prohibiting the viewers from being entertained by the petitioner, and upon finding of the court that it was done under circumstances evincing no sinister purpose or effort to unduly influence the viewers, the proceedings were not set aside.

Re Road in Drumore Township (Pa.) 88

BRIDGES.

When a boat becomes entangled with a bridge, without fault on the part of the bridge owner, and becomes a nuisance which the bridge owner has a right to remove, in exercising that right the bridge owner must use ordinary care to do no unnecessary injury to the boat, and will be liable for injury unnecessarily inflicted.

Mark v. Hudson River Bridge Co. (N. Y.) 203

BUILDING ASSOCIATIONS.

1. Substitution of new mortgage, with surrender of shares at withdrawal value, for old mortgage; rescission of contract; restoration of consideration.

Doughten v. Camden Build. & L. Assn. (N. J.) 827

2. A mortgage borrower became in arrears for interest and taxes, and, by agreement with the association, assigned his shares at their withdrawal, and not at their actual value, and executed another mortgage for the balance due after allowing for the withdrawal value of the shares, but failed to perform his agreement to pay taxes; when the association by resolution rescinded, and contracted a foreclosure of the original mortgage. Afterwards, and before the bill to foreclose was filed, the borrower paid the taxes and other liens. On a bill to foreclose the original mortgage, — Held, that the association had not restored the borrower to his former position, and the rescission was incomplete. Id.

CAMP MEETING.

Where lots have been sold with reference to a plan or map, indicating that a space of 600 feet wide extending to the ocean should remain open for an auditorium and camp meeting purposes, — Held, that on complaint of purchasers of the lots made with reference to such plan, the grantor should be restrained from dividing the open space into lots, and appropriating or conveying the same for the erection thereon of dwelling-houses.

Lennig v. Ocean City Assn. (N. J.) 808

CARRIERS.

I. OF GOODS.

II. OF PASSENGERS.

a. Ejecting Passengers; Tickets; Regulations.

- b. Boarding Train.
- c. Alighting from Car.
- d. Occupying Dangerous Parts of Train.
- e. Joint Negligence; Evidence.

See NEGLIGENCE, II.; RAILROAD COMPANIES.

I. OF GOODS.

1. Where goods in the hands of a common carrier are injured by the negligent act of a third party, to which the negligence of the carrier contributed, and an action is brought by the owner against the third party, the carrier's contributory negligence is a good defense. Authorities cited.

Borough of Carlisle v. Brisbane (Pa.) 511

II. OF PASSENGERS.

a. Ejecting Passengers; Tickets; Regulations.

2. Where defendant company made a public notice by posting at its stations a rule that mileage and round-trip tickets would not be accepted on a limited express train, and plaintiff, having entered such train with a round-trip ticket, was ejected by the conductor, after tendering his fare in cash, at a place distant from a station, in violation of a rule of the company, in the night time, in the midst of railroad tracks and switches, and trains, moving and stationary, and, after walking some distance, was injured by a moving train, — Held, that, although the passenger was bound to know the regulations, and the company could lawfully eject him at a station, yet, the evidence as to actual notice being conflicting, and the ejection having been willfully made at a dangerous place, the company was liable for exemplary damages, and a judgment for $48,750 was affirmed.

Lake S. & M. S. R. Co. v. Rosenzweig (Pa.) 712

3. In determining whether a conductor on a railway acted in reckless disregard of the rights of a passenger, the jury may consider that in ejecting the passenger the conductor violated an express rule of the company, calculated to promote the safety of passengers. Id.

4. While a passenger is bound by reasonable rules and regulations not appearing on his ticket, his ignorance of regulations may excuse his acts done in violation of regulations unknown to him, so as not to constitute him a trespasser. Id.

5. A passenger who enters a car by mistake is not a trespasser; and while the railway company may eject him, it must not put him off at an improper place. Id.

6. Where a conductor ejects a passenger at an improper place, the company is liable for proximate injuries, or those which were the natural and probable consequence of the act of the conductor, such as, under the circumstances of the case, might and should have been foreseen by the conductor as likely to flow from his act. Id.

7. Where a railroad company adopted a rule and posted it at the station house, that after a certain time passengers would not be carried on freight trains unless they had tickets, — Held, that the rule was reasonable, but that a passenger who before that time had been accustomed to ride without a ticket, and who was ejected from the train, after tendering the fare in money, at a place distant from a station, could recover therefor, in the absence of evidence of express notice or actual knowledge of the rule. Authorities cited. Id. 720

8. If a conveyance is not going in the direction the passenger wants to go, or is one which, by the contract, the passenger has no right to take, the carrier's duty is to inform the passenger, and put him off at a proper place. Authorities cited. Id. 731

9. A carrier owes no duty to one who, not being a passenger, stands on the platform of a railroad station, and is injured thereby. Authorities cited. Id.

b. Boarding Train.

10. In an action to recover damages for the death of plaintiff's intestate, the evidence showed that deceased, who was well acquainted with the station and its surroundings and the manner of operating the trains, endeavored, together with two other persons, to board an elevated railway train after it had begun to move from the station. The two other persons, who were slightly in advance of deceased, either pushed back the car platform gate, or it was drawn back for them by the conductor, the gate having either been closed or was then being closed by the conductor, and succeeded in boarding the train. Deceased took hold of the stanchions of the car, placed one foot on the platform, and was in the act of passing on to the car, when the conductor closed the gate, and deceased, clinging to the car, was carried a few feet until he came in contact with a projection from the station platform, and received injuries from which he died. Held, that deceased was guilty of contributory negligence, and that a nonsuit was properly directed. Miller and Danforth, JJ., dissenting. Solomon v. Manhattan R. Co. (N. Y.) 775

11. The presumption of negligence in the case of one attempting to board a moving train is stronger even than in the case of one attempting to alight from a moving train. Id.

12. Where the passenger was thrown against a platform while attempting to get aboard a train while in motion, — Held, a nonsuit was properly entered. Authorities cited. Id. 778

13. In an action against an elevated railway company for damages for the death of an intending passenger, the evidence showed that after the car platform gate was closed and the train in motion, the deceased had hold of the platform stanchions, and clung to them as the gateman was pushing him away, and was injured while thus clinging to the car. Held, that the plaintiff should have been nonsuited. Card v. Manhattan R. Co. (N. Y.) 799

c. Alighting from Car.

14. Negligence can not be imputed to a passenger, although a woman advanced in pregnancy, in jumping from a car to the ground in obedience to an instruction from the conductor, the train having been stopped at a place other than the usual platform.

Balt. & O. R. R. Co. v. Leapley (Md.) 253

15. The agents of a carrier of passengers must observe the utmost care, proportionate to the age and condition of the passenger. They will be held to be able to distinguish from others a woman in an advanced state of pregnancy, and to know what would be safe or unsafe for her to do. Id.

16. The failure of a railroad company to put a passenger, a woman advanced in pregnancy, off at the usual platform, without good reason, is an act of negligence for which such passenger can recover, if injured by reason thereof without fault on her part. Id.

17. In an action against a street railway company for personal injuries, evidence on the part of the plaintiff that she, while alighting from one of the defendant's cars and carrying a child on her left arm, tried to reach with her right hand the handle of the rear dasher, but that as another passenger, though there were empty seats in the car, was standing in the way, she missed the handle, and, slipping on ice which remained on the step from the previous day, fell, receiving severe injuries, makes out a case for a jury, and a nonsuit is error, although it appears that the plaintiff knew there was ice on the step, and might, by changing the child to the other arm, have grasped with her left hand the handle on the end of the car.

Neslie v. Second & Third Sts. Passenger R. Co. (Pa.) 699

18. It is presumptively a negligent act for a passenger to attempt to alight from a moving train, and it is not sufficient to rebut the presumption that the trainmen acquiesced in the act of the passenger, or that the company violated its duty or contract in not stopping the train, or that to remain on the train would subject the passenger to trouble and inconvenience; but to excuse such an act and free the plaintiff from the charge of contributory negligence, there must be a coercion of circumstances which did not leave the passenger in the free and untrammelled possession of his faculties and judgment. Authorities cited.

Solomon v. Manhattan R. Co. (N. Y.) 778

19. In a suit for damages for injuries sustained by a passenger on a gravity railroad in alighting while the train was moving, no faster than a man can walk, past the point at which the conductor had promised to let him off, there was a conflict of testimony as to whether the conductor ordered him to get off or cautioned him against getting off until the train stopped. Held, that the fact of the passenger's negligence was for the jury.

Del. & H. O. Co. v. Webster (Pa.) 638

20. It is not negligence per se for a passenger to get off a car that is moving slowly, in response to an invitation by a person in charge of the train. Id.

21. If the train is moving so rapidly as to render it clearly dangerous to attempt to get off, the passenger who does get off is negligent. Id.

22. Where there is doubt whether the speed of the train was so rapid as to render it clearly dangerous to get off, the fact is for the jury. Id.

d. Occupying Dangerous Parts of Train.

23. Regardless of the rules of a railroad company, the baggage car of a passenger train is an improper place for a passenger to ride, unless under the circumstances it appears that he is riding there by the permission of the conductor and for the benefit of the company. Authorities cited.

Lehigh Valley R. R. Co. v. Greiner (Pa.) 901

24. A baggage car is a known place of danger; it differs from the cowcatcher and the platform in this respect only in degree; and a passenger who voluntarily leaves his proper place in a passenger car, in violation of the rules of the company, to ride in the baggage car or other known place of danger, cannot recover for an injury thus received partially in consequence of his own act. Authorities cited. Id. 902

25. There are certain portions of every railroad train which are so obviously dangerous for a passenger to occupy, and so plainly not designed for his occupation, that his presence there will constitute contributory negligence as a matter of law, and preclude him from claiming damages while in such position. A passenger who voluntarily leaves his seat and rides upon the engine, or upon the pilot or bumper of the locomotive, or upon the top of the car, or upon the platform, cannot be said to be in the exercise of that caution and discretion which the law requires of all persons who are of full age, of sound mind, and of ordinary intelligence. Authorities cited. Id. 902

e. Joint Negligence; Evidence.

26. Where a passenger is personally injured by the joint negligence of the carrier and another party, his remedy is against his carrier alone. Authorities cited.

Borough of Carlisle v. Brisbane (Pa.) 511

27. Where a passenger in a street railway car was injured by a collision with a steam railroad train, — Held, in order to recover against the company operating the steam railroad train, the plaintiff must show not only that the injury resulted from defendant's negligence, but that the negligence of the carrier company did not contribute to the result. Authorities cited. Id.

28. A conductor's written statement, giving details of an accident immediately after it happened, is not admissible in evidence; but the facts must be proved by the conductor or others who witnessed the occurrence. The conductor may use such written statement to refresh his memory.

North Hudson Co. R. Co. v. May (N. J.) 81

CASE STATED. See REPORT AND CASE MADE.

CERTIORARI. See JUSTICES OF THE PEACE, 2; POLICE AND POLICE DEPARTMENTS, 8, 4; WAYS, 6.

1. When a special tribunal is proceeding summarily in a proceeding for which it has not legally acquired jurisdiction, it is within the discretion of the supreme court to allow a certiorari to review its action, before the final determination of the matter.

Mowery v. City of Camden (N. J.) 866

2. The title of the members of a board of public works cannot be questioned on a certiorari to review the proceedings of the board. The title of de facto public officers cannot be collaterally attacked.

State v. Jersey City (N. J.) 842

8. Where a judgment has been rendered in a justice's court in favor of plaintiff in an action of trespass quare clausum fregit, and it is made to appear that title to lands came in question before the justice, a certiorari will lie to review the judgment as one rendered without jurisdiction.

State v. Stanger (N. J.) 562

4. Upon certiorari of road proceedings, the presumption is that the road was laid at a proper grade whenever practicable.

Re Road In Drumors Township (Pa.) 88

CHALLENGES. See JURY.

CHARGE OF COURT. See TRIAL, 2-5.

CHARGE ON LAND. See DEVISE AND LEGACY, IV.

CHARTERS. See CORPORATIONS, 1-10; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, I., VII.; RAILROAD COMPANIES, I.

CHATTEL MORTGAGE. See MORTGAGE.

CHECKS.

Where a cashier's check is given by a debtor to a creditor for a pre-existing debt, the presumption of law is that it was intended only as a conditional payment. Surrender by the creditor of the note of the debtor will not overcome such presumption.

Cannonsburgh Iron Co. v. Union Nat. Bank (Pa.) 258

CHURCHES. See RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES.

CITIES. See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

CLASSIFICATION. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, II.

CLIENT. See ATTORNEY AND CLIENT

CLOUD ON TITLE.

1. The right to maintain a suit, under the statute, to quiet title by removing the cloud caused by a sale for alleged illegal taxes, may be lost through laches in failing to question the validity of the tax by certiorari.

Baldwin v. City of Elizabeth (N. J.) 825

2. A bill is not maintainable, under the Act "to compel the determination of claims to real estate in certain cases, and to quiet the title to the same" (Rev. p. 1189), unless com-

c. R., v. IV.

plainant is in peaceable possession of the land under a claim of ownership; but the proceeding may, if the facts warrant it, be supported as a suit quia timet, irrespective of the statute.

Nixon v. Walter (N. J.) 876

8. The removal, by defendant in an action to remove a cloud on title, of sand from the strip of land the title to which complainant desires to have cleared, and payment of taxes thereon, are not evidence of possession thereof by defendant.

4. Equity will set aside, as a cloud upon title, a deed purporting to convey a part of complainant's land, being a strip of water front bounded by the high-water line, where in fact the land intended to be conveyed was other and different land, which, from the receding of the high-water line through natural causes, has been submerged and has disappeared, and extrinsic evidence is necessary to show the fact.

5. Where a fire insurance company which has insured mortgaged premises takes an assignment of a first mortgage thereon, within a year after a loss on the premises by fire, it cannot, in a suit by a purchaser of the premises under a second mortgage, brought to have the first mortgage declared paid and removed as a cloud upon his title, set up as a defense that suit was not brought upon the policy within a year, as limited therein; the company having taken the place of the holder of the first mortgage, whose duty it was to recover the money due on the policy to the amount of his mortgage.

Pearman v. Gould (N. J.) 185

COLLATERAL SECURITY. See PLEDGE AND COLLATERAL SECURITY.

COLLISION. See NEGLIGENCE, 7-12, 15, 17, 24, 84.

COMMISSIONS. See EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, IX.

COMMITMENT. See CONTEMPT.

COMPENSATION. See OFFICE AND OFFICER, 2-5.

COMPLAINT. See PLEADING, I.

COMPTROLLER. See MANDAMUS, 4-7; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 10-12.

CONDEMNATION PROCEEDINGS. See EMINENT DOMAIN; RAILROAD COMPANIES, II.; WAYS, II., III.

CONFESSIONS. See CRIMINAL LAW, III.; HOMICIDE, 5, 6; JUDGMENT, 1.

CONFLICT OF LAWS.

1. A foreign attachment, issued in any county where the property of a nonresident is situated, after the execution in another State of an assignment for the benefit of creditors, but before the assignment is recorded in the county, has priority over the assignment.

Steel v. Goodwin (Pa.) 659

2. Foreign assignments for creditors are not recognized as against claims of residents. Authorities cited.

Van Winkle v. Armstrong (N. J.) 58

3. The title acquired by an assignee for the benefit of creditors, although good as to the property assigned, is, as to assets in other States, whose policy is not to recognize, as against the claims of the creditors of the assignor domiciled therein, the validity of general assignments with preferences, liable to be defeated by attachment sued out of the courts of such other States, by creditors domiciled therein, to recover their debts out of such assets.

Kimball v. Lee (N. J.) 382

4. Power of a State to regulate the transfer of all property within its territory is well established. Authorities cited.

Steel v. Goodwin (Pa.) 661

5. No State is bound to recognize and enforce a contract injurious to its own interests or those of its subjects, although valid by the law of the place where made. Authorities cited.

Pitts. & S. L. R. R. Co. v. Rothschild (Pa.) 109

6. The validity of a contract is to be determined by the law of the place where made, unless it is to be performed in another country; in which case it is governed by the law of the place of performance. Authorities cited. Id.

7. The decree or judgment in a court of competent jurisdiction of a sister State has the same credit, validity, and effect in the courts of another State which it had in the State where it was rendered; but the question of jurisdiction of the court rendering such judgment is always open. Authorities cited. Id.

8. Servitudes and easements and other charges on lands are deemed to be, in the sense of the law, immovables, and governed by the lex rei sitæ. Authorities cited. Id.

9. The disposition of real estate, whether by deed, descent, or other mode, must be governed by the laws of the State where the land is situated. Authorities cited. Id.

10. Where the subject-matter of the suit is strictly local, jurisdiction depends upon such locality, and can only be exercised in the State where the subject-matter is located. Authorities cited. Id.

11. If the object of the suit is to directly deal with and affect the person of the defendant party, and not the subject-matter itself, and the decree when rendered and the relief when granted would, in fact, directly affect and operate upon the person of the defendant only, and would not directly operate upon the subject-matter, then the suit may be maintained in any State where the court obtains jurisdiction of the person of the defendant, although the subject-matter of the controversy referred to and described in the decree, and ultimately but indirectly affected by the relief granted, may be situated in another State. Id.

12. Though a person having the legal title C. R., V. IV.

to land in one State may be decreed by a court of equity in another State to convey the land, yet neither the decree, nor any conveyance by virtue of it by one not having the title, can operate beyond the jurisdiction of the court. Authorities cited. Id.

13. When two corporations of different States become a consolidated corporation, such consolidated corporation, when acting in its corporate capacity in either of the States, acts under the authority of the charter of that State, and the legislation of the other State has no operation beyond its territorial limits. Id.

14. Foreclosure proceedings in New York are ineffectual to pass title to property in Pennsylvania. Id.

15. Whether an assignee can sue in his own name is sometimes a technical question, and sometimes one that is essential. When it is technical, the lex fori is to decide. Authorities cited.

Glenn v. Bussey (D. C.) 614

CONSIDERATION. See CONTRACT, 6-8.

CONSOLIDATION. See RAILROAD COMPANIES, I.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

I. ENACTMENT; ENTITLING.

II. SPECIAL AND LOCAL LEGISLATION.

III. OBLIGATION OF CONTRACTS; REGULATION OF CONTRACTS.

IV. RIGHTS OF PROPERTY.

V. ACTS TO REGULATE TRADE; ADULTERATION.

VI. PUBLIC OFFICERS; COMPENSATION.

See STATUTES.

I. ENACTMENT; ENTITLING.

1. The Act of April 25, 1884 (P. L. 1884, p. 265), providing that certain firemen "shall be entitled to have and receive the same * * * advantages in respect to taxes and jury duty as now are or hereafter may be allowed to the National Guard of this State," without setting out the Acts in relation to the exemption of members of the National Guard, is within the Constitutional inhibition that a statute, to make the acts of a former statute part thereof, must insert those sections of the former Act in the new law.

State v. McNeal (N. J.) 147

2. An Act of the Legislature which is complete and perfect in itself, the purpose, meaning, and full scope of which is apparent on its face, is valid, although it may provide for actions or means for carrying its provisions into effect by reference to a course of procedure established by other Acts of the Legislature. Authorities cited. Id. 148

3. Whether a provision in the charter of a railroad company authorizing it to lease or consolidate with any other railroad, and authorizing any company to take such lease and operate the same, would be sufficient to confer such authority upon any railroad of the State, yet, in the present case, the title of the Act incorporating the Mays Landing & Egg Harbor City Railroad Company does not indicate such subject, and such provision of its charter is therefore void.

Camden & Atl. R. R. Co. v. Mays Land. & E. H. C. R. R. Co. (N. J.) 801

4. The Act of May 9, 1871, entitled "An Act in Relation to Streets in Several Boroughs of Montgomery County," which provides that the damages for locating streets shall be assessed under the general road laws, does not impose the payment of the damages upon the county, under the general road laws, and the statute is therefore not unconstitutional as containing in its title no notice that it embraced matters relating to the penalty. Paxson and Green, JJ., concurring in the judgment, on the ground that, while the Act does impose a payment of damages upon the county, the title of the Act sufficiently gives notice to the taxpayers.

Montgomery Co.'s Appeal (Pa.) 808

II. SPECIAL AND LOCAL LEGISLATION.

5. The Act of May 24, 1878, giving the right of appeal from assessments for purposes of taxation, to owners of real estate in counties of less than 500,000 inhabitants, is unconstitutional, under art. 3, § 7 of the Constitution, prohibiting the passage of local or special laws regulating the affairs of counties, cities, townships, wards, boroughs or school districts.

City of Scranton v. Sillman (Pa.) 817

6. A statute upon a given subject which applies to all the counties of the State except one where the legislation is prohibited by the Constitution, is not local but general legislation.

City of Wilkesbarre v. Meyers (Pa.) 820

7. A statute is local legislation which applies to all the counties of the State except one, although that one is regulated by a local law on the same subject. Id.

8. The Acts of March 6, 1884, p. 58, providing that the clerk of the criminal court in Camden County shall be paid a salary in lieu of fees, and March 11, 1880, p. 247, providing that such salary shall be in lieu of all other compensation, are special and local, and therefore unconstitutional.

Halleck v. Hollingshead (N. J.) 570

9. The Act of March 28, 1877, authorizing any of the prothonotaries and sheriffs of the several counties of the Commonwealth, within six years after the expiration of their official term of office, to sue any one residing out of the county, before a justice of the peace within the county, for fees for official services, before or after judgment; authorizing constables to appoint deputies (in the county where the defendant resides) to execute the writ; providing for execution in any county in the Commonwealth; and making a certificate of the prothonotary of the county where suit is brought prima facie evidence that such fees are lawfully due and correct,—Held, to be special legislation and unconstitutional under art. 3, § 7, of the Constitution.

Strine v. Foltz (Pa.) 283

C. R., V. IV.

10. The Act of July 7, 1879, enlarging the jurisdiction of aldermen and justices of the peace, intends to except only the city of Philadelphia in its proviso that the Act shall not apply to magistrates in cities of the first class, and is therefore not unconstitutional, under art. 3, § 7, of the Constitution, prohibiting special or local laws regulating the practice or jurisdiction, or extending the powers and duties, of aldermen or justices of the peace,—the Constitution prohibiting the increase of the civil jurisdiction of magistrates in Philadelphia.

City of Wilkesbarre v. Meyers (Pa.) 820

11. The Act of March 18, 1875, regulating the assessment and collection of taxes in cities of the third class, which contains a proviso excluding from the operation of the Act all cities of the third class, etc., which do not accept, by ordinance, the provisions of the Act, offends against art. 3, § 7, of the Constitution of 1874, which prohibits the passage of any local or special law regulating the affairs of counties, cities, townships, wards, boroughs, or school districts.

Commonwealth v. Halstead (Pa.) 815

12. An Act of Assembly which applies to those only of a class of cities who accept its provisions is not sustainable under the rule of classification allowed by law, but is special legislation; and when the subject-matter falls within the prohibition of the Constitution it is void.

Scranton School Dist. v. Lackawanna I. & C. Co. (Pa.) 811

13. The recent decisions of Pennsylvania are to the effect that if local results are or may be produced by a piece of legislation, it is unconstitutional as local legislation. Authorities cited. Id. 814

14. P. L. 1880, p. 19, to establish an excise department in cities of over 15,000 inhabitants, where the power to grant licenses is not vested in a board of excise or court of common pleas, is local and special, and therefore unconstitutional.

State v. Trenton Board of License (N. J.) 83

15. Legislation dealing with the method of granting licenses must apply to all cities, or reduce all cities to a uniform system. Authorities cited. Id. 85

III. OBLIGATION OF CONTRACTS; REGULATION OF CONTRACTS.

16. A statute (Act of June 29, 1881) providing that all persons, firms, etc., engaged in mining coal, ore, etc., shall settle with their employees at least once a month, and pay them in legal money or cash orders, is unconstitutional and void. The Act is an infringement of the rights of the employer and employee. A laborer may sell his labor for what he thinks best. The Act is an insulting attempt to put the laborer under a legislative tutelage.

Godcharles & Co. v. Wigeman (Pa.) 887

17. A mortgage executed before the statute of 1880 (P. L. p. 255), declaring that no decree for deficiency shall be made in a foreclosure sult, is subject thereto. The Act merely affects the mode of remedy.

Toffey v. Atchison (N. J.) 868

18. The manner of enforcing remedies upon existing contracts may be changed by statute. Authorities cited. Id. 864

19. The rules of evidence are not an exception to the doctrine that all rules and regulations affecting remedies are at all times subject to modification and control by the Legislature. It may be conceded that a law that should make evidence conclusive which was not so necessarily in itself would be void; but such is not the effect of declaring any circumstances or any evidence, however slight, prima facie proof of a fact to be established, leaving the adverse party to rebut and overcome it. Authorities cited.

City of Auburn v. Merchant (N. Y.) 855

IV. RIGHTS OF PROPERTY.

20. Whenever a tax or burden is imposed upon property for the public use, and provision is made for a mode of confirming or contesting the charge thus imposed, in the ordinary courts of justice, with such notice to the person, or such proceeding with regard to the property, as is appropriate to the nature of the case, the judgment in such case cannot be said to deprive the owner of his property without due process of law. Authorities cited.

State Board of Assessors v. Cent. R. R. Co. (N. J.) 483

V. ACTS TO REGULATE TRADE; ADULTERATION.

21. It is essential, to create the offense prohibited by Laws 1885, chap. 183, § 7, as amended by chap. 458, that the article not produced from milk or cream, the manufacture and sale of which is forbidden, should be in imitation or semblance of butter; and this is a question for the jury. An instruction omitting the fact of imitation is error. Earl and Andrews, JJ., dissenting from the reversal, on the ground that it had been proved and assumed on the trial that yellow coloring matter had been put in the oleomargarine in order to give it the semblance of butter.

People v. Arensburg (N. Y.) 549

22. The Legislature may lawfully prohibit the sale of adulterated or simulated substances, and has frequently done so. It may punish as a criminal the ignorant seller of the adulterated or forbidden article. Authorities cited. Id. 547

23. A statute prohibiting the sale of oleomargarine made in imitation of butter is constitutional. Authorities cited. Id. 548

VI. PUBLIC OFFICERS; COMPENSATION.

24. Police officers, serving under the appointment and authority of the board of police commissioners, are not in position to question the constitutionality of the Act constituting the board on certiorari in proceedings for removal.

State v. Comrs. of Newark (N. J.) 571

25. An order of court, under the Act of April 10, 1878, fixing the compensation of incumbent sheriff, for boarding prisoners, at one sum for one year and at a less sum for another year, during his term of office, does not violate art. 8, § 18, of the Constitution, prohibiting the increasing or diminishing of the salary or emoluments of any public officer after his election or appointment, notwithstanding a prior order made during his term, fixing the compensation for the past services of his predecessor.

Peeling v. County of York (Pa.) 87

26. The compensation ordered to be paid to the sheriff, by law, for the board of prisoners in the county jail, is an emolument of his office within art. 8, § 18, of the Constitution. Authorities cited. Id. 88

CONTEMPT.

1. The superior courts of New Jersey, modeled after the English courts of common law, have authority to punish summarily, by proceedings for contempt, for any words uttered by speech, writing, or printing, outside of the regular course of litigation, which are designed to bring contempt upon the courts in the exercise of their judicial functions, 'or to pervert, in a pending cause, the due administration of justice.

Re Contempt of Cheesman (N. J.) 576

2. The jurisdictional facts necessary to legalize a conviction for contempt in the superior courts of law are: First, that matters constituting a contempt should appear to the court to be true; second, that the party charged with contempt should have a fair opportunity to confess or deny those matters; third, that he should confess their truth. Outside of these facts, the steps to be taken are matters of practice only; and although a regular course of procedure has been established, yet strict conformity to it may be waived by the person accused. Id.

3. A conviction for contempt may be sustained, although there was no affidavit preliminary to the rule to show cause, no writ of attachment was issued, and no interrogatories were presented. Id.

4. On appeal from a conviction for contempt under the Statute of 1884, p. 219, this court will not consider the general policy of punishing such contempts as that of which the appellant is guilty. If, according to the law and the facts, the judgment appealed from is lawful and just, it will be affirmed. Id.

5. The failure of an executor to pay over the amount found against him on judicial settlement, a decree requiring payment, service of decree, and an ineffectual attempt to enforce the decree by execution, make out a case of contempt punishable by the surrogate, under Code Civ. Proc. § 2555.

Re Snyder (N. Y.) 210

6. The surrogate is not necessarily concluded by the uncorroborated affidavit of the executor alleging his inability to comply with the decree; and as a decision of the surrogate imposing punishment for contempt involves conflicting evidence and the exercise of discretion, it will not be reviewed by the court of appeals, where the discretion has not been unfairly exercised. Id.

7. Where a commitment for contempt sets out the facts and proceedings in detail, and otherwise complies with the rule in respect to the contents of a commitment, it will not be held void because it omits to state that the disobedience referred to as a contempt had "defeated, impaired, impeded, or prejudiced" some "right or remedy" of the party in the action who procured it. (Code Civ. Proc. § 14.)

Fischer v. Langbein (N. Y.) 215

8. If parties procuring a commitment of another, as for a contempt, are not liable for damages for the original imprisonment, they are not responsible for the subsequent action of a sheriff or of the court in continuing it, although it is subsequently decided on appeal that the commitment was erroneous.

Id.

CONTINGENT REMAINDERS. See DEVISE AND LEGACY, V.

CONTINUANCE AND ADJOURNMENT. See JUSTICES OF THE PEACE, 8.

CONTRACT.

I. VALIDITY.

II. CONSTRUCTION.

III. ACTIONS.

See ASSIGNMENT; AWARD; BILLS AND NOTES; BONDS; CONFLICT OF LAWS, 5, 6, 15; CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, III.; CORPORATIONS, III., V.; COUNTIES; COVENANT; DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION, 2-4; FRAUDS, STATUTE OF; GAMING; GIFT; HUSBAND AND WIFE; INSOLVENCY; LANDLORD AND TENANT; LIEN; MASTER AND SERVANT; PATENTS, 4-7; PAYMENT; PRINCIPAL AND AGENT; SALE; SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE; STOCK TRANSACTIONS; SUBROGATION; TENDER; USURY; VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

I. VALIDITY.

1. A contract made by a person so intoxicated as not to know the consequences of his acts is voidable, and may be avoided by himself, although the intoxication was voluntary and not procured by the circumvention of the other party to the contract, and unknown to him. Money paid in part performance of such a voidable contract can be recovered back.

Bush v. Breinig (Pa.)

889

2. In an action to recover back hand money paid at the time of signing the conditions of the sale of real estate at auction, the question to be submitted to the jury is the capacity of the plaintiff to make a contract at the time of signing the agreement and paying the money, and not his capacity at the time of the bid.

Id.

3. A drunkard when in a complete state of intoxication, so as not to know what he is doing, has no capacity to contract; but his contract is voidable only, and not void, and may therefore be ratified by him when he becomes sober. Authorities cited. Id.

892

4. No State is bound to recognize and enforce a contract injurious to its own interest.

terests or those of its subjects, although valid by the law of the place where made. Authorities cited.

Pitts. & S. L. R. R. Co. v. Rothschild (Pa.) 109

5. The validity of a contract is to be determined by the law of the place where made, unless it is to be performed in another country; in which case it is governed by the law of the place of performance. Authorities cited. Id.

6. An obligation enforceable in equity will support an express promise to pay, and make it sueable at law.

Condon v. Barr (N. J.)

557

7. A mere moral obligation or duty, as an executed consideration, is not a sufficient consideration to support a subsequent express promise to pay. Authorities cited. Id.

558

8. A, learning B was about to advertise for bids, induced each of several dealers separately to promise him a commission on his securing a sale from such dealer to B. He did not inform any of them of the name of the purchaser or competitive bidding and submitted a bid himself. — Held, he was not entitled to a commission from the dealer obtaining the contract, there being no consideration for the promise to pay him a commission, and that the agreement therefor was void by reason of the fraudulent suppression of material facts on his part, and as contra bonos mores.

Murray v. Beard (N. Y.)

129

II. CONSTRUCTION.

9. Where the words in any written instrument are free from any ambiguity in themselves, or where external circumstances do not create any doubt or difficulty as to the proper application of those words to claimants under the instrument, or to the subject-matter to which the instrument relates, such instrument is always to be construed according to the strict, plain, and common meaning of the words themselves; and evidence dehors the instrument, for the purpose of explaining it according to the alleged or surmised intention of the parties, is utterly inadmissible. Authorities cited.

Dwight v. Germania L. Ins. Co. (N. Y.)

532

10. Though the intent of the parties be never so clear it may not take place contrary to the rules of law; nor can the court put words in a deed which are not there, nor put a construction on the words directly contrary to the plain sense of them. Authorities cited. Id.

11. What a contract means is a question of law; it is the court, therefore, that determines the construction of a contract. Authorities cited. Id.

534

12. No question affecting the interpretation of a contract can properly be submitted to the jury, except those arising upon conflicting evidence as to the terms of the agreement, or when extrinsic evidence raises some doubt over the subject-matter, or the agreements thereunder. Authorities cited. Id.

Id.

13. A mortgage given by the grantee of land and accepted by the grantor, in furtherance of the specific purpose of putting the land out of the reach of the grantor's creditors, will not be enforced.

Rouland v. Martin (Pa.) 760

14. In an action to enforce a contract granting a license to manufacture a patented article, it is no defense to allege that plaintiff had no right to the patent or to grant the license to others.

Bocaird v. Dick (Pa.) 40

15. A contract for the manufacture of a licensed article, giving licensors the option to terminate it and declare the license forfeited at any time when licensees shall make default in making the statements and payments required of them by the contract, cannot be rescinded by licensees' refusing the statement. The licensees are liable as long as they manufacture during the continuance of the patent.

Id.

16. Parol evidence to change written contract considered.

Id.

17. The owners of a tract of standing hemlock entered into a contract by which they sold all the hemlock bark growing thereon, the bark to be cut and removed by vendees in quantities not exceeding a certain amount per year, the period being unlimited. The contract, after a description of the premises, run as follows: "Said lots being in the vicinity of Moose River Tannery, said bark to be used in carrying said tannery on." Subsequently the tannery was conveyed by the vendors to the vendees of the bark and thereafter was accidentally destroyed. Held, the clause "said bark to be used in carrying said tannery on," was neither an exception, reservation, condition, nor limitation, and that the destruction of the tannery did not, as matter of law, annul the contract, so as to entitle the vendors to retain the bark then uncut, or to recover possession of that cut by the vendees under the contract but not removed.

Lyon v. Hersey (N. Y.) 884

18. The ordinary technical words by which a limitation is expressed are durante, dum, donec, etc., but the use of these words would be an unsafe test. The word "proviso" or "provided" may sometimes be taken as a condition, sometimes as a limitation, and sometimes as a covenant. Authorities cited.

Id. 386

19. While no particular form of words is necessary to create a limitation or condition, it is yet essential that the intention to create them shall be clearly expressed in some words importing ex vi termini that the vesting or continuance of the estate is to depend upon a contingency. Authorities cited.

Id. 896

20. The nature of an act provided for, and the circumstances surrounding the subject of the agreement, are proper sources of information from which to determine an understanding as to the intent of the parties to make a written contract subject to a limitation or condition. Authorities cited.

Id.

21. In the construction of all contracts under which forfeitures are claimed, it is the duty of the court to interpret them strictly in order to avoid such a result, for forfeitures are not favored in the law. Authorities cited.

Id.

22. Where the owner of a quarry sold so much of the stone therefrom as was needed "for all the purposes of Newton Farm,"—Held, the vendees acquired no right to stone to be used for other purposes than Newton Farm. Authorities cited.

Id. 887

III. ACTIONS.

23. Where the certificate of the promisor's agent, that work has been done in accordance with the contract, is by the terms of the contract prerequisite to payment, the agent's refusal to give the certificate is no defense to a suit for payment, if it is proved that the work was in fact done in accordance with the contract.

Whelan v. Boyd (Pa.) 651

24. One who had agreed to erect certain houses, and was to have a mortgage assigned to him by A, in consideration of their erection, when they were finished, engaged plaintiff to plaster them, and assigned his interest in the mortgage to plaintiff in payment therefor, and released A from his obligation to deliver to him the mortgage, and the plaintiff assigned the mortgage to A's wife, on A's agreeing to pay plaintiff for his work when done, not exceeding the sum mentioned in the assignment. Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover from A, on completing the plastering, the amount due him therefor, not exceeding the sum so mentioned, notwithstanding the fact that the builder had not finished the houses.

Id.

25. An attachment will lie where the cause of action is founded upon contract, and is of such a nature that plaintiff would formerly have been entitled to hold defendant for bail upon filing an affidavit of the cause of action. When the cause of action arises ex delicto, or is of such a nature that bail could not have been required without the order of a court or judge, resort cannot be had to this remedy.

Heckacher v. Trotter (N. J.) 78

26. Unliquidated damages resulting from breach of contract cannot be recovered by attachment, unless the contract affords a certain measure or standard for ascertaining the amount of damages; and such standard must be shown by the contract without the aid of extrinsic facts or circumstances. Authorities cited.

Id. 79

27. Rescission; restoration of consideration.

Doughten v. Camden Build. & L. Asso. (N. J.) 827

28. One party to a contract cannot rescind it by his own will, and at the same time keep possession of the consideration, in whole or in part; he must, as far as practicable, put the other party in statu quo before he can exercise his right of rescission. Authorities cited.

Id. 828

29. One accepting work under a contract, and recovering judgment at law for damages for breach because of inferiority in quality of articles contracted for and delivered, cannot insist, in a suit in equity, that a note given by him in payment be annulled and surrendered, without crediting defendant with balance due thereon. The court should decree surrender of the note to plaintiff, and the plaintiff credit the amount still due on the note upon his judgment against defendant.

Orandall v. Grov (N. J.) 70

80. Courts will not relieve a party from the consequences of his intentional, fraudulent act.

Roveland v. Martin (Pa.) 760

CONTRIBUTION. See BANKRUPTCY, 2; PRINCIPAL AND SURETY, III.

CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.
See NEGLIGENCE.

CORONER.

1. Where, after the finding of the body of one killed by violence, a person was arrested, without warrant, as the suspected murderer, taken before a coroner's inquest, informed that he was charged with the murder, and the alleged instrument of death was produced, and he was examined on oath before the coroner as to circumstances tending to connect him with the crime, and he denied all knowledge of the crime, the testimony thus given was not a voluntary confession, and (it not appearing that he was informed of his right or that he was not bound to answer questions tending to criminate him) evidence thereof was not admissible upon the prisoner's trial for murder, and its admission was reversible error. Ruger, Oa. J., and Earl, J., dissenting, on the ground that it did not appear that he was not informed of his right to refuse to testify, or that objection had been made as to that point on the trial.

People v. Mondon (N. Y.) 857

2. Where a coroner's inquest is held before it has been ascertained that a crime has been committed, or before any person has been arrested charged with the crime, and a witness is called and sworn, his testimony (should he afterwards be charged with the crime) may be used against him on his trial; and the mere fact that at the time of his examination he was aware that a crime was suspected and that he was suspected of being the criminal will not prevent his being regarded as a mere witness, whose testimony may afterwards be given in evidence against himself. Authorities cited. Id. 859

3. If, at the time of examination of a person before a coroner's inquest, it appears that a crime has been committed, and that he is in custody as the supposed criminal, he is not regarded merely as a witness, but as a person accused, and he is to be treated in the same manner as if brought before a committing magistrate; and an examination not taken in conformity with the statute cannot be used against him on his trial for the offense. Authorities cited. Id.

4. A statement made under oath before a coroner's jury, while the party is under arrest under suspicion of guilt, is equally voluntary as if made as a witness in a case with which he has no connection. It is certain that the statements of an accused person made under oath are never excluded on account of C. R., V. IV.

any supposed violation of the immunity of the party from self-crimination. Authorities cited. Dis. op. Id. 863

CORPORATIONS.

I. CHARTERS; FRANCHISES.

II. FORFEITURE.

III. STOCK.

IV. OFFICERS.

V. ACTIONS; CONTRACTS ULTRA VIRES.

See BANKS AND BANKING; BUILDING ASSOCIATIONS; CARRIERS; GAS COMPANIES; INSURANCE; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS; RAILROAD COMPANIES; RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES; STREET RAILWAYS; TAXES, 12, 16, 80; TURNPIKE COMPANIES; WATER COMPANIES.

I. CHARTERS; FRANCHISES.

1. Public grants are to be strictly construed, and whatever is not plainly granted must be understood to have been withheld.

Jersey City Gas Co. v. Consumers Gas Co. of N. J. (N. J.) 330

2. When there is a de facto corporation, and the State does not interfere, its corporate existence and ability to contract cannot be questioned. Authorities cited.

Pittsb. & S. L. R. R. Co. v. Rothschild (Pa.) 106

3. The invalidity of a charter cannot be inquired into collaterally, and, least of all, by a member who has enjoyed the benefits of its privileges. Authorities cited. Id.

4. By the reservation of the power to alter a charter, the Legislature retains the power to impose additional taxation.

State Board of Assessors v. Cent. R. R. Co. (N. J.) 496

II. FORFEITURE.

5. In the absence of legislation conferring jurisdiction upon other tribunals, the common-law courts have exclusive jurisdiction of all questions relating to the forfeiture of franchises.

Jersey City Gaslight Co. v. Consumers Gas Co. of N. J. (N. J.) 330

6. Plaintiff company, having authority to furnish gas of any quality, sought to restrain defendant company from manufacturing and supplying gas, on the ground that, by defendant's charter, it was required under a certain penalty to furnish gas of a certain quality, and that the gas furnished by it was not of such quality. Held, that plaintiff was not entitled to an injunction, because such injunction would be equivalent to forfeiting defendant's charter, which can only be done by a proceeding instituted directly for that purpose by the government. Id.

7. The charter of a corporation will not be declared to be forfeited, except in a proceeding instituted directly for that purpose by the government granting the charter. Authorities cited. Id. 331

8. An injunction will not be granted, under the Act of April 18, 1884, to restrain a corporation from exercising its franchises, in case of nonpayment of tax, where the corporation has only kept up a formal organization without transacting any business.

Re Faure Electric Light & Force Co. (N. J.) 148

Re New York File & Sharpening Co. (N. J.) 144

9. Under the corporation tax law, the court of chancery has only authority to grant or refuse an injunction against a corporation's continuing business after failure to pay the tax assessed against it, and a proper case for such injunction appears when the court is satisfied that the State is not wholly in the wrong.

State v. American Glucose Co. (N. J.) 142

10. Where a corporation has abused its powers or committed an unlawful act, it continues to exist as a corporate body until the State or government which created it shall, by a proper proceeding, procure an adjudication and enforce a forfeiture of the charter. But all such proceedings are at the instance and on behalf of the State or government. Authorities cited.

Pittb. & S. L. R. R. Co. v. Rothschild (Pa.) 108

III. STOCK.

11. A number of persons signed a subscription list, headed as follows: "We, the undersigned, hereby subscribe the amount and the number of shares opposite our names, to the stock of the National Express Co., and bind ourselves, our heirs, etc., to pay said amount in such installments as may be called for by said company, and to pay 1 per cent at the time of subscription." Held: (a) That the company was not the promisee, it not being in existence at the time of the subscription; (b) That the subscriptions were mutual promises by the subscribers to each other, to pay to the corporation when it should come into existence, the amounts subscribed, and each subscription was a consideration for the others; (c) That while a promise cannot be made to a person not in existence, it may be made to a living person, to pay money to another person, natural or artificial, when he or it comes into existence, and is within that class of cases in which a promise made to one for the benefit of another can be enforced by the latter; (d) That in this case the corporation is the payee, or third party, and the subscriptions are choses in action due to it, and may be enforced by suit; (e) That such a suit, if brought in this District, should be in the name of the corporation, or, if the debt has been assigned, in its name to the use of the assignee; (f) That whether a suit is to be brought in the name of the assignor to the use of the assignee, or in the name of the assignee alone, is a question of process to be controlled solely by the lex fori, whatever may be the lex loci in that respect.

Glenn v. Bussey (D. C.) 609

12. Where the subscription price of the stock of an incorporated company is only to be paid in such installments and at such times as it may be called for, and at the time of the bankruptcy of a stockholder and his discharge in bankruptcy, no call for the payment of his subscription has been made, a call subsequently made for an unpaid installment thereof is not a provable claim against the bankrupt's estate in the bankruptcy proceedings; therefore the bankrupt's discharge is no bar to an action for such unpaid installment. Authorities cited.

Wyckoff v. Gardner (N. J.) 182

18. A subscriber who has not paid his subscription to the stock of a proposed corporation, which has never been chartered, cannot maintain an action of assumpsit against the other subscribers on a contract made with him by all the subscribers, including himself, in the name of the proposed corporation, for the purchase of his land in consideration of the stock subscribed for by him and an additional sum in cash.

Crow v. Greene (Pa.) 278

IV. OFFICERS.

14. A contract made by an individual, in connection with others, with a railroad corporation in which he is a director, binding the corporation to purchase certain property from him and his associates, such director having participated in the action of the corporation in assuming the obligation, is within the rule which invalidates all contracts made by a trustee or fiduciary, in which he is personally interested, at the election of the party he represents.

Munson v. Syracuse, G. & U. R. Co. (N. Y.) 191

15. Such contract is not rendered valid by the fact that its effect was merely to substitute the corporation for certain of its individual promoters who had previously contracted for the purchase; nor by the fact that the property consisted of real estate, tracks, etc., of another railroad corporation which the present vendors had purchased under a mortgage foreclosure; the transaction in question not being an arrangement for the reorganization of an existing railroad within the provisions of Laws 1878, chap. 710. Id.

16. The secretary, treasurer, and business manager of an iron manufacturing company, defendant, were jointly engaged in the management of a store not connected with the iron company. Held, that assignments of wages claims by the employees of the iron company, in consideration of store bills and cash, were valid assignments, and did not extinguish the claims.

Huntingdon & B. T. R. R. Co's Appeal (Pa.) 706

17. An action seeking to make a trustee of a manufacturing corporation personally liable for a debt of the corporation, on the ground of failure to make the annual report as required by statute, is an action for a penalty; and therefore, under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 528, 537, the verification of the answer therein may be omitted.

Gadsden v. Woodward (N. Y.) 208

V. ACTIONS; CONTRACTS ULTRA VIRES.

18. In an action for rent, due from February, 1881, to June 1, 1882, brought by defendant in error against plaintiff in error, upon a lease of defendant's road for the term of 999 years, where it appeared by its charter plaintiff in error had been authorized to construct a road over the same route within ten years from August 1, 1852, but had not exercised such power, that defendant's charter contained a provision authorizing it to lease its road or consolidate with any other railroad, thereby authorizing any such railroad to take and operate such lease, but the provision was void because the title of the Act did not embrace such subject, and the Act embraced more than one object, so that the lease was ultra vires, yet,—Held, that the defense of ultra vires was not available in this action, it appearing that defendant in error had constructed its road in pursuance of a contract with plaintiff in error, made in November, 1871, providing that it would guarantee its bonds and take a lease thereof for 999 years, and had since operated the road, and the annual reports of its directors since that time had referred to the contract and the performance of its terms from time to time, and shareholders had made no objection thereto.

Camden & Atl. R. R. Co. v. Mays Land & E. H. C. R. R. Co. (N. J.) 801

19. An executory contract, ultra vires, cannot be validated by the acquiescence of every stockholder of the company; and an ultra vires contract fully executed cannot be receded from. Authorities cited. Id. 802

20. A corporation cannot defend itself against a claim for money paid at its request to one who advanced the price of a steamboat purchased for it, on the ground that the purchase was ultra vires, although the plaintiff, when he paid the money, knew all the facts. Authorities cited. Id.

21. The plea of ultra vires cannot be enforced where a contract has been executed, and where its allowance will do wrong to innocent third persons. Authorities cited. Id.

22. The preponderance of American authority appears to be that an ultra vires contract but partly executed cannot be enforced. Authorities cited. Id. 808

23. A private corporation cannot be allowed to interpose the plea of ultra vires, where its contract has been performed by the other party, and the corporation has had the benefit of the contract and the performance. Authorities cited. Id.

24. Where a foreign corporation, without authority, has taken lease of real estate, it will be estopped from pleading ultra vires in an action for the rent. Authorities cited. Id.

25. Where a railroad company has made a lease ultra vires, such lessee will be estopped from questioning its validity in an action to recover the stipulated rent. Authorities cited. Id.

26. Contracts which are ultra vires, affecting only the interests of stockholders, may be made good by the assent of the shareholders, so that strangers to them, dealing in good faith with the corporation, will be protected in reliance on those acts. Authorities cited. Id.

G. R., V. IV.

27. Where the public is concerned to restrain a corporation within the limit of the power given to it by its charter, an assent of the stockholders to the use of unauthorized power will be of no avail. Authorities cited. Id.

28. When a charter has actually been granted to certain persons, and they are actually in the possession and enjoyment of the corporate rights granted, such possession and enjoyment will be held against one who has dealt with them in their corporate capacity. Authorities cited.

Pitts. & S. L. R. R. Co. v. Rothschild (Pa.) 108

29. A transfer or mortgage of the property of an incorporated company, although made when the company was insolvent, and to prefer creditors, is not prohibited by statute nor objectionable in itself.

Vail v. Jameson (N. J.) 823

30. A misnomer of a corporation in a devise, grant, or obligation will not prevent it from taking or recovering in its true name. Authorities cited.

Am. Dramatic Fund Assn. v. Lett (N. J.) 403

31. A complaint seeking the compulsory production of the books of a corporation for examination on the part of a stockholder, on the ground only that complainant has been refused permission to examine the books with the aid of an expert accountant, and that he is not advised whether a dividend offered him by the directors is the full amount to which he is entitled, does not present a case for equitable relief.

Stettaner v. N. Y. & S. O. Co. (N. J.) 403

32. The power conferred upon the chancellor by § 50 of the Act concerning corporations (Rev. p. 186), to compel the production of the books of a corporation, is limited to the special case of a corporation of this State unlawfully keeping its books out of the State; and the Act does not confer upon the court of chancery any power over corporations which it did not theretofore possess, except that which is specifically given. Id.

33. A corporation acting through officers and agents who are admitted to testify in cases where the corporation is a party cannot be said to be under legal disability; and the opposing party in a suit can be examined as a witness.

North Hudson Co. R. Co. v. May (N. J.) 81

34. The Society for Establishing Useful Manufactures is exempt from the tax imposed by the Act of April 18, 1864, upon the capital stock of corporations. The exemption conferred by the charter of said society extends to the property of such society acquired under a subsequent Act of the Legislature, empowering it to extend its operations by condemning additional lands for the same purposes as those provided for in its charter.

State v. Society for Establishing Useful Manufactures (N. Y.) 139

COSTS. See JUSTICES OF THE PEACE. ⁴ WILL, 9, 10.

The Act of March 23, 1877, authorizing any of the prothonotaries and sher- iffs of the several counties of the Commonwealth, within six years after the expiration of their official term of office, to sue any one residing out of the county, before a justice of the peace within the county, for fees for official services, before or after judgment; authorizing constables to appoint deputies in the county where the defendant resides to execute the writ; providing for execution in any county in the Commonwealth; and making a certificate of the prothonotary of the county where suit is brought prima facie evidence that such fees are lawfully due and correct.—Held, to be special legislation and unconstitutional, under art. 8, § 7, of the Constitution. Strine v. Folte (Pa.) 288

2. In a suit by an executor to compel production of a will held by a daughter of the testatrix and her husband, defendants, having been in the wrong originally, held liable for costs.

Beckett v. Zane (N. J.)

54

3. The thirteenth section of the Act of September 28, 1791, which makes the costs of justices of the peace in unfounded charges of "having committed a crime" payable "out of the county stock," refers not only to felonies but to misdemeanors, such as cruelty to animals, assault and battery, malicious trespass, larceny, and false pretenses.

Lehigh Co. v. Schock (Pa.)

744

4. In a suit against a county for costs, the docket of a justice of the peace is conclusive evidence that the prosecution for which costs are claimed was discharged as unfounded for want of evidence. Id.

COUNSEL FEES. See INJUNCTION, 18.

COUNTERCLAIM. See SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM.

COUNTIES.

1. Orders drawn by a contractor, upon a county treasurer, on account of work contracted to be done for the county, under a contract providing for a cancellation of the contract in case of delay, etc., on the part of the contractor, no money being at the time due on the contract, can operate only as assignments of money expected to become due, and they become inoperative if, by force of the provisions of the contract, no money should afterwards become due the contractor.

Conselyea v. Blanchard (N. Y.)

872

2. An order upon the person liable to pay for work contracted for, drawn by the contractor, in payment for materials used in the work, does not for that reason have priority over an order, the proceeds of which are not shown to have entered into the work. Id.

3. If, on default of an original contractor, the county, acting in accordance with the terms of the contract, employs another person, who was a subcontractor for a part of the work, to complete the work, the expense of such new arrangement being authorized to be deducted from the contract price, such subcontractor, on completion of the work by him, is entitled to the amount due both for the work covered by his original subcontract and for the additional work done by him; and his right to the money, applicable to such payment, is superior to that of holders of orders drawn thereon by the original contractor; and this, although, as matter of convenience, the bill for the whole work against the county was made out and audited in the name of the original contractor. Id.

COURTS.

I. JUDGES.

II. JURISDICTION.

See CONFLICT OF LAWS, 7; JUSTICES OF THE PEACE.

I. JUDGES.

1. A judicial officer is protected from an action for damages or prosecution for false imprisonment whenever, in the proceeding, he had jurisdiction, and enough was shown to call upon him for a decision, even though he erred grossly and even intentionally. Authorities cited.

Fischer v. Langbein (N. Y.)

218

2. Civil courts can relieve a person from imprisonment under order of a court-martial only by writ of habeas corpus, and then only when it is made apparent that it proceeds without jurisdiction. If there is no restraint, there is no right in the civil court to interfere. Authorities cited.

United States v. Whitney (D. C.)

154

3. The Supreme Court of the District of Columbia has no jurisdiction to restrain, by writ of prohibition or otherwise, the proceedings of a naval court-martial. Id.

II. JURISDICTION.

4. Every thing necessary to give validity to the action of a special tribunal must appear in the record. Authorities cited.

State v. City of Trenton (N. J.)

81

5. Where the jurisdiction of the court is made to depend upon the existence of some fact of which there is an entire absence of proof, it has no authority to act; and if it nevertheless proceeds and entertains jurisdiction of the proceeding, all its acts are void, and afford no justification to the parties instituting them, as against parties injuriously affected thereby.

Fischer v. Langbein (N. Y.)

215

6. Want of jurisdiction of a court over the subject-matter may be shown at any time; and a judgment rendered in the absence of jurisdiction is inoperative and void. Authorities cited.

Pitts. & S. L. R. R. Co. v. Rothschild (Pa.)

110

7. Where the subject-matter of the suit is strictly local, jurisdiction depends upon such locality, and can only be exercised in the State where the subject-matter is located. Authorities cited. Id.

8. If the object of the suit is to directly deal with and affect the person of the defendant party, and not the subject-matter itself, and the decree when rendered and the relief when

granted would in fact directly affect and operate upon the person of the defendant only, and would not directly operate upon the subject-matter, then the suit may be maintained in any State where the court obtains jurisdiction of the person of the defendant, although the subject-matter of the controversy referred to and described in the decree, and ultimately but indirectly affected by the relief granted, may be situated in another State. Id.

9. The superior courts of New Jersey, modeled after the English courts of common law, have authority to punish summarily, by proceedings for contempt, for any words uttered, by speech, writing, or printing, outside of the regular course of litigation, which are designed to bring contempt upon the courts in the exercise of their judicial functions, or to pervert, in a pending cause, the due administration of justice.

Re Contempt of Osesman (N. J.) 576

10. The Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, in special term, sitting as an orphans' court, has all the jurisdiction that the orphans' court at any time possessed by virtue of the statutes existing anterior to the adoption of the Revised Statutes of the District.

Re Estate of McIntire (D. C.) 605

11. The question whether an administrator has received and used money for the advantage of the heir in discharging liabilities against the inherited estate, so as to charge the heir therewith, is to be raised and determined in the orphans' court, not in a suit in chancery.

Percival v. Gale (N. J.) 384

12. There is no doubt about the power of the orphans' court to revise and correct its adjudications, if palpable mistakes are discovered therein. Authorities cited.

Appeal of Johnson (Pa.) 895

13. An assignment of a mortgage, with verbal directions to the assignee to collect the debt and pay proceeds to the assignor, if living, or to the brothers and sisters of the assignee, if the assignor is dead, constitutes a special trust. After the death of the assignor, the orphans' court has not jurisdiction of the trust, and will not compel the assignee, who is also the assignor's administrator, to account for the proceeds.

Hamburg Bank v. Seidel (Pa.) 921

14. The surrogate is not necessarily concluded by the uncorroborated affidavit of the executor alleging his inability to comply with the decree; and as a decision of the surrogate imposing punishment for contempt involves conflicting evidence and the exercise of discretion, it will not be reviewed by the court of appeals, where the discretion has not been unfairly exercised.

Re Snyder (N. Y.) 210

COURTS-MARTIAL.

1. Civil courts can relieve a person from imprisonment under order of a court-martial only by writ of habeas corpus, and then only when it is made apparent that it proceeds without jurisdiction. If there is no restraint, C. R., V. IV.

there is no right in the civil court to interfere. Authorities cited.

United States v. Whitney (D. C.) 154

2. The Supreme Court of the District of Columbia has no jurisdiction to restrain, by writ of prohibition or otherwise, the proceedings of a naval court-martial. Id.

COVENANT.

1. In an action for breach of covenant against incumbrances, contained in a warranty deed in the usual form, where an original assessment for opening a street was in existence at the time of the execution of the deed, and afterwards a reassessment was made, —Held, that the lien of the reassessment related back to the lien of the original assessment, and attached when the assessment was affirmed, and not when the work was completed, and that the covenant was broken as soon as made.

Cadmus v. Fagan (N. J.) 809

2. A memorandum indorsed on a lease, signed by the parties, but not dated or under seal, that "it is agreed that the said second parties are not to drill any wells in the barnyard, orchard, or garden without consent of first parties, but nobody else to have the right," —Held, inadmissible in an action of covenant on an oil lease.

Bradford Oil Co. v. Blair (Pa.) 101

3. The measure of damages for the breach of a particular covenant in a lease is not the value of the lease or any part of it, but the loss actually resulting from the breach.

Penn Iron Co. v. Diller (Pa.) 691

4. Attachment will not lie for unliquidated damages, and hence will not lie for damages for breach of covenant in a mine lease to pay royalty for ore mined, and to remove a stipulated quantity per annum.

Heckscher v. Trotter (N. J.) 77

5. Attachment will not lie for damages arising out of breach of covenant in a charter-party to employ a vessel at a certain sum per month for a designated voyage, the length of the voyage being conjectural, and hence the damages being uncertain. Authorities cited. Id. 79

6. In an action of covenant defendant cannot be held for bail as of course, unless the covenant be for the payment of a sum certain. Authorities cited. Id.

CREDITORS' BILL.

1. A complainant in a creditors' bill may properly make every one a party who is a participator in the fraud therein alleged. He has a right to do this for the purpose of discovery; and the defendants cannot object to the bill for multifariousness, so long as the matters contained in the bill are pertinent to the imputed fraud.

Importers & T. Nat. Bank v. Littell (N. J.) 868

2. Where the bill seeks to set aside a deed made by the debtor and his wife, for fraud, the wife is a proper party defendant. Id.

3. In a creditors' bill the complainant is entitled to a discovery as to the consideration of a mortgage given by the debtor, and, where it is said to have been given to indemnify the sureties for him as guardian, to a discovery of the extent of liability of the sureties and of the estate held by him as guardian. Id.

4. Whether the debtor is able to pay his debts or not is a pertinent inquiry in a creditors' bill. Id.

5. Next of kin, although not interested in the real estate in question, are proper parties defendant to a creditors' bill seeking to charge a claim against an intestate decedent's estate upon lands formerly owned by decedent and alleged to have been fraudulently conveyed by him in his lifetime, the decedent having at his death left only personal property, and such personality being alleged to be insufficient to settle the estate.

Hunt v. Van Derveer (N. J.) 242

CRIMINAL LAW.

I. WHAT IS CRIME; FORMER JEOPARDY.

II. INDICTMENT.

III. TRIAL; EVIDENCE; CONFESSIONS; VERDICT.

IV. NEW TRIAL; APPEAL.

See ADULTERY; BASTARDY; BAWDY AND DISORDERLY HOUSES; BRIBERY; CORONER; HOMICIDE; INTOXICATING LIQUORS; LOTTERIES; PERJURY; REWARD; SUNDAY.

I. WHAT IS CRIME; FORMER JEOPARDY.

1. The word "crime" is properly applicable both to a felony and to a misdemeanor. Lehigh Co. v. Schook (Pa.) 744

2. It is essential, to create the offense prohibited by Laws 1885, chap. 188, § 7, as amended by chap. 458, that the article not produced from milk or cream, the manufacture and sale of which is forbidden, should be in imitation or semblance of butter, and this is a question for the jury. An instruction omitting the fact of imitation is error. Earl and Andrews, JJ., dissenting from the reversal, on the ground that it had been proved and assumed on the trial that yellow coloring matter had been put in the oleomargarine in order to give it the semblance of butter.

People v. Arensburg (N. Y.) 542

3. The hearing of a demurrer to an indictment does not constitute putting the defendant in jeopardy. A man has only been in jeopardy when he has had a trial. Authorities cited. Id.

United States v. Phillips (D. C.) 620

4. Where the defendant is in jeopardy under the indictment and evidence, he cannot be again tried under the same indictment; and he will be discharged without day in such case, where the original proceedings are reversed for insufficiency of a special verdict.

Rhoads v. Commonwealth (Pa.) 725

II. INDICTMENT.

5. An indictment for manslaughter by culpable negligence in the construction of a building, under Penal Code, §§ 198-195, which substantially complies with the provision, C. R., V. IV.

sions of the sections and with § 284 of the Code of Crim. Proc., is sufficient.

People v. Buddensiek (N. Y.) 787

6. A conviction will not be reversed for a mere formal defect in the indictment which might have been amended in the court below, or might be amended in this court.

Davis v. Commonwealth (Pa.) 711

7. Where the defendant has been acquitted under a certain count in an indictment, it cannot be urged as error that the trial court refused to compel the prosecution to elect as to which of several transactions set out in that count the State would rely upon for a conviction.

Clark v. State (N. J.) 806

III. TRIAL; EVIDENCE; CONFESSIONS; VERDICT.

8. Section 395, Code Crim. Proc., providing that a confession can be given in evidence, unless made under influence of fear produced by threats, or upon a stipulation for immunity from prosecution, applies only to voluntary confessions, and does not change the statutory rules relating to the examination of prisoners charged with crime. Ruger, Ch. J., and Earl, J., dissenting.

People v. Mondon (N. Y.) 857

9. If, at the time of examination of a person before a coroner's inquest, it appears that a crime has been committed, and that he is in custody as the supposed criminal, he is not to be regarded as a witness, but as a person accused; and he is to be treated in the same manner as if brought before a committing magistrate; and an examination not taken in conformity with the statute cannot be used against him on his trial for the offense. Authorities cited. Id. 859

10. Where a coroner's inquest is held before it has been ascertained that a crime has been committed, or before any person has been arrested charged with the crime, and a witness is called and sworn, his testimony (should he afterwards be charged with the crime) may be used against him on his trial; and the mere fact that at the time of his examination he was aware that a crime was suspected and that he was suspected of being the criminal will not prevent his being regarded as a mere witness, whose testimony may afterwards be given in evidence against himself. Authorities cited. Id.

11. When, in addition to the confession of the party on trial for a crime, there is proof of circumstances which, although they may have an innocent construction, are nevertheless calculated to suggest the commission of crime, and for the explanation of which the confession furnishes the key, the case cannot be taken from the jury for a noncompliance with the requirement of § 395 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, that the confession of a defendant "is not sufficient to warrant a conviction, without additional proof that the crime charged has been committed."

People v. Jaehne (N. Y.) 165

12. It seems that, under said § 395 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the confession of the defendant is to be treated as competent proof of the corpus delicti, although insufficient, without corroboration, to warrant a conviction. Id.

13. Full proof of the body of the crime, the corpus delicti, independently of the confession, is not required. Authorities cited. Id. 172

14. Where defendant was under arrest for the murder of her husband, and a justice of the peace held several conversations with her, in which he told her that three of her children had told all about the crime, "and she might as well tell us, too," but did not add that it would be better for her,—Held, her confession was voluntary and admissible. People v. Druse (N. Y.) 770

15. The testimony of a person in regard to his own signature is not evidence of a grade superior to the testimony of a witness acquainted with the handwriting of such person. Lefferts v. State (N. J.) 888

16. The defendant in a criminal case produced written complaints, and, being a witness, testified that such complaints were signed by the prosecutor in his presence; the court refused to receive the same thus proved, and required the prosecutor in such complaints to be called to prove his own signature; such prosecutor was produced and was a witness hostile to the defense. Held, that such judicial action was error entitling the defendant to a reversal of the judgment. Id.

17. Counsel cannot, after omission to object to testimony offered, take the chances of the testimony making in his favor, and, if it happens to be adverse, then interpose an objection to it. Clark v. State (N. J.) 806

18. The State, for the purpose of showing that defendant would be likely to commit the crime charged, cannot prove that he committed other crimes, although of a like nature. Id.

19. While a general verdict of guilty under an indictment will presume that all the elements of the offense have been found, a special verdict must find all the facts essential to support the charge set forth in the indictment. Rhoads v. Commonwealth (Pa.) 725

IV. NEW TRIAL; APPEAL.

20. A new trial ought not to be granted even where an exception is well taken, unless the jury could draw, from evidence admitted under it, some unfavorable inference, nor when the party excepting has by his own course of examination destroyed the force of his objection. People v. Buddensiek (N. Y.) 787

21. On a judgment of the criminal court sustaining a demurrer to an indictment, the United States has no right of appeal to the general term. Rev. Stat. § 772, does not apply to the criminal court. United States v. Phillips (D. C.) 617

22. A bill of exceptions is amendable. Lefferts v. State (N. J.) 888

CRUELTY. See HUSBAND AND WIFE, 37, 88.

CUSTOM AND USAGE.

1. A custom making 2 340 pounds a ton of coal is not good when opposed to a statute (Act of April 15, 1834) making 2,000 pounds a legal ton. Godecharles & Co. v. Wigeman (Pa.) 887

2. Rules posted up on an employer's premises, to the effect that a ton of coal shall be 2,240 pounds, such custom being opposed to a statute (Act April 15, 1834) making 2,000 pounds a legal ton, are not binding upon the employees, unless by special contract, or knowledge which will raise a presumption of contract. Id.

DAMAGES. See INJUNCTION, II.; JUDGMENT; MILLS AND DAMS, 2-7; SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM; TRESPASS, 10-14; WAYS, 4, 5, 9, 12, 14, 15, 16, 20, 23, 24.

1. Statutory authority may justify acts which otherwise would give a right of action for nuisance or for damages. Authorities cited. Cogswell v. N Y N. H. & H. R. R. Co. (N. Y.) 229

2. In an action for damages for a continuing nuisance (here, the interference with the natural flow of water by the maintenance of a dam), plaintiff may, under the Act of May 2, 1876 (P. L. 95), permitting the recovery of damages up to the day of trial, give in evidence the condition of the obstruction up to the day of the trial, including all additions, changes, and repairs made after suit brought. Humphrey v. Irvin (Pa.) 685

3. One man cannot with impunity invade the premises of another by a nuisance, because the damages may be inappreciable. The law allows the recovery of nominal damages, at least, as evidence of plaintiff's right. Authorities cited. Id. 687

4. Everyone has the right to the natural use and enjoyment of his own property, and if, while lawfully engaged in such use and enjoyment, without negligence or malice, unavoidable loss occurs to a neighbor, it is damnum absque injuria. Pa. Coal Co. v. Sanderson (Pa.) 475

5. Where defendant company made a public notice by posting at its stations a rule that mileage and round-trip tickets would not be accepted on a limited express train, and plaintiff, having entered such train with a round-trip ticket, was ejected by the conductor, after tendering his fare in cash, at a place distant from a station, in violation of a rule of the company, in the night-time, in the midst of railroad tracks and switches, and trains moving and stationary, and, after walking some distance, was injured by a moving train,—Held, that although the passenger was bound to know the regulations, and the company could lawfully eject him at the station, yet, the evidence as to actual notice being conflicting and the ejection having been willfully made at a dangerous place, the company was liable for exemplary damages, and a judgment for $48,750 was affirmed. Lake S. & M. S. R. Co. v. Rosenzweig (Pa.) 713

6. The general rule in cases of negligence is that only compensatory damages can be given. Juries are not at liberty to go further than compensation, unless the injury was done willfully, or was the result of that reckless disregard of the rights of others which is equivalent to it. Authorities cited. Id. 720

7. In an action against a bridge owner for negligence in removing a boat which had become entangled with the bridge, an instruction that the burden of proof was upon the plaintiff to show what damages resulted from the alleged negligent acts of defendant, and to distinguish them from damages for which defendant was not responsible,—Held, properly refused where the evidence clearly showed some substantial damages, and it is apparent that the verdict did not proceed upon the theory of charging the defendant in the first instance with the total loss, and then deducting the items for which defendant was shown not to be responsible, thus shifting the burden of proof.

Mark v. Hudson River Bridge Co. (N. Y.) 208

8. In an action for damages on a bond, in proceedings to restrain tearing down an alleged party-wall, preparatory to building a new building, evidence is admissible, to disprove damages, that the new building erected beside the old wall could have been erected without any detention, with the old wall standing.

Sensenig v. Parry (Pa.)

48

9. Counsel fees are not recoverable as legal damages in an action on an injunction bond conditioned to indemnify for all damage that may be sustained. Id.

10. Attachment will not lie for unliquidated damages, and hence will not lie for damages for breach of covenant in a mine lease to pay royalty for ore mined, and to remove a stipulated quantity per annum.

Heckacher v. Trotter (N. J.)

77

11. Attachment will not lie for damages arising out of breach of covenant in a charter-party to employ a vessel at a certain sum per month for a designated voyage, the length of the voyage being conjectural, and hence the damages being uncertain. Authorities cited. Id. 79

12. Unliquidated damages resulting from breach of contract can not be recovered by attachment, unless the contract affords a certain measure or standard for ascertaining the amount of damages; and such standard must be shown by the contract without the aid of extrinsic facts or circumstances. Authorities cited. Id.

DAMNUM ABSQUE INJURIA. See DAMAGES, 4.

DAMS. See MILLS AND DAMS.

DEATH. See INSURANCE, II.

DEBTOR AND CREDITOR. See ASSIGNMENT FOR BENEFIT OF CREDITORS; ATTACHMENT; CREDITORS' BILL; FRAUD AND FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE, II.

C. R., V. IV.

DECEDENTS' ESTATES. See ARBITRATION AND REFERENCE; DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION; DEVISE AND LEGACY; DOWER; EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS; GUARDIAN AND WARD; JUDGMENT, 2, 8; WILL.

DECEIT. See FALSE PRETENCES; FRAUD AND FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE.

DECLARATIONS. See EVIDENCE, IV.; LIEN, 4; WILL, 1.

DEDICATION. See WAYS, I.

DEED.

I. FORM.

II. RECORDING.

III. CONSTRUCTION.

See COVENANT; HUSBAND AND WIFE, III.; MORTGAGE.

I. FORM.

1. A misnomer of a corporation in a devise, grant, or obligation will not prevent it from taking or recovering in its true name. Authorities cited.

Am. Dramatic Fund Assn. v. Lett (N. J.) 408

II. RECORDING.

2. That a deed of assignment of a limited partnership was at first indexed in the "Limited Partnership Docket," and not in the "Deed Book Index," does not invalidate the recording of the instrument.

Sheble v. Bryden (Pa.)

664

3. An assignment of policies of insurance made by an association or partnership limited, and recorded, is not inadmissible in evidence because it is not a recordable paper. Id.

4. A deed left with the recorder for the purpose of being recorded is, in contemplation of law, recorded, and takes effect from the time it was so left. Actual notice of a deed is equivalent to its recording. Authorities cited. Id. 667

III. CONSTRUCTION.

5. The disposition of real estate, whether by deed, descent, or other mode, must be governed by the laws of the State where the land is situated. Authorities cited.

Pittsb. & S. L. R. R. Co. v. Rothschild (Pa.) 110

6. Though the intent of the parties be never so clear, it may not take place contrary to the rules of law; nor can the court put words in a deed which are not there, nor put a construction on the words directly contrary to the plain sense of them. Authorities cited.

Dwight v. Germania L. Ins. Co. (N. Y.) 583

7. If one conveys land in fee simple, but neither excepts any part, nor reserves to himself anything out of it, but restricts the grantee to a separate use of the land, this restriction is void, as repugnant to the proprietary rights of the owner in fee. Such a restriction may be imposed and would be good as a condition or a covenant, but in no other form. Authorities cited.

Lyon v. Hersey (N. Y.) 887

8. In trespass quare clausum fregit, plaintiff claimed title under a deed which had been lost, and in evidence thereof submitted a recital in a subsequent deed from the same grantor for other land, that one of the lines ran "thence by lands of" plaintiff. Held, that such recital was insufficient, and did not indicate that the whole of the line was along such lands.

Rieglesville Del. Bridge Co. v. Bloom (N. J.) 820

9. In a deed of land a reservation of "all the pine and hemlock timber growing on said land" applies only to living trees of suitable size for use at the date of the deed.

Andrews v. Wade (Pa.) 689

10. A mistake in the description of a recorded deed will not be corrected by a court of equity, to the prejudice of the rights of bona fide judgment creditors of the grantee having a lien upon the property.

Ruppert v. Haskes (D. C.) 615

11. Where the owner of land lays it out into blocks and lots upon a map, and designates certain portions thereof to be used as streets, parks, and squares, an implied covenant arises, as appurtenant to lots granted with reference to such plan, not to use the portions so devoted to the common advantage, although not of such a nature as to give rise to public rights by dedication otherwise than in the manner indicated by such map.

Lennig v. Ocean City Assn. (N. J.) 808

12. Where lots have been sold with reference to a plan or map, indicating that a space 600 feet wide extending to the ocean should remain open for an auditorium and camp meeting purposes,—Held, that on complaint of purchasers of the lots, made with reference to such plan, the grantor should be restrained from dividing the open space into lots, and appropriating or conveying the same for the erection thereon of dwelling-houses. Id.

18. Land conveyed by a deed, from one who had acquired the same under foreclosure was described therein as bounded on one side by a certain creek; the bank of the stream along the deeded premises was high and precipitous; the water rights in the stream had for a long time been used by the owners of a mill property on the stream just below the deeded property, and no attempt to use the water power had ever been made by the occupants of the deeded property until a short time before the execution of the deed, when it became available to them through the destruction of the milldam below. Held: (a), that, in view of the location and physical condition of the deeded property, title was acquired only to a strip of land along the stream, with no rights in the lands under the water or in the water-power; (b) that the owners of the mill property below should not be restrained from rebuilding their dam.

Hall v. Whitehall W. P. Co. (N. Y.) 222

DEFENSE. See AFFIDAVIT OF DEFENSE.

C. R., v. IV.

DEFINITIONS. See MAXIMS.

1. Also, in like manner.

Morgan's Est. v. Morgan's Trustees (N. J.) 866

2. Crime, applicable to felonies and misdemeanors.

Lehigh Co. v. Schock (Pa.) 744

3. Cross bill.

Krueger v. Ferry (N. J.) 58

4. Furniture embraces everything enjoyed with premises, including plate, linen, china, and pictures.

Endicott v. Endicott (N. J.) 873

5. Gas not synonymous with petroleum oil.

Truby v. Palmer (Pa.) 925

6. Petroleum oil not synonymous with gas. Id.

7. Terre-tenant.

Hulett v. Mut. Life Ins. Co. (Pa.) 768

DEMURRER. See PLEADING, III.

DEPOSITION.

1. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 888, subd. 5, a commission to take testimony out of the State can issue in a reference of a disputed claim against a decedent's estate, under Rev. Stat. pt. 2, tit. 3, art. 2, §§ 36, 37.

Paddock v. Kirkham (N. Y.) 127

2. The validity of the execution of a commission to take testimony is not affected by the fact that the commissioner signs himself throughout as a notary public merely, except across the seal of the envelope in which he returns the testimony.

Del. & H. O. Co. v. Webster (Pa.) 638

DEPOSITS. See BANKS AND BANKING, 3, 6-8.

DEPUTY. See SHERIFF, 4.

DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION.
See DECEDENTS' ESTATES.

1. The disposition of real estate, whether by deed, descent, or other mode, must be governed by the laws of the State where the land is situated. Authorities cited.

Pittsb. & S. L. R. R. Co. v. Rothschild (Pa.) 110

2. Where a contract for the sale of realty is one which could, at the time fixed by it for completing the purchase, have been enforced against the purchaser by the vendor, if he had then been living, the rights of the next of kin of the vendor thereunder, after his decease, can not be defeated by the unwillingness of his heir to perform the contract.

Keep v. Miller (N. Y.) 554

3. Where a decedent had entered into a contract for the sale of realty, such as worked an equitable conversion of the land into money at his death, and his widow was willing to have the contract performed but his heir was unwilling, and the administrator of the deceased vendor brought suit to compel specific performance, which failed as against the vendee because of the time which, without fault of the widow and by fault of the heir, had elapsed since the time fixed by the contract for its completion.—Held, that the widow of the vendor was entitled to recover from his heir a distributive share of the purchase money as part of the personal estate of her husband. Id.

4. A valid and binding contract for the sale of realty, such as equity will specifically enforce against an unwilling purchaser, operates in equity as a conversion of the land into money. Id.

5. Where a will contained a devise to the heirs of testator's deceased sister, and one of the children of such sister died in the lifetime of testator, leaving children, such children will share in the distribution of the devise. In such case the rule is that, as to the real estate, those take who were the deceased sister's heirs at testator's death, and as to the personal estate, those who at that time were her next of kin.

Ward v. Dodd (N. J.)

86

6. Although a will declares that a certain specific devise is given to devisees as his full portion, that provision will not exclude such devisees from participation which the law of Descents or the Statute of Distributions gives him in the residue of which testator died intestate. So Held, where the will containing the provision had disposed of all the testator's property, and he did not intend to die intestate as to any of it. Id.

7. An unregistered mortgage executed by an ancestor, although prior in date to a judgment recovered against his heir in the ancestor's lifetime, does not, on the ancestor's death, become void, under § 22 of the statute concerning mortgages.

Westervelt v. Voorhis (N. J.)

874

8. So long as the title to lands descended remains in the heir, the debts of the ancestor constitute a lien thereon. Authorities cited. Id.

875

9. Next of kin, who alone can take real estate, under Act of April 27, 1833, must be entirely within the blood of the ancestor from whom the realty descended, without regard to other relationship they may bear to intestate.

Ranck's Appeal (Pa.)

46

10. In the distribution of real estate derived from intestate's paternal grandfather, the next of kin, four degrees removed from the intestate on his mother's side, but six degrees removed from the intestate on his paternal grandfather's side, of whose blood they also are, will be excluded in favor of next of kin of the blood of the grandfather, five degrees removed from the intestate. Id.

46

11. A divorced wife, however innocent, has no right to a distributive share in the personal estate of her divorced husband, upon his death intestate. Hence, a divorced wife who had been divorced on her own application (for the adultery of her husband), and who had released all interest in her former husband's real estate, is not entitled to notice of proceedings to probate his will.

Re Estate of Ensign (N. Y.)

876

12. No intention to permit an innocent divorced wife to share in the personal estate of her divorced husband, on his death intestate, is to be inferred from the terms of 2 Rev. Stat. p. 146, § 48, providing that "a wife being a defendant in a suit for a divorce brought by her husband, and convicted of adultery, shall not be entitled to dower in her husband's real estate, or any part thereof, nor to any distributive share in his personal estate." Id.

13. When a woman's claim for widow's exemption out of a decedent's estate rests entirely upon cohabitation and reputation, and her prior cohabitation and reputation as the wife of a man still living is proved by evidence of the same general character, no presumption of marriage with the decedent will arise.

Reading F. Ins. Co. v. Biegel (Pa.)

678

14. A widow cannot claim reimbursement for money expended in the improvement of her husband's property when it appears that such money, in the main, was derived from her husband's business and her earnings therein, and was voluntarily contributed to make such improvement; and it seems probable that a conveyance of real estate, executed to her by the procurement of her husband, secured to her a much larger sum than she possessed at the date of her marriage.

McMonigle v. McMonigle (N. J.)

408

15. Where no one has appeared to claim the realty by descent, the widow is entitled to reasonable compensation for collecting the rents thereon, when she is called upon to account. Id.

DESCRIPTION. See DEED, 10-13.

DEVISE AND LEGACY.

I. CONSTRUCTION; GENERAL RULES.

II. DESCRIPTION OF GIFT AND BENEFICIARY.

III. ABSOLUTE ESTATES.

IV. LIFE ESTATES.

V. REMAINDERS, VESTED, CONTINGENT.

VI. WHEN GIFT VESTS.

VII. ADVANCEMENTS.

VIII. POWER OF SALE.

IX. LAPSED GIFTS.

X. PAYMENT; CHARGE ON LAND; ACTIONS. See DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION; DOWER; EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS; WILL.

I. CONSTRUCTION; GENERAL RULES.

1. In an action for the construction of a will, the court will not give direction to the executors upon a state of facts which is merely hypothetical.

Hurlbut v. Hutton (N. J.)

409

2. The right of an administrator with the will annexed to apply to the court for instruction is limited to matters of difficulty in his own administration.

Casperon v. Dunn (N. J.)

419

3. A will requested and empowered the survivor or survivors, in case of the death of any of the executors, to appoint other executors. Held, that a person so appointed takes the trust estate, as well as the duties of executorship, in place of his predecessor.

Mulford v. Mulford (N. J.) 589

4. Every last will made when testator had no issue living, wherein any issue he might have is not provided for or mentioned, shall be void if, at the time of his death, he leave a child or children or issue, or leave his wife en ventre of a child or children which shall be born; and such testator shall be deemed to die intestate. Rev. 1246, § 20.

Coudert v. Coudert (N. J.) 182

5. The Act of April 8, 1833, allowing after-born children to take against the will, applies only to those physically born after the execution of the will, and does not apply to those legitimated after the making of the will.

Appeal of McCulloch (Pa.) 468

6. In arriving at testator's intent, effect is to be given to every part of the will.

McDevitt's Appeal (Pa.) 88

7. Devisees are governed by the intention of the testator, to be ascertained from his words in the will and the circumstances.

Sager v. Galloway (Pa.) 681

8. An expression in a will of an intention on the part of the testator to convey property, at a future time, to his daughter-in-law, can not be construed to be a devise.

Huribut v. Hutton (N. J.) 409

9. To create a devise by inference the implication must be a necessary one; there must be such a strong probability of an intention to devise that an intent to the contrary cannot be supposed.

Id.

II. DESCRIPTION OF GIFT AND BENEFICIARY.

10. Name. A devise to the American Dramatic Fund held good as a devise to the corporation, the American Dramatic Fund Association, it appearing that such corporation was intended by the testatrix to be the recipient.

Am. Dramatic Fund Assn. v. Lett (N. J.) 402

11. A misnomer of a corporation in a devise, grant, or obligation will not prevent it from taking or recovering in its true name. Authorities cited. Id.

12. A devise of "all the money I die possessed of in several banks and bonds" is not void for indefiniteness.

Re Will of Beckett (N. Y.) 881

13. A will directed that testator's "entire estate be and remain the same as it now is, real, personal, or mixed, including the furniture," etc., to be occupied by his wife during her life; and that at her decease the homestead, furniture, etc., should be used by testator's daughter, during life, or while unmarried. Held, that the words "the homestead" were manifestly omitted by mistake from the provision for the wife, and that it was the intention that the homestead should be occupied by her for life; that the term "furniture" embraces everything about the house that has been usually enjoyed therewith, including plate, linen, china, and pictures; that the provision for the wife was in lieu of dower, and, accepting it, she was not entitled to the $200 exemption; and that, as life tenant, she was bound to pay taxes and make repairs, but not to insure.

Endicott v. Endicott (N. J.) 871

14. The term "furniture" embraces everything about the house that has usually been enjoyed therewith, including plate, linen, china, and pictures. Authorities cited. Id.

872

III. ABSOLUTE ESTATES.

15. Where a devise contains no words of inheritance, it is only by implication that a fee can be claimed. Authorities cited.

McDevitt's Appeal (Pa.) 34

16. The fact that a devisee of real estate is personally charged with the payment of legacies is not decisive that the primary devise was in fee, when a different intention is disclosed.

Vanderzee v. Hansell (N. Y.) 176

17. A devise to one person of all testator's real estate in possession, without words of inheritance, with a gift over in the event only of death of devisee without issue, shows an intention to vest the fee in the primary devisee. In such devise the words refer to death without issue in the lifetime of testator, and the primary devisee surviving the testator takes an absolute estate in fee simple. Authorities cited. Id.

179

18. But this rule applies only where the context of the will is silent, and affords no indication of intention other than that disclosed by words of absolute gift, followed by a gift over in case of death or other specified event; and slight circumstances will vary their construction and give effect to the language according to its natural import. Id.

19. The will gave the widow's income, after her death; the estate in the event of the son's death before reaching thirty and after the death of the widow; and half of the estate upon the death of the widow, in case the son reached thirty—to the executors to be disposed of as they might choose. Held, that these were absolute gifts, to take effect in the respective contingencies.

Mulford v. Mulford (N. J.) 589

IV. LIFE ESTATES.

20. Testator directed his executors to sell his real estate, and divide the proceeds into two equal parts, giving one to his wife and the other in trust for the support of his father; and what should remain of the latter fund after the decease of the father, to his nephews. The widow and father of the testator occupied the land until the father's death. Held, the provision for the widow was in lieu of dower, and she had no right to the mansion house rent free; the heirs were entitled to one half the value of the use and occupation, and to have it applied to the cost of support of testator's father; executors were chargeable with one half the value of the rent of the land, and were to be credited with one half the taxes and insurance; and exceptions to the account having been sustained, it was not error to decree the executors should pay cost and counsel fees.

Brokaw v. Brokaw (N. J.) 847

21. A will provided, "I give, devise and bequeath unto my wife all my household goods and furniture; also one third of the income or interest of my estate during her widowhood, in lieu of dower." Held, that "also" was equivalent to "in like manner," and that the gift of the household goods and furniture was during widowhood only.

Morgan's Est. v. Morgan's Trustee (N. J.) 864

22. If a man devise black acre to one in tail, and also white acre, the devisee shall have an estate tail in white acre also, for this is all one sentence, and so words which make the limitation of the estate go to both. Authorities cited. Id. 866

23. A tenant for life is bound to keep down the interest on incumbrances, to pay ordinary taxes, and make necessary annual repairs. A tenant in dower, like other life tenants, is bound to do so. Authorities cited.

Spinning v. Spinning (N. J.) 55

24. One entitled to the interest of a fund for life must pay the tax assessed against the principal of the fund. Authorities cited. Id.

25. A will gave testator's widow certain real estate in fee, and gave the residue of the estate to the executors in trust, one half of the income to go to the widow for life, and the other half to testator's son "until he should become thirty years of age." It then gave to the widow and son the use and occupation of certain specified property "during the years above limited." Held, that the widow's use and occupation was not limited to the time when the son should become thirty years of age, but was intended to be for her life; that the devisees of the income of the residuary estate are entitled thereto from the death of the testator; and that proceeds of stone taken by the executors from quarries upon testator's land, opened before his death and never abandoned, are part of such income.

Mulford v. Mulford (N. J.) 589

26. A will provided that if the testator's son should die before reaching the age of thirty and the widow survive him, his half of the income should go to the executors, to be disposed of as they should see fit, but made no disposition in that case of the half of the corpus, the income of which was given to the widow. Held, that as the legal title to that half was in the trustees in trust only, and not beneficially, it will go to those who, at the testator's death, were his next of kin or heirs at law, according as the property is personal or real. Id.

27. A will provided that the executors should invest a specified sum, and pay the interest annually to testator's daughters, "for their support and maintenance in keeping such home as aforesaid." Held, that it was testator's intention that this gift should take effect when the use of the homestead by the daughters should begin and not at testator's death, and that it should cease when such use should cease; that it was a special trust and not an absolute gift, and that therefore the daughters were not entitled to the fund itself. The right of the daughters was personal; they could not rent the premises, and while occupying were liable as life tenants for taxes, etc.

Endicott v. Endicott (N. J.) 871

28. If it appears, from the terms of the gift or the context of the will, that a personal use only was intended, the enjoyment of the gift will be confined accordingly. Authorities cited. Id. 874

29. Where the securities (government and municipal bonds and real estate mortgages bearing fixed rates of interest) belonging to a trust fund created by a will, which provided that the "annual interest, income, and dividends thereof" should be paid to a certain person for life, with remainder to others, were sold, after the death of the life beneficiary, for more than the original amount of the trust fund,—Held, that the accretion or increase so arising belonged to the remaindermen, and not to the representatives of the life beneficiary.

Re Accounting of Gerry (N. Y.) 796

30. Held also, that the fact that the trustee had invested the fund in securities other than those authorized by the will (such action having been ratified by the parties interested) did not change the rule of distribution of the fund. Id.

31. A devise of land, without words of limitation, to a married daughter, followed by the words "and I hereby authorize and empower her to sell and dispose of the same as she may think proper, but in case of her death and the property as aforesaid remaining unsold, then it is to be equally divided among her children, share and share alike, as they arrive at the age of twenty-one," and in the light of other clauses in the will, gives to the daughter a life estate in the land and a power to appoint, by way of sale or otherwise, to other uses than those specified by the will. A deed in fee by the devisee without joinder of her husband is valid.

Deffenbaugh v. Harris (Pa.) 464

32. A devise to a son of a share to be retained by a trustee for and during the son's natural life, the interest thereof to be paid to the son yearly, and after his death his share to be equally divided among his children if he should have any, or to their issue, creates only a life estate in the son.

McDevitt's Appeal (Pa.) 38

V. REMAINDERS, VESTED, CONTINGENT.

33. When there is no moment that the remainderman in fee would not have an immediate right to the estate on the death of the life tenant, it is a vested remainder.

Thaw v. Ritchie (D. C.) 597

34. A devise of a life estate, and then a devise over in fee to two persons in equal parts, with a devise of the share of him dying first to the survivor, creates a vested remainder in fee; the devise to the survivor being simply an executory devise over of a fee after a fee; a devise over to the life tenant in case she survives the two remaindermen is also such an executory devise. Id.

35. The objection to the sale of an infant's estate in remainder, because of the uncertainty of its value, is removed when the life tenant joins in the sale. Id.

86. Under a residuary devise "to my said beloved wife (naming her) for the term of her natural life; and upon the decease of my said wife, I do order and direct that all the said residue and remainder of my estate be sold by my executor; and after paying the aforementioned bequests it is my will, and I do order, that the moneys arising therefrom and so remaining shall be divided among my children (naming seven of his nine children), share and share alike; and if any of my last named children be deceased, leaving issue, then it is my will that the share the parent would have been entitled to if living shall go to such issue," the children take vested remainders in fee at the death of the testator, his wife surviving.

Richardson v. Richardson (N. J.) 638

87. Where the primary devise was to testator's son, subject to the proviso that "on the death of my son without issue" the estate should go over to testator's grandchildren, and also, "that in case my son should die before the provisions of this will become an act, the devisees last named (the grandchildren) shall perform and fulfill all the conditions required of my son to the legatees named in this my will" (referring to antecedent specific legacies which the will provided should be paid by the son within two years after testator's death), the intention of the testator appears to have been that the gift over should take effect upon the death of his son without issue, at any time, either before or after his own death.

Vandersee v. Haswell (N. Y.) 176

88. Where testator devised to his widow one third the income of his estate during widowhood, and she died before the rents for the portion of the current year became due, and it appeared that the gift was intended for support,—Held, that the rents should be apportioned.

Morgan's Est. v. Morgan's Trustee (N. J.) 864

89. Where a remainder is so limited as to take effect in possession, if ever, immediately upon the determination of the particular estate, which estate is determined by an event that must unavoidably happen by the efflux of time, the remainder vests in interest as soon as the remainderman is in esse and ascertained; provided nothing but his own death before the determination of the particular estate will prevent such remainder from vesting in possession. Authorities cited.

Sager v. Galloway (Pa.) 685

40. When a remainder is limited to a person not in esse, or not ascertained, as when it is limited so as to require the concurrence of some dubious, uncertain event, independent of the determination of the preceding estate and duration of the estate limited in remainder, to give it a capacity of taking effect, the remainder is contingent. Authorities cited. Id.

41. A will gave a life estate to testator's wife, and then provided that, at her death and after his son A. attained majority, the property should be divided between testator's children E, T, and A, equally. A subsequent clause provided that in case testator's wife died, and A. did not live to majority, the whole estate should be held in trust for E and T until a certain date, and then be divided between them. The next clause provided that in case either of testator's children should die leaving issue, such issue should receive the share devised to the child so dying. The will also provided that T should have use of testator's interest in business so long as the estate was undivided, and should pay interest on the appraised value thereof. T died before testator's wife, leaving issue. Held: (a) That the word "either" was used in the sense of "any;" that testator's children took a contingent and not a vested interest, and that therefore T having died before the period fixed for division of the estate arrived, his share belonged to his children. (b) That, under the circumstances T's children are subject to the same equities to which he would have been had he lived to the time fixed for division, and that therefore their share is to be charged with interest on the value of testator's interest in business.

La Foy v. Campbell (N. J.) 595

VI. WHEN GIFT VESTS.

42. The law favors the vesting of estates, and where there is doubt as to the point of time at which it was intended the estate should vest, the earliest will be taken.

Sager v. Galloway (Pa.) 681

43. A devise to a grandson when he arrives at a certain age, and if he dies before that age the devise to pass to another person, indicates an intention that the devise to the former shall be contingent on his arriving at the age designated. Id.

44. Where a testator creates a particular estate and disposes of the ulterior interest, especially in an event which will determine the prior estate, the words descriptive of such event, occurring in the later devise, will be construed as referring merely to the period of the determination of the possession or enjoyment under the prior gift. Id.

45. Where the particular age at which the devise shall pass to the devisee is made a constituent part of the description of the object of the devise, the remainder cannot vest before. The person is not ascertained before the given age. Id.

46. The will devised the homestead, when it should be no longer used by testator's daughters, "to such child or children at that time living, and their heirs and assigns forever, and the representatives of any deceased child to have the share of his or her parent." Held, that the intent was to give the property to those of testator's children who should be alive at the termination of the use by the daughters, and the issue of those of his children who should then be dead, per stirpes; and that neither the gift to the daughters nor in remainder was vested.

Endicott v. Endicott (N. J.) 871

VII. ADVANCEMENTS.

47. Where a will provides that certain loans and advances, made by the testator to his daughter's husband, shall be a part of and be deducted from the daughter's share of his estate, and the securities therefor be assigned to her; if her share is not sufficient to pay the amount of such loans and advances, she will not be entitled to the securities until she shall have paid the balance.

Hurlbut v. Hutton (N. J.) 409

48. A will provided that if there should be due from the legatees "obligations of any kind or evidence of debt of any kind," they should be deducted from the legacies. Held, promissory notes and receipts for advances of money were intended.

Hill v. Bloom (N. J.) 845

VIII. POWER OF SALE.

49. A testator directed his executors to convert real estate into money, "such sale or sales to be made in one year after my decease, and sooner if deemed desirable by them," and gave the proceeds—after paying legacies which were charged thereon and expenses, and after investing a specified sum to raise an income for his wife—to his sons in equal shares. Held, that the limitation of the sales to one year after the testator's death was directory merely, and not of the essence of the power to sell, and therefore that the power could be exercised after the expiration of the limited period.

Marsh v. Love (N. J.) 867

50. Where a power to sell is directory merely, it may be exercised after the expiration of the limited period, but where the limitation is of the essence of the power, the power must be executed within the prescribed period. Authorities cited. Id. 868

51. A will provided that the executors might sell any of the property, except that the use of which was given to the widow and son, and, in case it could not be advantageously sold, might mortgage it so far as necessary to pay borrowed money or to keep it in repair. Held, that the power to mortgage must be confined to the contingency of the inability to sell to advantage, and then exercised only so far as necessary; and that interest on such mortgages should be paid out of the income.

Mulford v. Mulford (N. J.) 589

52. Devise to wife in trust for her own benefit for life, with remainder to testator's children.—Held, the widow had a legal estate in fee, and an equitable estate for life, and the children an equitable remainder in fee, and, when required by the necessities of the trust, she would have power to sell, but a purchaser would take the property with notice of the trust.

Fisher v. Fisher (N. J.) 861

53. The exercise of a power given by will to executors, to sell at public or private sale, and to assign, grant, and convey real and personal property on such terms as in their judgment will be most beneficial to the estate, must be left to their discretion, where there is no allegation of abuse or intended abuse of such discretion by the executors.

Hurlbut v. Hutton (N. J.) 409

IX. LAPSED GIFTS.

54. Where an aggregate fund is given to several persons nominatim, to be divided among them in equal shares, if one of them dies before the testator the share of such decedent will lapse, unless an intention to give a right of survivorship may be deduced from other parts of the will.

Collins v. Bergen (N. J.) 405

55. Where the share which lapses is a part of the residuary estate it does not pass to the other residuary legatees as part of the residue, but must be deemed intestate estate. Id.

56. Where a gift is to persons nominatim, the intention to give a right of survivorship may be deduced from other parts of the will. Authorities cited. Id. 406

57. Upon the death of the devisee of a specific share of the residue of an estate, in testator's lifetime, such share lapses, but does not sink into the residue; and the testator will be held to have died intestate as to such share.

Ward v. Dodd (N. J.) 86

58. Although a will declares that a certain specific devise is given to devisee as his full portion, that provision will not exclude such devisee from participation which the Law of Descents or the Statute of Distributions gives him in the residue of which testator died intestate. So held, where the will containing the provision had disposed of all the testator's property, and he did not intend to die intestate as to any of it. Id.

59. A general residuary bequest does not include any part of the residue itself which fails. Authorities cited. Id. 87

X. PAYMENT; CHARGE ON LAND; ACTIONS.

60. The presumption is that a legacy is to be paid only out of the personalty; and if that is insufficient the legacy is lost, unless a contrary intention is shown on the face of the will.

White v. Kauffman (Md.) 159

61. Where a will directs a legacy to be paid out of testator's estate by the executor, and no realty is devised to the executor, payment of the legacy will be confined to the personalty; no inference to charge the realty can be drawn from a subsequent residuary clause devising all the remainder of testator's estate, "real, personal, and mixed," to a third person. Id.

62. Words charging debts upon the realty will have the same effect when applied to legacies. Authorities cited. Id. 160

63. Real estate is not charged with the payment of legacies. It is never charged unless testator intended it should be, and that intention must be either expressly declared or fairly and satisfactorily inferred from the language and disposition of the will. Authorities cited. Id. 161

64. Where a legacy is directed to be paid out of the estate, it is charged on the realty. Authorities cited. Id.

65. Where legacies are given generally, and the residue of the real and personal estate is afterwards given in one mass, the legacies are a charge upon the real as well as personal estate.

Am. Dramatic Fund Assn. v. Lett (N. J.) 402

66. Where a will directed that certain legacies should be paid to the legatees "in notes or bonds or mortgages, transferred to them with respective value at the time by the executors,"—Held, it was intended such securities were to be taken by the legatees at their fair intrinsic value, and not at the amount due on them.

Beatty v. Cory Universalist Soc. (N. J.) 881

67. Where a will contained a devise to the heirs of testator's deceased sister, and one of the children of such sister died in the lifetime of testator, leaving children, such children will share in the distribution of the devise. In such case the rule is that, as to the real estate, those take who were the deceased sister's heirs at testator's death, and as to the personal estate, those who at that time were her next of kin.

Ward v. Dodd (N. J.) 86

DIRECTOR. See CORPORATIONS, IV.

DISCHARGE. See BANKRUPTCY, 8-6.

DISCOVERY. See EXECUTION, 18.

DIVORCE. See HUSBAND AND WIFE, V.

DOCKET. See JUSTICES OF THE PEACE, 5.

DOWER.

I. RIGHT OF DOWER.

II. BAR; ALIENATION; ELECTION.

I. RIGHT OF DOWER.

1. Dower, at common law and under the statutes of Pennsylvania, is an estate in the land, and not a mere lien.

Defenderfer v. Eschleman (Pa.) 290

2. A widow in possession, under Rev. 320, § 2, giving her the right to hold her husband's homestead until her dower is assigned, is not a tenant for life, and is not bound to keep down interest on an incumbrance, and to pay taxes, and to make necessary annual repairs.

Spinning v. Spinning (N. J.) 55

3. The estate given the widow by Rev. 320 is a freehold for life, unless sooner defeated by the act of the heir. Authorities cited. Id. 56

4. Dower does not attach, either at common law or under Rev. p. 320, to real estate of which the husband was seised in joint tenancy.

Babbitt v. Day (N. J.) 66

5. A widow is not bound to pay rent for the occupancy of the house in which she and her husband dwelt before his death, until after the assignment of her dower.

McMonigle v. McMonigle (N. J.) 408

II. BAR; ALIENATION; ELECTION.

6. A divorced wife, however innocent, has no right to a distributive share in personal estate of her divorced husband, upon his death C. R., V. IV.

Intestate. Hence, a divorced wife who had been divorced on her own application (for the adultery of her husband), and who had released all interest in her former husband's real estate, is not entitled to notice of proceedings to probate his will.

Re Estate of Ensign (N. Y.) 376

7. No intention to permit an innocent divorced wife to share in the personal estate of her divorced husband, on his death intestate, is to be inferred from the terms of 2 Rev. Stat. p. 146, § 48, providing that "a wife being defendant in a suit for divorce brought by her husband, and convicted of adultery, shall not be entitled to dower in her husband's real estate, or any part thereof, nor to any distributive share in his personal estate. Id.

8. The law regards the act of the wife in joining in the deed or mortgage of her husband as to his land, not as an alienation of the estate, but as a renunciation of her inchoate right of dower in and of the title or interest created by his conveyance. It follows, therefore, that her act becomes a nullity whenever the interest or title to which the renunciation is incident is itself defeated. Authorities cited.

Hinchliffe v. Shea (N. Y.) 215

9. Where the provisions of a will manifest a clear and unequivocal intention on the part of the testator to bar his wife's dower, it is sufficient, without express words, to put her to her election between the provision made for her in the will and that made for her by law. Authorities cited.

Brokaw v. Brokaw (N. J.) 848

10. The Act of March 29, 1832, charges the widow's dower on the land, in partition proceedings; and the orphans' court cannot divest the dower, by decree or otherwise, unless the widow's consent is procured in such manner as to pass her estate. Mere knowledge on her part will not operate as estoppel.

Defenderfer v. Eschleman (Pa.) 290

11. Evidence that an administrator's deed omits reference to dower, or that the whole of the purchase money was paid to the administrator, or that the assignee of the land understood from his vendor or the scrivener that the land was clear from incumbrance, is inadmissible, where the widow is not a party to these transactions. Id.

12. The widow's right, under Rev. 320, is a privilege preceding, but in no wise preventing or impeding, the assignment or disposal of her dower. Authorities cited.

Spinning v. Spinning (N. J.) 56

13. When a married woman joins with her husband in a mortgage of his land for the purpose of releasing her inchoate right of dower, the mortgage is defeated as to both by a sale of the husband's interest in the mortgaged premises on execution under a prior judgment, and her dower interest in the land cannot be subsequently foreclosed under such mortgage. So held, where the purchaser at the sale under the prior judgment conveyed to the wife, and after the husband's death the mortgagee sought to foreclose as to her dower interest.

Hinchliffe v. Shea (N. Y.) 214

DRAINS AND SEWERS.

1. In proceedings to drain lands, under Rev. 652, where a married woman's land has been sold under prior proceedings for foreclosure of a mortgage, and conveyed, without change of possession,—notice to the owner and to the husband, who occupies the land with his wife under arrangement for reconveyance, is sufficient.

State v. Little (N. J.) 562

2. Delay and acquiescence, inducing expenditures of moneys by others, in works of a quasi public nature, waive, irregularities. Authorities cited. Id. 563

3. Taxes assessed, under section 131 of the charter of Paterson, at a fixed rate per lineal foot of street frontage, based upon the estimated cost of sewers in the drainage district, are invalid, because neither assessed according to the true value of the property, nor imposed within the limits of special benefits derived from the improvement.

State v. City of Paterson (N. J.) 246

4. Where a contractor, having agreed with the city of Philadelphia to build a sewer, to receive payment in assessment bills against the fronting properties, to make no claim on the city for payment, and that the city should not "in any wise guaranty any of said bills to be good and collectible," builds the sewer, receives the assessment bills, and brings suits against property owners who resist the liens, and afterwards the city councils, by ordinance, direct the chief engineer to draw, and the city controller to countersign, in payment for the work, a warrant for $600, against a survey department appropriation, the court will not, upon the controller's refusal, compel him by mandamus to countersign the warrant.

Dechert v. Commonwealth (Pa.) 754

DRUGGIST. See INTOXICATING LIQUORS, 9.

EASEMENT.

1. Servitudes and easements and other charges on lands are deemed to be, in the sense of the law, immovables, and governed by the lex rei sitæ. Authorities cited.

Pittsb. & S. L. R. R. Co. v. Rothschild (Pa.) 110

2. One claiming an easement over the land of another, by the uninterrupted adverse enjoyment thereof for over twenty years, must show that such enjoyment has been in the same place for the period of time required.

South Branch R. R. Co. v. Parker (N. J.) 63

EJECTMENT.

1. Where the possession of the vendor of land is lawful, his vendee cannot maintain ejectment against him, without proof of a previous tender of the purchase money, and he must maintain that tender by producing the money in court.

Orne v. Kittanning Coal Co. (Pa.) 787

2. Fraud which the legal owner of land might have alleged as a defense to the specific performance of a contract in relation to the C. R., V. IV.

land may be set up by the privies in his estate, as a defense in an action of ejectment brought by the successors of one claiming an equitable title by virtue of the contract, but never in possession. Id.

3. Before a vendee can recover in an equitable action of ejectment, he must tender the purchase price, and must also have it in court ready to be paid in the event of a verdict in his favor. Authorities cited.

McGrew v. Foster (Pa.) 918

4. In an action of ejectment, declarations of a deceased grantor under whom plaintiff claims title, that he had sold the land to the ancestor of the defendants, are admissible.

Swank v. Phillips (Pa.) 461

5. That the plaintiff in an action of ejectment has been permitted to testify to matters occurring in the lifetime of the deceased ancestor of defendants, either with or without objection, does not render the widow and son of the ancestor competent to testify to such matters for the purpose of sustaining the defendants' title. Id.

6. In an action of ejectment by a plaintiff claiming as an innocent purchaser for value, without notice, the record of an agreement for the sale of the land in dispute, to the plaintiff, recorded after the commencement of the action, is admissible as evidence; but its rejection is not ground for reversal if the original agreement was admitted. Id.

7. A tenant in common is not competent to support the possession of his cotenant, when the latter is defendant in ejectment founded on a title adverse to the title of both. Authorities cited. Id. 464

EMBEZZLEMENT. See LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, 8.

EMINENT DOMAIN. See RAILROAD COMPANIES, II.; SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS, 2, 3; WAYS, II., III.

1. While the franchises of a corporation are property and may be taken under the power of eminent domain, yet property taken by one corporation for a public use cannot be taken by another corporation without an express grant or by necessary implication. Right by implication can arise only from absolute necessity, such as that without it the grant would be defeated. Authorities cited.

Pittsburg Junc. R. R. Co.'s Appeal (Pa.) 267

2. Statutory authority may justify acts which otherwise would give a right of action for nuisance or for damages. Authorities cited.

Cogswell v. N. Y. N. H. & H. R. R. Co. (N. Y.) 229

EQUITABLE LIEN. See LIEN, 4.

EQUITY.

I. JURISDICTION.

II. FRAUD; MISTAKE.

III. PLEADING; EVIDENCE; PRACTICE.

See ACCOUNT; ASSIGNMENT, 4; CLOUD ON TITLE; INJUNCTION; LACHES; MAXIMS; PARTITION; PATENTS, 1-3; RECEIVER; REVIEW; SUBROGATION; TRESPASS, 1, 8, 13, 14; TRUSTS.

I. JURISDICTION.

1. He who asks equity must do equity.
Orandall v. Grou (N. J.) 71

2. The laches and nonclaim of the rightful owner of an equitable estate, who is under no disability, and in a case free from fraud, for a period of twenty years, will, where the person in possession has held adversely to such owner, constitute a conclusive bar to all equitable relief. Authorities cited.

Chapin v. Wright (N. J.) 60

3. Though a person having the legal title to land in one State may be decreed by a court of equity in another State to convey the land, yet neither the decree, nor any conveyance by virtue of it by one not having the title, can operate beyond the jurisdiction of the court. Authorities cited.

Pittb. & S. L. R. R. Co. v. Rothschild (Pa.) 110

4. The jurisdiction of courts of equity in cases of trespass is purely preventive; they may restrain a threatened trespass, if the injury likely to ensue will be irreparable, or they may enjoin the continuance or repetition of a trespass; but for a completed trespass, which, as a legal wrong, is complete when protection is sought, they can give no redress whatever.

Lords v. Carbon Iron Mfg. Co. (N. J.) 853

5. A court of equity cannot award pecuniary damages in redress of a trespass. A court of equity has no authority to impose an easement on the land of a trespasser, in redress of the wrong done by the trespass. Id.

6. Equity has jurisdiction of a bill by a widow against the estate of her deceased husband, to recover money belonging to her, which he received under an express agreement between her and him that he would hold the same in trust for her; she has no remedy at law.

Drost v. Corle (N. J.) 862

7. Commissioners of highways are confined to the procedure prescribed by statute for the removal of obstructions to a highway, and cannot maintain a suit in equity to compel the removal of such an obstruction, or to enjoin future obstructions.

Rozell v. Andrews (N. Y.) 209

8. Equity has jurisdiction to compel an accounting and discovery in aid thereof, and to restrain the manufacture of other than a patent article in violation of the terms of a written contract.

Bovaird v. Dick (Pa.) 40

II. FRAUD; MISTAKE.

9. Equity will leave the parties in the position where they have knowingly and willfully placed themselves. Public policy forbids the intervention of the courts to relieve a fraudulent actor.

Rowland v. Martin (Pa.) 760

O. R., V. IV.

10. Where a bill contains only a general charge of fraud and waives an answer upon oath, discovery in aid of complainant's charge of fraud is waived also.

Somerset Co. Bank v. Veghte (N. J.) 406

11. A mistake in the description of a recorded deed will not be corrected by a court of equity, to the prejudice of the rights of bona fide judgment creditors of the grantee having a lien upon the property.

Ruppert v. Haske (D. C.) 615

III. PLEADING; EVIDENCE; PRACTICE.

12. Bill in equity to enjoin construction of railway track on highway, and for other relief, will support decree requiring removal of track laid after notice of the proceedings.

Pa. R. R. Co. v. Mish (Pa.) 276

13. In a suit by an assignee of a firm to rectify a deed of assignment made in New York, because of the absence therefrom of words of inheritance, and to so make it that it may convey the realty in this State in fee, where defendant's object is to get a decree in his favor, for a debt due by the assignor, and to collect the same out of his property situated in this State, a cross bill is not necessary. He cannot involve complainant in this suit for the purpose of establishing his debt. The allegations in the cross bill tending to establish the debt may be regarded, so far as complainant is concerned, as averments that defendant is a creditor in this State, and of the firm, and is therefore entitled to resist the application to rectify the deed.

Van Winkle v. Armstrong (N. J.) 53

14. Parties in suits in which evidence is taken before an examiner will not be permitted to appeal to the chancellor from the decision of a vice-chancellor, nor to have a rehearing before him upon questions arising upon appeal from rulings of the examiner admitting or rejecting evidence.

Pullen v. Pullen (N. J.) 72

15. In a bill for an account of royalties on patented articles manufactured, articles made in violation of the agreement, but not under letters patent, cannot be included in the account.

Dick v. Bovaird (Pa.) 44

16. In a bill in equity against husband and wife, to establish title to real estate and to compel conveyance of the wife's title, the wife died without having executed a decree ordering conveyance. A bill for partition against the husband and surviving child was sustained, and a conveyance ordered.

Appeal of Church (Pa.) 95

17. The chancellor will rehear decisions advised by a vice-chancellor, only where there appear to be special reasons for so doing.

Pullen v. Pullen (N. J.) 72

18. A matter heard upon petition and answer thereto during the progress of a cause, and disposed of by a decretal order, can not be reheard as a matter of course upon the final hearing of the cause.

Hurlbut v. Hutton (N. J.) 409

19. Upon application, made after final decree, to file supplemental or amended answer, setting out facts known to defendant when the original answer was filed, it must appear that hardship will result to defendant if permission be not accorded, and that he is not in fault for not having set up the defense in his answer originally.

United N. J. R. R. & C. Co. v. Long Dock Co. (N. J.) 56

20. The new facts which may be introduced by a cross bill, are such, and such only, as are so directly and closely connected with the cause of action on which the original bill is founded as to render the cross suit a mere auxiliary of the original suit, or a graft or dependency upon it.

Krueger v. Ferry (N. J.) 57

21. If a defendant attempts to introduce new and distinct matter, not essential to the proper determination of the matter put in litigation by the original bill, although he may show a perfect case against either the complainant, or one or more of his codefendants, his pleading will not be a cross bill, but an original bill. Authorities cited. Id. 59

22. Where a cross bill is not filed as a means of defense, it is "a proceeding to procure a complete determination of a matter already in litigation." Authorities cited. Id.

23. A cross bill must be confined to the matter contained in the original bill, and if defendant attempts to engraft questions not necessary to the proper determination of the complainant's right to relief, his bill must be dismissed. Authorities cited. Id.

ERROR. See EXCEPTIONS.

1. The statute limiting the time within which a writ of error must be sued out does not apply to a married woman.

Penn v. Early (Pa.) 288

2. Assignments of error should be so complete in themselves as not to require reference to other parts of the record. Each specification of error should, in and of itself, present the question to be decided.

Landis v. Evans (Pa.) 656

3. A judgment will not be reversed on an assignment of a single sentence of a charge of the court as error, when from the context it is plain there was no error, and that the jury could not have been misled.

Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Rosenzweig (Pa.) 712

4. A technical defect in the pleadings which did not and could not mislead is not ground for reversal after a trial on the merits. The declaration, if it does not set forth the case with accuracy, is amendable. Id.

5. The finding of a jury upon a controverted question of fact is conclusive unless the trial judge erred in the admission or rejection of testimony or in his instruction to the jury.

Shoble v. Bryden (Pa.) 664

6. Whether the verdict was against the charge and the weight of evidence are matters for the trial court, and cannot be reviewed on error.

Orange & N. Horse R. R. Co. v. Ward (N. J.) 825

7. The allowance of a question objected to on the ground that it was admitted out of order, but which proves to be harmless, by the subsequent testimony, is no ground for reversal, although the question may also be objectionable in form.

Bush v. Breinig (Pa.) 889

ESTATES OF DECEDENTS. See DECEDENTS' ESTATES.

ESTOPPEL. See LANDLORD AND TENANT, I.; LICENSE, 3; LIEN, 7; PRINCIPAL AND SURETY, II.; SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE, 5.

1. One not a party to a deed and who does not claim under it is not estopped by its recitals.

Thaw v. Ritchie (D. C.) 597

2. Although the maker of a chattel mortgage may, as between himself and the mortgagee, be estopped from denying the indebtedness purporting to be secured thereby, yet on proof that the consideration expressed in the mortgage was greater than the real indebtedness, and that the mortgage was taken to protect the maker's property from his creditors, it may be held fraudulent as to creditors.

Taylor v. Wood (N. J.) 138

3. Statements by the owner of a mortgage, as to a third person's being authorized to receive payments thereon for him, not made to the party liable on the mortgage, and not made to be communicated to him or to influence him, will not estop the owner of the mortgage from afterwards denying the authority of such third person to receive payment.

Maguire v. Selden (N. Y.) 379

4. Where one having a lien on goods sets up a claim hostile to the owner's title and wrongfully sells the goods, he cannot set up the lien as a bar to the owner's recovery, in an action of trover, for his illegal act.

Andrews v. Wade (Pa.) 689

5. Where an agent of one party receives money from another, and the transaction is not completed, so that the payer is entitled to recovery, if the agent misleads the payer by giving him to understand that he has not paid over the money, and thereby induces him to sue for its recovery, the agent will be precluded from setting up as a defense that he has paid it over to his principal. Authorities cited.

Read v. Riddle (N. J.) 820

EVIDENCE.

I. PRESUMPTIONS.

II. RECORDS.

III. PAROL.

IV. DECLARATIONS.

V. OPINIONS.

VI. COMPETENCY; WEIGHT.

See APPEAL, III.; CORONER; CRIMINAL LAW, III.; CUSTOM AND USAGE; DEFINITIONS; EQUITY, III.; ESTOPPEL; GIFT; LOST INSTRUMENTS; LOTTERIES; NON-SUIT; RECORDS; SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE, 1; WITNESS.

I. PRESUMPTIONS.

1. The legal presumption of knowledge of the law does not extend to the by-laws and regulations of private corporations.

Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Rosenzweig (Pa.) 712

2. To a presumption of law probability is not necessary, but probability is necessary to a presumption of fact. Authorities cited. Id. 720

II. RECORDS.

3. A discharge in bankruptcy, granted by the same court in which an issue of nul tiel record is on trial, may be proved by the docket entries and original papers. The production of a formal record is not necessary.

Lerian v. Rohr (Md.) 255

III. PAROL.

4. Parol evidence to change written contract, considered.

Dick v. Bovaird (Pa.) 44

5. A defendant who, in an action upon a written contract of sale, alleges as a defense a contemporaneous parol contract which contradicts the terms of the written contract cannot, for the purpose of proving that the parol contract was an inducement to the written contract, testify to the influence of the parol contract upon his mind in inducing him to enter into the written contract.

Cullmans v. Lindsay (Pa.) 747

6. The fact whether or not the parol promise was the inducing cause of the execution of the written contract, especially when the mental purpose is not at the time expressed, is, in general, an inference to be drawn from the facts by the jury. Id.

7. A written agreement may be modified, explained, reformed, or altogether set aside, by parol evidence of an oral promise or undertaking material to the subject-matter of the contract, made by one of the parties at the time of the execution of the writing and which induced the other party to put his name to it. Id.

IV. DECLARATIONS.

8. The declarations as to the location of pain and suffering, made to his physician by a party injured, are competent evidence in an action to recover damages for the injuries.

Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Rosenzweig (Pa.) 712

9. A provision in a will by which the testatrix undertakes to dispose of property as her own, being a declaration in her own favor, is not admissible upon the question of ownership of the property, even in rebuttal of declarations made by her, in her lifetime, against her interest.

Taylor v. Brown (Md.) 846

V. OPINIONS.

10. The question, "What proportion of A's time was devoted to B's business?" asked of one who had abundant opportunity to know, C. R., V. IV.

is not objectionable as calling for an opinion. Rapallo and Andrews, JJ., dissenting.

Johnson v. Myers (N. Y.) 773

11. Where a witness who was asked concerning a passenger's position, and whether he had his elbow out of the window, replied, "I should judge that his elbow was out of the window from the position he held in the car," a motion to strike out was denied on the ground that if the answer seemed an opinion, it was in fact not one; it was at least admissible as an opinion founded upon knowledge. Authorities cited. Id. 779

VI. COMPETENCY; WEIGHT.

12. The rules of evidence are not an exception to the doctrine that all rules and regulations affecting remedies are at all times subject to modification and control by the Legislature. It may be conceded that a law that should make evidence conclusive which was not so necessarily in itself would be void; but such is not the effect of declaring any circumstances or any evidence, however slight, prima facie proof of a fact to be established, leaving the adverse party to rebut and overcome it. Authorities cited.

City of Auburn v. Merchant (N. Y.) 255

13. Photographs, proved to be accurate representations of an actual scene, are admissible in evidence, as appropriate aids to the jury in applying the evidence, whether it relates to persons, things, or places.

People v. Buddensiek (N. Y.) 787

14. A conductor's written statement giving details of an accident immediately after it happened is not admissible in evidence, but the facts must be proved by the conductor or others who witnessed the occurrence. The conductor may use such written statement to refresh his memory.

North Hudson Co. R. Co. v. May (N. J.) 81

15. An assignment of policies of insurance, made by an association or partnership limited, and recorded, is not inadmissible in evidence because it is not a recordable paper.

Shoble v. Bryden (Pa.) 664

16. A judge is not bound to believe a thing merely because a witness swears to it; but he should test the evidence as other men of discernment would test it, believing what he is convinced is true and discarding what he is convinced is false.

Fuller v. Fuller (N. J.) 88

17. Where witnesses testify to contradictory facts, and both appear upon the witness stand equally fair and honest, the court must be governed by the preponderance of the testimony.

Parker's Admr. v. Parker (N. J.) 67

18. Since the scintilla doctrine has been exploded, both in England and in this country, the preliminary question of law for the court is not whether there is literally no evidence, or a mere scintilla, but whether there is any that ought reasonably to satisfy the jury that the fact sought to be proved is established. Authorities cited.

Dwight v. Germania L. Ins. Co. (N. Y.) 535

19. If the proof of a fact is so preponderating that a verdict against it would be set aside as contrary to the evidence, it is the duty of the court to direct a verdict. It is not the rule that if there is a scintilla of evidence in support of a proposition, or if the evidence against it does not amount to a demonstration of its incorrectness, a question is raised which must be left to the jury. Authorities cited. Id.

20. Where the issue is as to whether property undertaken to be disposed of by a will made by a married woman belonged to the testatrix or to her husband, the will is not admissible as evidence against the husband, unless he, with full knowledge, acquiesced in the disposition made by the wife.

Taylor v. Brown (Md.) 846

21. Facts offered in evidence to prove an issue are not themselves in issue, and the judgment is no evidence in regard to them. Authorities cited.

Belden v. State (N. Y.) 183

EXCEPTIONS. See APPEAL, II.; EXECUTIONS AND ADMINISTRATORS, 50.

1. Alleged errors in the charge are not open to review unless excepted to at the trial. A stipulation by counsel, "that a general exception should give the defendant the benefit of a particular exception to any part of the charge," will not avail.

People v. Buddensiek (N. Y.) 787

2. An order of the orphans' court revoking an order theretofore made by it, extending the time for filing exceptions to claims against an insolvent estate, on the ground that such order was inopportunately granted, being discretionary, is not appealable.

King v. Rockhill (N. J.) 886

3. A bill of exceptions is amendable.

Lefferts v. State (N. J.) 883

4. If a judge is at liberty to amend a bill of exceptions after he has sealed it, it might happen that the bill of exceptions when sealed contained the real directions given to the jury, and any misdirection might be avoided by altering the bill of exceptions and inserting the direction which ought to have been given. Authorities cited. Id.

884

EXECUTION.

I. ISSUANCE; WHAT SUBJECT TO.

II. SALE; PRACTICE; DISCOVERY.

See ATTACHMENT.

I. ISSUANCE; WHAT SUBJECT TO.

1. No execution can be issued on a judgment transferred from one county to another after the lien of the original judgment had expired, under the Act of April 16, 1840, without revival.

Beck v. Church (Pa.) 257

2. A return of nulla bona to the writ of feri facias is not a prerequisite to the issuing of the venditioni exponas.

Levan v. Milholland (Pa.) 906

C. B., V. IV.

3. An execution issued upon a judgment after the death of the defendant is not absolutely void, but only voidable; and the sale of land upon such execution vests in the purchaser a good title. Authorities cited. Id. 908

4. A preliminary injunction will issue at the instance of a trustee, restraining a cestui que trust from issuing execution on a judgment in his own name, where there is a dispute as to whether or not the judgment is included in the trust.

Reeser v. Reeser (Pa.) 51

5. Personal property which has passed from its owner by a general assignment is not bound, either actually or constructively, by an execution against the original owner issued subsequent to the assignment.

Wheeler v. Lawson (N. Y.) 186

6. An erroneous judgment or an irregular execution, not void, can be set aside only by direct and appropriate action by parties having an interest in the same, and not by a collateral attack under cover of any other proceedings. Authorities cited.

Levan v. Milholland (Pa.) 903

7. Where the primary design of a plaintiff in issuing an execution is to obtain a lien upon defendant's personal property, and not to sell the same except in the contingency of a subsequent execution being issued, the lien of the first execution will be postponed to the second.

Landis v. Evans (Pa.) 656

8. Where the facts show nothing more than a disposition on the part of the execution plaintiff to treat the family of defendant with due consideration, by not subjecting them to unnecessary inconvenience or annoyance, as where the plaintiff told the sheriff not to go to defendant's house until next day as the house was torn up, the lien of the execution will not be postponed to that of a later one. Id.

II. SALE; PRACTICE; DISCOVERY.

9. A purchaser of real estate at a judgment sale obtains no title until delivery of the deed.

Pearman v. Gould (N. J.) 185

10. A reversal of a judgment after a sheriff's sale of real estate thereon cannot affect the title of the purchaser at such sale.

Levan v. Milholland (Pa.) 906

11. After acknowledgment of a sheriff's deed, the title of the sheriff's vendee cannot be affected by mere irregularities however gross. Authorities cited. Id. 908

12. Where, on a bill filed by one claiming to be owner of personal property levied upon as the property of another, to restrain the sale thereof, property is delivered to complainant under order of the court, with leave to use it on his giving bond to return it when ordered by the court; on a dismissal of the bill the court may order the complainant to return the property or account to a receiver for the value thereof, less loss, if any, by inevitable accident.

Moore v. Diamant (N. J.) 811

18. If, under an order for discovery in aid of execution, an examination of witnesses be held without personal notice to the defendant, the proceedings will be set aside as irregular.

Shannon v. McMurtrie (N. J.)

247

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

I. APPOINTMENT.

II. FOREIGN ADMINISTRATORS.

III. ADMINISTRATORS C. T. A.

IV. ADMINISTRATORS PENDENTE LITE.

V. INVESTMENTS; WASTE; JOINT EXECUTORS.

VI. DEBTS; ASSETS; DISTRIBUTION.

VII. FUNERAL EXPENSES.

VIII. ACCOUNTS.

IX. COMMISSIONS; COMPENSATION.

X. ACTIONS.

See DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION; DEVISE AND LEGACY; WILL.

I. APPOINTMENT.

1. In case of the refusal or incompetency of all the kindred of a decedent, and no creditor applying, the register of the proper county may grant letters of administration to any fit person, in his discretion.

Frick v. Baldwin (Pa.)

676

2. Generally it is the duty of the register, in appointing an administrator, to regard the expressed will of the parties entitled to the estate, whether they reside within or without the State; and, if they are incompetent, the trust should be committed to their nominee, if a fit person; and letters may be revoked on their application, when granted without their assent. Authorities cited. Id.

677

3. It is error to create separate co-ordinate administrations on the same estate. Authorities cited. Id.

4. Although letters may not be void when granted to a nonresident who gives the requisite bond, a nonresident has no right to the administration. Authorities cited. Id.

678

5. A will requested and empowered the survivor or survivors, in case of the death of any of the executors, to appoint other executors,—Held, that the person so appointed takes the trust estate as well as the duties of executorship, in place of his predecessor.

Mulford v. Mulford (N. J.)

589

6. Persons who would be first entitled to letters of administration in case of intestacy are, unless disqualified, entitled to letters of administration pendente lite granted in the case of a contested will.

Appeal of Hoar (Pa.)

908

II. FOREIGN ADMINISTRATORS.

7. Foreign administrators are not liable to be sued in their representative character in the courts of this State.

Durie v. Blauvelt (N. J.)

588

C. R., V. IV.

III. ADMINISTRATORS C. T. A.

8. The right of an administrator with the will annexed to apply to the court for instruction is limited to matters of difficulty in his own administration.

Casper v. Dunn (N. J.)

419

9. It is the duty of an administrator with the will annexed to take charge of and preserve personal property specifically bequeathed in trust, until a trustee is appointed to receive it. Id.

IV. ADMINISTRATORS PENDENTE LITE.

10. Reimbursement. An administrator appointed during a contest over the admission of a will to probate, paying the debts of the estate and costs for which it was liable with money borrowed by him for that purpose, and being liable to be called upon to pay the loan, and out of office and without the means of indemnifying himself, is entitled to the assistance of the court of chancery for that purpose.

Woolley v. Pemberton (N. J.)

89

11. The orphans' court having appointed an administrator pendente lite may order parties before it to pay and deliver over moneys and property of the estate received by them since the death of the testator, to such administrator.

Re Dietz (N. J.)

837

12. The functions of an administrator pendente lite, the litigation having been concluded, are at an end with the exception of accounting for what he has received and paying or delivering over whatever, if anything, may appear to remain in his hands to his successor. Authorities cited.

Woolley v. Pemberton (N. J.)

90

V. INVESTMENTS; WASTE; JOINT EXECUTORS.

13. An executor is not a guarantor for the safety of securities committed to his charge, and does not warrant such safety under all circumstances, and hence is not liable for a breach of trust on the part of his coexecutor in wrongfully taking and converting securities belonging to the estate, lawfully in the sole possession and charge of such coexecutor, unless it appears that he had knowledge of or assented to the acts of his coexecutor, or had notice which should have put him on inquiry.

Wilmerding v. McKesson (N. Y.)

525

14. If the circumstances are such as to create a doubt in respect to the safety of uninvested funds of the estate, an executor is not exonerated from the duty of vigilance in protecting them and seeing that they are properly invested, by the fact that such funds were never in his possession or under his actual control, but were received by and were in the exclusive possession of his coexecutor. Id.

15. Where an executor has knowledge, or by the use of reasonable diligence could have knowledge, that funds of the estate in possession of his coexecutor are not being properly invested, but are being used in the business of a firm of which the coexecutor is a member, with allowance of interest thereon, and he fails to endeavor to have such funds properly invested or to remonstrate with his coexecutor, he is liable for loss arising from such use of the funds; but, under the circumstances, interest with annual rests disallowed. Id.

16. An executor who had taken no part in the administration of the estate, held, under the circumstances of the case, not to be liable for a waste or misappropriation committed by his coexecutor who had assumed all the active duties of the administration; such waste or misappropriation having been committed without the knowledge of the nonacting executor and without suspicion on his part that it would be committed, and it appearing that an account which purported to be a joint executors' account was, in fact, the separate account of the acting executor only.

English v. Newell (N. J.) 551

17. Where two executors were directed, after making some annual payments, to invest and accumulate the surplus, and one of them received the dividends of stock for several years and misapplied them,—Held, the other, not appearing to have any knowledge of such misapplication, was not liable therefor. Authorities cited. Id. 558

18. An executor voluntarily placing funds in the hands of his coexecutor, who misapplies them, will be liable therefor. Authorities cited. Id. 564

19. A devastavit by one of two executors or administrators shall not charge his companion, provided he has not intentionally or otherwise contributed to it; for the testator's having misplaced his confidence in one shall not operate to the prejudice of the other. Authorities cited.

Wilmerding v. McKesson (N. Y.) 528

20. One executor in trust is not answerable for the receipts of the other merely by taking probate, permitting the other to possess the assets, and joining in acts necessary to enable him to administer; he is only answerable by concurring in the application of the assets. Authorities cited.

English v. Newell (N. J.) 553

VI. DEBTS; ASSETS; DISTRIBUTION.

21. The personal estate of a decedent is the primary fund for the payment of his debts; and an heir, or devisee, or a widow has a right to have it so applied in relief of the land which they may take, but this right belongs to them alone. Their alliance or mortgage has no such right. Authorities cited.

Krueger v. Ferry (N. J.) 59

22. On the death of a purchaser who had assumed the payment of an outstanding mortgage, the land, and not the personal estate of the decedent, is primarily liable.

Coudert v. Coudert (N. J.) 182

23. The personal estate of decedent is first liable to discharge his debts. Authorities cited. Id.

24. The surviving wife of a testator has no title to his property, except such as devolves upon her by the will; hence, personal property, v. v. iv.

erty, controlled by the husband in his lifetime in business pursuits, belongs to the executor of his estate, and not to her. Where the widow never attempted to establish the will, and neglected to perfect the transmutation of the estate by lawful process, or take any steps to reduce the property to her lawful possession, but took actual possession and control, and carried on the business till she died, her administrator can have no better title than she had.

Jenks v. Breen (N. J.) 92

25. Declarations made by her just previous to her death are not admissible to establish title to property, unless made in the presence of the person who afterwards disputes the claim, but at the time acquiesced therein. Id.

26. Creditors of her husband's estate having full knowledge of the facts, who neglect to compel an administration of her husband's estate, but instead (by dealing with her) encourage the confusion which has followed, should suffer any loss which may occur from provoking the uncertainty in the ownership of the property, rather than the innocent remaindermen. Id.

27. Her estate should be credited for no more than the amount of debts of her husband which she paid, and his executor should be relieved, to the extent of the proportion of such amount as will be due to the creditors of the wife who were paid by him. Id.

28. An administrator has no power to increase the amount due upon a mortgage on the real estate of his intestate.

Percival v. Gale (N. J.) 384

29. Under the Orphans' Court Act (Rev. p. 785) the court has power to construe a will so far as necessary to determine to whom distribution or payment of the amount shown by an account filed by an executor or administrator cum testamento annexo shall be made.

Hill v. Bloom (N. J.) 845

30. A bond and mortgage, executed by the executor and devisee, to secure a debt against the estate of the testator, on part of the lands of the estate, do not operate to discharge the liability of the estate for the debt.

Alexander v. Bacot (N. J.) 885

VII. FUNERAL EXPENSES.

31. Where an intestate was insolvent, and he and his wife and child were killed in a railroad accident in Texas, the expenses of a physician, of preparing, and transporting, and burying the three bodies, and sodding and curbing the cemetery lot, and erecting a monument over the graves, amounting in all to $1,980, were allowed, against the objection of a judgment creditor of the intestate. The statute (Rev. p. 784, § 58) providing that "judgments entered of record against the decedent in his lifetime, funeral charges and expenses, and the physician's bill during the last sickness, shall have a preference," does not take away the absolute preference which the common law accorded. The statute before the revision stated the above items in reverse order. It was not the intention to give a judgment creditor of an insolvent decedent preference over funeral and physician's expenses.

Sullivan v. Horner (N. J.) 842

82. The rule, as against a creditor, is that no more shall be allowed for a funeral than is necessary, and in considering what is necessary, regard must be had to the degree and condition in life of the decedent. Authorities cited. Id. 844

83. Funeral expenses are preferred before a debt due the United States. Authorities cited. Id.

84. Funeral expenses are, by the common law, to be first paid out of the assets. Authorities cited. Id.

85. It has been held that the claim for funeral expenses is not to be regarded as a debt at all, but as a charge upon the estate. Authorities cited. Id.

86. An executor or administrator, if he have sufficient assets, is liable upon an implied promise to another person who, as an act of duty or necessity, has provided for the funeral expenses of the decedent. Authorities cited. Id.

87. Where a decedent dies away from home, the expense of transporting the body and of a person to accompany it are charges against the estate. Authorities cited. Id. 845

VIII. ACCOUNTS.

88. Where executors jointly settle their final account they are jointly liable for the balance in their hands, as ascertained by the decree of the court thereon. Authorities cited. English v. Newell (N. J.) 552

89. Where two of four executors filed an account, thirteen months after probate, before the estate was in condition for final settlement, which on its face did not state that it was either final or joint, and it was not signed or sworn to by any executor,—Held, notwithstanding the testimony of the surrogate, that it was not intended and did not operate as a joint and final account. Beatty v. Cory Universalist Soc. (N. J.) 881

40. Where a person is both executor of a will and guardian of a minor entitled to a portion of the estate under the will, he holds such minor's portion as executor, and not as guardian, until he has settled his account as executor in the probate court; until which time his sureties on his guardianship bond are not liable thereon for his neglect to pay such portion. Fish's Appeal (Pa.) 727

41. A guardian, who is also administrator of the estate of the deceased father of his wards, and who has paid claims against the estate out of his own funds, cannot charge such payments against the wards and heirs, unless the claims were duly proved against the estate and the personal estate of decedent is inadequate thereto. Flynn v. Walsh (Md.) 155

C. R., V. IV.

42. Administrators cannot maintain a bill to have their coadministrator account for the "good-will" of their intestate's business, continued by their coadministrator with their consent, all the administrators being equally in the wrong for not turning such good-will into cash as an asset of the estate. Fay's Admr. v. Fay (N. J.) 241

43. An administrator who has paid the debts of the estate, to an amount exceeding the personal estate, is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the creditors against the lands of the deceased, and to subject them in the hands of the heirs and devisees to the payment of the money necessary to his reimbursement. Woolley v. Pemberton (N. J.) 89

44. The bill for such purpose is not multifarious because it also seeks a settlement and account for rents applied by the administrator to the payment of debts primarily chargeable upon the personal estate, and to establish the equitable rights of the parties entitled to the lands with regard to such application of the rents, where all such parties are before the court. Id.

45. The failure of an executor to pay over the amount found against him on judicial settlement, a decree requiring payment, service of decree, and an ineffectual attempt to enforce the decree by execution, make out a case of contempt, punishable by the surrogate, under Code of Civil Procedure, § 2555. Re Snyder (N. Y.) 910

46. The question whether an administrator has received and used money for the advantage of the heir in discharging liabilities against the inherited estate, so as to charge the heir therewith, is to be raised and determined in the orphans' court, not in a suit in chancery. Percival v. Gale (N. J.) 834

47. An executor's sale of real estate to pay debts, by order of the orphans' court and duly advertised, may be adjourned by the executor through his attorney or agent; and it is not essential that the executor be present in person at the commencement of the adjournment. Hicks v. Willis (N. J.) 894

48. The orphans' court has power to determine whether one who files exceptions to the account of an executor or administrator is a creditor of the estate. Alexander v. Bacot (N. J.) 836

IX. COMMISSIONS; COMPENSATION.

49. An executor who has discharged his duty with fidelity and economy, and with advantage to the estate, should not be held to have forfeited his right to commissions, merely because he had retained in hand larger balances accrued from the estate than were required to meet expenses; and, it appearing that he had not used such balances for his own private purposes, he should be charged with simple interest only thereon. Front v. Denman (N. J.) 879

50. Where, by the provisions of a will, a trust therein is established, is to be executed by the executor in that capacity, and the trust is inseparable from the executorship, the executor is not entitled to double commissions, first as executor and then as trustee.

Bruere v. Gulick (N. J.) 832

51. The fact that one undertakes to act in the dual capacity of executor and testamentary guardian does not lessen his duty as either. Where the funds of the estate were lost through his dereliction of duty as executor, and thus never came into his hands as guardian, this does not excuse his neglect as guardian; and compensation for his time and trouble in the latter capacity cannot be allowed.

Fish's Appeal (Pa.) 727

X. ACTIONS.

52. An assignment of a mortgage, with verbal directions to the assignee to collect the debt and pay the proceeds to the assignor, if living, or to the brothers and sisters of the assignee, if the assignor is dead, constitutes a special trust. After the death of the assignor the orphans' court has not jurisdiction of the trust, and will not compel the assignee, who is also the assignor's administrator, to account for the proceeds.

Hamburg Bank v. Seidel (Pa.) 921

53. In assumpsit against an administrator, his bond being not in suit, judgment should be entered for the damages laid in the declaration simply, and not for the penalty of the bond.

Neale v. Hermann (Md.) 161

54. A bill to enforce a vendor's lien for the purchase money of land conveyed by one since deceased is properly brought by the vendor's administrator, and the widow and the heirs at law need not be joined; and this, although the heirs had dealt with the vendee directly in reference to the purchase money.

Hubbard's Admr. v. Clark (N. J.) 593

55. The estate of a deceased coturety is liable to make contribution, whether he died before the liability arose or after. Authorities cited.

Wyckoff v. Gardner (N. J.) 181

56. Upon a suit to foreclose a mortgage made by decedent in his lifetime, instituted after his death, where the mortgagee had obtained a judgment for deficiency against decedent's executors in their representative capacity, he cannot maintain an action to set aside a fraudulent conveyance of real estate made by decedent in his lifetime and to subject such real estate to his judgment for deficiency. The reclamation of real estate fraudulently conveyed by decedent must be enforced by the executors, under Laws 1855, chap. 314.

Lichtenberg v. Herdfelder (N. Y.) 887

57. Next of kin, although not interested in the real estate in question, are proper parties defendant to a creditors' bill seeking to charge a claim against an intestate decedent's estate upon lands formerly owned by decedent and alleged to have been fraudulently conveyed by him in his lifetime, the decedent having at his death left only personal property, and such personalty being alleged to be insufficient to settle the estate.

Hunt v. Van Derveer (N. J.) 242

58. A judgment against administrators de bonis non of a deviser, with notice to his devisees for life and in remainder, under section 24 of Act of June 16, 1836 (Purd. Dig. 108, pl. 28), has all the effect of a judgment de terris; and a sheriff's sale under such judgment divests a title under the devise.

Levan v. Mitholland (Pa.) 906

59. In actions against executors or administrators of a decedent who has left real estate, where the plaintiff intends to charge such real estate with the payment of his debts, the widow and heirs or devisees, or the guardians of such as are minors, may be proper parties. Acts Feb. 24, 1834, and June 18, 1836. Id.

60. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 888, subd. 5, a commission to take testimony out of the State can issue in a reference of a disputed claim against a decedent's estate, under Rev. Stat. pt. 2, tit. 8, art. 2, §§ 86, 87.

Paddock v. Kirkham (N. Y.) 127

61. An executor is not, as such, incompetent, under Code Civ. Proc. § 829, to testify, on the probate of the will, as to personal conversations and transactions with the testator, on the ground that he is a party to the proceeding or interested by way of commissions. Authorities cited.

Re Will of Wilson (N. Y.) 770

62. A rule of court, providing that a copy of a book account sued on, duly filed and verified by affidavit, shall be admitted in evidence without further proof, unless the defendant file an affidavit that he believes injustice will be done if the plaintiff be not held to strict proof of his claim, construed, and held to apply to a case where the suit is by an administrator on a decedent's book account.

Mattern v. McDivitt (Pa.) 896

63. Held, on the facts, where a judgment for money only had been recovered against an executrix in an action against her in her representative capacity, and where the plaintiff's claim had been duly presented before suit brought, that the unsuccessful defense of the action was reasonable and proper, and that therefore costs should not have been awarded. (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1835, 1836.)

Johnson v. Myers (N. Y.) 780

64. In a suit by an executor to compel production of a will held by daughter of testatrix and her husband, defendants, having been in the wrong originally, — Held, liable for costs.

Beckett v. Zane (N. J.) 54

65. The surrogate is not necessarily concluded by the uncorroborated affidavit of an executor alleging his inability to comply with a decree; and as the decision of the surrogate imposing punishment for contempt involves conflicting evidence and the exercise of discretion, it will not be reviewed by the court of appeals, where the discretion has not been unfairly exercised.

Es Snyder (N. Y.) 210

EXEMPLARY DAMAGES. See DAMAGES, 5.

EXEMPTION. See TAXES, 1-9.

FALSE IMPRISONMENT.

1. Where a court is called upon to adjudicate upon doubtful questions of law, or to determine as to inferences to be drawn from circumstances reasonably susceptible of different interpretations, and calling for the exercise of the judicial function in their determination, its decision thereon does not render an order or process based upon it (although afterwards vacated or set aside as erroneous) void, or subject the party procuring it to an action for damages.

Fischer v. Langbein (N. Y.) 215

2. Where the jurisdiction of the court is made to depend upon the existence of some fact of which there is an entire absence of proof, it has no authority to act; and if it nevertheless proceeds and entertains jurisdiction of the proceedings, all its acts are void, and afford no justification to the parties instituting them, as against parties injuriously affected thereby. Id.

3. If parties procuring a commitment of another, as for a contempt, are not liable for damages for the original imprisonment, they are not responsible for the subsequent action of the sheriff or of the court in continuing it, although it is subsequently decided on appeal that the commitment was erroneous. Id.

4. A judicial officer is protected from an action for damages or prosecution for false imprisonment whenever in the proceeding he had jurisdiction and enough was shown to call upon him for a decision, even though he erred grossly and even intentionally. Authorities cited. Id. 218

FALSE PRETENSES. See FRAUD AND FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE, I.

Money paid by an heir at law of an intestate, upon false representations, for services supposed to have been rendered in establishing his claim, concerning which there was no ground for litigation,—Held, on the facts, to be recoverable.

Rosenthal v. Pools (Md.) 243

FENCES.

A dedication of land to the public cannot be inferred from the mere removal of a fence by the owner; but if such inference obtained, the dedication would not be effectual without acceptance.

Rozell v. Andrews (N. Y.) 209

FIRE INSURANCE. See INSURANCE, I.

FIRES AND FIRE DEPARTMENTS.

1. A house and lot and horses owned by a city and used in operating the fire department of the city are not liable to taxation. Erie Co. v. City of Erie (Pa.) 305

2. A "detailed" fireman is within the provisions of the charter of Brooklyn permitting removals of members of the fire department by the commissioners only on conviction of an offense specified; and the removal of such fireman without notice or trial is illegal.

People v. Comrs. of Brooklyn (N. Y.) 774

8. The transfer of an employee in the Jersey City Fire Department from his position of engineer to that of stoker, which last position is attended with different duties and decreased pay, is invalid under the Act (P. L. 1885, p. 180) regulating the terms of officers and men in fire departments. Such employee is protected, although he was appointed without filing an application sworn to and having a physician's certificate showing his physical condition, according to the requirements of a rule adopted by a preceding board of fire commissioners.

State v. Jersey City Fire Comrs. (N. J.) 884

4. Act of April 25, 1884 (P. L. 1884, p. 265), providing that certain firemen "shall be entitled to have and receive the same advantages in respect to taxes and jury duty as now are or hereafter may be allowed to the National Guard of this State," without setting out the Acts in relation to the exemption of members of the National Guard, is within the constitutional inhibition that a statute, to make the Acts of a former statute part thereof must insert those sections of a former Act in the new law.

State v. McNeal (N. J.) 147

FISH AND FISHERIES

1. Oysters planted in a defined bed, in tide waters of a bay or arm of the sea which is a common fishery, where there are no oysters growing spontaneously at the time, are the property of the person who plants them, and the taking of them by another is actionable trespass.

Post v. Kreischer (N. Y.) 219

2. Under a grant from the commissioners of the land office of the State, to the owner of the adjacent upland, of land under water in an arm of the sea which is a common fishery, not a natural oyster bed, and within the limits of the port of New York, within which the dumping of dredging material is prohibited except in the construction of piers, etc., reserving to the people of the State the right of entering upon and using the granted premises until appropriated by the grantee by the erection of a dock, etc., the grantee has no right to dump dredging material upon an oyster bed planted by another within said granted premises, unless that constitutes an actual appropriation within the provisions of the grant. Id.

FIXTURES.

1. As between mortgagee and judgment creditors, when a building is erected for a particular purpose, and machinery,—in this case engines, shafting, cranes and blowers used in a furnace for making water and gas pipe—is placed therein and is reasonably necessary therefor, and is in some substantial manner attached to the land or the building, so as to give an idea of permanency and to evince an intention of making a fixture of it, the courts incline to regard such machinery as part of the realty, irrespective of weight or size.

Roddy v. Brick (N. J.) 850

2. Where it is the intention of vendor and vendee that title shall not pass until the consideration money has been paid, attaching the goods to the freehold, however securely, will not deprive the true owner of them. Authorities cited. Id. 851

FORECLOSURE. See MORTGAGE, VI.

FOREIGN ADMINISTRATOR. See EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, II.; ATTACHMENT.

FOREIGN CORPORATIONS. See RAILROAD COMPANIES, 1-5.

FORFEITURE. See CONTRACT, 21; CORPORATIONS, 5-10; INSURANCE.

FORMER ADJUDICATION. See APPEAL, 10.

FORMER JEOPARDY. See CRIMINAL LAW.

FORNICATION.

Words impliedly charging a single woman with degradation of character, and justifying a jury in finding that the intent was to impute to her an act of fornication, are clearly actionable.

Stoke v. Miller (Pa.) 84

FRANCHISES. See CORPORATIONS, 1-10.

FRAUD AND FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES.

I. REPRESENTATIONS; UNDUE INFLUENCE.

II. AGAINST CREDITORS.

See CREDITORS' BILL; EJECTMENT, 2; EQUITY, II.; GIFT, 2; LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, 2, 8.

I. REPRESENTATIONS; UNDUE INFLUENCE.

1. Knowledge of fraud which will enable vendor to rescind a sale is essential to put him to an election of remedies. Hence, the bringing of an action for the contract price of the goods sold, unless it was brought with knowledge of the fraud, is not a binding election or a waiver of the right to rescind.

Equitable Co-operative Foundry Co. v. Hersee (N. Y.) 189

2. Where, in an action to set aside an alleged fraudulent conveyance, the evidence as to the fraudulent intent is not strongly preponderating and the plaintiff has been permitted to introduce, in support of the allegation of fraud, oral testimony as to the making of a chattel mortgage by the grantor in the alleged fraudulent deed, the defendant should be permitted to show what was done with the mortgage after its execution, and the circumstances under which it was given.

Nugent v. Jacobs (N. Y.) 185

3. The payment by the purchaser, of a fair consideration, upon a sale of property, is strong, although not conclusive, evidence of the good faith of the transaction; and requires clear evidence of fraudulent intent to overcome it. Authorities cited. Id. 186

4. If one who has no right induces the owner who is in possession to become his tenant, it will require little proof of fraud, or threats, or imbecility, or some undue influence, to dissolve the relation of landlord and tenant, and put the tenant in the situation in which he was before he was induced to sign the lease. Authorities cited.

Ward v. City of Philadelphia (Pa.) 669

5. An attorney agreed to defend certain suits, the client agreeing to give him half of all the property or money recovered. The suit was lost. A deed procured by the attorney for one half of other property which client owned, representing that it was for his compensation under the agreement, — Held, fraudulent and void.

Cleins v. Englebrecht (N. J.) 69

6. Fraud is not a marketable commodity; the right to avoid or invalidate a contract, upon the ground of fraud, unless the fraud be of such a character as to render it absolutely void, is in some sense personal. The right to avoid for fraud, however, may pass to another, as an incident of a proper subject of assignment. Authorities cited.

Orne v. Kittanning Coal Co. (Pa.) 749

II. AGAINST CREDITORS.

7. Although fraud is never to be presumed, but must always be proved, great latitude is allowed in the admission of testimony that may serve to shed light on the alleged fraudulent transaction.

Snyder v. Berger (Pa.) 764

8. Where facts and circumstances proper for the consideration of the jury on the question of actual fraud are testified to by the witnesses, it is error to withdraw that subject from the consideration of the jury. Id.

9. A mortgage given by the grantee of land and accepted by the grantor, in furtherance of the specific purpose of putting the land out of the reach of the grantor's creditors, will not be enforced.

Rowland v. Martin (Pa.) 760

10. An assignment of policies of fire insurance, to pay a debt of the assignor, is not void as to his creditors because there is no time therein provided for the payment of the debt, or for the return of the surplus to the assignor, and especially where there is no surplus

Sheble v. Bryden (Pa.) 664

11. Where a debtor assigned part of his property in trust to pay certain specified debts, on a feigned issue to try the ownership of the proceeds of the assigned property, to which the trustee is a party, evidence to prove the insolvency of the assignor, for the purpose of avoiding the assignment as to other creditors, is inadmissible. Id.

12. An assignment by an insolvent assignor of a portion of his property, to pay certain specified debts, is not void as to his other creditors, and the latter cannot participate in the distribution of the fund.

Sheble's Appeal (Pa.) 667

18. Although the maker of a chattel mortgage may, as between himself and the mortgagee, be estopped from denying indebtedness purporting to be secured yet on proof that the consideration expressed in the mortgage was greater than the real indebtedness, and that the mortgage was taken to protect the maker's property from his creditors, it may be held fraudulent as to creditors.

Taylor v. Wood (N. J.)

183

14. Where a drayman transferred the property used in his business to one whom he employed as his clerk,—Held, evidence of the clerk that he had paid consideration therefor was not credible in the absence of any evidence to show such payments or the ability of the clerk to make them, and that the property was subject to execution issued by the creditors of the drayman.

Moore v. Diamant (N. J.)

811

15. A transfer or mortgage of the property of an incorporated company, although made when the company was insolvent, and to prefer creditors, is not prohibited by statute nor objectionable in itself.

Vail v. Jameson (N. J.)

838

16. A clause in a lease, providing that the lessor shall have a lien for rent upon all goods and other personal property of lessee, a retail dealer, which then are or may be thereafter put upon the premises, and providing that the lessor may, in case of default in payment of rent, take and sell such goods, etc., in the same manner as in the case of a chattel mortgage, and providing that the lessee may continue in the possession of the goods, and sell the same in the regular course of his business, and buy other goods with the proceeds (although valid as between the parties), is fraudulent on its face as to bona fide creditors of the lessee, and cannot be enforced by the lessor as an equitable lien upon the goods against the rights of an assignee of the lessee for the benefit of creditors, in possession of the goods.

Reynolds v. Ellis (N. Y.)

282

17. If property is not the wife's in equity and of right, before conveying it to her through a third person from her husband, then its acquisition from him is in prejudice of the rights of subletting creditors, and is to such extent invalid. Authorities cited.

Flynn v. Walsh (Md.)

158

18. When the interest of a judgment debtor in land is regularly divested by judicial sale, on a valid bona fide judgment against him, the purchaser at such sale may lawfully subsequently sell and convey such land to the judgment debtor's wife; and her title cannot be overthrown, as in fraud of his creditors, without affirmative proof of such fraud.

Shank v. Simpson (Pa.)

742

FRAUDS, STATUTE OF.

1. Felling and removing trees and bark from time to time, and the construction of log ways, on unseated lands, by a defendant alleging a parol contract for the purchase of land, will not, without more, amount to such open, notorious, exclusive, and continuous possession, or the making of such improvements thereon, as will take the case out of the Statute of Frauds.

Miller v. Zufall (Pa.)

490

2. A contract for the sale of growing timber to be taken off by the purchaser, without specification as to time, is an interest in land, within the meaning of the Statute of Frauds. Authorities cited. Id.

3. Proof to establish a parol contract should be plain and clear, and preclude doubt or hesitation as to the contract and the equities arising thereunder. Authorities cited. Id.

4. To take a case of a parol sale out of the Statute of Frauds, the vendee must take actual, open, notorious, exclusive and continuous possession of the premises in pursuance of the contract; and when the whole purchase money has not been paid, he must have made such improvements thereon as cannot be reasonably compensated for in damages. Authorities cited. Id.

5. A parol agreement to extend the time of payment of a mortgage for one year is good.

Measurall v. Pearce (N. J.)

144

FUNERAL EXPENSES. See EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, VII.

GAMING. See LOTTERIES.

Speculations in stocks and securities on margins are wagers within the Act to prevent gaming (Rev. p. 458), and therefore unlawful; and securities given to secure a broker against losses therein are void. Equity has jurisdiction on a bill filed against an assignee, taking notes and mortgages given as such securities with notice of such illegality, to order such securities to be delivered up and canceled, and to grant an injunction restraining defendants from parting with them.

Tantum v. Arnold (N. J.)

421

GARNISHMENT. See ATTACHMENT.

GAS COMPANIES.

1. Plaintiff company, having authority to furnish gas of any quality, sought to restrain defendant company from manufacturing and supplying gas, on the ground that by defendant's charter it was required under a certain penalty to furnish gas of a certain quality, and that the gas furnished by it was not of such quality. Held, that plaintiff was not entitled to an injunction, because such injunction would be equivalent to forfeiting defendant's charter, which can only be done by a proceeding instituted directly for that purpose by the government.

Jersey City Gaslight Co. v. Consumers Gas Co. (N. J.)

880

2. The expense incurred by a gas company in removing and relaying its pipes, consequent upon the construction of a sewer, is a proper item of expense to be included in the assessment for the sewer, where a city ordinance imposed the duty of such removal and relaying upon the company, and provided for the insertion of the expense thereof in the assessment.

Re Johnson (N. Y.)

856

3. In a lease which declares that the land shall be occupied and worked for petroleum, rock, or carbon oil, and shall not be occupied or used for any other purpose whatsoever; and that if no oil is found in paying quantities within four years, the lease shall be null and void "oil" is not synonymous with "gas," and accordingly the production of gas alone will not satisfy the conditions of the lease.

Truby v. Palmer (Pa.)

925

GENERAL DENIAL. See TROVER AND CONVERSION, 2.

GIFT.

1. Where the guardian of an estate, descended to a minor daughter from her mother, pays over the accumulated income to her father who is entitled to it as tenant by the courtesy, and the father, upon receiving it and often afterward until his death, declares to the guardian and others that the money is the daughter's, his declarations are competent to prove an executed gift of the money to the daughter, in an action of assumpsit brought by her after attaining her majority to recover it from his executrix.

Buck v. Henderson (Pa.)

697

2. Where a son enjoyed the confidence of his aged mother and exercised great influence over her, and confidential relations existed between them, the burden of proof is on such son to show, aside from the formal way by which a gift passed to his credit, that it was in fact a gift.

Parker's Admr. v. Parker (N. J.)

67

GOOD WILL. See EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, 44; PARTNERSHIP, 8-5.

GUARDIAN AND WARD.

1. Where a person is both executor of a will and guardian of a minor entitled to a portion of the estate under the will, he holds such minor's portion as executor, and not as guardian, until he has settled his account as executor in the probate court; until which time his sureties on his guardianship bond are not liable thereon for his neglect to pay such portion.

Fish's Appeal (Pa.)

727

2. The fact that one undertakes to act in the dual capacity of executor and testamentary guardian does not lessen his duty as either. Where the funds of the estate were lost through his dereliction of duty as executor and thus never came into his hands as guardian, this does not excuse his neglect as guardian; and compensation for his time and trouble in the latter capacity cannot be allowed. Id.

3. A guardian, who is also administrator of the estate of the deceased father of his wards, and who has paid claims against the estate out of his own funds, cannot charge such payments against the wards and heirs, unless the claims were duly proved against the estate and the personal estate of decedent is inadequate thereto.

Flynn v. Walsh (Md.)

155

4. It is no defense to a guardian, in accounting to his ward, that he invested part of the ward's estate in real estate at the request of the ward, but without the previous sanction of the court.

Osborne v. Munroe (N. J.)

248

5. A guardian who changes a first mortgage belonging to his ward's estate, to a second mortgage on the same premises, although (by part payment of the first mortgage) the amount of indebtedness upon the premises may not be changed, is yet liable to his ward for the amount of the second mortgage; the mortgaged premises having, on foreclosure, brought only enough to cover the amount remaining due on the first mortgage. Id.

6. A guardian cannot charge his wards with advancements, made by him before his appointment, to their mother, out of his own funds.

Flynn v. Walsh (Md.)

155

7. A sheriff's return, that he served the summons in a case on the guardian of a minor, cannot be contradicted in a collateral action.

Levan v. Milholland (Pa.)

906

8. By virtue of the Act of Maryland of 1798, chap. 101, subchap. 12, § 10, the Orphans' Court of this District was empowered to order a sale by a guardian of a part of his ward's real estate for the latter's maintenance and education, and this Act was not repealed by Act of Congress of March 3, 1843.

Thaw v. Ritchie (D. C.)

597

9. The Act of 1798 does not exclude the sale of trust estates, where the trust is purely personal to the infant; for the trust would cease at the moment of the transfer, and the purchaser would take the legal title by operation of the Statute of Uses. Id.

10. There is nothing in the Act of 1798, providing for a sale by the guardian for the ward's maintenance, which excludes future interests from being sold equally with estates in possession. Id.

11. No particular form of application, or allegation, or proof, is prescribed as necessary to give the court jurisdiction under the Act of 1798. It is sufficient that it is satisfied, in however informal a manner, that the sale is advantageous to the ward, with reference to his maintenance and education; and there need be no record entered of the evidence upon which it decides that fact. A purchaser is not bound to look beyond the decree. Id.

12. The "approval" of the decree of the orphans' court, provided by the Act of 1798, to be made by the chancellor, is a revisory and not an appellate proceeding; and as the statute provides no formalities by which the chancellor is to take cognizance of the proceedings in the orphans' court, that is to be adjusted by the practice of the court. Id.

13. Without statutory authority, a court of chancery has no power to convert the real estate of an infant into money. Authorities cited. Id.

598

14. Where at a guardian's sale fifty-two acres of woodland were sold by mistake for two hundred acres, and the mistake discovered two years thereafter,—Held, the purchasers were entitled to a decree rescinding the sale and directing the guardian to pay back the money.

Appeal of Johnson (Pa.)

892

15. A surety on a guardian's bond may, on his petition for review, alleging, on oath, errors in such guardian's account, have a rehearing, within the five years mentioned in the Act of October 13, 1840, of so much of the account as in such petition is alleged to be error.

Fish's Appeal (Pa.)

727

HABEAS CORPUS.

Civil courts can relieve a person from imprisonment under order of a court-martial only by writ of habeas corpus, and then only when it is made apparent that it proceeds without jurisdiction. If there is no restraint there is no right in the civil court to interfere. Authorities cited.

United States v. Whitney (D. C.)

154

HIGHWAYS. See WAYS.

HOMESTEAD.

1. A widow in possession under Rev. 820, § 2, giving her the right to hold her husband's homestead until her dower is assigned, is not a tenant for life, and is not bound to keep down interest on an incumbrance and to pay taxes and to make necessary annual repairs.

Spinning v. Spinning (N. J.)

55

2. A widow while in possession is bound to pay taxes and keep premises in repair. Authorities cited.

Id.

HOMICIDE. See CORONER.

1. Where, during a furious struggle, the accused plunged a knife into the body of the deceased, then a scuffle ensued, and the accused held his antagonist on the floor and choked him until he was helpless or insensible, and afterwards the accused went some distance for an ax and, returning, mutilated the body,—Held, there was sufficient evidence to support a conviction of murder in the first degree, it appearing that, although the blow with the knife might have been given in the heat of the affray without a purpose to kill, yet the procuring of the ax and the subsequent conduct showed premeditation and design to kill, and there was some medical testimony that death resulted from the blows of the ax.

People v. Beckwith (N. Y.)

539

2. For the existence of the deliberation required to constitute the statutory crime of murder in the first degree the time need not be long and may be short. If it furnishes room and opportunity for reflection, and the facts show that such reflection existed, and the mind was busy with its design, and made the choice with full chance to choose otherwise, the condition of the statute is fulfilled.

Id.

3. To constitute manslaughter there must have been no design to kill. If such design be present, the offense is murder in one of its degrees.

Id.

4. After evidence has been given by a defendant, tending to show that the homicide was committed in self-defense, he may follow it by proof of the general reputation of the deceased for quarrelsomeness and violence; but evidence of specific acts of violence towards third persons is inadmissible.

People v. Druss (N. Y.)

770

C. R., V. IV.

5. Where defendant was under arrest for the murder of her husband, and a justice of the peace held several conversations with her, in which he told her that three of her children had told all about the crime, "and she might as well tell us, too," but did not add that it would be better for her,—Held, her confession was voluntary and admissible. Id.

6. Where, after finding the body of one killed by violence, a person was arrested, without warrant, as the suspected murderer, taken before a coroner's inquest, informed that he was charged with the murder, and the alleged instrument of death was produced, and he was examined on oath before the coroner as to circumstances tending to connect him with the crime, and he denied all knowledge of the crime,—the testimony thus given was not a voluntary confession, and (it not appearing that he was informed of his rights or that he was not bound to answer questions tending to criminate him) evidence thereof was not admissible upon the prisoner's trial for the murder, and its admission was reversible error. Ruger, Ch. J., and Earl, J., dissenting, on the ground that it did not appear that he was not informed of his right to refuse to testify or that objection had been made as to that point on the trial.

People v. Mondon (N. Y.)

357

7. An indictment for manslaughter by culpable negligence in the construction of a building, under Penal Code, §§ 193-195, which substantially complies with the provisions of the sections and with § 284 of the Code of Crim. Proc., is sufficient.

People v. Buddensiek (N. Y.)

787

8. In the trial of an indictment for causing the death of a human being by culpable negligence in the construction of a building, reports made by the official examiner and inspectors of buildings, and photographs of the building, shown to be accurate representations, are admissible in evidence; and for the purpose of confirming the opinion of the witnesses and to enable the jurors to ascertain the material used, a piece of brick and mortar from the building is admissible in evidence. Id.

HUSBAND AND WIFE.

I. MARRIAGE.

II. RIGHTS OF HUSBAND.

III. OF WIFE; CONTRACTS; RIGHTS; LIABILITIES.

IV. ACTIONS; TORTS.

V. DIVORCE; ALIMONY; SUPPORT.

See DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION, 11-15; WITNESS, 7.

I. MARRIAGE.

1. When a woman's claim for widow's exemption out of a decedent's estate rests entirely upon cohabitation and reputation, and where her prior cohabitation and reputation as the wife of a man still living is proved by evidence of the same general character, no presumption of marriage with the decedent will arise.

Reading F. Ins. & Trust Co. v. Reigel (Pa.)

Digitized by Google 678

2. Without proof of subsequent actual marriage it will not be presumed, from continued cohabitation and reputation, that a relation illicit in the beginning has been changed to that of husband and wife. Authorities cited. Id. 680

3. Where a man, guilty of illicit intercourse with a woman, supposing her to be pregnant as the result thereof, furnishes her with the means of producing an abortion, and criminal proceedings are lawfully instituted against him for the latter offense, and, being under arrest, he chooses, as a means of release, to marry the woman, the constraint under which he enters into the marriage constitutes no ground for annulling it.

Frost v. Frost (N. J.)

423

II. RIGHTS OF HUSBAND.

4. Real estate acquired before the Code, by the husband, with money furnished by his wife, with her consent, and held in his name for many years, will be considered his, and not as held by him in trust for the wife.

Rynn v. Walsh (Md.)

155

5. A bona fide purchaser of land from a married woman, with knowledge that it was acquired by her from her husband, and that a suit is pending against the husband as surety on a guardian's bond, is sufficiently affected with notice to render the property in his hands liable for the amount of the judgment subsequently recovered in such suit, after the exhaustion of other property improperly acquired from her husband remaining in the hands of the wife. Id.

6. If property is not the wife's in equity and of right, before conveyances to her through a third person from her husband, then its acquisition from him is in prejudice of the rights of subsisting creditors, and is to such extent invalid. Authorities cited. Id.

158

7. Equity has jurisdiction of a bill by a widow against the estate of her deceased husband to recover money belonging to her which he received under an express agreement between her and him that he would hold the same in trust for her; she has no remedy at law.

Drost v. Corle (N. J.)

862

8. There must be an express promise to repay, to create a liability on the part of a husband for money belonging to his wife, appropriated by him with her consent.

Taylor v. Brown (Md.)

846

9. If money arising from real estate of a married woman is paid to her husband with her knowledge, and she recognizes it as belonging to him, and it is deposited in a bank in their joint names, payable to either of them or to the survivor; then, in the absence of an express promise by the husband to treat the money as the wife's separate estate, he has the right, on her death, to draw it from the bank. Id.

III. OF WIFE; CONTRACTS; RIGHTS; LIABILITIES.

10. It is essential to recovery against a C. R., V. IV.

married woman, in an action at law, by force of the statute of 1862, that she be shown to have a separate estate chargeable in equity with the debt contracted by her.

Condon v. Barr (N. J.)

557

11. Where a feme covert has no separate estate her contract does not create an obligation which is enforceable in equity, and therefore is not such a consideration as will support her express promise to pay, made after the death of her husband. Id.

12. At common law the promise of a feme covert could not be enforced against her, unless she had a separate estate. No personal decree could be made against her, but her contract operated as an appointment out of her separate estate. Authorities cited. Id.

559

13. The promise of a married woman made during coverture does not furnish a consideration upon which her promise to pay the same debt, made after the death of her husband, can be sustained. Authorities cited. Id.

14. A wife's deed or mortgage of her husband's lands cannot stand independently of the deed of her husband, when not executed in aid thereof; nor can she by joining with her husband in a deed of lands to a stranger, in which she has a contingent right of dower, but in which the husband has no present interest, bar her contingent right of dower. Authorities cited.

Hinchliffe v. Shea (N. Y.)

215

15. A certificate of the separate acknowledgment of a married woman, although omitting to state that she delivered, as well as signed and sealed, the deed without compulsion, etc., is not invalid, if otherwise in the usual form; it is a substantial compliance with the statute, and therefore sufficient.

Gable v. Brietch (Pa.)

453

16. The statute limiting the time within which a writ of error may be sued out does not apply to a married woman.

Fenn v. Early (Pa.)

288

17. To authorize judgment for want of an affidavit of defense against a married woman, for work or labor done or money expended in relation to her real estate, the copy of book entries filed must contain or be accompanied by an averment that the debt was contracted for an act done that was necessary for the use, enjoyment, or preservation of the wife's property. Id.

18. A judgment against a married woman which does not affirmatively show her liability on a contract within the statute is void; and a sheriff's sale of her property on execution issued thereon will confer no title to the purchaser. Authorities cited. Id.

280

19. To sustain a common-law action against a husband and wife, with the view of charging the separate estate of the wife, facts must be averred in the narr. and proved on the trial sufficient to bring the case within the Act. It is not sufficient that a cause of action against the wife be proved; it must also be set forth in the declaration. Authorities cited. Id.

20. Where the evidence shows a wrongful conversion of trust funds by a married woman, her estate is liable in damages, although the trust funds be not identified as a part of her estate. There was no evidence of coercion by the husband.

Appeal of Franklin (Pa.) 322

21. A judgment given by a married woman, when covert, before she had applied for the benefit of the Act of April 8, 1872, which secures to a married woman her separate earnings, is not a binding obligation upon her, yet she has a right to pay it, and, having paid interest upon it, cannot recover it back.

Zurn v. Noedel (Pa.) 653

22. A note given by a feme covert, after having applied for the benefit of the Act of April 8, 1872, for money borrowed to enable her to engage in business, is valid as against her. Id.

23. The law regards the act of the wife in joining in the deed or mortgage of her husband as to his land, not as an alienation of the estate, but as a renunciation of her inchoate right of dower, in and of the title or interest created by his conveyance; it follows, therefore, that her act becomes a nullity wherever the interest or title to which the renunciation is incident is itself defeated. Authorities cited.

Hinchliffe v. Shea (N. Y.) 215

24. In a feigned issue to establish the consideration of a married woman's judgment note, evidence that, on the day the note was given by the defendant to the plaintiff, the plaintiff executed to her a deed of land, in which he recited a consideration for a greater sum than the judgment note, raises a presumption that the note was for the purchase money of the land; and this presumption, in the absence of evidence tending to connect the note with any other transaction, is sufficient to sustain a verdict for the plaintiff.

Hamilton v. Baum (Pa.) 708

25. A married woman's judgment note for the purchase money of land is valid, although it contains no recital of the consideration. Parol evidence of the consideration is admissible. Id.

26. A feme covert may, without the concurrence of her husband, execute any kind of power, whether given to her when single or married. Authorities cited.

Deffenbaugh v. Harris (Pa.) 463

27. A married woman, to recover as her separate property, under the Code, money due for services, must show that she rendered the services as an independent person, on her own account, and not conjointly with her husband or for his benefit.

Neale v. Hermanns (Md.) 161

28. A wife must bring herself clearly within the provisions of the Code, art. 45, § 7, to entitle her, as a feme sole trader, to hold money protected from the debts of her husband.

Flynn v. Walsh (Md.) 155

Cited in Neale v. Hermanns (Md.) 163

29. Where the issue is as to whether property, undertaken to be disposed of by a will made by a married woman, belonged to the O. R., V. IV.

testatrix or to her husband, the will is not admissible as evidence against the husband, unless he, with full knowledge, acquiesced in the disposition made by the wife.

Taylor v. Brown (Md.) 346

IV. ACTIONS; TORTS.

30. At common law a husband and wife are jointly liable in an action of damages for the torts of the wife; but the death of the wife terminates the liability of the husband. If the husband dies she may be sued alone, as if she had been feme sole when the tort was committed. Authorities cited.

Appeal of Franklin (Pa.) 324

31. While his presence furnishes evidence and raises the presumption of his direction, it may be rebutted by competent evidence; and in the absence of evidence that he was present there is no presumption. Authorities cited. Id.

32. A married woman is personally liable for a tort committed by her, unless her husband was both personally present and directed the doing of it at the time. If directed by him, he alone is liable. Authorities cited. Id.

33. In a suit by a married woman through her husband as her next friend, the latter, being a nominal party to the suit only, is a competent witness for the plaintiff.

Neale v. Hermanns (Md.) 161

V. DIVORCE; ALIMONY; SUPPORT.

34. To justify a finding that adultery is proved, the court should be satisfied that witnesses swearing to facts showing guilt are honest and are not mistaken.

Fuller v. Fuller (N. J.) 86

35. In a suit for divorce on the ground of adultery committed by the wife, she may set up by way of recrimination cruel treatment on the part of the husband.

Reading v. Reading (N. J.) 134

36. In a suit for divorce upon the ground of husband's adultery, where defendant denies the charge upon direct examination, he may be cross examined about whatever is unhusbandlike, or looks like cruelty, unfaithfulness, or shows an alienation of affection or estrangement on his part, provided it occurred at or about the time of the alleged adultery, and within a reasonable time before the commencement of the suit.

Pullen v. Pullen (N. J.) 71

37. In divorce proceedings, when the evidence shows that the greatly preponderating degree of blame and misbehavior was on the part of the wife, even though the husband was not entirely free from blame, such fault does not constitute a legal bar to his obtaining a divorce; and if the wife's treatment is such as to render his condition intolerable and life burdensome, a divorce should be granted.

Bay's Appeal (Pa.) 281

38. The taking and retention, by a husband, of their engagement ring from his wife, is, in connection with other facts, as the making of foul charges against her, strong proof of a determination to desert her.

McKean v. McKean (N. J.) 184

39. Under Code, § 1769, the court is authorized from time to time to make and modify orders requiring the husband to pay any money necessary to enable the wife to carry on or defend the action. The allowance thus authorized looks to the future. In this case an additional allowance granted at special term, to pay expenses theretofore incurred, in the absence of an averment that any allowance was needed to oppose the plaintiff's motion for judgment, was reversed. The decision is confined to the precise facts of the case, for the court had no doubt that the allowance to the wife, during the pendency of the action, for some past expenses, might be authorized if it were shown that its payment were necessary to enable her to further carry on the action or her defense thereto. Danforth, J., dissenting.

Beadleston v. Beadleston (N. Y.) 587

40. Where the testimony fully warranted the jury in finding as facts that the respondent had rendered the condition of the libellant intolerable and his life burdensome, and that she was possessed of no separate estate when the marriage took place, and was then a widow well advanced toward middle life, and that she had agreed before marriage that her share in the libellant's estate, in case of his death, should be $8,000 in lieu of dower, his estate being productive property amounting to $100,000,—Held, that an allowance of $800 per annum for alimony, and $500 for costs and expenses of respondent in conducting her defense, was sufficient.

Bay's Appeal (Pa.) 281

41. A divorced wife, however innocent, has no right to a distributive share in the personal estate of her divorced husband, upon his death intestate. Hence, a divorced wife, who had been divorced on her own application (for the adultery of her husband), and who had released all interest in her former husband's real estate, is not entitled to notice of proceedings to probate his will.

Re Estate of Ensign (N. Y.) 376

42. No intention to permit an innocent divorced wife to share in the personal estate of her divorced husband, on his death intestate, is to be inferred from the terms of 2 Rev. Stat. p. 146, § 48, providing that "a wife being a defendant in a suit for a divorce brought by her husband, and convicted of adultery, shall not be entitled to dower in her husband's real estate, or any part thereof, nor to any distributive share in his personal estate."

Id.

43. Suit was brought on a bond to the Commonwealth to secure judgment entered for the amount then due for support of a wife and children, which was paid and satisfaction entered. Subsequent sums accruing, a second suit was brought on the bond. The court refused to allow judgment to be entered, but, on application, struck off the satisfaction, opened the judgment and ordered that judgment should be entered for the penalty, on discontinuance of the second suit and payment of its costs. E were irregular, Kiehl v. Comm

IMPRISONMENT; E

IMPROVEMENT AND TENATION, 11.

INDICTMENT AND DISORDERLY LAW, II.; LIQUORS, 9

INFANTS. NEGLIGENCE CHILD.

INJUNCTION:

I. WHEN LI

II. PRACTICE

See PROHIBITION

I

1. Plaintiff cannot furnish gas, of a defendant company supplying gas, on a charter it is a penalty to furnish that the gas furnished is of quality. Held, that an injunction would be enjoined against defendant's charter. A proceeding in equity proposed by the government. Jersey City Gas Co. v. Jersey City (N. J.)

2. A complaint in equity for an injunction depends upon a showing of injury. Authorities cited.

3. An injunction granted under the Act of April 18, 1875, for the prohibition from operation from a case of nonpayment of a corporation has only a temporary effect. Re Future Elec.

Re New York Elec.

4. Under the provisions of the court of chancery, or refuse an injunction continuing to pay the tax assessed in such a case for such an injunction is satisfied in the wrong.

State v. American

5. A municipality has the right of supervision of the public of the streets or injury to the public of the streets. Jersey City v. C.

6. A party who entitled to an injunction to restrain a nuisance, as the unlawful occupation of the street by a railroad, without proving the amount of damage.

Pa. R. R. Co. v. Mink (Pa.)

276

7. One who has his dwelling fronting on a street unlawfully occupied by a railroad company, held to be specially injured, and entitled to an injunction restraining the occupation of the street without power expressly given or necessarily implied in the franchises of the company.

Id.

8. Equity has jurisdiction to compel an accounting and discovery in aid thereof, and to restrain the manufacture of other than a patent article in violation of the terms of a written contract.

Bovaird v. Dick (Pa.)

40

9. A preliminary injunction will issue at the instance of a trustee, restraining a cestui que trust from issuing execution on a judgment in his own name, where there is a dispute as to whether or not the judgment is included in the trust.

Reeser v. Reeser (Pa.)

51

II. PRACTICE; DAMAGES; BONDS.

10. Where there is no dispute as to the right to damages because of an injunction, and there is some evidence that damages were sustained, the court of appeals, having nothing to do with the weight or cogency of evidence, will not interfere with the result reached in the lower court.

Lyon v. Hersey (N. Y.)

126

11. When a temporary injunction to restrain eviction under ejectment, granted on a bill not stating that action had proceeded to judgment, is continued after it appears from the answer that judgment had been obtained in said action, complainant must give bond to cover damages from commencement of injunction suit.

Snyder v. Seeman (N. J.)

54

12. In an action for damages on a bond, in proceedings to restrain tearing down an alleged party wall preparatory to building a new building, evidence is admissible, to disprove damages, that the new building erected beside the old wall could have been erected without any detention, with the old wall standing.

Sensenig v. Parry (Pa.)

48

13. Counsel fees are not recoverable as legal damages in an action on a bond conditioned to indemnify for all damage that may be sustained.

Id.

INSANE PERSONS.

1. The evidence certified being that a deaf mute was incapable of understanding business or of receiving any communication on the subject, an inquisition finding her to be "of sound mind and capable of controlling her property by the selection of a proper person to act for her," set aside.

Re Perrine (N. J.)

63

2. Whether deaf mutes are to be treated judicially as persons mentally incompetent to manage their affairs must depend upon the evidence they are able to give of the possession of capacity. Authorities cited.

Id.

C. R., v. IV.

3. To warrant the court in interfering in behalf of one to protect him against consequences of his own mental incompetency, it is not necessary that he should be an idiot or a lunatic; it is enough if from any cause, whether by age, disease, affliction, or intemperance, he has become incapable of managing his own affairs. Authorities cited.

Id.

4. A man deaf and dumb from his birth is, in presumption of law, an idiot. Authorities cited.

Id.

5. A person born deaf and dumb but not blind is not an idiot. Authorities cited.

Id.

6. Upon a commission it is not necessary to establish lunacy, but it is sufficient that the party is incapable of managing his own affairs. Authorities cited.

Id.

INSOLVENCY. See ASSIGNMENT FOR BENEFIT OF CREDITORS; BANKRUPTCY.

1. A lender who, before paying over money on a borrower's discounted note, discovers that the borrower is insolvent, may tender back the note and refuse payment of the money. The assignee of the borrower has no rights superior to the borrower.

Lancaster Co. Nat. Bank v. Huer (Pa.) 673

2. An order of the orphans' court revoking an order theretofore made by it, extending the time for filing exceptions against an insolvent estate, on the ground that such order was inopportune granted, being discretionary, is not appealable.

King v. Rockhill (N. J.)

836

3. It is not essential to the validity of a discharge in insolvency by the circuit court that a formal order should be written out and signed by the judge at the time the discharge is ordered.

Lerian v. Rohe (Md.)

255

4. A discharge in bankruptcy, granted by the same court in which an issue of nulla record is on trial, may be proved by the docket entries, and original papers. The production of a formal record is not necessary.

Id.

5. A defendant convicted, sentenced, and in custody, in proceedings for fornication and bastardy, may, after three months' imprisonment, obtain his discharge under the insolvent laws, without complying with any part of the sentence.

Commonwealth v. Cook (Pa.)

710

6. A sheriff who, in answer to a rule to bring in the body of a defendant, returns that he discharged the defendant from custody upon his giving bond and complying with the requirements of the Insolvent Debtors' Act, will not be amerced.

Lewis v. Haskell (N. J.)

885

INSURANCE.

I. FIRE.

II. LIFE.

I. FIRE.

1. Where the insured applied through a broker to an agent for a policy of fire insurance, and the agent, upon receiving the policy delivers it, with several others for the insured, to the broker, charges the broker in a running account with the premium, receives from him at once partial payment, and the balance of the premium after a fire has occurred, the company cannot, in an action on the policy, set up as a defense the failure of the insured to comply with the condition relating to payment of premium.

Elkins v. Susquehanna Mut. F. Ins. Co. (Pa.) 761

2. An agent of an insurance company who is authorized to receive applications for insurance, to forward the applications to the company, to deliver the policies to the insured and to collect the premiums from him, and who is responsible to the company for the payment of the premiums or the return of the policies to the company, has power to waive a condition in a policy that the company shall not be liable until the premium is actually paid. Id.

8. Where a party holds a policy of insurance in one company at the time of loss, no liability can attach against another company on a policy issued before the fire and retained by the agent until after the loss, to be substituted for the first policy, but of which the assured had no knowledge; and this, although the assured accepted the substituted policy after the loss, and gave up to the other one for cancellation.

Lancashire Ins. Co. v. Nill (Pa.) 294

4. In an action of debt upon a policy of fire insurance, where the defendant filed a plea of non est factum, the plaintiff must offer evidence of the execution of the policy sued upon. Evidence that it was counter-signed by parties representing themselves to be agents and in possession of the policy is not sufficient. Id.

5. A vendor held a policy of insurance on the dwelling-house standing on the premises sold; she took a mortgage for a part of the purchase money which was in excess of the amount due on the policy; she did not assign the policy at the time of the conveyance nor until after the house was burned; the company tendered the amount due on the mortgage, and demanded an assignment of it, which was refused. Held, that the company was entitled to the mortgage. Held, also, that in order to carry costs it was not necessary that the company should tender the whole amount of the unpaid purchase money.

Boundbrook Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Nelson (N. J.) 187

6. An assignment of policies of fire insurance, to pay a debt of the assignor, is not void as to his creditors because there is no time therein provided for the payment of the debt, or for the return of the surplus to the assignor, and especially where there is no surplus. Id.

Sheble v. Bryden (Pa.) 664

7. Where a fire insurance company which has insured mortgaged premises purchases and takes an assignment of a first mortgage thereon, within a year after a loss on the premises by fire, it cannot, in a suit by a purchaser of the premises under a second C. R., V. IV.

mortgage, brought to have the first mortgage declared paid and removed as a cloud upon his title, set up as a defense that suit was not brought upon the policy within a year, as limited therein, the company having taken the place of the holder of the first mortgage whose duty it was to recover the money due on the policy to the amount of his mortgage.

Pearman v. Gould (N. J.) 185

8. Where a policy is obtained by the owner of the equity of redemption, with an agreement with the first mortgagee that the money collected by him should go in satisfaction of his mortgage, the money paid by the insurance company on taking an assignment of the first mortgage must be regarded as paid on account of the insurance; and the company is not entitled to subrogation to the rights of the first mortgagee. Id.

9. An execution sale, subsequently declared void and set aside, is not within a provision of a policy against sales "under a levy under execution." Id.

10. A provision in a policy, that it shall be void upon "the passing or entry of a decree of foreclosure," refers to a decree of strict foreclosure, which is an alienation; not to a decree for sale in a suit for foreclosure, which is not an alienation. Id.

11. Where a mortgagor had obtained a policy and assigned it to the mortgagee, but, before loss, had sold the property subject to the mortgage which the purchaser had assumed to pay, and the purchaser had taken no assignment of his grantor's interest in the policy, subrogation was decreed. Authorities cited. Id. 137

12. Where a building was insured in the name of the mortgagee, for his own security and that of the mortgagor, the latter paying the premium, the insurance company is not on payment entitled to subrogation to mortgagee's rights. Authorities cited. Id.

13. Where mortgagee insures for his own benefit his interest as mortgagee, the insurance company on paying the loss is entitled to subrogation to his rights as mortgagee. Authorities cited. Id.

14. Keeping a barrel of crude petroleum in a shed adjoining a foundry, to supply, through a connecting pipe five or six feet long, fuel to a steam boiler within the foundry, such use not being a necessary incident to the business, is a breach of a condition in the fire insurance policy, which stipulates that the policy shall become void "if in said premises there be kept petroleum or any chemical oils, without written permission in this policy (except the use of refined coal, kerosene, or other carbon oil for lights, if the same be drawn and the lamps filled by daylight)." Id.

White v. Western Assur. Co. (Pa.) 723

15. Actual knowledge on the part of the owner of insured premises, that the neighboring construction of a railroad will increase the risk, must be proved in order to charge him with the duty to give the insurance company notice under a condition in the policy requiring the insured to give notice of any change or alteration increasing the risk or hazard.

Rife v. Lebanon Mut. Ins. Co. (Pa.) 688

16. In an action of covenant against the insurance company on the policy, for a loss originating from sparks of a locomotive passing on the railroad, it is error to submit to the jury a question whether or not, according to their judgment under the evidence, the risk was so increased as to increase the rate. The question should be whether from all the facts in the case the plaintiff knew that it was so increased. Id.

II. LIFE.

17. Parties to an insurance contract have the right to insert therein such lawful conditions as they may agree upon, or which they may consider necessary and proper to protect their interests, which, when made, must be construed and enforced according to the expressed intent of the parties.

Dwight v. Germania L. Ins. Co. (N. Y.) 529

18. Where the insured, in his application, answered "no" to the question whether he was then or had been engaged in or connected with the manufacture or sale of wine, beer, or intoxicating liquors, and the evidence showed that he had kept a hotel wherein no bar was maintained, but where he had a supply of wines and liquors; that he had licenses and permits to carry on the business of selling beer, wines, and liquors at retail to be drunk on the premises; and that he systematically sold wines and liquors in bottles to such of his guests as desired, but not to other persons—the facts constituted a breach of warranty as matter of law; and it was error for the trial court to refuse a nonsuit, and to leave it to the jury to say whether the sales of liquor proved were sales at all, within the intent and meaning of the contract. Danforth, J., dissenting. Id.

19. If an insurance policy, in plain and unambiguous language, makes the observance of an apparently immaterial requirement the condition of a valid contract, it cannot be disregarded, nor can a new contract be constructed, by implication or otherwise, in the place of that made by the parties; and such contract is open to construction only when it appears upon the face of the instrument that its meaning is doubtful or its language is ambiguous or uncertain. Authorities cited. Id. 532

20. Where, by the terms of a policy of life insurance, the assured warrants the truth of the answers to questions in the application, compliance with such warranty is a condition of the validity of the contract; and any substantial deviation from the truth in such answers is material to the risk and constitutes a breach of the contract, rendering the policy void. Authorities cited. Id.

21. Where a "nonforfeiture" policy of life insurance provided (in case of failure to keep up the premiums after the payment of two or more) for the issuance of a new policy for an amount proportionate to the number of annual premiums paid, subject to the payment of interest on outstanding premium notes,—

Held, that the insertion in such new policy of a clause of forfeiture thereof for nonpayment of interest annually on outstanding premium notes on the original policy was authorized and valid.

People v. Knickerbocker L. Ins. Co. (N. Y.) 873

22. The personal representative of the insured has no right of action against the insurance company on a life insurance policy for the benefit of one without an insurable interest.

Bomberger v. United Brethren Mut. Aid Society (Pa.) 694

23. If, at the time a policy of life insurance is issued, the insured is the debtor of the beneficiary, and the policy is taken in good faith for the protection of the creditor, it is not necessary to prove a continuance of the relation of debtor and creditor until the maturity of the policy.

Corson v. Garnier (Pa.) 307

24. The same rule applies where the insurance company, admitting its liability, has paid the money into court, and the controversy is between the beneficiary and the personal representatives of the insured. Id.

25. An insurable interest is not necessarily a definite pecuniary interest, such as is recognized and protected at law; it may be contingent, restricted as to time, or indeterminate in amount; but it must be actual, such as will reasonably justify a well grounded expectation of advantage, dependent upon the life of the insured, so that the purpose of the party effecting the insurance may be to secure that advantage, and not merely to put a wager upon human life. Id.

26. A nephew has not, from mere relationship, an insurable interest in the life of his aunt. Id.

27. In the absence of evidence that a policy on the life of a debtor, in favor of a creditor, is held in trust for the debtor, the presumption is against such trust, and that the rights of the parties appear upon the face of the policy. Id.

28. The insurance of the life of a debtor for the sum of $2,000, in favor of a creditor, where the amount of indebtedness was uncertain when insurance was effected, but afterwards ascertained to be between $500 and $750,—Held, under the facts of the case, to be no evidence of bad faith, or that the contract was a wager. Id.

29. A single woman, under contract to marry, has an insurable interest in the life of her intended husband. Authorities cited. Id. 309

30. A young unmarried woman, without property, who for several years had been supported and educated by her brother, who stood to her in loco parentis, was held to have an insurable interest in his life. Authorities cited. Id.

31. An unmarried woman lived with her brother, who supported or maintained her in his family, under circumstances tending to constitute debtor and creditor. Held, the brother had an insurable interest in her life. Authorities cited. Id.

82. A creditor has an insurable interest in the life of his debtor. Authorities cited. Id.

INTEREST. See USURY.

INTOXICATING LIQUORS. See INSURANCE, 18.

1. P. L. 1880, p. 19, to establish an excise department in cities of over 15,000 inhabitants, where the power to grant licenses is not vested in a board of excise or court of common pleas, is local and special, and therefore unconstitutional.

State v. Trenton Board of License (N. J.) 83

2. Legislation dealing with the method of granting licenses must apply to all cities, or reduce all cities to a uniform system. Authorities cited. Id. 85

8. The provision of Laws of 1857, chap. 628, § 11, that "whenever any person is seen to drink in such shop * * * any spirituous liquors or wines forbidden to be drank therein, it shall be prima facie evidence that such liquors or wines were sold by the occupant of such premises * * * with intent that the same should be drank therein," is constitutional, but applies only to cases where licenses have been granted to sell liquors in quantities less than five gallons, not to be drank on the premises, and to acts done while such a license was in force.

City of Auburn v. Merchant (N. Y.) 854

4. A statute providing that the delivery of intoxicating liquors in or upon any building or place "shall be prima facie evidence of a sale" was held constitutional. Authorities cited. Id. 855

5. Under the Act of March 22, 1867, the court of quarter sessions should hear petitions in favor of an applicant for a license and all remonstrance thereto, and refuse a license wherever, in the opinion of the court, having due regard to the number and character of the petitioners for and against the petition, such license is not necessary for the accommodation of the public and entertainment of strangers and travelers, and this without regard to the character of the applicant. The petition and the remonstrances should be special, and not general, and the petitioners or remonstrants need not be voters; it is enough if they be citizens whether male or female.

Appeal of Reed (Pa.) 909

6. The action of the court of quarter sessions in granting or refusing licenses, under the Act of March 22, 1867, being a matter in the discretion of the court, and no appeal being provided by the statute, will not be reviewed. Id.

7. The special Act of Feb. 20, 1867, repealing so much of the statute as authorized the treasurer of Washington County to grant a license to vend intoxicating liquors by the quart, is inoperative, because at that time the Act of 1866 had already repealed the statute relating to treasurer's license, and vested the power of licenses in the court of quarter sessions. Id.

8. An affidavit, under an ordinance of the city of Camden, prohibiting the sale of liquors without a license, and prohibiting the sale thereof to a minor, — Held, that an affidavit setting forth that complainant verily believed that defendant did on a certain day make sale to a certain minor is insufficient.

Mowery v. City of Camden (N. J.) 566

9. Where defendant was specifically indicted under a statute "as a druggist, for selling liquor without a license, to be used as a beverage," a verdict finding the defendant guilty "of selling liquor without a license" is insufficient; a general verdict of guilty would be sustained, but the special verdict in this case is insufficient, since defendant might sell without license, if he sold in the preparation of medicine or on the prescription of a physician.

Rhoads v. Commonwealth (Pa.) 725

INTOXICATION. See BILLS AND NOTES, 8.

JAIL AND JAILER.

1. Order of court, under Act April 10, 1873, fixing compensation of incumbent sheriff, for boarding prisoners, at one sum for one year and at a less sum for another year, during his term of office, does not violate Constitution, art. 3, § 18, prohibiting the increasing or diminishing of salary or emoluments of any public officer after his election or appointment, notwithstanding a prior order made during his term, fixing the compensation for the past services of his predecessor.

Peeling v. County of York (Pa.) 87

2. The compensation ordered to be paid to the sheriff by law, for the board of prisoners in the county jail, is an emolument of his office within the Constitution, art. 8, § 18. Authorities cited. Id. 88.

JOINT TENANTS AND TENANTS IN COMMON.

1. By term "estate of inheritance," in Rev. 820, is meant an estate of inheritance in severalty or in common. Estates in joint tenancy are not included.

Babbitt v. Day (N. J.) 66

2. Dower does not attach, either at common law or under Rev. 820, to real estate of which husband was seised in joint tenancy. Id.

3. On the decease of one joint tenant the survivor holds the whole property under the original grant, and holds no part of it in any wise under the decedent. Authorities cited. Id.

4. The husband of a tenant in common of coal-bearing lands, in a city, built a dwelling-house and buildings for mining and selling coal. A bill in equity for partition was filed, after the wife's death, against the husband and their minor child. On the master's report the court determined the undivided interests of the cotenants, and decreed that partition should be made. Before commissioners to divide, evidence as to the improvements was received, and the lands containing the improvements were allotted to the husband and minor child at a valuation not including the improvements. Held, proper.

Kelsey v. Church (Pa.) 99

5. While a tenant in common is liable to his cotenant for repairs absolutely necessary to buildings already erected, which were falling to decay, yet he is not liable to his cotenant for new and permanent buildings which the latter erected. Authorities cited. Id. 101

6. A tenant in common is not competent to support the possession of his cotenant when the latter is defendant in ejectment founded on a title adverse to the title of both. Authorities cited.

Swank v. Phillips (Pa.) 484

7. Where, under a devise, a father and his minor son took possession of arable land as tenants in common, subject to the payment of certain legacies, and the father paid the legacies, and for a number of years had sole possession of the land, an action of assumpsit by the son against the father's executors, for a moiety in value of the crops, the court was equally divided as to whether the action would lie, but on error reversed the judgment of the lower court for a refusal to allow a set-off for lime necessarily spread upon the land, and awarded a new trial.

Luck v. Luck (Pa.) 571

8. Where tenants in common join in a mortgage of the premises held in common, to secure a debt incurred by one of them only, the interests of the others are bound thereby; and this effect of the instrument cannot be overcome by parol. The court can, however, order a sale of the interest of the debtor tenant in common first.

Loree v. Lewis (N. J.) 244

JUDGES. See COURTS, I.

JUDGMENT.

I. ENTRY; CONFESSION; AMENDMENT.

II. VALIDITY; CONCLUSIVENESS.

III. LIEN.

IV. PRACTICE; REVIEW.

See BONDS, 6, 7; DAMAGES; EXECUTION.

I. ENTRY; CONFESSION; AMENDMENT.

1. An instrument in the form of a promissory note, with the addition of the words, "and waiving the benefit of all laws exempting property from levy and sale by execution, and confessing judgment for the said amount," is sufficient; when filed with the proper averment of nonpayment and an express confession signed by an attorney, to authorize the entry of judgment by the prothonotary; and a judgment so entered should not be stricken off by the court.

James v. Crownover (Pa.) 287

2. A judgment against an administrator de bonis non of a devisor, with notice to his devisees for life and in remainder, under § 24 of Act of June 16, 1836 (Purd. Dig. 108, pl. 28), has all the effect of a judgment de teris; and a sheriff's sale under such judgment divests a title under the devise.

Levan v. Milholland (Pa.) 906

3. The date of entry of final judgment against a party deceased after verdict and before judgment (Code Civ. Proc. § 763) is immaterial; and such judgment may be entered nunc pro tunc as of the date of the verdict, where the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, § 1210, as to entry of memorandum of the party's death are complied with. Notice of motion to attorney of record of deceased defendant is sufficient.

Long v. Stafford (N. Y.) 894

4. Under the Code of Civil Procedure, § 1000, the court may, at any special term held by any judge, modify an order of a trial judge staying judgment on a verdict pending a hearing on exceptions in the first instance at general term, so as to allow entry of judgment.

5. The record may be remitted by a court of error for the purpose of amending a judgment improperly entered. Authorities cited.

Lefferts v. State (N. J.) 884

II. VALIDITY; CONCLUSIVENESS.

6. The decree or judgment in a court of competent jurisdiction of a sister State has the same credit, validity, and effect in the courts of another State which it had in the State where it was rendered; but the question of jurisdiction of the court rendering such judgment is always open. Authorities cited.

Pitts. & S. L. R. R. Co. v. Rothschild (Pa.) 110

7. Want of jurisdiction of a court over the subject-matter may be shown at any time; and a judgment rendered in the absence of jurisdiction is inoperative and void. Authorities cited. Id.

8. The objections which, under the Code of Civil Procedure, § 1939, a defendant not served in an original action may oppose to the judgment therein, when sought to be enforced against him, are limited to legal valid objections which a party to the judgment might make, and must go to the validity and efficiency of the judgment; the objection that the original cause of action has become barred by the Statute of Limitations since the original judgment is not available.

Long v. Stafford (N. Y.) 894

9. A judgment in an action of tort, to recover money alleged to have been obtained by fraud, is not a bar to a subsequent action to recover the same money, on the ground that it had been paid under a mistake of fact. Andrews, J., dissenting.

Belden v. State (N. Y.) 180

10. Facts offered in evidence to prove an issue are not themselves in issue, and the judgment is no evidence in regard to them. Authorities cited. Id. 183

11. An action brought for a part of an entire and indivisible demand, and the recovery therein, will bar a subsequent demand for the residue of the same. Authorities cited.

Buck v. Wilson (Pa.) 646

12. A judgment is final and conclusive between the parties thereto, as to the facts necessarily adjudicated, and cannot be impeached, except for fraud, in a collateral proceeding.

Snyder v. Berger (Pa.) 704

13. Errors committed by a court, upon the hearing of an action or proceeding which it is authorized to hear, and not affecting any juisdictional fact, do not invalidate its orders, or authorize a party to treat them as void; but can be taken advantage of only by appeal or motion in the original action. Authorities cited.

Fischer v. Langbein (N. Y.) 218

III. LIEN.

14. A mistake in the description of a recorded deed will not be corrected by a court of equity, to the prejudice of the rights of bona fide judgment creditors of the grantee having a lien upon the property.

Ruppert v. Hasko (D. C.) 615

15. No execution can be issued on a judgment, transferred from one county to another after the lien of the original judgment had expired, under the Act of April 16, 1840, without revival.

Beck v. Church (Pa.) 257

16. A mortgage and judgment, in order to stand in the relation of being prior and subsequent to each other, must embrace or cover the same land.

Westervelt v. Voorhis (N. J.) 874

IV. PRACTICE; REVIEW.

17. Although the record of a judgment is evidence for a particular purpose, yet if offered, not for that purpose but for other purposes for which it is not admissible, and rejected, such rejection is not error.

Snyder v. Berger (Pa.) 764

18. Payment being found from the evidence by the auditor.—Held, that a judgment which was marked satisfied on the record was not entitled to participate in the distribution of a fund produced by a sheriff's sale.

Moseby's Appeal (Pa.) 627

19. A judgment transferred from one county to another is a quasi judgment, and is only for limited purposes provided by statute; the regularity or merits of it cannot be reviewed elsewhere than in the county in which it was recovered. If the original judgment be set aside, the judgment on the transcript falls with it. Authorities cited.

Beck v. Church (Pa.) 258

20. An execution issued upon a judgment after the death of the defendant is not absolutely void, but only voidable, and the sale of land upon such execution vests in the purchaser a good title. Authorities cited.

Levan v. Mitholland (Pa.) 908

JURISDICTION. See CONFLICT OF LAWS; COURTS, II.; EQUITY, I.; PARTITION, 1-6.

JURY.

Where one summoned as a juror on the trial of an indictment for manslaughter by negligence in the construction of a building said, on his examination as to his qualifications, that he had read about the occurrence in the newspapers, but had formed no opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant, but was of opinion from what he had read that the catastrophe was the result of culpable negligence on the part of some one, and that it would require evidence to remove the impression; and another juror said that from reading the newspapers he had formed an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant which it would require evidence to remove, but each also testified that he could nevertheless render an impartial verdict on the evidence—challenges on the ground of bias were properly overruled.

People v. Buddensiek (N. Y.) 787

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE.

1. The Act of July 7, 1879, enlarging the jurisdiction of aldermen and justices of the peace, intends to except only the city of Philadelphia in its proviso that the Act shall not apply to magistrates in cities of the first class, and is therefore not unconstitutional, under article 8, § 7, of the Constitution prohibiting special or local laws regulating the practice or jurisdiction, or extending the powers and duties of alderman or justices of the peace, the Constitution prohibiting the increase of the civil jurisdiction of magistrates in Philadelphia.

City of Wilkesbarre v. Meyers (Pa.) 820

2. Where a judgment has been rendered in a justice's court in favor of plaintiff in an action of trespass quare clausum fregit, and it is made to appear that title to lands came in question before the justice, a certiorari will lie to review the judgment as one rendered without jurisdiction.

State v. Stanger (N. J.) 562

3. If, in the court for the trial of small causes, a party files a legal affidavit of the absence of a material witness out of the State, the justice may postpone the trial to a time not exceeding three months from the return day; but if the adjournment is for a less time, a second adjournment to a day beyond thirty days from the return day cannot be made without a further affidavit.

State v. Collins (N. J.) 567

4. The thirteenth section of the Act of September 23, 1791, which makes costs of justices of the peace in unfounded charges of "having committed crime" payable "out of the county stock," refers not only to felonies but to misdemeanors, such as cruelty to animals, assault and battery, malicious trespass, larceny, and false pretenses.

Lehigh Co. v. Schock (Pa.) 744

5. In a suit against a county for costs, the docket of a justice of the peace is conclusive evidence that the prosecution for which costs are claimed was discharged as unfounded for want of evidence. Id.

LACHES. See SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE, 2, 4; WAYS, 18; WILL, 5.

1. A court of equity, which is never active against conscience or public convenience, has always refused its aid to stale demands, where the party has slept upon his rights or acquiesced for a great length of time. Authorities cited.

Hayes v. Bald Eagle V. R. R. Co. (Pa.) 459

2. Lapse of time and laches (in this case a delay of fourteen months) are not a bar to the filing of a caveat to test the validity of a will.

Re Estate of McIntire (D. C.) 605

3. The right to maintain a suit under the statute, to quiet title by removing the cloud caused by a sale for alleged illegal taxes, may be lost through laches in failing to question the validity of the tax by certiorari.

Baldwin v. City of Elizabeth (N. J.) 825

4. Delay and acquiescence, inducing expenditure of moneys by others, in works of a quasi public nature, waive irregularities. Authorities cited.

State v. Little (N. J.) 568

5. The laches and nonclaim of the rightful owner of an equitable estate, who is under no disability, and in a case free from fraud, for a period of twenty years, will, where the person in possession has held adversely to such owner, constitute a conclusive bar to all equitable relief. Authorities cited.

Chapin v. Wright (N. J.) 60

LANDLORD AND TENANT.

I. ATTORNMENT; ESTOPPEL.

II. LEASES; AGREEMENTS; COVENANTS.

III. RIGHTS OF THIRD PERSONS.

IV. RENT.

V. ASSIGNMENT; PRIVITY OF ESTATE.

VI. ACTION FOR POSSESSION; MALICIOUS PROSECUTION.

See COVENANT.

I. ATTORNMENT; ESTOPPEL.

1. If an owner of land in possession, and with full knowledge of his own title, takes a lease from a stranger, he will not, in the absence of fraud, misrepresentation, and mistake, be permitted, during the existence of the term, to assert his own title against his lessor, or as a defense to the payment of rent. The same rule applies to a tenant holding over.

Ward v. Philadelphia (Pa.) 662

2. As a general rule a lessee is not permitted to impeach, or in any way to call in question, the title of his landlord, except in cases of fraud, misrepresentation, or mistake. Authorities cited. Id. 664

3. If one who has no right induces the owner who is in possession to become his tenant, it will require little proof of fraud, or threats, or imbecility, or some undue influence, to dissolve the relation of landlord and tenant, and put the tenant in the situation in which he was before he was induced to sign the lease. Authorities cited. Id. 668

II. LEASES; AGREEMENTS; COVENANTS.

4. An oral promise by a tenant after the execution of a written lease to pay rent monthly in advance, the lease providing otherwise,—Held, to be nudum pactum and therefore unenforceable in law.

State v. Winkler (N. J.) 250

5. The death of a joint principal debtor upon a lease does not discharge the o. R., v. IV.

joint liability of the debtors, or the separate liability of his estate.

Long v. Stafford (N. Y.) 394

6. The measure of damages for the breach of a particular covenant in a lease is not the value of the lease or any part of it, but the loss actually resulting from the breach.

Penn Iron Co. v. Diller (Pa.) 691

7. In a lease of a foundry adjoining the lessor's rolling mill, in which the boilers were heated over the furnaces, together with yard space, joint use of pattern shop and engine room adjoining, in which were engine and machinery but no boiler, at a fixed rent and for a definite term, a covenant that the lessor "shall pay fifteen cents per hour for the steam furnished to his engine" does not, without more, impose upon the lessor an obligation to furnish steam to the lessee's engine. It is merely a covenant that if the lessor furnishes steam and the lessee uses it, the lessee shall pay for it at the rate of fifteen cents per hour. It would be otherwise if furnishing steam were a necessary incident to a lease of the premises. Id.

8. In an oil lease on royalty, a covenant to use due diligence in operating the premises runs with the land.

Bradford Oil Co. v. Blair (Pa.) 101

9. A covenant in an oil lease, to "continue with due diligence and without delay to prosecute the business to success or abandonment, and, if successful, to prosecute the same without interruption for the common benefit of the parties," construed to mean that, in the event of success, exploring and drilling for oil should be continued without interruption, for the common benefit of the parties, as well as gathering and collecting the same. Id.

10. The liability of the defendant under this covenant depends on the question whether or not the defendant violated the covenant to use due diligence, under the circumstances of the case. Id.

11. The measure of damages for the breach of such a covenant is the value of the oil which the lessor should have received, less the cost of producing it and the value of the oil actually received. Id.

12. A memorandum indorsed on a lease signed by the parties, but not dated or under seal, that "it is agreed that the said second parties are not to drill any wells in the barnyard, orchard, or garden without consent of first parties, but nobody else to have the right,"—Held, inadmissible in an action of covenant on an oil lease. Id.

13. A clause in a lease, providing that lessor shall have a lien for rent upon all goods and other personal property of lessee, a retail dealer, which then are or may be thereafter put upon the leased premises, and providing that the lessor may, in case of default in payment of rent, take and sell such goods, etc., in the same manner as in the case of a chattel mortgage, and providing that the lessee may continue in possession of the goods, and sell the same in the regular course of his business, and buy other goods with the proceeds (although valid as between the parties), is fraudulent on its face as to bona fide creditors of the lessee, and cannot be enforced by the lessor as an equitable lien upon the goods, against the rights of an assignee of the lessee for the benefit of creditors, in possession of the goods.

Reynolds v. Ellis (N. Y.) 232

14. An agreement for a future lien may be sufficient against one who makes no claim to title to the property as purchaser, creditor, or otherwise, and has nothing but a naked possession tortiously acquired. Authorities cited. Id. 234

III. RIGHTS OF THIRD PERSONS.

15. A lessor who has, by request of the tenant, made a deep excavation on the premises for a privy well, and left it uncovered and full of water, is not liable in damages for the death of the tenant's grandchild, between two and three years of age, who, visiting the tenant with his mother, and by her left in charge of an aunt acquainted with the premises, strays away and is drowned in the well.

Moore v. Logan, I. & S. Co. (Pa.) 505

16. A provision in a lease of shore front with right to build a pier thereon, that the lease should cease and determine "in case of the destruction of such pier, or failure in operation, or an abandoning of it," will not entitle the lessee to surrender the pier to the lessor so as to cut off a mechanics' lien upon the pier built by the lessee.

Hogan v. Gaskill (N. J.) 849

IV. RENT.

17. A landlord's entry upon demised premises, by forcing the door during the tenant's absence, removing the tenant's signs, locks, and goods, and using the room thereafter for storage, amounts to an eviction, and is a good defense to an action for rent for the balance of the term.

Burr v. Catnach (Pa.) 701

18. The receipt and acceptance of drafts for rent due.—Held, under the evidence in this case, to be an acceptance as payment of the rent, by means of which the right to distrain is lost.

Cambria Iron Co.'s Appeal (Pa.) 705

19. A claim of wages for labor, under the Acts of April 9, 1872, and June 12, 1878, is preferred, in distribution of the proceeds of the lessee's property, to the landlord's claim for rent.

Riddleburg Coal & Iron Co.'s Appeal (Pa.) 703

20. Where the property is levied on and sold by the sheriff, on an execution issuing out of the court of common pleas, notice of the wages claim, under the Act of June 12, 1878, need not be given to the landlord, but if given to the sheriff it is sufficient. Id.

V. ASSIGNMENT; PRIVILEGE OF ESTATE.

21. As between the transferee of a lease and the original landlord, the rule is that if the lessee parts with his whole term or interest as lessee, or makes a lease for a period exceeding his whole term, it will, as to the landlord, amount to an assignment of the lease; and the essence of the instrument as an assignment, so far as the original landlord is concerned, will not be destroyed by its reserving a new rent to the assignor, with a power of re-entry for nonpayment, nor by its assuming the character of a sublease; and the assignee, so long as he continues to hold the estate, is liable directly to the original landlord on all covenants in the original lease which run with the land, including the covenant to pay rent. Stewart v. Long Island R. R. Co. (N. Y.) 115

22. But as between the original lessee and his lessee or transferee, even though the original lessee demises his whole term, if the parties intend a lease, the relation of landlord and tenant, as to all but strict reversionary rights, will arise between them. Id.

23. Where an assignee of a lease of a railroad for fifty years, together with the right of purchase of the fee at the end of the term, leased the road to defendant for ninety-nine years reserving a different rent from that in the original lease, with a provision for re-entry, but without an assignment of the right of purchase and the defendant covenanted to surrender the premises at the end of the ninety-nine years, to its immediate lessor, the instrument to defendant operated, as between the defendant and the original landlord, as an assignment of the term of fifty years, and during such term there was a privity of estate between defendant and the original landlord, and the legal estate in reversion was in the original landlord during the fifty years; and he or those succeeding to his estate were both legally and equitably entitled to the rents, and had a right of action therefor directly against defendant. Finch, J., dissenting. Id.

24. An estate to arise in futuro cannot be tacked on to the estate of a lessee who has assigned his whole term, so as to create a reversion in him and establish the relation of landlord and tenant between such lessee and the person to whom he has assigned his term, so far as strictly reversionary rights are concerned, or prevent that relation from existing between such person and the original landlord. Id.

25. Where a lessee assigns his whole estate, without making any reversion therein in himself, a privity of estate is at once created between his assignee and the original lessor, and the latter has a right of action directly against the assignee on the covenant to pay rent, or any other covenant in the lease which runs with the land; but if the lessee sublets the premises, reserving any such reversion, however small, the privity of the estate is not established, and the original lessor has no right of action against the sublessee, there being neither privity of contract nor of estate between them. Finch, J., dissenting. Id.

26. Where the assignee of a lease demised the premises for the residue of his term, reserving the right to delivery of possession by his assignee to him on the last day of the term, and the right to intermediate possession in case the building should be destroyed by fire, such reservations were held sufficient to characterize the demise as a sublease, and not an assignment. Authorities cited. Id. 119

27. The question of privity of estate between the original lessor and the lessee of his lessee depends upon whether the whole of the term of the original lessee became vested in his lessee, and the circumstances that the second lease reserves a different rent or a right of security for breach of condition are immaterial. Authorities cited. Id. 120

28. Where a lessee for a term of ninety-nine years, with the option of purchasing the fee simple in reversion, granted a lease for a term exceeding the residue of his own term, such lease established a privity of estate between the last lessee and the original lessor. Authorities cited. Id. 121

29. Where the original lessee transfers for the identical term of his own lease, but the transferee covenants to surrender to him, a reversion is implied. Authorities cited. Dis. Op. Id. 122

30. A reservation of a right of re-entry for breach of condition, and even the reservation of a new rent, makes the instrument a sublease. Authorities cited. Dis. Op. Id.

31. Where the same person has the inheritance and the term in himself, though he has in one the equitable interest, and the legal estate in the other, the inheritance draws to itself the term, and makes that dependent upon it. Authorities cited. Dis. Op. Id. 124

32. Where one takes a lease for a number of years, and during the term enters into a contract of purchase, with his landlord, of the same property, his possession, which was taken as tenant, operates as notice to one dealing with the landlord in respect to the land, not merely of his right as tenant, but of his right to the inheritance. The possession, although taken as tenant, becomes also a possession as purchaser, protecting him as such to the extent of his entire right. Authorities cited. Dis. Op. Id.

33. A lease of an iron furnace and land, to continue as long as a royalty of $1,000 a year was paid, and which gave the lessor the option to terminate the lease upon the nonpayment of the royalty, and further contained a provision for expending 25 per cent more than the first year's royalty in putting the furnace in working order, is a lease from year to year, and not a lease at will. And such lessee, after assignment, will be liable for breach of covenant requiring him to make insurance.

Hack v. Borda (Pa.)

908

VI. ACTION FOR POSSESSION; MALICIOUS PROSECUTION.

34. Where the occupant of land was dispossessed by proceedings under the Landlord and Tenant Act, before a justice, and the proceedings were reversed on certiorari for want of jurisdiction,—Held, in an action on the case for malicious prosecution, that the judgment of the justice established the existence of probable cause.

Grater v. Fehr (Pa.)

493

LAPSED LEGACIES. See DEVISE AND LEGACY, IX.

LEASE. See LANDLORD AND TENANT; RAILROAD COMPANIES, 11-15.

LEGACY. See DEVISE AND LEGACY.

LEX REI SITÆ. See CONFLICT OF LAWS.

LIBEL AND SLANDER.

1. The superior courts of this State, modeled after the English courts of common law, have authority to punish summarily, by proceedings for contempt, for any words uttered, by speech, by writing or by printing, outside of the regular course of litigation, which are designed to bring contempt upon the courts in the exercise of their judicial functions, or to pervert, in a pending cause, the due administration of justice.

Re Contempt of Cheesman (N. J.)

576

2. Words impliedly charging a single woman with degradation of character, and justifying a jury in finding that the intent was to impute to her an act of fornication, are clearly actionable.

Stokes v. Miller (Pa.)

24

3. Evidence as to common understanding as to words used was held irrelevant. Id.

LICENSE. See INTOXICATING LIQUORS; PATENTS, 7.

1. P. L. 1880, p. 190, to establish an excise department in cities of over 15,000 inhabitants, where the power to grant licenses is not vested in a board of excise or court of common pleas, is local and special and therefore unconstitutional.

State v. Trenton Board of License (N. J.)

83

2. Legislation dealing with the method of granting licenses must apply to all cities, or reduce all cities to a uniform system. Authorities cited. Id.

85

3. In an action to enforce a contract granting a license to manufacture a patented article, it is no defense to allege that plaintiff had no right to the patent or to grant the license to others.

Bosaird v. Dick (Pa.)

40

4. A contract for the manufacture of a licensed article, giving licensors the option to terminate it and declare the license forfeited at any time when licensees shall make default in making the statements and payments required of them by the contract, cannot be rescinded by licensees' refusing the statement. The licensees are liable as long as they manufacture during the continuance of the patent. Id.

LIEN. See JUDGMENT, III.; LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, 5; MORTGAGE, IV.; VENDOR AND PURCHASER, 1-4.

1. By the common law the priority of liens, whether by mortgage or judgment, is gov- erned exclusively by the date of their acquisition, the first in order of time standing first in order of rank.

Westervelt v. Voorhis (N. J.) 874

2. The lien of contractors and laborers for work done in the construction of a railroad, although of indefinite duration, is subject to the common-law presumption of payment arising from the lapse of twenty years.

Hayes v. Bald Eagle V. R. R. Co. (Pa.) 457

3. A bill in equity for the enforcement of a lien, so framed that it disclosed the presumption of payment, and containing no allegation of facts in rebuttal of the presumption, will be dismissed on demurrer. Id.

4. Where aged parents, by deed absolute, conveyed land to one of their children,—Held, from the fact that several mortgages were drawn by the same scrivener, intended to be executed by the grantee, but which remained unexecuted and unrecorded, and also certain verbal declarations of the grantee that the consideration of the conveyance was that the grantee should support the parents, and on their decease pay a certain sum of money to their next of kin, that this obligation was a lien upon the land, but could not be enforced against a bona fide assignee, without notice, of a mortgage which had subsequently been made by the grantee, although the original mortgagee had notice of such lien.

Sprague v. Drew (N. J.) 899

5. A provision in a lease of shore front with right to build a pier thereon, that the lease should cease and determine "in case of the destruction of such pier, or failure in operation, or an abandoning of it," will not entitle the lessee to surrender the pier to the lessor so as to cut off a mechanics' lien upon the pier built by the lessee.

Hogan v. Gaskill (N. J.) 849

6. The filing of a mechanics' lien secures to the lien claimant the rights of the owner of the property existing at the time of filing, and the owner cannot abridge or abandon such rights to the injury of the lien claimant. Id.

7. Where one having a lien on goods sets up a claim hostile to the owner's title, and wrongfully sells the goods, he can not set up the lien as a bar to the owner's recovery, in an action of trover, for his illegal act.

Andrews v. Wade (Pa.) 689

LIFE ESTATE. See DEVISE AND LEGACY, IV.

LIFE INSURANCE. See INSURANCE, II.

LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

I. OPERATION; FRAUD; TRUSTS; PAYMENT; ADVERSE POSSESSION.

II. EXCEPTIONS.

See LACHES; MILLS AND DAMS, 7.

I. OPERATION; FRAUD; TRUSTS; PAYMENT; ADVERSE POSSESSION.

1. The plea of the Statute of Limitations is good in equity as well as at law.

Somerset Co. Bank v. Veghte (N. J.) 408

G. R., v. IV.

2. Where complainant's claim is based upon a fraud which defendant has concealed, the statutory period will not, in equity, be considered to have commenced until the fraud is discovered, or until it would have been discovered had reasonable diligence been exercised. Id.

3. On a bill for an account by a bank, alleging an embezzlement made by the defendant a number of years ago, and concealed by him while cashier and president, an answer setting up the Statute of Limitations, and that the embezzlement, if any, must have been known to the officers of the bank and to the cashiers who succeeded defendant,—Held, sufficient. Id.

4. Direct trusts, as between trustee and cestui que trust, are not reached by the Statute of Limitations. Authorities cited. Id. 407

5. The lien of contractors and laborers for work done in the construction of a railroad, although of indefinite duration, is subject to the common-law presumption of payment arising from the lapse of twenty years.

Hayes v. Bald Eagle V. R. R. Co. (Pa.) 457

6. The presumption of payment after the lapse of twenty years is in the nature of the Statute of Limitations, furnishing, indeed, not a legal bar, but a presumption of fact, not subject to the discretion of the jury; they are bound to adopt it as satisfactory proof until the contrary appears. Authorities cited. Id. 458

7. After the lapse of twenty years, all evidences of debt excepted out of the Statute of Limitations are presumed to be paid, and this is a rule of convenience and policy, the result of a necessary regard for the peace and security of society. Authorities cited. Id.

8. After the lapse of more than twenty years there is a presumption that the apparent title of the assignee of corporate stock is the real title; and where all parties interested on the part of the assignor acquiesced in the assignee's title, and neglected to assert the contrary for that length of time, they should not be permitted, after the assignee's death, to maintain the claim that the stock was assigned as collateral only, without the fullest measure of proof.

Lockwood v. Brantly (N. Y.) 798

9. When a creditor has received more than was due him from his debtor, the excess is deemed so much money of the debtor in the hands of the creditor for the use of the debtor; and when, on a subsequent transaction between the parties, the debtor becomes again indebted, such excess will be presumed to have been applied by the creditor upon the subsequent indebtedness when it accrued, and the debtor will not be deprived of the benefit of such application by force of the Statute of Limitations, in an action by the creditor for the entire indebtedness. Andrews, J., dissenting.

Belden v. State (N. Y.) 180

10. Under Rev. 597, § 10, twenty years' possession of premises by mortgagee, after default of payment, bars the equity of redemption; and such bar is not subject to be waived by an incautious admission of mortgagee.

Chapin v. Wright (N. J.)

59

11. If a mortgagee in possession shall, after the equity of the mortgagor has become barred by lapse of time, admit, either by word or act, that his mortgage is still a subsisting lien, the bar previously existing will be considered to have been waived, and the equity of the mortgagor revived. Authorities cited. Id.

60

12. And an admission having this effect will be considered to have been made if the mortgagee institutes proceedings, either by suit or otherwise, to foreclose his mortgage. Id.

18. An admission may be made by mortgagee's offering to purchase the equity of redemption. Id.

14. The laches and nonclaim of the rightful owner of an equitable estate who is under no disability, and in case free from fraud, for a period of twenty years, will, where the person in possession has held adversely to such owner, constitute a conclusive bar to all equitable relief. Authorities cited. Id.

15. In an action to recover a certain award to "unknown owners," for land taken for public purposes, paid to defendants' testator, plaintiff claimed to be entitled thereto by force of adverse possession under a written instrument. Held, under the circumstances of the case, that, there having been some evidence that the land was "usually cultivated or improved," and "protected by a substantial enclosure," within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 870, for more than twenty years preceding the date of the award, and the jury having found a verdict in favor of plaintiff, his claim to adverse possession was well founded.

Paige v. Waring (N. Y.)

231

16. One claiming an easement over the land of another, by the uninterrupted adverse enjoyment thereof for over twenty years, must show that such enjoyment has been in the same place for the period of time required.

South Branch R. R. Co. v. Parker (N. J.)

63

II. EXCEPTIONS.

17. The statute limiting the time within which a writ of error must be sued out does not apply to a married woman.

Fenn v. Karyl (Pa.)

288

18. A demand by an attorney at law, for professional services, will not toll the statute on a claim by the client based on a demand for farm produce furnished.

Mattern v. McDivitt (Pa.)

896

19. Mutual accounts, to prevent the operation of the Statute of Limitations, must be such as concern the trade of merchandise, and upon which an action would lie. Authorities cited. Id.

897

20. Where there is a book account on one side and a demand on the other, to toll the statute, the demand must also be a book account. Id.

U. R., V. IV.

21. Where there are mutual demands, if any item of such account be within six years of the commencement of the suit, such item is equivalent to a subsequent promise reviving the debt. Authorities cited. Id.

898

22. The objections which, under the Code of Civil Procedure, § 1935, a defendant not served in the original action may oppose to the judgment therein, when sought to be enforced against him, are limited to legal valid objections which a party to the judgment might make, and must go to the validity and efficiency of the judgment; the objection that the original cause of action has become barred by the Statute of Limitations since the original judgment is not available.

Long v. Stafford (N. Y.)

394

LIS PENDENS.

A bona fide purchaser of land from a married woman, with knowledge that it was acquired by her from her husband, and that a suit is pending against the husband as surety on a guardian's bond, is sufficiently affected with notice to render the property in his hands liable for the amount of the judgment subsequently recovered in such suit, after the exhaustion of other property improperly acquired from her husband remaining in the hands of the wife.

Flynn v. Walsh (Md.)

155

LOCAL IMPROVEMENTS. See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, IV.

LOCAL LEGISLATION. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, II.

LOGS AND LOGGING.

1. In a deed of land, a reservation of "all the pine and hemlock timber growing on said land" applies only to living trees of suitable size for use at the date of the deed.

Andrews v. Wade (Pa.)

689

2. A right to cut and remove timber growing on the land of another must be exercised within a reasonable time, or it will be presumed to have been forfeited. Id.

3. The owners of a tract of standing hemlock entered into a contract by which they sold all the hemlock bark growing thereon, the bark to be cut and removed by vendees in quantities not exceeding a certain amount per year, the period being unlimited; the contract, after a description of the premises read as follows: "Said lots being in the vicinity of Moose River Tannery; said bark to be used in carrying said tannery on;" subsequently the tannery was conveyed by the vendors to the vendees of the bark, and thereafter was accidentally destroyed. Held, the clause, "said bark to be used in carrying said tannery on," was neither an exception, reservation, condition, nor limitation, and that the destruction of the tannery did not, as matter of law, annul the contract so as to entitle the vendors to retain the bark then uncut, or to recover possession of that cut by the vendees under the contract but not removed.

Lyon v. Hersey (N. Y.)

834

4. A contract for the sale of growing timber to be taken off by the purchaser, without specification as to time, is an interest in land, within the meaning of the Statute of Frauds. Authorities cited.

Miller v. Zufall (Pa.) 491

LOST INSTRUMENTS. See DEED, 8.

In trespass quare clausum fregit, plaintiff claimed title under a deed which had been lost, and in evidence thereof submitted a recital in a subsequent deed from the same grantor for other land, that one of the lines ran "thence by lands of" plaintiff. Held, that such recital was insufficient, and did not indicate that the whole of the line was along such lands.

Riegelsville Del. Bridge Co. v. Bloom (N. J.) 820

LOTTERIES.

1. On the trial of an indictment for selling lottery policies, the first count of which charged a sale to A, and a second count charged a sale to a person to the grand inquest unknown, the State may ask of A, when on the witness stand, whether she had seen other persons than herself buy of the defendant, and the names of those persons.

Clark v. State (N. J.) 806

2. Where the witness for the State has spoken of one transaction, the State is not precluded from proving, by the same or other witnesses, that the offense charged was a different transaction. Id.

3. On the trial of an indictment for selling lottery policies, a dream book found upon the premises of defendant, and a checkered paper, both containing numbers, which were used by the defendant, are admissible in evidence. Id.

4. On the trial of an indictment for selling lottery policies, — Held, it was not error to refuse to charge that, in order to convict, the jury must find that defendant expressly promised to pay or insure to the purchaser of numbers some money or thing in the event of the number chosen being successful; such promise might be inferred from the general character of the business and well-known course of dealing. Id.

LUMBER. See LOGS AND LOGGING.

LUNATICS. See INSANE PERSONS.

MAGISTRATES. See JUSTICES OF THE PEACE.

MALICIOUS PROSECUTION.

1. There must be proof of malice and a want of probable cause. Malice is a question for the jury; but the question of probable cause is one of mixed law and fact, and the proper practice is for the judge to assemble such facts as, in his judgment, would, if proved, establish probable cause; and to say to the jury, if they find these facts, then probable cause existed.

Porter v. White (D. C.) 151

2. Where prosecutor acted upon probable cause, although from motives of malice, he is not liable for damages. Id.

O. R., V. IV.

3. The fact that one swears falsely does not, alone, amount to probable cause on which to base a prosecution for perjury; but that fact, taken with the fact that prosecutor acted upon advice of counsel that perjury had been committed, will amount to probable cause. Id.

4. Where the occupant of land was dispossessed by proceedings under the Landlord and Tenant Act, before a justice, and the proceedings were reversed on certiorari for want of jurisdiction, — Held, in an action on the case for malicious prosecution, that the judgment of the justice established the existence of probable cause.

Graver v. Fehr (Pa.) 492

MANDAMUS. See RAILROAD COMPANIES, 42.

1. To maintain a peremptory writ of mandamus issued on the application of the attorney-general in the name of the people of the State, it must appear from the undisputed facts alleged that it was issued to protect some public right or to secure some public interest.

People v. Rome, W. & O. R. R. Co. (N. Y.) 197

2. Assuming that, when a town has been bonded for the construction of a railroad, upon condition that a permanent depot should be erected and maintained at a specified point within the town, a contract is created between the town and the railroad company, such contract can only be enforced by some proceeding on behalf of the town; it is not a matter of public interest in such sense that it can be enforced by mandamus on the application of the attorney-general on behalf of the people of the State. Id.

3. The decisions of the State board of railroad commissioners are advisory merely; and no legal right can be based thereon in a proceeding for a mandamus to compel a railroad company to comply with the recommendation of the board. Id.

4. The court may, in a proper case, correct an error in judgment on part of the controller of Philadelphia, but it will not by mandamus interfere, in advance, with that discretion which it is his right and duty freely to exercise, or dictate the decision which, in a given case, he must reach.

Dechert v. Commonwealth (Pa.) 754

5. Where a contractor, having agreed with the city of Philadelphia to build a sewer, to receive payment in assessment bills against fronting properties, to make no claim on the city for payment, and that the city shall not "in anywise guaranty any of said bills to be good and collectible," builds the sewer, receives the assessment bills, and brings suits against property-owners, who resist the liens, and afterward the city councils, by ordinance, direct the chief engineer to draw, and the city controller to countersign, in payment for the work, a warrant for $600, against a survey department appropriation, the court will not, upon the controller's refusal, compel him by mandamus to countersign the warrant. Id.

6. Mandamus will not lie to compel the performance, by public officers, of acts and duties necessarily calling for the exercise of judgment and discretion on their part. Authorities cited. Id. 760

7. The state comptroller, having refused to cancel a tax sale and conveyance thereunder, cannot be compelled by mandamus to reach a different conclusion.

People v. Chapin (N. Y.) 183

8. It seems that the general principle, that where an officer is required by law to perform a duty involving the disbursement of money out of pocket he must be reimbursed, should be applied to the case of the mayor of a city seeking reimbursement from the city for his expenditures in resisting successfully an application for a mandamus against him, made on behalf of the city, to compel his official action in aid of an illegal corporate enterprise.

Barnet v. City of Paterson (N. J.) 248

MARGINS. See GAMING.

MARRIAGE. See HUSBAND AND WIFE, I.

MARRIED WOMAN. See HUSBAND AND WIFE; TRUSTS, 3, 4.

MASTER AND SERVANT.

I. CONTRACTS OF HIRING; WAGES.

II. NEGLIGENCE; LIABILITY.

I. CONTRACTS OF HIRING; WAGES.

1. When the duty to be done requires a high degree of judgment, skill, and ability, and is largely of a confidential character, and not such as has a common or general market value, the character and ability of the person who performed the duty are properly considered in arriving at the value of his services.

Johnson v. Myers (N. Y.) 778

2. The secretary, treasurer, and business manager of an iron manufacturing company, defendant, were jointly engaged in the management of a store not connected with the iron company. Held, that assignments of wages claims, by the employees of the iron company, in consideration of store bills and cash, were valid assignments, and did not extinguish the claims.

Huntingdon & B. T. R. R. Co.'s Appeal (Pa.) 706

3. A claim of wages for labor, under the Acts of April 9, 1873, and June 12, 1878, is preferred, in distribution of the proceeds of the lessee's property, to the landlord's claim for rent.

Riddlesburg Coal & Iron Co.'s Appeal (Pa.) 702

4. Where the property is levied on and sold by the sheriff on an execution issuing out of the court of common pleas, notice of the wages claim, under the Act of June 12, 1878, need not be given to the landlord, but if given to the sheriff it is sufficient. Id.

5. A statute (Act of June 29, 1881) providing that all persons, firms, etc., shall settle with their employees at least once a month, and pay them in legal money or cash orders, is unconstitutional and void. The Act is an infringement of the rights of the employer and the employee; a laborer may sell his labor for what he thinks best. The Act is an insulting attempt to put the laborer under a legislative tutelage.

C. R., V. IV.

Godcharles & Co. v. Wigeman (Pa.) 887

6. Rules posted up on an employer's premises, to the effect that a ton of coal shall be 2,240 pounds, such a custom being opposed to a statute (Act April 15, 1834), making 2,000 a legal ton, are not binding upon the employees, unless by special contract or knowledge which will raise a presumption of contract. R.

II. NEGLIGENCE; LIABILITY.

7. After two months' service a freight-brakeman on a railroad will be presumed to have become acquainted with the level bridges over the track, and no action can be maintained against the railroad company if, during the discharge of his duties in the night, he is struck by a bridge and killed. It is immaterial that the road on which he is employed does not use the danger signals common upon other roads, for the absence of signals did not deceive him as to the degree of danger incurred.

Brossman v. Lehigh Valley R. R. Co. (Pa.) 911

8. If a servant accepts service, with knowledge of the position of structures from which he has occasion to be apprehensive of injury, he cannot require the master to make changes so as to obviate the danger, or hold him liable for damages in case of injuries. Authorities cited. Id. 915

9. By continuing in the master's service after learning its dangerous character, the servant takes upon himself all risks incident to the service. Authorities cited. R.

10. A servant who contracts for the performance of hazardous duties assumes such risks as are incident to their discharge from open and obvious causes, which he has had an opportunity to understand. Authorities cited. R.

11. Where a yard master, for the purpose of uncoupling cars, stepped between cars which were in motion on a down grade, and his foot caught under a brake beam, and part of the train passed over his leg, in an action for damages,—Held, that the evidence did not sustain the contention that the engineer saw the signal of plaintiff to stop, and that the injury was due to the defective condition of the engine. Danforth, J., dissenting, on the ground that the question was properly left to the jury to determine whether the injury was not due to the defective condition of the engine, and that from the evidence it appeared that the steam chest and the throttle were leaked, and therefore the judgment should be sustained.

Bajus v. Syracuse, B. & N. Y. R. R. Co. (N. Y.)

12. There is not a performance of a duty of the master until there has been placed at the servant's use perfect and adequate physical means, or due care used to that end. Authorities cited. Id.

13. In an action for damages for death caused by the explosion of a boiler owned by defendant, which was at the time in the charge of the vendor thereof, for the purpose of being repaired by it on its own account, it being claimed by plaintiff that the explosion resulted from the negligence of a servant of defendant assisting vendor's servants (of whom deceased was one) in testing the repairs.—Held, on the facts:

(a) That, in the absence of proof on the part of plaintiff, it must be presumed that defendant's servant either volunteered to aid vendor's servants, or was requested by them to do so; in either event he was not the servant of defendant in what he did, and defendant was not responsible for his acts.

(b) That defendant's servant was not guilty of negligence.

(c) That no responsibility was cast upon defendant if the accident occurred from any defect in the boiler which the employer of deceased was bound to repair.

Olive v. Whitney Marble Co. (N. Y.) 890

14. Where a railroad employee, after repeated warning of the danger, instead of riding in the gondola prepared for carrying the workmen, seated himself on the rear end of the tender, with his feet dangling over the side, and thereby was injured.—Held, he was guilty of contributory negligence and could not recover.

Lehigh Valley R. R. Co. v. Greiner (Pa.) 898

15. Where an employee of a mining company, while engaged in the performance of his duties, fell into a hole in the ground caused by steam escaping from an underground waste pipe.—Held, that if he saw the steam issuing from the ground, and deliberately walked into it, and was thus precipitated into the excavation, he was guilty of contributory negligence. Authorities cited. Id. 902

16. Where an employee, engaged in constructing and repairing a roadway, although forbidden and warned of the danger, did not ride in the box car prepared for carrying employees, but rode on the pilot or bumper of the locomotive, and the train in passing through a tunnel collided with cars standing on the track, and he was injured.—Held, he was guilty of contributory negligence. Authorities cited. Id. 903

17. Where plaintiff's deceased husband was injured by the falling of a sliding door in the store of the defendant.—Held, a verdict for the plaintiff should be set aside, it appearing that defendant had exercised reasonable care and skill in the selection of its servants, that the door was constructed with ordinary skill, and if the deceased was lawfully in the vicinity of the building in the course of his employment, he was a fellow-servant with the men whose negligence inflicted the injury, or if he was a trespasser or present by sufferance, the defendant owed no duty except to refrain from acts willfully injurious.

Collyer v. Pa. R. R. Co. (N. J.) 568

MAYOR. See MANDAMUS, 8; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 8.

C. R., V. IV.

MAXIMS.

1. He who asks Orandall v. Gr
2. Ignorance of supposed to know Lake S. & M. S.
3. When the rule itself ceases Borough of Cur
4. Delegatus non Hicks v. Willis
5. Interest reip Chapin v. Wrig
6. Sic utere tu Pa. Coal Co. v.

MECHANICS

MILLS AND

1. Land conveyed had acquired the described thereby by a certain creek along the deeded ciptious; the water for a long time b mill property o deeded property water power had pants of the de time before the e became available tion of the milld in view of the lo of the deeded pr ly to a strip of l rights in the la water power. (mill property l strained from

Hall v. White

2. When one proper model, stantially done, although it bre which his neigh destroyed. Aut Pa. Coal Co. v

3. If one built fees, and thus ho water for his ber on his premises dam or the ban and the lands of he is not liable of some fault. Authorities cited

4. In an actioning nuisance (b the natural flo nance of a dam) of May 2, 1878 (covery of dama in evidence the c to the day of the changes, and re Humphrey v.

5. If the dam defendants caused back water on plaintiff's land in any degree, in the ordinary stages of water, or freshets which are to be anticipated, then such dam or obstructions would be illegal, and plaintiff would also be entitled to recover such damages as arose from such dam or obstructions in extraordinary freshets. Id.

6. A dam can only produce its full effect on the stream above when the pond is full; and in a flowage suit, evidence of witnesses, attempting to give the usual state of the water in the pond or in the stream above, from observation, without knowing at time of observation whether the pond was full or not, is entitled to very little consideration.

McConnell v. Am. B. P. Mfg. Co. (N. J.) 72

7. After a mill owner has acquired by prescription an easement of flowage, only continuous, uninterrupted cessation in its use for the full period of twenty years, or such cessation commenced or continued under such circumstances as to evince an intention of abandonment, and as shall also render a subsequent resumption of it clearly inequitable to the owner of the servient tenement, will extinguish it. Authorities cited. Id.

78

MINES AND MINING.

1. A statute (Act of June 29, 1881) providing that all persons, firms, etc., engaged in mining coal, ore, etc., shall settle with their employees at least once a month, and pay them in legal money or cash orders, is unconstitutional and void. The Act is an infringement of the rights of the employer and employee; a laborer may sell his labor for what he thinks best. The Act is an insulting attempt to put the laborer under a legislative tutelage.

Godcharles & Co. v. Wigeman (Pa.) 887

2. A custom making 2,240 pounds a ton of coal is not good when opposed to a statute (Act of April 15, 1884) making 2,000 pounds a legal ton. Id.

3. Where an employee of a mining company, while engaged in the performance of his duties, fell into a hole in the ground caused by steam escaping from an underground waste-pipe,—Held, that if he saw the steam issuing from the ground, and deliberately walked into it, and was thus precipitated into the excavation, he was guilty of contributory negligence. Authorities cited.

Lehigh Valley R. R. Co. v. Greiner (Pa.) 902

4. The owner of a trestle, who negligently leaves great masses of ore piled against one side of it in such a manner as to make it unable to bear the weight of a locomotive run upon it by the employees of a railroad company, in accordance with a contract between him and the railroad company for delivering to him ore cars, is liable in damages for the death of a member of the crew of the locomotive, resulting from the fall of the trestle and locomotive.

Pottstown Iron Co. v. Fanning (Pa.) 647

5. Attachment will not lie for unliquidated damages, and hence will not lie for damages for breach of covenant in a mine lease to C. R., v. IV.

pay royalty for ore mined, and to remove a stipulated quantity per annum.

Heckscher v. Trotter (N. J.)

77

6. Where the cause of action is the pollution of a watercourse by water from a coal mine, and where the injury was caused by a combination of mine water which flowed naturally from the mines, which was damnum absque injuria, and water pumped from the mines, if as to the latter there would be a liability for injury inflicted, where the injury is estimated without distinguishing between these sources, the judgment will be reversed. Pa. Coal Co. v. Sanderson, 86 Pa. 401, overruled. Mercur, Ch. J., Gordon and Trunkey, JJ., dissenting.

Pa. Coal Co. v. Sanderson (Pa.)

475

7. The right to mine coal is a right incident to the ownership of coal property, and when exercised in the ordinary manner and with due care, the owner can not be held liable in damages to a riparian owner for permitting the natural flow of mine water over his own land, into the watercourse, by means of which the water supply of a riparian owner is affected in quality or quantity, the mine owner introducing nothing into the water to corrupt it, the impurities being from natural and not artificial causes, and the result being a mere personal injury, and not affecting the general health and well being of the community. Pa. Coal Co. v. Sanderson, 86 Pa. 401, overruled. Mercur, Ch. J., Gordon and Trunkey JJ., dissenting. Id.

8. The working of lower strata of coal by shaft, according to the present practice of mining, and the discharge of water in the shaft by the artificial means of pumping, would seem to be necessary for the natural use of the coal lands. Id.

9. One mine owner may permit water naturally flowing into his own mine to pass off by gravitation into an adjoining or lower mine, so long as his operations are carried on properly and in the usual manner. Authorities cited. Id.

480

10. Each of two owners of adjoining mines has a natural right to work his own mine in the manner most convenient and beneficial to himself, although the natural consequences may be that some prejudice will occur to the owner of the adjoining mine. Authorities cited. Id.

11. Taking out minerals is a natural use of mining property, and no adjoining proprietor can complain of the result of careful and proper mining operations. Authorities cited. Id.

481

12. The superior owner may improve his lands by throwing increased waters upon his inferior, through the natural and accustomed channels, which is a most important principle, in respect not only to agriculture but to mining operations also. Authorities cited. Id.

13. Land on a lower level is under a natural servitude to that located above it, to receive the water flowing down to it naturally.

Lords v. Carbon Iron Mfg. Co. (N. J.)

853

14. For damages resulting from natural causes, or from lawful acts done in a proper manner, the law gives no redress, such losses being regarded as damnum absque injuria; but where one of two adjoining mine owners conducts water into his neighbor's mine, which would not otherwise go there, or causes it to go there at different times and in greater quantities than it would go there naturally, he commits a legal wrong. Id.

15. The owner of mineral land has a right to take away the whole of the minerals in his land, for such is the natural course of user of such land; and if, in the course of such user, water accumulates on his land, either on the surface or underground, and then passes off by the operation of the laws of nature into the land of his neighbor, his neighbor has no legal cause of complaint. Id.

16. If an upper mine owner breaks through a barrier, which was left by the lower mine owner for the purpose of protecting his mine against the water which otherwise would flow from the upper into the lower mine, the trespasser is answerable for the damages, including the costs of restoring the barrier; but the trespass in such case imposes no legal duty upon the trespasser to either close the opening, or to prevent the water in his mine from flowing through the opening into the lower mine. Id.

17. Where one person makes a grant of land to another, reserving the minerals in the land, a covenant will be implied, in the absence of all words to that effect and solely from the nature of the transaction, that the grantor, in removing the minerals reserved, shall leave or provide sufficient support for the surface to prevent its subsidence. Id.

18. In a lease which declares that the land shall be occupied and worked for petroleum, rock, or carbon oil, and shall not be occupied or used for any other purpose whatsoever; and that if no oil is found in paying quantities within four years the lease be null and void, "oil" is not synonymous with "gas," and, accordingly, the production of gas alone will not satisfy the conditions of the lease. Truby v. Palmer (Pa.) 925

19. In an oil lease on royalty, a covenant to use due diligence in operating the premises runs with the land. Bradford Oil Co. v. Blair (Pa.) 101

20. A covenant in an oil lease to "continue, with due diligence and without delay, to prosecute the business to success or abandonment, and, if successful, to prosecute the same without interruption for the common benefit of the parties," construed to mean that, in the event of success, exploring and drilling for oil should be continued without interruption, for the common benefit of the parties, as well as gathering and collecting the same. Id.

21. The liability of the defendant under this covenant depends on the question whether or not the defendant violated the covenants to use due diligence, under the circumstances of the case. Id.

22. The measure of damages for the breach of such a covenant is the value of the C. R., V. IV.

oil which the lessor should have received, less the cost of producing it and the value of the oil actually received. Id.

23. A memorandum indorsed on a lease, signed by the parties but not dated or under seal, that "it is agreed that the said second parties are not to drill any wells in the barnyard, orchard, or garden without consent of first parties, but nobody else to have the right,"—Held, inadmissible in an action of covenant on an oil lease. Id.

MISNOMER. See DEED, 1.

MORTGAGE.

I. VALIDITY.

II. DEEDS ABSOLUTE IN FORM.

III. RECORDING.

IV. LIEN.

V. PAYMENT; SATISFACTION.

VI. FORECLOSURE.

VII. REDEMPTION.

See INSURANCE, 5, 7, 8, 10-18; JOINT TENANTS AND TENANTS IN COMMON, 8; PARTITION, 9, 10.

I. VALIDITY.

1. The validity of a mortgage as a lien on land is to be determined by the law of the place where the land is situate, although both parties reside in another State. Authorities cited.

Pittsb. & S. L. R. R. Co. v. Rothschild (Pa.) 110

2. A mortgage given by the grantee of land and accepted by the grantor, in furtherance of the specific purpose of putting the land out of the reach of the grantor's creditors, will not be enforced. Rowland v. Martin (Pa.) 760

3. Although the maker of a chattel mortgage may, as between himself and the mortgagee, be estopped from denying the indebtedness purporting to be secured thereby, yet on proof that the consideration expressed in the mortgage was greater than the real indebtedness, and that the mortgage was taken to protect the maker's property from his creditors, it may be held fraudulent as to creditors. Taylor v. Wood (N. J.) 133

4. A mortgage of the property of a corporation is an increase of its indebtedness, and can be effected only in compliance with art. 16, § 7, of the Constitution, and the Act of April 17, 1874. Otherwise a mortgage is void. Pittsb. & S. L. R. R. Co. v. Rothschild (Pa.) 107

5. Where tenants in common join in a mortgage of the premises held in common, to secure a debt incurred by one of them only, the interests of the others are bound thereby; and this effect of the instrument cannot be overcome by parol. The court can, however, order a sale of the interest of the debtor tenant in common first. Lorée v. Lewis (N. J.) 244

II. DEEDS ABSOLUTE IN FORM.

6. Where aged parents, by deed absolute, conveyed land to one of their children,—Held, from the fact that several mortgages were drawn by the same scrivener, intended to be executed by the grantee, but which remained unexecuted and unrecorded, and also certain verbal declarations of the grantee, that the consideration of the conveyance was that the grantee should support the parents and on their decease pay a certain sum of money to their next of kin; that this obligation was a lien upon the land, but could not be enforced against a bona fide assignee, without notice, of a mortgage which had subsequently been made by the grantee, although the original mortgagee had notice of such lien.

Sprague v. Drew (N. J.)

899

7. An instrument transferring machinery, and providing, in case of default, "this conveyance to be void and of no effect, and the possession of the goods herein described shall revert to the party of the first part," which was acknowledged and recorded, the transferee making an affidavit wherein he described himself as "the mortgagee," construed as a chattel mortgage.

Roddy v. Brick (N. J.)

850

8. Courts of equity lean against construing contracts to be conditional sales; and unless the construction be clearly made out to be of that nature, it is always construed to be a mortgage. Authorities cited. Id.

851

9. The true test whether a conveyance is a mortgage or not is to ascertain whether it is a security for the payment of any money or not; whether it is a security for the performance or nonperformance of any act or thing. If the transaction resolves itself into a security, whatever be its form, it is in equity a mortgage. If it be not a security, then it may be an absolute sale or a conditional purchase. Authorities cited. Id.

III. RECORDING.

10. An unregistered mortgage executed by an ancestor, although prior in date to a judgment recovered against his heir in the ancestor's lifetime, does not, on the ancestor's death, become void under the 22d section of the statute concerning mortgages.

Westervelt v. Voorhis (N. J.)

874

11. A conveyance by a husband to his wife, which was not recorded until after a mortgage was executed on the same land, is, under the Act of March 18, 1775, void as to the mortgagees without notice; hence, the children of the mortgagor, who claim title through the wife by deeds subsequent to the mortgage, are prima facie terretenants in a scire facias upon the mortgage, and are properly made parties to it.

Hulett v. Mut. L. Ins. Co. (Pa.)

767

IV. LIEN.

12. A mortgage and judgment, in order to stand in the relation of being prior C. R., V. IV.

and subsequent to each other, must embrace or cover the same land.

Westervelt v. Voorhis (N. J.)

874

13. Jersey City. Under the charter of Jersey City (P. L. of 1871, p. 1155, § 151) the lien of an assessment for a street improvement, upon mortgaged premises, is paramount to that of the mortgage.

Hand v. Jersey City (N. J.)

882

14. A prior mortgagee who has had possession of the mortgaged premises must account for rents and profits to the subsequent incumbrancer; but a subsequent incumbrancer in possession is not bound to account to the prior incumbrancer.

Leeds v. Gifford (N. J.)

148

15. A mortgage which does not by its terms pledge the rents and profits of the mortgaged premises for the payment of the mortgage debt gives the mortgagee no lien on them; and the mortgagor may take or assign them, without liability to account to the mortgagee for them. Id.

16. A purchaser of an equity of redemption at judicial sale takes the land burdened with the mortgage, and he has no right, therefore, to ask that some other fund be applied in discharge of the mortgage debt in relief of his estate.

Krueger v. Ferry (N. J.)

57

V. PAYMENT; SATISFACTION.

17. On the death of a purchaser who has assumed the payment of an outstanding mortgage, the land, and not the personal estate of the decedent, is primarily liable.

Coudert v. Coudert (N. J.)

132

18. Evidence on the question whether a mortgage, given to secure a usurious premium in addition to the debt, had been paid off, or whether the indebtedness secured thereby was included in a later mortgage, examined. Held, that the first mortgage had been fully paid before the second was executed, and that recovery of the usurious premium paid was barred by limitation.

Adams v. Mahnken (N. J.)

334

19. Where more interest than was actually called for has been paid on a mortgage, the tender of such a sum as, together with the excess of interest paid, will equal the amount due on the mortgage, is a good tender in satisfaction of the mortgage.

Perceval v. Gale (N. J.)

334

20. Statements by the owner of a mortgage as to a third person's being authorized to receive payments thereon for him, not made to the party liable on the mortgage, and not made to be communicated to him or to influence his conduct, will not estop the owner of the mortgage from afterwards denying the authority of such third person to receive payments.

Maguire v. Selden (N. Y.)

379

21. A parol agreement to extend the time of payment of a mortgage for one year is good.

Measurall v. Pearce (N. J.)

144

VI. FORECLOSURE.

23. Foreclosure proceedings in New York are ineffectual to pass title to property in Pennsylvania.

Pittab. & S. L. R. R. Co. v. Rothschild (Pa.) 107

28. Upon foreclosure, where defendant filed a cross bill alleging an agreement that if defendant would procure certain collateral securities to be executed and delivered to complainant, complainant would execute and deliver to defendant a writing extending the time for payment of a mortgage, and binding himself to accept the principal sum when tendered, and upon such payment to assign the bond and mortgage, etc., it is not necessary, in order to compel the delivery of the writing, to allege a tender of the amount due on the mortgage.

Eastwood v. Worrall (N. J.) 91

24. The execution of the written agreement did not depend upon the tender of the money, but upon the tender of the collaterals. Id.

25. A prior incumbrancer has a right, as against the mortgagor and subsequent incumbrancers, in case his security is precarious, to have the rents of the mortgaged premises (accruing subsequent to the appointment of a receiver) sequestered for his benefit.

Leeds v. Gifford (N. J.) 148

26. Mortgagee may take possession of premises, to obtain payment of his debt; and a payment so obtained is subject, in respect to its appropriation, to the legal rules governing the appropriation of other payments. Id.

27. There must be something of contrivance in mortgagee's conduct, or some positive misconduct on his part, to justify the court in depriving him of interest. Authorities cited. Id. 149

28. Application of a purchaser of real estate in Long Island City on the foreclosure of a mortgage, to be allowed on his purchase money the amount of taxes on the property for the years 1877 to 1885, remaining unpaid, opposed on the ground that said taxes were illegally assessed and therefore not valid liens—refused, with liberty to the purchaser to be relieved from his purchase.

Re Byrnes v. Stevens (N. Y.) 118

29. In a suit to foreclose a mortgage, payment after bill filed is properly set up by answer, and not by cross bill.

Kaable v. Goebbel (N. J.) 242

30. The right of a mortgagor to compel a mortgagee in possession to account for the rental value of premises is, in a suit to foreclose, a pure matter of defense, which the mortgagor may avail himself of by answer.

Krueger v. Perry (N. J.) 57

31. The mortgagee of an heir, devisee, or widow has no right to have the personal estate of decedent applied in relief of the land which such heir, etc., may take. Authorities cited. Id. 59

32. The holder of a lien subsequent to a junior mortgage has no standing to move to dismiss a bill to foreclose the junior mortgage, because the bill seeks to have the junior mortgage given a preference in payment over the prior mortgage.

Sergeant v. Mettler (N. J.) 861

33. A mortgage executed before the statute of 1880 (P. L. p. 255), declaring that no decree for deficiency shall be made in a foreclosure suit, is subject thereto. The Act merely affects the mode of remedy.

Toffey v. Atcheson (N. J.) 863

34. Upon a suit to foreclose a mortgage made by decedent in his lifetime, instituted after his death, where the mortgagee has obtained a judgment for deficiency against decedent's executors, in their representative capacity, he cannot maintain an action to set aside a fraudulent conveyance of real estate made by decedent in his lifetime, and to subject such real estate to his judgment for deficiency. The reclamation of real estate fraudulently conveyed by a decedent must be enforced by the executors, under Laws 1858, chap. 814.

Lichtenberg v. Herdtfelder (N. Y.) 887

35. In a scire facias on a mortgage or judgment, a terretenant is one who became seised or possessed of the debtor's land, subject to the lien thereof.

Hulatt v. Mut. L. Ins. Co. (Pa.) 767

VII. REDEMPTION.

36. Under Rev. 597, § 10, twenty years' possession of premises by mortgagee, after default of payment, bars the equity of redemption, and such bar is not subject to be waived by an incautious admission of mortgagee.

Chapin v. Wright (N. J.) 59

37. If a mortgagee in possession shall, after the equity of the mortgagor has become barred by lapse of time, admit, either by word or act, that his mortgage is still a subsisting lien, the bar previously existing will be considered to have been waived, and the equity of the mortgagor revived. Authorities cited. Id. 60

38. An admission having this effect will be considered to have been made if the mortgagee institutes proceedings, either by suit or otherwise, to foreclose his mortgage. Id.

39. An admission may be made by mortgagee's offering to purchase the equity of redemption. Id.

40. A mortgagor has a right, after condition broken, and at any time before his equity is lost by laches, to redeem the land which he has conveyed in pledge, by paying the mortgage debt. This right, however, is a pure equity, cognisable alone by courts of equity. Authorities cited. Id. 61

41. When mortgagor's equity is once extinguished it should remain absolutely blotted out forever. Authorities cited. Id.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

I. FORMATION; ANNEXATION; DIVISION.

II. OFFICERS; MAYOR; ALDERMEN; CONTROLLER; FIREMEN.

- III. TAXATION; PUBLIC PROPERTY.
- IV. LOCAL IMPROVEMENTS; STREETS; SEWERS; ASSESSMENTS.
- V. LIABILITY FOR TORTS; DEFECTIVE WAYS.
- VI. ACTIONS BY AND AGAINST.
- VII. PARTICULAR CHARTERS CONSTRUED.

See COUNTIES; FIRE AND FIRE DEPARTMENTS; GAS COMPANIES; POLICE AND POLICE DEPARTMENTS; SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS; TAXES.

I. FORMATION; ANNEXATION; DIVISION.

1. Where township voters have, at their regular election, fixed the amount to be raised for highways in the township for the ensuing year, and the township committee has appropriated the money, to be raised by taxation, to the several road overseers, and thereafter a part of the township votes to become an incorporated borough, the commissioners of such new borough are not entitled to the possession and control of the portion of such money, raised by taxation upon the part of the township incorporated in the borough; but the same is to be expended by the township overseer as apportioned by the township.

State v. Horner (N. J.) 145

2. The Legislature may, independent of any constitutional prohibition, incorporate towns or villages within townships, for special or limited purposes, without separating the territory within the prescribed limits from the rest of the township in other respects. Authorities cited. Id. 146

3. P. L. 1880, p. 191, to establish an excise department in cities of over 15,000 inhabitants, where the power to grant licenses is not vested in a board of excise or court of common pleas, is local and special and therefore unconstitutional.

State v. Trenton Board of License (N. J.) 83

4. Under Acts of March 7, 1882, and April 17, 1884, a petition for a special election for the formation of a projected borough must be signed by the owners of at least one tenth in value of the lands to be embraced, at the time of presenting such petition.

State v. Ocean Beach Comrs. (N. J.) 85

5. Under Act of March 7, 1882, § 2, for the formation of borough commissioners, prescribing that the chosen freeholder of any township shall call a special election upon petition signed by owners of at least one tenth in value of the lands to be embraced in the projected borough, the petitioners must be such owners at time of presenting the petition. Id.

6. Legislation dealing with the method of granting licenses must apply to all cities, or reduce all cities to a uniform system. Authorities cited.

State v. Trenton Board of License (N. J.) 85

II. OFFICERS; MAYOR; ALDERMEN; CONTROLLER; FIREMEN.

7. When neither the charter of a municipal C. R., V. IV.

corporation nor a general law of the State provides to the contrary, a majority of the board of aldermen of the corporation constitutes a quorum; and the vote of a majority of those present, there being a quorum, is all that is required for the adoption or passage of a motion, or the doing of any other act the board has power to do.

Barnet v. City of Paterson (N. J.) 248

8. It seems that the general principle, that where an officer is required by law to perform a duty involving the disbursement of money out of pocket he must be reimbursed, should be applied to the case of the mayer of a city seeking reimbursement from the city for his expenditures in resisting successfully an application for a mandamus against him, made on behalf of the city, to compel his official action in aid of an illegal corporate enterprise. Id.

9. In proceedings for removal of policemen in cities, under Act of March 25, 1885, the formalities prescribed for inferior criminal prosecutions are not requisite. It is sufficient if statutory directions are substantially observed.

State v. Mayor of Camden (N. J.) 82

10. The court may, in a proper case, correct an error in judgment on the part of the controller of Philadelphia, but it will not by mandamus interfere, in advance, with that discretion which it is his right and duty freely to exercise, or dictate the decision which, in a given case, he must reach.

Dechert v. Commonwealth (Pa.) 754

11. The city controller of Philadelphia possesses all the powers of county auditors; his jurisdiction in the exercise of these powers is as full and complete as that of the courts; and he is entitled to exercise them without interference. Id.

12. Where a contractor, having agreed with the city of Philadelphia to build a sewer, to receive payment in assessment bills against the fronting properties, to make no claim on the city for payment, and that the city shall not "in any wise guaranty any of said bills to be good and collectible," builds the sewer, receives the assessment bills, and brings suits against property owners, who resist the liens, and afterwards the city council, by ordinance, direct the chief engineer to draw, and the city controller to countersign, in payment for the work, a warrant for $600, against a survey department appropriation, the court will not, upon the controller's refusal, compel him by mandamus to countersign the warrant. Id.

13. Removal of fireman without notice or trial, illegal.

People v. Fire Comrs. (N. Y.) 774

III. TAXATION; PUBLIC PROPERTY.

14. The Act of May 14, 1874, entitled "An Act to Exempt from Taxation Public Property Used for Public Purposes," which exempts certain property and contains a proviso that "all property, real or personal, other than that which is in actual use and occupation for the purposes aforesaid, and from which anyia come or revenue is derived, shall be subject to taxation; and nothing herein contained shall exempt the same," imposes taxation upon public property used for public purposes from which a revenue is derived.

Erie Co. v. City of Erie (Pa.) 800

15. Property belonging to a municipality, owned and used by commissioners, appointed by law, in operating and carrying on water works to supply the public with water, and necessary for such purpose, from which a revenue is derived, is taxable under the Act of May 14, 1874. Id.

IV. LOCAL IMPROVEMENTS; STREETS; SEWERS; ASSESSMENTS.

16. Surveyors' fees are a proper item of expense to be included in an assessment for a local improvement.

Re Johnson (N. Y.) 856

17. The expense incurred by a gas company in removing and relaying its pipes, consequent upon the construction of a sewer, is a proper item of expense to be included in the assessment for the sewer, where a city ordinance imposed the duty of such removal and relaying upon the company, and provided for the insertion of the expense thereof in the assessment. Id.

18. It is presumed that one who held the title to assessed property for the convenience of another acted in such other person's behalf in maintaining a proceeding to vacate an illegal assessment; and that one who pays money under the coercion of an assessment had an interest in the land assessed. Any one aggrieved may complain, under Laws 1858, chap. 838.

Schultze v. City of New York (N. Y.) 518

19. The action of the court in reducing an assessment is conclusive that money overpaid thereon was obtained by the municipality without right, and is therefore held by it for the payer's use. Id.

20. An assessment for repaving in the city of New York, although valid on its face, is void for want of jurisdiction, where the proceeding was not based upon a petition of a majority of the property-owners, as required by the charter.

Jen v. New York City (N. Y.) 781

21. Chapter 812 of Laws of 1874, amending chapter 838 of Laws of 1858, and confining the remedy for the vacation of assessments in New York city to "the proceedings under the Act hereby amended," only applies where there is an existing lien created by the assessment, and does not affect the right of action to recover money unlawfully exacted under an illegal assessment. Id.

22. An assessment imposed without jurisdiction need not be first vacated in order to enable one to recover money paid thereon. Id.

23. The terms of Borough Act of March 7, 1873, relating to taxes for road purposes, should be construed to extend to assessments for road purposes where no previous appropriation has been made by legal authority.

State v. Horner (N. J.) 145

C. R., V. IV.

24. In an action for breach of covenant against incumbrances, contained in a warranty deed in the usual form, where an original assessment opening a street was in existence at the time of the execution of the deed, and afterwards a reassessment was made, — Held, that the lien of the reassessment related back to the lien of the original assessment, and attached when the assessment was affirmed, and not when the work was completed, and that the covenant was broken as soon as made.

Cadmus v. Fagan (N. J.) 809

25. The charter of the city of Elizabeth, giving power to the city council to grant the right to lay down railroad tracks in the streets, as it makes no provision for compensation to the owners of the land, does not give authority to the city to exercise the right of eminent domain.

Chamberlain v. Elizabethport S. O. Co. (N. J.) 870

26. A contract made by a city, under an ordinance which has not been annulled and which is not ultra vires, is obligatory at law.

Atlantic City Water Works Co. v. Atlantic City (N. J.) 841

27. It does not necessarily follow that, because a contract entered into by a city calls for payments in futuro indefinitely, such obligation was in excess of the limits of expenditure imposed upon the common council. Id.

28. Where the report of a board of assessors, in a proceeding to condemn land for a street opening in Trenton, shows that they met at the time and place appointed, and nothing appearing to the contrary, the report must be accepted as true. Such report should show what notice of the meeting of the assessors was given, and what manner of publication was adopted.

State v. City of Trenton (N. J.) 80

29. Under the charter (Laws 1873, p. 872), the assessors could not appoint meetings after the expiration of thirty days from the time appointed for their first meeting. Id.

30. Compliance with the charter requirements that the report be completed and filed within thirty days after first meeting is essential to the validity of the proceeding. Id.

31. Everything necessary to give validity to the action of a special tribunal must appear in the record. Authorities cited. Id. 81

32. Municipal claims for paving and curbing in Philadelphia are to be estimated according to frontage, except in the case of rural or suburban land.

Stewart v. Phila. (Pa.) 674

33. Rural land is land not already so far improved, or in the midst of or in such close proximity to city improvements, that it can fairly be said that paving and curbing are requisite for the benefit of the land as a part of the city proper. Id.

34. Prima facie, all land within the city limits is subject to the frontage rule, and the burden of proving land rural rests upon the owner. Id.

35. Municipal assessment of land as rural for the purpose of taxation does not estop the city from denying its rural character in a claim for paving and curbing. Id.

V. LIABILITY FOR TORTS; DEFECTIVE WAYS.

86. Where a municipality improving a public highway causes an obstruction to be put upon the road, it is its duty to give some appropriate warning of the fact; and if there is nothing to indicate to a stranger that the traveled route is at the side of a road, it is presumed to be in the center.

Borough of Carlisle v. Brisbane (Pa.) 508

87. In an action by a stranger against a municipality, for an injury caused by an obstruction in the center of the highway, evidence to show that the plaintiff took the center of the road, and that the traveled route had previously been there, is admissible. Id.

88. Where a passenger rides, without pay, with another who is driver of a team, exercising entire control over it, and who is in no sense the passenger's agent or servant, the negligence of the driver, or his knowledge of the defective condition of the road, cannot be imputed to the passenger so as to bar an action by him against the negligent third party. The passenger is answerable for his own negligence only. Id.

VI. ACTIONS BY AND AGAINST.

89. A municipality having the control and supervision of the public highways within its territorial limits may maintain a suit in equity to prevent any alteration of the streets or injury to them which will deprive the public of their use.

Jersey City v. Cent. R. R. Co. (N. J.) 337

40. Assuming that, when a town has been bonded for the construction of a railroad, upon condition that a permanent depot should be erected and maintained at a specified point within the town, a contract is created between the town and the railroad company, such contract can only be enforced by some proceeding on behalf of the town; it is not a matter of public interest in such sense that it can be enforced by mandamus on the application of the attorney-general on behalf of the people of the State.

People v. Rome, W. & O. R. R. Co. (N. Y.) 197

VII. PARTICULAR CHARTERS CONSTRUED.

41. Atlantic City. Under the provision of the charter authorizing the city to provide by ordinance "for a supply of water for said city," the city is empowered to contract to pay a specified sum annually, for a series of years, for the use of water for fire purposes.

Atlantic City Water Works Co. v. Atlantic City (N. J.) 341

42. Auburn. Violations excise law; authority of board of charities and police to sue for penalties. Laws 1879, chap. 58, title 7, § 771.

City of Auburn v. Burtis (N. Y.) 235

43. Bayonne. Lien of assessment for opening streets; reassessments relate back to lien of original assessment.

Cadmus v. Fagan (N. J.) 309

C. R., V. IV.

44. Camden. Proceedings for removal of policemen.

State v. Mayor of Camden (N. J.) 33

45. Act of March 6, 1884, providing that clerk of criminal court shall be paid salary in lieu of fees is unconstitutional as special legislation.

Halleck v. Hollingshead (N. J.) 570

46. Elizabeth. sales of land to, for non-payment of taxes for the term of 900 years, are unauthorized.

Baldwin v. City of Elizabeth (N. J.) 325

47. Provision in charter authorizing city councils to grant right to lay down railroad tracks in streets, without providing compensation to abutting owners, is unconstitutional.

Chamberlain v. Elizabethport S. C. Co. (N. J.) 370

48. Erie. Taxation of rural property; Act of Feb. 25, 1870.

City of Erie v. Reed (Pa.) 437

49. Gloucester. Laws 1868, p. 106, authorizing councils to pass ordinance for appointing watchmen, constables, and police; removal of police.

State v. Gloucester City (N. J.) 574

50. Jersey City. Tenure of office of firemen, under Laws 1885, p. 180.

State v. Jersey City Fire Comrs. (N. J.) 334

51. Lien of assessment for street improvement is paramount to that of a mortgage thereon.

Hand v. Jersey City (N. J.) 322

52. Under the charter of Jersey City (P. L. of 1871, p. 1155, § 151), the lien of an assessment for a street improvement, upon mortgaged premises, is paramount to that of the mortgage. Id.

53. Parties interested are not legally entitled to a hearing before the board of finance and taxation, upon the question whether that board shall concur in a resolution of the board of public works ordering a street improvement. The proceedings are regulated by P. L. 1874, p. 504, § 2.

State v. Jersey City (N. J.) 343

54. New York city. Bribery by member of common council, punishable under § 72 of the Penal Code.

People v. Jaehne (N. Y.) 163

55. The determination of the commissioners appointed under the Act of 1872, chap. 580, "In relation to Certain Local Improvements in the City of New York," that a contract is free from fraud, is conclusive as to the validity of the contract.

Re Johnson (N. Y.) 303

56. Prohibition against depositing in the port of New York any dredging or other material within certain limits. Laws 1881, chap. 344.

Post v. Kreischer (N. Y.) 213

57. Assessments for repaving; petition of the majority of property-holders required.

Jez v. New York City (N. Y.) 730

58. Under Laws 1858, chap. 338 (N. Y. City Consolidation Act, Laws 1853, chap. 410, § 386), conferring the right to maintain a proceeding to reduce an assessment upon any person "aggrieved thereby," legal ownership of the seized property is not essential. One who holds title for another may maintain a proceeding to vacate an illegal assessment and for recovery of over payments.

Schulze v. City of New York (N. Y.) 518
59. Appeals from judgments of the City, late Marine, Court of New York.

Hutkoff v. Demorest (N. Y.) 773
60. Paterson. Right of mayor to reimbursements for expenses in resisting mandamus; validity of action of board of aldermen by majority of quorum present. P. L. 1871, p. 836, § 67.

Barnet v. City of Paterson (N. J.) 248
61. Philadelphia. City controller; discretion; mandamus.

Dechert v. Commonwealth (Pa.) 754
62. Claims for paving and curbing; frontage rule; rural property.

Stewart v. City of Philadelphia (Pa.) 674

63. Trenton. Proceedings to condemn land for street opening; meeting of assessors; report.

State v. City of Trenton (N. J.) 80

MURDER. See HOMICIDE.

MUTUAL ACCOUNTS. See ACCOUNT.

NAVY. See ARMY AND NAVY.

NEGLIGENCE.

I. WHAT IS; EVIDENCE.

II. OF RAILROAD COMPANIES

III. ACTIONS FOR DEATH.

See ANIMALS; BRIDGES; CARRIERS, II.; MASTER AND SERVANT, II.; MILLS AND DAMS, 2-5; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, V.

I. WHAT IS; EVIDENCE.

1. The owner of a trestle who negligently leaves great masses of ore piled against one side of it in such a manner as to make it unable to bear the weight of a locomotive run upon it by the employees of a railroad company, in accordance with a contract between him and the railroad company for delivering to him ore cars, is liable in damages for the death of a member of the crew of the locomotive, resulting from the fall of the trestle and locomotive.

Pottstown Iron Co. v. Fanning (Pa.) 647

2. Where one places a steam boiler upon his premises, and operates the same with care and skill, so that it is no nuisance, in the absence of proof of fault or negligence on his part, he is not liable for damages to his neighbor occasioned by an explosion of his boiler.

Pa. Coal Co. v. Sanderson (Pa.) 484

3. A scintilla of evidence, or a mere surmise that there may have been negligence, is not sufficient to send the case to the jury. Authorities cited.

Dwight v. Germania L. Ins. Co. (N. Y.) 536

4. Gross neglect is defined to be the want of that care which an ordinary man of common sense, under the circumstances, takes of his own property. Authorities cited.

Mark v. Hudson River Bridge Co. (N. Y.) 207

5. A man must use his property so as not to incommode his neighbor; but the maxim only extends to neighbors who do not interfere with or enter upon it. If it were not so, a proprietor could not sink a well, or dig a ditch, pit, or millrace, etc. Authorities cited.

Moore v. Logan Iron & S. Co. (Pa.) 506

II. OF RAILROAD COMPANIES.

6. What is or is not negligence in a particular case is generally a question for the jury. Authorities cited.

Neslie v. Second & Third Sts. Passenger R. Co. (Pa.) 700

7. Where a passenger rides, without pay, with another who is driver of a team, exercising entire control over it, and who is in no sense the passenger's agent or servant, the negligence of the driver or his knowledge of the defective condition of the road, cannot be imputed to the passenger so as to bar an action by him against a negligent third party. The passenger is answerable for his own negligence only.

Borough of Carlisle v. Brisbane (Pa.) 508

8. Where goods in the hands of a common carrier are injured by the negligent act of a third party, to which the negligence of the carrier contributed, and an action is brought by the owner against the third party, the carrier's contributory negligence is a good defense. Authorities cited. Id. 511

9. Where a passenger is personally injured by the joint negligence of the carrier and another party, his remedy is against his carrier alone. Authorities cited. Id.

10. The passenger is so far identified with the carriage in which he is traveling that want of care on the part of the driver will be a defense of the owner of the other carriage that directly causes the injury. Authorities cited. Id.

11. Where a lady accepted an invitation to ride in a buggy with a person who was entirely competent to manage a horse, but she was injured by collision with a steam railroad train, it was held that she was entitled to recover if the company was negligent and the plaintiff free from negligence herself, although the driver of the buggy might have been guilty of negligence which contributed to the injury. Authorities cited. Id. 513

12. Where a passenger in a street railway car was injured by a collision with a steam railroad train, — Held, in order to recover against the company operating the steam railroad train, the plaintiff must show not only that the injury resulted from defendant's negligence, but that the negligence of the carrier company did not contribute to the result. Authorities cited. Id. 511

13. Where the facts are disputed, where there is any doubt or inference to be drawn from them, or where the measure of duty is ordinary and reasonable care, and the degree varies according to the circumstances, the question cannot be considered by the court; it must be submitted to the jury. Authorities cited.

Lehigh Valley R. R. Co. v. Greiner (Pa.) 901

14. Contributory negligence, to prevent recovery, must be such as co-operates in causing the injury and without which the injury would not have happened. Authorities cited. Id.

15. It is the plain, imperative duty of the traveler, before crossing the track of a railroad, to stop, look, and listen for approaching trains; and his failure to do so in case of injury has been declared not to be evidence of negligence merely, but negligence per se, and therefore a question for the court. Authorities cited. Id.

16. Where a passenger, owing to the crowded condition of the cars, was unable to find a seat, although there was standing room inside, stepped outside upon the pretense of finding a seat in another car, but remained upon the platform, where by a jolt of the cars he was thrown to the ground and injured, —Held, he was guilty of contributory negligence. Authorities cited. Id. 902

17. It is the duty of the engineer when his train is approaching a highway, if danger is to be apprehended, to give the proper warning by the whistle or otherwise, and a failure to do so is negligence per se. Authorities cited. Id.

18. Where a passenger was passing over a bridge, —Held, it was negligence on the part of the engineer of a train passing under the bridge to sound the alarm whistle. Authorities cited. Id.

19. Where a boy, at the request of a fireman, climbed upon a locomotive, and was thrown off by a jar, it was held that the company owed him no duty. Authorities cited.

Moore v. Logan Iron & S. Co. (Pa.) 506

20. A person crossing a railroad track by a common and well known foot path, used by the public for many years without let or hindrance on the part of the railroad company and its employees, is not a trespasser.

Taylor v. Del. & H. O. Co. (Pa.) 628

21. While user by the public, for many years, of a path across a railroad track, does not convert the company's right of way into a public highway, it implies a license from the company, and charges the company with the duty of using ordinary care toward those crossing by the path. Id.

22. Whether public user of a path across railroad tracks exists, and whether the company exercised ordinary care, as regards speed and signals in a given case, or was guilty of negligence, which was the proximate cause of the injury, are questions of fact for the jury. Id.

23. Contributory negligence is not a defense to an action for injuries to a child, eight years of age, who is crossing the track by a foot path used by the public for years. Id.

24. Where a mother sent her daughter, who was four years of age, to do an errand across the street, and the child was injured by a passing horse car, while crossing the street at a crossing where people were accustomed to cross and at which there was no special hazard, —Held, in an action brought by the child by her next friend that the contributory negligence, if any, of the mother will not bar recovery by an infant, and that the question of negligence on the part of the driver was properly left to the jury, it appearing that the driver was charged not only with driving the horses, but also collecting fare, no change box being in the car; that before reaching the crossing he had given his attention to passengers; that by his own testimony he did not see the child though he was looking ahead; and other persons saw the child in danger and endeavored to get the driver to stop.

Erie City Passenger Co. v. Schuster (Pa.) 919

25. Where the defendant, discharging his duties carefully, could have avoided injuring a child, no amount of negligence by the child's parents is a defense. Authorities cited. Id. 921

26. While a father could not recover for the injury of his infant son, caused in part by his own imprudence, yet the infant himself may recover. Authorities cited. Id.

27. The contributory negligence of a parent will not bar recovery by an infant, for injuries resulting from the negligence of another. Authorities cited. Id.

28. Where an injury is inflicted wilfully, or with reckless indifference to the rights of others, exemplary damages may be recovered.

Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Rosenauig (Pa.) 712

29. The question of contributory negligence is for the jury, where the evidence is conflicting. Id.

30. Where the only result of defects in a locomotive engine is to diminish its power, the responsibility of the railroad company for such defects is no greater than it would be in the case of a new engine of the same power as the defective engine at the time of an accident claimed to have been caused thereby.

Bajus v. Syracuse, R. & N. Y. R. R. Co. (N. Y.) 518

31. A railroad company is not bound to have at a given point an engine of sufficient power to avert the consequences of an accident which it had no reason to anticipate. Id.

32. In an action to recover damages from a railroad company for the death of a person found mortally injured on the track, under a highway bridge built by the company, and which it was required to maintain, the negligence of the company was alleged to consist in the unsafe condition of the approach to the bridge; there was, however, no evidence that the deceased was on the bridge, or was seen going in that direction before his injury. Held, that there was nothing to connect the injury with the condition of the bridge, or with the failure of the company to perform its duty to restore the highway to a proper state or to make the passage of the bridge safe, and hence, that a verdict against the company could not be sustained.

Gardiner v. N. Y. C. & H. R. R. Co. (N. Y.) 785

83. A conductor's written statement giving details of an accident, made immediately after it happened, is not admissible in evidence; but the facts must be proved by the conductor or others who witnessed the occurrence. Conductor may use such written statement to refresh his memory.

North Hudson Co. R. Co. v. May (N. J.) 81

84. The driver of a vehicle rightfully using a street railroad track as a part of the public street is entitled to notice that the company required the track for its car, before he is obliged to leave the track. Where plaintiff was driving on the main track and suddenly a car was moved on a spur track,—Held, the case was properly submitted to the jury to determine whether, under the facts, the safer and more prudent course for plaintiff to have pursued to avoid collision was to attempt to get off the track, or to quicken his speed and pass before the car reached the main track, and the fact that plaintiff urged on his horses, and failed to reach a point necessary to avoid a collision by about a foot did, not constitute evidence of contributory negligence. Paterson, J., dissenting, that it appeared that plaintiff had sufficient notice of the approach of the car, was an expert in driving horses, familiar with the locality, and with proper caution could have avoided a collision.

Orange & N. Horse R. R. Co. v. Ward (N. J.) 825

85. If it appears from plaintiff's evidence that his own negligence caused the injury of which he complains, or contributed to it in such way that but for it he would not have received harm from defendant's negligence, the court should nonsuit, and error may be assigned upon its refusal. Authorities cited. Id. 826

III. ACTIONS FOR DEATH.

86. An action to recover damages for causing death by negligence is not within supreme court Rule 16, requiring certain actions to be styled, in the process and pleadings, actions of tort.

Van Blarcom v. D. L. & W. R. R. Co. (N. J.) 565

NEW TRIAL. See CRIMINAL LAW, IV.

NEXT OF KIN. See DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION, 2, 9, 10.

NONRESIDENTS. See ASSIGNMENT FOR BENEFIT OF CREDITORS, 1, 5, 6.

NONSUIT. See NEGLIGENCE, 6, 13, 14, 22, 24, 27, 35.

1. If the proof of a fact is so preponderating that a verdict against it would be set aside as contrary to the evidence, it is the duty of the court to direct the verdict; it is not the rule that if there is a scintilla of evidence in support of a proposition, or if the evidence against it does not amount to a demonstration of its incorrectness, a question is raised which must be left to the jury. Authorities cited.

o. R., V. IV.

Dwight v. Germania L. Ins. Co. (N. Y.) 586

2. Since the scintilla doctrine has been exploded both in England and in this country, the preliminary question of law for the court is, not whether there is literally no evidence, or a mere scintilla, but whether there is any that ought reasonably to justify the jury that the fact sought to be proved is established. Authorities cited. Id.

NOTARY PUBLIC.

The validity of the execution of a commission to take testimony is not affected by the fact that the commissioner signs himself throughout as a notary public merely, except across the seal of the envelope in which he returns the testimony.

Del. & H. O. Co. v. Webster (Pa.) 638

NOTICE. See VENDOR AND PURCHASER, 5-8.

NOVATION. See RECEIVER, 3.

NUISANCE.

1. The statutory sanction which will justify an injury to private property must be express, or must be given by clear and unquestionable implication from the powers expressly conferred, so that it can fairly be said that the Legislature contemplated the doing of the very act which occasioned the injury.

Cogswell v. N. Y. N. H. & H. R. R. Co. (N. Y.) 225

2. Assuming that the general power given by the Laws of 1848, chap. 143, § 6, to the New York & New Haven R. R. Co. to run its trains into New York city over the New York & Harlem Railroad includes, as incidental thereto, the power to purchase land for an engine house, it does not sanction the maintenance of the nuisance, injurious to private property, resulting from the building and use of an engine house, as by extending smokestacks so as to cause smoke, gases, etc., to enter a private dwelling, rendering it untenable. Id.

3. Statutory authority may justify acts which otherwise would give a cause of action. Authorities cited. Id. 229

5. A party who is specially injured is entitled to an injunction to restrain a nuisance, as the unlawful occupation of a street by a railroad, without proving the amount of damage.

Pa. R. R. Co. v. Mish (Pa.) 276

6. In an action for damages for a continuing nuisance (here, the interference with the natural flow of water by the maintenance of a dam), plaintiff may, under the Act of May 2, 1876 (P. L. 95), permitting the recovery of damages up to the day of trial, give in evidence the condition of the obstruction up to the day of trial, including all additions, changes, and repairs made after suit brought.

Humphrey v. Irvin (Pa.) 685

7. One man cannot with impunity invade the premises of another by a nuisance, because the damages may be inappreciable. The law allows the recovery of nominal damages, at least, as evidence of plaintiff's right. Authorities cited. Id. 687

OBSTRUCTIONS. See WAYS, IV.

OFFICE AND OFFICER. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, VI.; CORONER; CORPORATIONS, IV.; FIRE AND FIRE DEPARTMENTS; MANDAMUS, 8-8; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, II.; POLICE AND POLICE DEPARTMENTS; RAILROAD COMPANIES, 8; RECEIVER; SHERIFF; STATE AND STATE OFFICERS.

1. It seems that the general principle, that where an officer is required by law to perform a duty involving the disbursement of money out of pocket he must be reimbursed, should be applied to the case of the mayor of a city seeking reimbursement from the city for his expenditures in resisting successfully an application for a mandamus against him, made on behalf of the city, to compel his official action in aid of an illegal corporate enterprise.

Barnet v. City of Paterson (N. J.) 248

2. While a police officer may come within the rule that a person holding a public office has a prima facie right to his salary, although physically disabled from performing his duties, but where a municipal regulation provided that an officer absent from duty without leave, should forfeit all pay during his absence, except when sick and so certified by a physician, there can be no recovery during absence from sickness without the certificate of a physician.

City of Wilkesbarre v. Meyers (Pa.) 820

3. An order of court, under Act April 10, 1878, fixing compensation of incumbent sheriff, for boarding prisoners, at one sum for one year and at a less sum for another year, during his term of office, does not violate Constitution, art. 8, § 18, prohibiting the increasing or diminishing of salary or emoluments of any public officer after his election or appointment, notwithstanding a prior order made during his term, fixing the compensation for the past services of his predecessor.

Peeling v. County of York (Pa.) 87

4. The compensation ordered to be paid to the sheriff, by law, for the board of prisoners in the county jail, is an emolument of his office, within the Constitution, art. 8, § 18. Authorities cited. Id. 88

5. The Act of March 28, 1877, authorizing any of the prothonotaries and sheriffs of the several counties of the Commonwealth, within six years after the expiration of their official term of office, to sue any one residing out of the county, before a justice of the peace within the county, for fees for official services, before or after judgment; authorizing constables to appoint deputies (in the county where the defendant resides) to execute the writ; providing for execution in any county in the Commonwealth, and making a certificate of the prothonotary of the county where suit is brought prima facie evidence that such fees are lawfully due and correct, — Held, to be spe- cial legislation and unconstitutional, under the Constitution, art. 8, § 7.

Strine v. Foltz (Pa.)

283

6. A power to remove an officer "for cause" can be exercised only for good cause, and after the officer has had an opportunity for defense. Authorities cited.

State v. Police Comrs. of Newark (N. J.) 573

OIL. See MINES AND MINING, 18-21.

OLEOMARGARINE. See ADULTERATION.

OPINIONS. See EVIDENCE, V.

ORPHANS' COURTS. See COURTS, 10-18.

OYSTERS. See FISH AND FISHERIES.

PARENT AND CHILD.

The Act of April 8, 1883, allowing after-born children to take against the will, applies only to those physically born after the execution of the will, and does not apply to those legitimated after the making of the will.

Appeal of McCulloch (Pa.)

466

PAROL EVIDENCE. See EVIDENCE, III.

PARTITION.

1. A bill in equity for partition of lands may be maintained by a party holding an equitable title against a party in possession holding the legal title.

Appeal of Church (Pa.)

95

2. In a bill in equity against husband and wife to establish title to real estate and to compel conveyance of the wife's title, the wife died without having executed a decree ordering conveyance. A bill for partition against the husband and surviving child was sustained, and a conveyance ordered. Id.

3. In an action at law for partition, possession adversely held, for however short a time, will prevent recovery; for an action of partition cannot be turned into an ejectment, nor made the medium of trying titles. Authorities cited. Id.

4. A suit in equity for partition may become the medium of settling a disputed equitable title. Authorities cited. Id.

5. Jurisdiction of partition in equity grew up to supply defects and inadequacies in proceedings for partition at common law. Authorities cited. Id.

6. Partition may be maintained where the plaintiff has such an equity as would entitle him to compel a conveyance. Authorities cited. Id. 96

7. Plea of being a purchaser for value without notice is equitable in its nature; it is simply the assertion of a superior title. Authorities cited. Id. 97

8. The Act of March 29, 1883, charges a widow's dower on the land, in partition proceedings; and the orphans' court cannot divest the dower, by decree or otherwise, unless the widow's consent is procured in such manner as to pass her estate. Mere knowledge on her part will not operate as an estoppel.

Diefendorfer v. Eschleman (Pa.) 290

9. Owerty, decreed by the common pleas in partition proceedings in equity and charged on the land allotted, is subject to the lien of a mortgage of the undivided interest for which it is payment; and the cotenant to whom the land is allotted must either make application to pay the money into court, or else pay the mortgage debt.

Reed v. Fidelity Ins. T. & S. D. Co. (Pa.) 763

10. A release of the land by the mortgagor, in accordance with the decree, upon payment of the owerty to him, does not prevent the mortgagee from afterwards recovering the mortgage debt from the cotenant to whom the land was allotted. Id.

11. The husband of a tenant in common of coal bearing lands, in a city, built a dwelling-house and buildings for mining and selling coal. A bill in equity for partition was filed, after the wife's death, against the husband and their minor child. On the master's report, the court determined the undivided interests of the cotenants and decreed that partition should be made. Before commissioners to divide, evidence as to the improvements was received, and the lands containing the improvements were allotted to the husband and minor child at a valuation not including the improvements. Held, proper.

Kelsey v. Church (Pa.) 99

12. A bill of review, to correct a clear mistake in fact on which a decree in partition was made, will lie more than three years after the decree was made. Authorities cited.

Appeal of Johnson (Pa.) 895

PARTNERSHIP.

1. Where, in an action seeking to hold certain parties liable as copartners with the party (here, a corporation) to whom goods had been sold, it appears from the contract between defendants and the vendee that, as between themselves, they were not copartners, it is essential to a recovery to show that defendants held themselves out as copartners with the vendee, and that the vendee obtained credit on that account.

McLewes v. Hall (N. Y.) 868

2. Under a complaint seeking to hold one liable as a partner for goods sold to another, proof of defendant's liability as purchaser and original debtor cannot be given without an amendment of the complaint. Id.

3. Administrators cannot maintain a bill to have their coadministrator account for the "good will" of their intestate's business continued by their coadministrator with their consent, all the administrators being equally in the wrong for not turning such good will into cash as an asset of the estate.

Fay's Admrs. v. Fay (N. J.) 241

4. Payment for the "good will" of a business must be claimed at the time of the transfer of the business. Id.

5. To recover for the "good will" of a business transmitted from one person to another, C. R., V. IV.

other, it must appear affirmatively that there was a "good will" connected with the business, of some value in itself. Proof merely that the business is profitable is not enough. Id.

6. One partner cannot sue another partner for a partnership transaction except by bill in equity or action of account render. Authorities cited.

Crow v. Greene (Pa.) 276

7. If certain members of a firm make a settlement of a firm claim which will be binding as between the firm and the party with whom it is made, a member of the firm who had no part in making the settlement, and who was defrauded thereby, may, nevertheless, maintain an action for damages for the fraud; such damages being limited to the diminution of his partnership share produced by the waste of partnership assets in the fraudulent settlement.

Sweet v. Morrison (N. Y.) 812

8. The amount of such damages due the defrauded partner can only be ascertained in a proceeding for an accounting between him and his copartners; and thereafter the third party with whom the fraudulent settlement was collusively made can be compelled to pay him only what is required, after the exhaustion of the firm assets, to make up to him such loss as can be traced to the waste of the disputed asset by his copartners in collusion with said third party. Id.

9. One partner appointed to conduct financial settlements of the firm cannot substitute one of his copartners in his place, to the exclusion of the others; but when he surrenders control, it goes back to the firm as a whole; and a settlement made by his copartners binds the firm. Id.

10. An agreement between copartners, that one of them shall conduct the financial settlements of the firm, should not be construed as abrogating or dividing the general partnership authority and as giving the one partner absolute control of such branch of the business, unless such intention is clearly shown. Id.

11. That a deed of assignment of a limited partnership was at first indexed in the "Limited Partnership Docket," and not in the "Deed Book Index," does not invalidate the recording of the instrument.

Sheble v. Bryden (Pa.) 664

12. Evidence as to the value of services, and as to whether they were rendered as partner or as employee, examined, and held that, although some of the services related to partnership property, others did not, and a recovery sustained. Rapallo and Andrews, JJ., dissenting.

Johnson v. Myers (N. Y.) 778

PARTY-WALL.

In an action for damages on a bond, in proceedings to restrain tearing down an alleged party-wall, preparatory to building a new building, evidence is admissible, to disprove damages, that the new building erected beside the old wall could have been.

erected without any detention, with the old wall standing.

Senseng v. Parry (Pa.)

48

PASSENGERS. See CARRIERS, II.

PATENTS.

1. It appearing from the bill that an application for a patent was filed in the patent office in 1874, and definitively refused by decision of the commissioner in 1875; that no appeal therefrom to the Supreme Court of the District was taken, but that various efforts for the review and reversal of said decision were made from time to time; that in 1885 another application was filed in the patent office, which was again rejected for the same cause; that from this last refusal no appeal was taken, but in 1886 a bill in equity, under section 4915, R. S., was filed in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, the secretary of the interior being joined with the commissioner of patents as a party defendant,—on demurrer to the bill it was Held:

(a) That an applicant for patent is not, in an ex parte case, entitled to redress by bill in equity, until he has exhausted the remedy by appeal provided in section 4911, R. S.;

(b) That this application for patent was constructively abandoned in 1877, under section 4895, R. S., because the various efforts to procure a reversal of the decision of 1875, and the application filed in 1885, were irregular and illegal proceedings, not contemplated by said section;

(c) That the secretary of the interior may not be made a party defendant to the bill.

Kirk v. Commissioner of Patents (D. C.) 625

2. Drilling jar of combined iron and steel, the object being to avoid friction and to obtain tensile strength, will not include drilling jar of steel.

Dick v. Bovaird (Pa.)

44

3. Equity has jurisdiction to compel an accounting and discovery in aid thereof, and to restrain the manufacture of other than a patent article in violation of the terms of a written contract.

Bovaird v. Dick (Pa.)

40

4. In a bill for an account of royalties on patented articles manufactured, articles made in violation of the agreement, but not under letters patent, cannot be included in the account.

Dick v. Bovaird (Pa.)

44

5. Contract to render patentee monthly statements of all articles made during the previous month and to whom sold, with an agreement to pay royalty for each article so made, will not include unmerchantable articles.

Id

6. A contract for the manufacture of a licensed article, giving licensors the option to terminate it and declare the license forfeited at any time when licensees shall make default in making the statements and payments required of them by the contract, cannot be rescinded by licensees' refusing the statement. The licensees are liable as long as they manufacture during the continuance of the patent.

Bovaird v. Dick (Pa.)

40

7. In an action to enforce a contract granting a license to manufacture a patented article, it is no defense to allege that plaintiff had no right to the patent or to grant the license to others.

Id

PAUPERS. See POOR AND POOR LAWS.

PAYMENT. See BANKRUPTCY, 1; BILLS AND NOTES, 1; CHECKS; JUDGMENT, 18; LIEN, 2, 8; LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, 5-8; MORTGAGE, V.; PRINCIPAL AND AGENT, 5-8.

1. When a creditor has received more than was due him from his debtor, the excess is deemed so much money of the debtor in the hands of the creditor for the use of the debtor; and if, on a subsequent transaction between the parties, the debtor becomes again indebted, such excess will be presumed to have been applied by the creditor upon the subsequent indebtedness when it accrued, and the debtor will not be deprived of the benefit of such application by force of the Statute of Limitations, in an action by the creditor for the entire indebtedness.

Andrews, J., dissenting.

180

2. A judgment in an action of tort, to recover money alleged to have been obtained by fraud, is not a bar to a subsequent action to recover the same money, on the ground that it had been made under a mistake of facts.

Id

8. Where a cashier's check is given by a debtor to a creditor for a pre-existing debt, the presumption of law is that it was intended only as a conditional payment. Surrender by the creditor of the note of the debtor will not overcome such presumption.

Cannonsburgh Iron Co. v. Union Nat. Bank (Pa.)

258

4. Receiving promissory notes on account of a claim will not imply an extension of the time of payment or an agreement to sever the debt, in an action on a book account.

Buck v. Wilson (Pa.)

648

5. A debtor making a payment to his creditor, to whom he owes two or more debts, has a right to direct to which debt it shall be applied; if he simply hands the money over to his creditor, without direction as to its application, his creditor may apply the money as he pleases; and if neither party has exercised his right of appropriation, and a dispute subsequently arises, the court will make the appropriation, and in so doing, will, as a rule, apply the payment to the debt which is the least secure. Authorities cited.

Leeds v. Gifford (N. J.)

150

PENALTY. See SUNDAY; USURY, 2.

1. The Amendment of 1879, to the charter of the city of Auburn (Laws 1879, chap. 53, title 7, § 771), creating a board of charities and police with the powers of overseers of poor in towns, did not give such board the powers to sue for penalties for violations of the excise law; but such penalties are to be recovered in the name of the board of commissioners of excise, under the general provision of the Laws of 1878, chap. 109, that where there is no overseer of the poor such penalties shall be sued for and recovered by and in the name of the board of commissioners of excise.

City of Auburn v. Burtis (N. Y.) 285

2. An action seeking to make a trustee of a manufacturing corporation personally liable for a debt of the corporation, on the ground of failure to make the annual report required by statute, is an action for a penalty; and therefore, under Code of Civil Procedure, §§ 528, 887, the verification of the answer therein may be omitted.

Gadsden v. Woodward (N. Y.) 208

PERJURY.

1. An oath to a bill not required to be sworn to does not render party so swearing liable to penalties of perjury for false statements contained therein.

Porter v. White (D. C.) 151

2. The fact that one swears falsely does not, alone, amount to probable cause on which to base a prosecution for perjury; but that fact, taken with the fact that prosecutor acted upon advice of counsel that perjury had been committed, will amount to probable cause.

Id.

PETROLEUM. See GAS COMPANIES, 8; INSURANCE, 14; MINES AND MINING, 18-21.

PHOTOGRAPHS. See EVIDENCE, 13.

PLEADING.

I. COMPLAINT; GENERAL RULES.

II. PLEAS.

III. DEMURRER.

IV. AMENDMENT.

See AFFIDAVIT OF DEFENSE; EQUITY, III.; MORTGAGE, 28; NEGLIGENCE, 86; PARTNERSHIP, 2.

I. COMPLAINT; GENERAL RULES.

1. An action to recover damages for causing death by negligence is not within supreme court Rule 16, requiring certain actions to be styled, in the process and pleading, actions of tort.

Van Blarcom v. D. L. & W. R. R. Co. (N. J.) 565

2. An action seeking to make a trustee of a manufacturing corporation personally liable for a debt of the corporation, on the ground of failure to make the annual report required by statute, is an action for a penalty; and therefore, under Code Civil Procedure, §§ 528, 887, the verification of the answer therein may be omitted.

Gadsden v. Woodward (N. Y.) 208

3. Facts offered in evidence to prove an issue are not themselves in issue, and the judgment is no evidence in regard to them. Authorities cited.

Belden v. State (N. Y.) 183

II. PLEAS.

4. A plea bad for duplicity is properly taken advantage of by motion to strike out.
C. R., V. IV.

Polak v. Hudson (N. J.) 565

5. The rule that upon demurrer judgment shall go against the party whose pleading is first defective does not prevail on motion to strike out a plea. Id.

III. DEMURRER.

6. An objection that an action in tort is not styled as required by Rule 16 of the supreme court may be raised by a general demurrer.

Van Blarcom v. D. L. & W. R. R. Co. (N. J.) 565

7. Where specifications of the grounds of objection are subjoined to a demurrer, the party demurring will, at the argument, be confined to such grounds.

State v. Ocean Beach Comrs. (N. J.) 85

IV. AMENDMENT.

8. Under a complaint seeking to hold one liable as a partner for goods sold to another, proof of defendant's liability as a purchaser and original debtor cannot be given, without an amendment of the complaint.

McLewes v. Hall (N. Y.) 868

9. The Newark District Court has power to amend during trial, by changing the action from case to trespass, and by adding a plaintiff.

State v. Winkler (N. J.) 250

PLEDGE AND COLLATERAL SECURITY.

1. After the lapse of more than twenty years there is a presumption that the apparent title of the assignee of corporate stock is the real title; and where all parties interested on the part of the assignor acquiesced in the assignee's title, and neglected to assert the contrary for that length of time, they should not be permitted, after the assignee's death, to maintain the claim that the stock was assigned as collateral only, without the fullest measure of proof.

Lookwood v. Brantly (N. Y.) 703

2. The deposit of negotiable railroad bonds, with a bank, as collateral security for a debt, passes the title, as against the bank, notwithstanding the antecedent pledge of the same stock.

Gibson v. Lenhart (Pa.) 105

3. Delivery to the bank, depositor, is delivery to the pledgee. Authorities cited. Id.

4. Evidence of the antecedent pledge is inadmissible, in an action of replevin against the bank for the bonds, in the absence of mala fides or notice of the pledge on the part of the plaintiff. Id.

5. Where the bonds were deposited in the bank in a package, indorsed with the pledgee's name, the bank is estopped, in an action of replevin for the bonds, from alleging that the bonds in the package are not the original bonds pledged to the plaintiff. Id.

6. The question being whether one who had received a promissory note, made by a principal debtor and sureties, on paying certain judgments against the principal debtor (to the rights under which as against land of the debtor he became subrogated) took such note as additional to the claims under said judgments, with the right of applying it on other claims held by him against said debtor; or whether such note was merely collateral to the claims under said judgments.—Held, on the facts that the note was collateral only, and that, after the payee therein had been reimbursed for his payments on said judgments, he should be restrained from proceeding, under a judgment recovered by him on said note, against land of a surety thereon.

Burd v. Keyser (N. J.)

245

7. A draft drawn upon a fund not then in existence, and the value of which depended upon the result of a pending lawsuit,—Held, upon the evidence, to have been given as additional security for an existing indebtedness, and not in payment thereof.

Adams v. Mahnen (N. J.)

385

POLICE AND POLICE DEPARTMENTS.

1. A charge against a policeman for incapacity, based on the report of the examining physician and made by the direction of the commissioners, is for good cause and in proper form, within Statutes May 2, 1885 (L. p. 826), March 25, 1885 (L. p. 163), February 23, 1886 (L. p. 48).

State v. Comrs. of Newark (N. J.)

571

2. A reasonable notice of charges and a fair hearing and investigation, without formality in the procedure, are all that is required under Acts of May 2, 1885 and Feb. 23, 1886.

Id.

3. The court, on certiorari, will not weigh the evidence. It is sufficient if there is a legal and substantial basis for removal, on which the commissioners acted within their authority.

Id.

4. Police officers, serving under the appointment and authority of the board of police commissioners, are not in a position to question the constitutionality of the Act constituting the board, on certiorari in proceedings for removal.

Id.

5. While a police officer may come within the rule that a person holding a public office has a prima facie right to his salary, although physically disabled from performing his duties, where a municipal regulation provided that an officer absent from duty without leave should forfeit all pay during his absence, except when sick and so certified by a physician, there can be no recovery during absence from sickness without a certificate of a physician.

City of Wilkesbarre v. Meyers (Pa.)

320

6. In proceedings for removal of policemen in cities, under Act of March 25, 1885, the formalities prescribed for inferior criminal prosecutions are not requisite. It is sufficient if statutory directions are substantially observed.

State v. Mayor of Camden (N. J.)

82

7. Section 8 of the charter of Gloucester city (Laws 1868, p. 106), gives to the com. c. R., v. IV.

mon council power to pass ordinances for appointing watchmen, constables and an additional police force, and prescribing their powers and duties. They have never passed such ordinance. Held, that the prosecutor, who was appointed a policeman by resolution was appointed without authority, and is removable at the discretion of council, and is not entitled to notice of removal and hearing, under Act of March 25, 1885, respecting police departments of cities, and regulating the tenure and terms of office.

State v. Gloucester City (N. J.)

573

POLICE POWERS. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, V.

POOR AND POOR LAWS.

1. To gain a legal settlement, under the first clause of § 1 of the Poor Act (Rev. 834), the pauper must have been seised of a freehold estate, of the value of $180, and have dwelt thereon, or in the township in which the estate was situate, for one continuous year. Mere absence for business or pleasure of a temporary character, with the intention of returning, will not break the continuity of such dwelling.

State v. Inhab. of Shrewsbury (N. J.)

424

2. The Amendment of 1879 to the charter of the city of Auburn (Laws 1879, chap. 53, title 7, § 71), creating a board of charities and police with the powers of overseers of the poor in towns, did not give such board the power to sue for penalties for violations of the excise law; but such penalties are to be recovered in the name of the board of commissioners of excise, under the general provision of the Laws of 1878, chap. 109, that where there is no overseer of the poor, such penalties shall be sued for and recovered by and in the name of the board of commissioners of excise.

City of Auburn v. Burtis (N. Y.)

235

3. Where complainant gave to a township his bond and mortgage to indemnify it for the support of his wife while she should be chargeable to the township, and the township received moneys thereon, and complainant demanded an account thereof, he is entitled to maintain a bill in equity against the township for the amount and for the payment of whatever may be due to him.

Inhab. of North Plainfield v. Colthar (N. J.)

818

POWER OF SALE. See DEVISE AND LEGACY, VIII.

PRACTICE. See APPEAL, II.; EXCEPTIONS; EXECUTION; INSOLVENCY.

PRESUMPTION. See EVIDENCE, I.; LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, I.

PRINCIPAL AND AGENT. See ATTORNEY AND CLIENT; AUCTIONEER; BAWDY AND DISORDERLY HOUSES; INSURANCE, 1-8; SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE, 6; USURY, 1.

1. A, learning B was about to advertise for bids, induced each of several dealers separately to promise him a commission on his securing a sale from such dealer to B. He did not inform any of them of the name of purchaser or of competitive bidding and submitted a bid himself. Held, he was not entitled to a commission from dealer obtaining contract, there being no consideration for the promise to pay him a commission; and that the agreement therefor was void by reason of the fraudulent suppression of material facts on his part and as contra bonos mores.

Murray v. Beard (N. Y.) 129

2. If an agent acts adversely to his employer in any part of a transaction, or omits to disclose any intent which would naturally influence his conduct in dealing with the subject of the employment, it amounts to such a fraud upon the principal as to forfeit any right to compensation for services. Authorities cited. Id. 180

3. An agent cannot take upon himself incompatible duties and characters, or act in a transaction where he has an adverse interest or employment. Authorities cited. Id.

4. A commission merchant is not entitled to commissions on the sale of goods consigned to him, unless he has in all things performed his duties as consignee in a proper manner.

Zurn v. Noedel (Pa.) 658

5. Where one enters into a contract for the purchase of lands, with the agent of the vendor, and makes a payment to such agent upon his promise to return the money in case his principal's title was not good, and the sale falls through because the vendor had not a good title, such agent is liable for the return of the money.

Read v. Riddle (N. J.) 819

6. Where the agent of one party receives money from another, and the transaction is not completed, so that the payee is entitled to recovery, if the agent misleads the payer by giving him to understand that he has not paid over the money, and thereby induces him to sue for its recovery, the agent will be precluded from setting up as a defense that he has paid it over to his principal. Authorities cited. Id. 820

7. Where payment of money, through a mistake in fact, is made to an agent, he is liable to the payer, unless without notice, he has paid it over to his principal or has given him credit for it. Authorities cited. Id.

8. Where an agent, being a stakeholder, receives a deposit before the conditions on which it is to be paid are fulfilled, he is liable for the deposit. Authorities cited. Id.

PRINCIPAL AND SURETY. See BONDS, 2, 3, 8; GUARDIAN AND WARD, 15.

1. The facts that a tax collector reappointed to office was, at the time, in default under a former appointment, and that the sureties on his new bond were not notified by the appointing authorities of his existing defalcations, will not avail as a defense to the sureties.

Myers v. State (Md.) 844

2. Sureties on an official bond are estopped. C. R., V. IV.

from denying the official capacity of their principal. Id.

3. The surety seeking contribution need not make demand nor give notice, before filing his bill.

Wyckoff v. Gardner (N. J.) 181

4. Where the surety seeking contribution holds a claim against the principal, he need not realize thereon in the first instance, but may proceed against his cosureties at once, and if he does realize anything on the claim he must share it with the cosureties who have contributed. Id.

5. Payment, by one surety on a sheriff's bond, of judgment recovered thereon, under a statutory order directing the prosecution of the bond, and enforced by execution, will entitle him to contribution from his solvent cosureties. Id.

6. A discharge in bankruptcy, prior to the accruing of the liability on which contribution is sought, will not avail a cosurety sued for contribution. Id.

7. The estate of a deceased cosurety is liable to make contribution, whether he died before the liability arose or after. Authorities cited. Id.

8. The obligors in a bond for the performance of a contract are released from liability by a new contract in relation to the same subject-matter, with different security, entered into by the parties after breach of the old contract and before notice or demand upon them.

Whelen v. Boyd (Pa.) 651

PRISON. See JAIL AND JAILER.

PRIVATE WAYS. See WAYS, V.

PROBABLE CAUSE. See MALICIOUS PROSECUTION.

PROHIBITION, WRIT OF.

The Supreme Court of the District of Columbia has no jurisdiction to restrain, by writ of prohibition or otherwise, the proceedings of courts-martial.

United States v. Whitney (D. C.) 154

PROMISSORY NOTES. See BILLS AND NOTES.

PROPERTY.

As a general proposition it is safe to say that the owner of land has a right to make reasonable use of his property, and that right extends as well to an unlimited distance above the earth's surface as to an unlimited distance below. Authorities cited.

Pa. Coal Co. v. Sanderson (Pa.) 484

PROSTITUTION. See BAWDY AND DISORDERLY HOUSES.

PROTHONOTARY. See JUDGMENT, 1.

PUBLIC OFFICER. See OFFICE AND OFFICER.

QUIETING TITLE. See CLOUD ON TITLE.

QUI TAM AND PENAL ACTIONS.

See PENALTIES.

RAILROAD COMPANIES.

- I. FRANCHISES; CONSOLIDATION; LEASES.
- II. EMINENT DOMAIN; CONSTRUCTION OF ROAD; DAMAGES.
- III. OFFICERS.
- IV. STATE COMMISSIONERS.
- See CARRIERS; MASTER AND SERVANT, II.; NEGLIGENCE, II.; RECEIVER; TAXES, 16-30.
- I. FRANCHISES; CONSOLIDATION; LEASES.

1. When two corporations of different States become a consolidated corporation, such consolidated corporation, when acting in its corporate capacity in either of the States, acts under the authority of the charter of that State, and the legislation of the other State has no operation beyond its territorial limits.

Pittsb. & S. L. R. R. Co. v. Rothschild (Pa.) 107

2. A mortgage of the property of a corporation is an increase of its indebtedness and can be effected only in compliance with article XVI, section 7, of the Constitution and the Act of April 18, 1874. Otherwise the mortgage is void. Id.

3. Foreclosure proceedings in New York are ineffectual to pass title to property in Pennsylvania. Id.

4. A shareholder of the consolidated company who has accepted and disposed of bonds thus illegally issued, although he might be precluded from questioning the validity of the bonds and mortgage, may yet assert want of title in the purchaser of the corporate property situate in Pennsylvania and sold under the foreclosure proceedings in New York. Id.

5. A consolidated company stands in the same relation to each State as the original company in that State. Authorities cited. Id. 108

6. A railroad company negotiated, through another railroad company, for the purchase of a controlling interest in the stock of a parallel or competing line, the legal title of the stock to be held by the other railroad, but the consideration coming from the competing company. A preliminary injunction to restrain the execution of the contract was granted, and a decree entered continuing the injunction until final hearing was affirmed on appeal. Pa. Const. art. 12, § 4.

Pennsylvania R. R. Co. and North. Cent. R. Co. v. Commonwealth (Pa.) 501

7. A corporation authorized to make purchases and sales of and investments in the bonds and securities of other companies contracted for the purchase of a controlling interest in the stock and securities of a projected line of railroad, the consideration coming from another railroad company. The projected railroad had a traffic contract with a connecting railroad, by which the former, when completed, would become a parallel or competing line with the railroad furnishing the consideration. Art. 17, § 4 of C. R., v. IV.

Pa. Const. prohibits any railroad from acquiring or consolidating with a parallel or competing road. The consideration was to be the guaranteed bonds of an insolvent railroad company. The corporation in whose name the contract of purchase was made did not own or control a line which would be parallel or competing with the projected railroad. A preliminary injunction was issued after the securities were purchased and delivered to a party negotiating the transfer, but before they came into the hands of the stockholders. The injunction restrained the projected road from delivering the stock or securities, the other road from issuing or delivering the guaranteed bonds, and the railroad company furnishing the consideration or guaranty, from guaranteeing the bonds or obtaining in any manner the control of the stock, franchises, and property of the projected line. On review the decree continuing the preliminary injunction was affirmed.

Pa. R. R. Co. Bedford & B. R. R. Co. and Pa. R. R. Co. v. Commonwealth (Pa.) 495

8. If a contract obligation arises between a railroad company and a town bonded for its construction, for the maintenance of a depot, such obligation does not pass by the foreclosure of a mortgage on such railroad; nor does it devolve upon the successors of such company.

People v. Rome, W. & O. R. R. Co. (N. Y.) 197

9. A railroad company owned two lines of track to a certain village; it discontinued running trains upon the more direct line, which it had acquired by consolidation with another company, but ran trains upon the other line, which required the residents of said village to travel about two miles farther than by the more direct line, and to change cars at a different point. It appeared that the company maintained service between the termini of the road acquired by consolidation, and substantially performed its duties to the public at large. Held, that the facts did not warrant the issuance of peremptory mandamus, upon the application of the attorney-general, to compel the company to run trains upon the more direct line. Id.

10. Where a railroad company owns, by consolidation, two lines of road, and can substantially accommodate the people of the State by operating one line between the same points, and can abandon the other line without any serious detriment to any considerable number of people, it should not be compelled by mandamus to operate both lines at a great sacrifice of money. Id.

11. Whether a provision in the charter of a railroad company authorizing it to lease or consolidate with any other railroad, and authorizing any company to take such lease and operate the same, would be sufficient to confer such authority upon any railroad of the State, yet in the present case the title of the Act incorporating the Mays Landing & Egg Harbor City Railroad Company does not indicate such subject, and such provision of its charter is therefore void.

Camden & A. R. R. Co. v. Mays Land, & H. H. C. R. R. Co. (N. J.) 801

12. In an action for rent, due from Feb. 1881, to June 1, 1893, brought by defendant in error against plaintiff in error, upon a lease of defendant's road for the term of 999 years, where it appeared by its charter plaintiff in error had been authorized to construct a road over the same route, within ten years from Aug. 1, 1853, but had not exercised such power, that defendant's charter contained a provision authorizing it to lease its road or consolidate with any other railroad, thereby authorizing any such railroad to take and operate such lease, but the provision was void because the title of the Act did not embrace such subject and the Act embraced more than one object, so that the lease was ultra vires, yet,—Held, that the defense of ultra vires was not available in this action, it appearing that defendant in error had constructed its road in pursuance of a contract with plaintiff in error made in Nov. 1871, providing that it would guarantee its bonds and take a lease thereof for 999 years, and had since operated the road, and the annual reports of its directors since that time had referred to the contract and the performance of its terms from time to time, and shareholders had made no objection thereto. Id.

13. The power granted to a railroad company to construct a particular line of railroad carries with it by implication the right to purchase such line of railroad subsequently built by another corporation, and the right to lease for 999 years will coexist with the right to purchase. Authorities cited. Id.

14. Where a railroad company has made a lease ultra vires, such lessee will be estopped from questioning its validity in an action to recover the stipulated rent. Authorities cited. Id. 808

15. Where an assignee of a lease of a railroad for fifty years, together with the right of purchase of the fee at the end of the term, leased the road to defendant for ninety-nine years, reserving a different rent from that in the original lease, with a provision for reentry, but without an assignment of the right of purchase, and the defendant covenanted to surrender the premises at the end of the ninety-nine years to its immediate lessor, the instrument to defendant operated, as between the defendant and the original landlord, as an assignment of the term of fifty years, and during such term there was a privity of estate between defendant and the original landlord and the legal estate in reversion was in the original landlord during the fifty years; and he or those succeeding to his estate were both legally and equitably entitled to the rents, and had a right of action therefor directly against defendant. Finch, J., dissenting.

Stewart v. Long Island R. R. Co. (N. Y.) 115

II. EMINENT DOMAIN; CONSTRUCTION OF ROAD; DAMAGES.

16. A statute which authorized a railroad company to take lands for the construction of a railroad, with no other provision as to public highways except a requirement compelling it to make and keep in repair good and sufficient passages at the crossings of the highway, will not authorize the occupation of a public road longitudinally.

Pa. R. R. Co. v. Miah (Pa.) 276

17. One who has his dwelling fronting on a street unlawfully occupied by a railroad company,—Held, to be especially injured, and entitled to an injunction restraining the occupation of the street without power expressly given or necessarily implied in the functions of the company. Id.

18. A railroad company cannot appropriate and use a street or public highway for the laying of the tracks of its trunk line, switches, sidings or branches, unless the power is given expressly or by necessary implication. Id.

19. Bill in equity to enjoin construction of a railway track on a highway, and for other relief, will support a decree requiring removal of track laid after notice of the proceedings. Id.

20. A party who is specially injured is entitled to an injunction to restrain a nuisance, as the unlawful occupation of the street by a railroad, without proving the amount of damage. Id.

21. After a railroad company has made a location and damages have been assessed, it is too late to interpose an exception that it had subsequently adopted a new line on the same land. Authorities cited.

Funk's Admrs. v. Waynesboro School Dist. (Pa.) 800

22. The lands or right of way occupied by one railroad company for its corporate purposes cannot be taken as right of way by another railroad company, except for mere crossings; and then only for crossing purposes and not for exclusive occupancy.

Pittsburg Juno. R. R. Co's Appeal (Pa.) 263

23. Where the evidence is conflicting as to the necessity of land for the uses of a railroad, the courts will make allowance for the future needs of the road. Id.

24. The appellant railroad company should be restrained from locating its road across the premises of another railroad company, used as yards for repairing, storing, and shifting cars, etc., and large enough for the future needs of the road, the proposed line causing inconvenience and alterations in these premises, and there being another route by which the proposed line can be built, although at greater cost. Trunkey, J., dissenting, because the master's report shows the road could be constructed through the land claimed by plaintiff company as a yard, and the injury compensated by damages. Plaintiff company ought not to be permitted to exclusively appropriate land extending from the river to a hillside not shown to be necessary for its use. Id.

25. The Act of June 19, 1871, regulating the crossing of lines of railroad by other railroads, does not apply to the crossing of yard-tracks and switches which are merely incident to the use of the main line. Id.

26. A statute conferring authority upon a railroad company to take lands, tenements, or properly necessary to straighten or improve the lines of railroads leased or owned, and the construction of the needful appurtenances thereto, does not extend the branching powers of the original road to its leased lines, or authorize the taking of a public street for tracks from the main lines to mills and factories.

Pa. R. R. Co. v. Mish (Pa.) 276

27. The power of a railroad company to exercise the right of eminent domain is determined by the expiration of the term limited by its charter for its exercise. Authorities cited.

Camden & Atl. R. R. Co. v. Mays Land. & E. H. C. R. R. Co. (N. J.) 802

28. The charter of the city of Elizabeth, giving power to the city council to grant the right to lay down railroad tracks in the streets, as it makes no provision for compensation to the owners of the land, does not give authority to the city to exercise the right of eminent domain.

Chamberlain v. Elizabethport S. C. Co. (N. J.) 870

29. The imposition of the burden of a railroad operated by steam, upon land in and constituting part of a street, is a taking, for that purpose, of the property of the persons along the line of the street who own the land to its center, subject to the right of way of the public therein, and cannot be made without compensation. Id.

30. Where possession of land has been taken for a railroad, and the work has been constructed upon it, but no compensation has been made for the land, if the company in taking possession has acted in good faith, under acquiescence of the owner, or by mistake as to the property, or as to the validity of the authority given it so to occupy, and the property is in public use, equity will not permit the company to be disturbed in its possession, provided it makes compensation if equity shall so require.

Paterson, N. & N. Y. R. R. Co. v. Kamlah (N. J.) 417

31. The facts that a railroad company has been permitted by the owner of land to take possession of it for the purposes of its road, and, with the necessary expenditure, adapt it to such uses, and occupy it accordingly for a long time, are evidence of an agreement that the company shall have the land upon making proper compensation. Id.

32. A railroad corporation having authority, when public necessity requires, to change the grade of the streets crossing its tracks, will not be permitted to exercise its power in that respect, except upon the same terms that the municipality within which the streets are located may exercise like power; that is, upon the payment of damages to those injured by the change.

Jersey City v. Cent. R. R. Co. (N. J.) 327

33. In a proceeding by a railroad company to condemn certain water front lands and land under the water, in the city of New York, owned by the State,—Held, that the application of the petitioners to acquire the same for terminal facilities in excess of its pres- ent local requirements, to enable it to fill a contract with the Baltimore & Ohio R. R. Co., a foreign corporation, to give the latter company access to the port of New York, was properly granted, it appearing that the benefit to arise from such an action rendered the object for which the appropriation was sought a public use; and it was no objection that the construction of certain structures necessary to connect the two roads was not yet begun, such construction being assumed by contract obligations, and the necessity of the appropriation of the property for the public use being clearly shown.

Re Staten Island Rapid Transit R. R. Co. (N. Y.) 514

34. The statute authorizing the formation of railroad corporations confers power upon such as are organized under its provisions to acquire lands by the exercise of the right of eminent domain, not only from individuals but also from the State, for its prospective as well as present uses, provided its necessities for such use in the immediate future are established beyond a reasonable doubt. Authorities cited. Id. 517

35. If a railroad company has the right, under an Act of the Legislature, to acquire land by purchase (for the accommodation of its business), it must secure such a location as will enable it to conduct its operations without violating the just rights of others.

Coyne v. N. Y. N. H. & H. R. R. Co. (N. Y.) 225

36. Assuming that the general power given by the Laws of 1848, chap. 143, § 6, to the New York & New Haven R. R. Co. to run its trains into New York city over the New York & Harlem Railroad includes, as incidental thereto, the power to purchase land for an engine house, it does not sanction the maintenance of a nuisance, injurious to private property, resulting from the building and use of an engine house, as by extending smoke stacks so as to cause smoke, gases, etc., to enter a private dwelling, rendering it untenable. Id.

37. An agreement made, on the purchase of right of way by a railroad corporation, to pay therefor in bonds of the purchasing corporation, is within the powers of such corporation; and the facts that the line of the purchasing corporation was not formally located on the line proposed to be purchased, and was subsequently located on a different line, do not affect the question of corporate power.

Munson v. Syracuse, C. & G. R. Co. (N. Y.) 191

III. OFFICERS.

38. A contract made by an individual, in connection with others, with a railroad corporation in which he is a director, binding the corporation to purchase certain property from him and his associates, such director having participated in the action of the corporation in assuming the obligation, is within the rule which invalidates all contracts made by a trustee or fiduciary, in which he is personally interested, at the election of the party he represents. Id.

89. Such contract is not rendered valid by the fact that its effect was merely to substitute the corporation for certain of its individual promoters, who had previously contracted for the purchase; nor by the fact that the property consisted of real estate, track, etc., of another railroad corporation which the present vendors had purchased under a mortgage foreclosure, the transaction in question not being an arrangement for the reorganization of an existing railroad, within the provisions of Laws 1878, chap. 710. Id.

IV. STATE COMMISSIONERS.

40. The decisions of the state board of railroad commissioners are advisory merely; and no legal right can be based thereon in a proceeding for a mandamus to compel a railroad company to comply with the recommendation of the board.

People v. Rome, W. & O. R. R. Co. (N. Y.) 197

41. Assuming that, when a town has been bonded for the construction of a railroad, upon condition that a permanent depot should be erected and maintained at a specified point within the town, a contract is created between the town and the railroad company, such contract can only be enforced by some proceeding on behalf of the town; it is not a matter of public interest in such sense that it can be enforced by mandamus on the application of the attorney-general on behalf of the people of the State. Id.

RECEIVER.

1. A deficiency in the expenses of operating the road by the receiver in foreclosure, where the necessity of the expenses does not appear, should not be given a preference over the claim of a prior mortgagee of the road, who was not a party to the application for a receiver.

Metropolitan Trust Co. v. Tonawanda, V. & C. R. R. Co. (N. Y.) 864

2. Unsecured claims of employees of a railroad corporation, for their services in operating the road, after default under a general mortgage thereon and before the appointment (in proceedings to foreclose such mortgage) of a receiver to operate the road during the pendency of such proceedings, do not have a preference over the mortgage lien; and the receiver should not be decreed to pay such claims or to issue his certificates therefor. (So held where the foreclosure proceedings were begun before the passage of the Act of 1885, chap. 878, in reference to the wages of employees of corporations for which a receiver has been appointed. Id.)

3. An agreement made by the receiver of a corporation with the general assignee for benefit of creditors of the corporation in another State, to pay a certain portion of the indebtedness of the corporation to the assignee, in satisfaction of the debt, in consideration of the assignee's promise to accept of such payment in compromise, and ratified by the court, is to be regarded in equity as a novation, and the obligation is thenceforward a new one between the receiver and the assignee; and the claims of attaching creditors of the assignor in this State, based upon the policy of this State in respect to assignments giving preferences, and not asserted until after the receiver had become liable to the assignee on said agreement, cannot avail against that agreement.

C. R., V. IV.

Kimball v. Lee (N. J.)

832

RECOGNIZANCE. See BAIL AND RECOGNIZANCE.

RECORD. See APPEAL, II.; DEED, II.; EVIDENCE, II.; JUDGMENT, 6; MORTGAGE, III.

A discharge in insolvency, granted by the same court in which an issue of nulla in re is on trial, may be proved by the docket entries and original papers. The production of a formal record is not necessary.

Lorian v. Rohr (Md.)

255

REDEMPTION. See MORTGAGE, VII.

REFERENCE. See ARBITRATION AND REFERENCE.

RELEASE. See PRINCIPAL AND SURETY, I., VIII.

RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES.

A deed conveying property in trust "for the use of the ministry and membership of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States of America, subject to the discipline, usage, and ministerial appointments of said church," is too vague and indefinite, and the trust cannot be upheld.

Isaac v. Emory (Md.)

168

REMAINDERS. See DEVISE AND LEGACY, V.

RENT. See LANDLORD AND TENANT, 4.

REPLEVIN.

1. Vendee purchased horses, paying part of purchase price, delivery to be made at a subsequent date, at which time vendee offered notes drawn by vendor in part payment, which offer was refused on the ground that the sale was for cash. Vendee got possession, and it was held vendor might bring replevin without returning the hand money.

Bush v. Bender (Pa.)

85

2. In an action of replevin against a bank for negotiable railroad bonds deposited as collateral security for a debt, evidence of the antecedent pledge of the same stock is inadmissible, in the absence of mala fides, where there was notice of the pledge on the part of plaintiff.

Gibson v. Lenhart (Pa.)

105

REPORT AND CASE MADE.

Facts cannot be inferred in a case stated; and what is not stated must be presumed not to exist.

Cunnonsburgh Iron Co. v. Union Nat. Bank (Pa.)

258

RESCISSIION. See CONTRACT, 27-29; LICENSE, 4.

RESERVATION. See DEED, 9.

RES JUDICATA. See JUDGMENT, II.

REVIEW. See GUARDIAN AND WARD, 15; JUDGMENT, IV.; PARTITION, 12.

A bill of review, to correct a clear mistake in fact on which a decree in partition was made, will lie more than three years after the decree was made. Authorities cited.

Appeal of Johnson (Pa.) 895

REWARDS.

A party who, at the request of another, joins in the pursuit of a criminal, and identifies him, and afterwards testifies in court, is not, without more, entitled to a reward offered by the mayor of a city for the arrest and conviction of any person setting fire to any building within the city.

Rinehart v. City of Lancaster (Pa.) 504

ROADS. See WAYS.

RULE OF COURT. See TRIAL, 9, 10.

SALARY. See OFFICE AND OFFICER, 2-4.

SALE. See EXECUTION, II.; GUARDIAN AND WARD, 8-14; INSURANCE, 5-18; INTOXICATING LIQUORS; TAXES, II.; VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

1. Attachment lies for deficiency caused by inferiority of goods warranted. Authorities cited. 79

Heckscher v. Trotter (N. J.) 79

2. Vendee purchased horses, paying part of purchase price, delivery to be made at a subsequent date, at which time vendee offered notes drawn by vendor in part payment, which offer was refused on the ground that the sale was for cash. Vendee got possession, and it was held vendor might bring replevin without returning the hand money.

Bush v. Bender (Pa.) 35

3. Knowledge of fraud which will entitle vendor to rescind a sale is essential to put him to an election of remedies. Hence the bringing of an action for the contract price of the goods sold, unless it was brought with knowledge of the fraud, is not a binding election or a waiver of the right to rescind.

Equitable Co-operative Foundry Co. v. Hersee (N. Y.) 189

SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS.

1. The Act of March 18, 1875, regulating the assessment in collection of taxes in cities of the third class, which contains a proviso excluding from the operation of the Act all cities of the third class, etc., which do not accept, by ordinance, the provisions of the Act, offends against art. 8, § 7 of the Constitution of 1874, which prohibits the passage of any local or special law regulating the affairs of counties, cities, townships, wards, boroughs, or school districts.

Commonwealth v. Halstead (Pa.) 815

2. Proceedings, instituted by a board of school directors, to assess damages for taking lands for school purposes, under the Act of C. R., V. IV.

April 9, 1867, may be discontinued at any time before final confirmation of the proceedings, or the taking of actual possession of the land.

Funk's Admra. v. Waynesboro School Dist. (Pa.) 299

3. Staking off land, prior to a view for assessment of damages, is not such possession as to give title. (Beale v. Pa. R. R. Co. 86 Pa. 510, distinguished.) Id.

SCINTILLA OF EVIDENCE. See EVIDENCE, 18, 19.

SEQUESTRATION.

A prior incumbrancer has a right, as against the mortgagor and subsequent incumbrancers, in case his security is precarious, to have the rents of the mortgaged premises (accruing subsequent to the appointment of a receiver) sequestered for his benefit.

Leeds v. Gifford (N. J.) 148

SERVANT. See MASTER AND SERVANT.

SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM.

1. A set-off can only be made of a debt or demand which existed at the time of the commencement of the action, and the defendant must be able to show that it was then his. Authorities cited.

Lancaster Co. Nat. Bank v. Huver (Pa.) 673

2. A bank received a cashier's check of another bank, as a conditional payment of the debt of a third party. The latter bank made an assignment in trust for creditors, and the check was not paid on presentation. At the time of the assignment, there was, on the books of the first bank, a credit to the insolvent bank of the proceeds of notes, indorsed and discounted for the latter's accommodation. In an action by the first bank against the debtor, for the debt, — Held, that this deposit was not a valid set-off against the debt.

Union Nat. Bank v. Cannonsburgh Iron Co. (Pa.) 263

3. A set-off, to be allowed, must be a debt due between the same parties and in the same right, and complete when the action was instituted. Authorities cited. Id. 263

4. A set-off is in substance a cross action, and a cross demand must have been complete when the action was instituted. Authorities cited. Id.

SETTLEMENT. See POOR AND POOR LAWS, 1.

SEWERS. See DRAINS AND SEWERS.

SHERIFF.

1. Order of court, under Act April 10, 1873, fixing compensation of incumbent sheriff, for boarding prisoners, at one sum for one year and at a less sum for another year, during his term of office, does not violate Constitution, art. 8, § 18, prohibiting the increasing or diminishing of salary or emoluments of any public officer after his election or appointment, notwithstanding a prior order made during his term, fixing the compensation for the past services of his predecessor.

Peeling v. County of York (Pa.) 87

8. The compensation ordered to be paid to the sheriff, by law, for the board of prisoners in the county jail, is an emolument of his office, within art. 8, § 18, of the Constitution. Authorities cited. Id. 88

8. A sheriff who, in answer to a rule to bring in the body of a defendant, returns that he discharged the defendant from custody upon his giving bond and complying with the requirements of the Insolvent Debtors' Act, will not be amerced.

Lewis v. Haskell (N. J.) 885

4. A sheriff cannot appoint a special deputy pro hac vice by parol, and if a sale in a foreclosure suit in chancery be made by a bailiff thus informally appointed, it will be set aside on a direct application to the chancellor in a subsequent proceeding. Authorities cited.

Hicks v. Willis (N. J.) 885

SHIPS AND SHIPPING.

1. Attachment will not lie for damages arising out of breach of covenant in a charter-party to employ a vessel at a certain sum per month for a designated voyage, the length of the voyage being conjectural, and hence the damages being uncertain. Authorities cited.

Heckscher v. Trotter (N. J.) 79

2. In an action against a bridge owner for negligence in removing a boat which had become entangled with the bridge, an instruction that the burden of proof was upon the plaintiff to show what damages resulted from the alleged negligent acts of the defendant, and to distinguish them from damages for which defendant was not responsible, —Held, properly refused, where the evidence clearly showed some substantial damages, and it is apparent that the verdict did not proceed upon the theory of charging the defendant in the first instance with the total loss and then deducting the items for which defendant was shown not to be responsible, thus shifting the burden of proof.

Mark v. Hudson River Bridge Co. (N. Y.) 208

8. When a boat becomes entangled with a bridge, without fault on the part of the bridge owner, becomes a nuisance which the bridge owner has a right to remove, in exercising that right the bridge owner must use ordinary care to do no unnecessary injury to the boat, and will be liable for injury unnecessarily inflicted. Id.

4. If, as matter of fact, the boat owner could, with the exercise of ordinary care and diligence, have removed the debris which fell upon the boat in its being extricated from the bridge, and saved the boat from subsequent injuries, the bridge owner was not liable for such injuries. Id.

5. In such a case the bridge owner is not liable for want of skill in the persons engaged in the removal of the boat, but only for the omission or commission of some act which an ordinarily prudent man would not have committed or omitted, and for reckless conduct on their part. Id.

C. R., V. IV.

SLANDER. See LIBEL AND SLANDER.

SOCIETIES. See RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES.

SPECIAL AND LOCAL LEGISLATION. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, II.

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

1. A decree for a specific performance will not be granted upon uncorroborated evidence of the complainant, where a defendant denies the making of the agreement sought to be enforced.

McMonigle v. McMonigle (N. J.) 408

2. An unexplained neglect for twenty-nine years, to pay the balance of purchase money of land sold by contract in writing, laches on the part of the vendee, and fatal, in a court of equity, to all his original rights under the contract.

McGraw v. Foster (Pa.) 915

8. A purchaser of lands, who seeks redress under his articles, must bring his money into court, in order to show his readiness to perform his contract. Authorities cited. Id. 918

4. Lapse of time, change of circumstances, and indifference on the part of a vendee of land, are circumstances to induce a chancellor to refuse a decree of specific performance. Authorities cited. Id.

5. A vendee cannot experiment with his purchase, he will not be allowed to pursue a course of conduct calculated to mislead the vendor into the belief that the contract is abandoned, and when the development of the country makes it to his interest demand its performance. Authorities cited. Id. 919

6. Where complainant purchased, by verbal contract, of an agent who had parol authority to solicit purchasers, the principal retaining the right to reject any sale made by him, a piece of land and paid the agent $10, and by the agent's authority entered upon the land and dug a trench and deposited some timber for a building, and the principal subsequently rejected the contract and tender of performance, specific performance was refused.

Chamberlain v. Manning (N. J.) 821

STATE AND STATE OFFICERS.

See RAILROAD COMPANIES, IV.

1. The statute authorizing the formation of railroad corporations confers power upon such as are organized under its provisions to acquire lands by the exercise of the right of eminent domain, not only from individuals but also from the State, for its prospective as well as present uses, provided its necessities for such use in the immediate future are established beyond a reasonable doubt. Authorities cited.

Re Staten Island Rapid Transit R. R. Co. (N. Y.) 517

2. No State is bound to recognize and enforce a contract injurious to its own interests or those of its subjects, although valid by the law of the place where made. Authorities cited.

Pitts. & S. L. R. R. Co. v. Rothschild (Pa.) 109

8. The state comptroller having refused to cancel a tax sale and conveyance thereunder, cannot be compelled by mandamus to reach a different conclusion.

People v. Chapin (N. Y.) 183

STATUTE OF FRAUDS. See FRAUDS, STATUTE OF.

STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS. See LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

STATUTES. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW; FRAUDS, STATUTE OF; INTOXICATING LIQUORS, 1, 8-7; JUSTICES OF THE PEACE, 1; LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

1. Penal Code, § 72, relating to bribery, being a later statute covering the same subject-matter as § 58 of the Consolidation Act, and embracing new provisions, operated to repeal the prior Act, although the two are not in express terms repugnant.

People v. Jaehns (N. Y.) 163

2. By section 2148 of the Consolidation Act, the Penal Code (although enacted before New York City Consolidation Act, Laws 1882), is to have the same effect upon that Act as if it had been passed after it. This provision does not transcend the legislative power; and it subordinates the Consolidation Act to the Penal Code wherever the two are in conflict. Rapallo and Earle, JJ., dissenting. Id.

3. Section 725 of the Penal Code, providing that that Code shall not affect "Acts incorporating municipal corporations, or Acts amending Acts of incorporation, or charters of such corporations," is to be construed as saving only those penal provisions of charter Acts which are not covered by the provisions of the Penal Code. Rapallo and Earle, JJ., dissenting. Id.

4. A later statute covering the same subject-matter and embracing new provisions operates to repeal the prior Act, although the two Acts are not in express terms repugnant. Authorities cited. Id. 171

5. General legislation on a particular subject must give way to special legislation on the same subject, and laws special and local in their application are not deemed repealed or modified by general legislation on the same subject, although the terms of the general Act are broad enough to include the cases embraced in the special law, unless the intent to change the local law is clearly manifested. Authorities cited. Dis. Op. Id. 174

6. A general repealing clause in a general law is not sufficient to repeal a special local law not referred to in terms, and which is capable of coexisting with the general law. Authorities cited. Dis. Op. Id.

7. The amendment of 1879 to the charter of the city of Auburn (Laws 1879, chap. 53, title 7, § 71), creating a board of charities and police with the powers of overseers of poor in towns did not give such board the power to sue for penalties for violation of the excise law; but such penalties are to be recovered in the name of the board of commissioners in excise, under the general provision of the Laws of 1878, chap. 109, that where there is no overseer of the poor such penalties shall be sued for and recovered by and in the name of the board of commissioners of excise.

O. R., V. IV.

City of Auburn v. Burtis (N. Y.) 235

8. A grant under which it is claimed that authority is given to destroy a public right should be strictly construed.

Jersey City v. Cent. R. R. Co. (N. J.) 327

9. In construing a statute a purpose to disregard sound public policy must not be attributed to the law-making power, except upon the most cogent evidence.

Jersey City Gaslight Co. v. Consumers Gas Co. of N. J. (N. J.) 330

STATUTES AND CONSTITUTIONS CITED, CONSTRUED, ETC.

England.

21 James I. c. 16. Statute of Limitations; personal actions 397

29 Car. II. c. 7. Sunday 272

United States.

Constitution.

Amend. 14. Due process of law; equal protection 432

Revised Statutes.

§§ 4911, 4015. Patents; appeal to Supreme Court, D. C. 625

Statutes at Large.

1801, Feb. 27. District of Columbia 597

1848, March 3. District of Columbia; infants; sale of realty 602

District of Columbia.

Revised Statutes.

§ 753. Courts; appeals 621

772. Appeal; practice 620

Illinois.

Constitution.

Art. 9, § 1. Taxes 453

Maryland.

Laws.

1715, c. 39. Apprentices 599

1735, c. 72. Decedents' estates; sale of property; debts 161, 597

1735, c. 80. Guardian and ward; education 599

1736, c. 45. Descents 594

1798, c. 101, § 10. Guardian; account 599

1798, c. 101, subd. 12, § 10. Guardian's sale 597

1872, c. 232. Carroll Co., treasurer 344

1874, c. 411. Counties; commissioners 345

1874, c. 433, § 31. Tax collectors; bonds 345

New Jersey.

Constitution.

Art. 4, § 7, p. 3. Laws impairing obligation of contracts 863

4, § 7, ¶ 4. Enactment of statutes 143

Laws.

1799 (Pat. Laws, 354). Limitation of actions; mortgage; redemption 61

1847, p. 133. Railroads; bridges 327

STATUTES AND CONSTITUTIONS CITED, C

1849, p. 379. Jersey City Gaalight Co.	381	Page 320, § 1
1852, p. 271. Camden & Atlantic Railroad	803	458. G
1853, p. 33, § 2. Small Causes Act; amend- ments	251	460. G
1861, p. 156. Highway overseers; time of election	882	462, § 1
1862, p. 271. Married woman; separate es- tate	557	497, § 2
1863, p. 119. Elizabeth; control of streets	871	597, § 1
1868, pp. 43, 106. Police departments	572, 574	652. D
1868, p. 106. Gloucester; police	574	691, § 7
1869, p. 371, § 58. Bayonne; local assess- ments, lien of	810	696, § 1
1870, p. 8. Hackensack; roads	573	706, § 2
1870, p. 181. Road Board Act; damages	829	763, § 5
1871, p. 336, § 67. Paterson; payment of claims	250	764, § 5
1871, p. 1122, § 58. Jersey City; streets; change of grade	327	785, § 1
1871, p. 1507. Hackensack; roads	573	834, § 1
1873, p. 245, § 6. Newark district courts; amendments	251	861, § 7
1874, p. 372. Trenton	80	925. R
1874, p. 504, § 9. Jersey City; board of public works	342	936. R
1874, p. 579. Hackensack; roads	573	995. R
1875, pp. 396, 609. South Orange; assess- ments	426	1002, § 3
1877, p. 54. Legislative commissions	342	1003, § 3
1878, p. 28. Legislative commissions	342	1045, § 1
1879, p. 178. Highway overseers; time of election	882	1051, § 3
1880, p. 56. Highway overseers; time of election	882	1150. T
1880, p. 191. Unconstitutional; excise de- partments	83	1166. T
1880, p. 247. County clerk; salary; uncon- stitutional	571	1168. T
1880, p. 255. Mortgage; foreclosure; defi- ciency	863	1189. Q
1881, p. 38. Taxes; delinquent	327	1196, § 1
1881, p. 184. Mortgage; foreclosure; defi- ciency	864	1196, § 1
1881, p. 194. Taxes; water rates	247, 326	1202, § 5
1882, p. 48. Borough commissioners	86, 145	1841, § 1
1882, p. 230. Executors, etc., account; com- missions	833	Supreme Cou
1882, p. 256. Taxes; roads; arbitration	561	Equity, 125.
1884, p. 58. County clerk; salary; uncon- stitutional	571	Art. 6, § 2. f
1884, p. 142. Taxes; railroad and canal property	428	Vol. 2, tit. 2,
1884, p. 265. Taxes; exemption; firemen	147	2, p. 65,
1884, April 17. Borough commissioners	86	2, p. 88,
1884, April 18. Taxes; corporations; ex- emptions	141-144	2, p. 88,
1885, p. 12. Highways; assignment of dis- tricts	882	2, p. 29,
1885, p. 130. Jersey City; fire commission- ers; transfer of employee	885	2, p. 44,
1885, p. 163. Police departments	572, 574	2, p. 76,
1885, p. 326. Police departments	83, 572	3, p. 175,
		3, p. 28'
Revised Statutes.		Co
Page 346, § 2. Decedents' estates; preferred claims	844	§§ 188, 196,
Revision.		283. Indi
Page 129. Corporations; frauds	825	395. Con
107, § 78. Estate in joint tenancy	67	411. Trfa
294. Negligence; death; damages	565	542. App
320. Dower	67	777. Cor
C. R., V. IV.

Penal Code.

§ 71. Bribery; judicial officer	169
72. Bribery; officer accepting bribe	168
193. Manslaughter; second degree	787
195. Manslaughter; negligent use of machinery	787
395. Public health; violating quarantine regulations	360
719. Application of Code	173
725. Statutes continued in force	171
726. General repeal	173

Code of Civil Procedure.

§ 190. Court of Appeals; jurisdiction	774
263, subd. 5. Superior City Courts; jurisdiction	774
285. N. Y. Common Pleas; jurisdiction	791
331. N. Y. Marine Court; fees	791
370. Adverse possession; what constitutes	231
371. Adverse possession; claim of title not written	542
467. Poor persons; actions; costs	791
523. Pleadings; verification	208
763. Death; after verdict	396
829. Witness; party, etc.	770
837. Witness; when not excused from testifying	208
888. Deposition; when commission to issue, etc.	128
994. Exceptions; practice	773
997. Case made	773
1210. Judgment; decedent	396
1337. Appeal; questions for review	212
1405. Execution; personalty	189
1626. Mortgage; foreclosure; final judgment	109
1628. Mortgage; foreclosure; other actions	389
1631. Mortgage; foreclosure; notice	109
1632. Mortgage; foreclosure; effect of conveyance upon sale	109
1769. Alimony	538
1825, 1826. Decedents' estates; execution	389
1933. Action against joint debtors; judgment	396
1939. Action against joint debtors; answer	396
2070. Mandamus; peremptory	201
2545. Surrogates' Courts; exceptions	796
2555. Decrees; contempt	211
2589. Surrogates' Courts; appeal; costs	770

Laws.

1806, c. 131. Bribery	169
1833, c. 279. Chattel mortgages; record	234
1833, c. 294. Utica & S. R. R. Co.	229
1846, c. 195. New York & N. H. R. R. Co.	228
1846, c. 274. Distress for rent abolished	234
1848, c. 106. Auburn	237
1848, c. 143. New York & H. R. R. Co.	228
1849, c. 438, § 471. Pleading; practice (repealed 1880, c. 245)	353
1850, c. 140, § 10. Railroad companies; stockholders' liability	196, 367
1853, c. 217, § 14. New York; bribery; officers, etc.	174
1853, c. 539. Bribery	169
1854, c. 232, § 16. Railroad companies	367
1857, c. 446. New York	175
1857, c. 628. Intoxicating liquors; regulations	23, 73, 55

1858, c. 314. Frauds; protection of creditors	189, 339
1858, c. 338. New York; local assessments; frauds	513
1859, c. 431. Auburn	237
1866, c. 404. N. Y. Union Dime Savings Institution	221
1866, c. 753. Oysters; regulations	221
1869, c. 273. Auburn	237
1869, c. 742. Bribery	169, 174
1870, c. 137, § 114. New York; bribery	174
1871, c. 760. Saratoga Springs	171
1873, c. 335. New York; local government	174, 782

1873, c. 535. New York; courts; city prison	171
1873, c. 820. Intoxicating liquors; regulations	237
1873, c. 863. Brooklyn	171
1873, c. 863, tit. 13, § 14. Brooklyn; fire department	775
1874, c. 313. New York; taxes; collection	782
1876, c. 444, § 2. State board of audit	183
1876, c. 448, § 191. Court of appeals; exceptions	774
1877, c. 415. Deception in sale of butter	545
1878, c. 245. Highways; encroachments	210
1879, c. 53. Auburn	237
1879, c. 418. Chattel mortgages; record	234
1880, c. 245, § 1. Repeal of parts of Revised Statutes	353
1880, c. 439. Deception in sales of butter	546
1881, c. 211. State board of audit	183
1881, c. 346. New York; port and harbor	231
1881, c. 631. Amendment, Code of Civil Procedure	353
1882, c. 214, 215, 238, 246. Oleomargarine; adulteration	546
1882, c. 410, § 58. New York Consolidation Act; bribery	168
1882, c. 410, § 2143. New York; effect of Act	168, 173
1883, c. 26. New York; marine court	774
1883, c. 229. Amendment; Code of Civil Procedure	353
1883, c. 298, tit. 18, § 6. Albany; bribery	175
1884, c. 202. Adulteration; dairy products	546
1885, c. 138. Adulteration; dairy products	542
1885, c. 376. Corporations; wages of employees	367
1885, c. 458. Adulteration; dairy products	542

Court Rules.

Supreme Court, 32. Case made; time	773
------------------------------------	-----

Pennsylvania.Constitution.

Art. 3, § 3. Title of Act	303, 315
3, § 7. Special laws	236, 313, 320, 321
3, § 13. Public officer; compensation	33
5, § 2. Justices of the peace	321
5, § 12. Philadelphia; magistrates	321
9, § 1. Taxes; uniformity	306
16, § 7. Corporations; indebtedness	103
17, § 4. Railroads; competing lines	496, 502

Laws.

1705, § 9 (Purd. 597, pl. 152). Execution; restitution	903
1713, March 27. Statute of Limitations; personal actions	397
1791, Sep. 23. Justices of the peace; costs; criminal prosecutions	746
1794, April 19. Dower; assignment	293

1794, April 23. "Sunday Act"	272
1832, March 15 (Purd. 410, par. 23). Administrator pendente lite	908
1832, March 29 (Purd. 542). Dower; partition	298
1832, June 9, § 77. Portsmouth, etc. railroad	279
1833, April 8 (Purd. 1477, pl. 18). Will; after-born child	470
1833, April 8, § 9. Devise; realty; intention	84
1833, p. 818. Distribution; next of kin	46
1834, p. 68. Evidence; documentary	463
1834, p. 77, § 34. Executors and administrators; actions; parties	907
1843, p. 273. Assignment for creditors	669
1846, April 13. Pennsylvania railroad; intersections	279
1848, April 11. Married woman; contracts	290
1854, p. 80. Phila.; controller; duties	758
1855, p. 269. Phila.; controller; misdemeanor	758
1855, p. 415. Assignment for creditors; non-resident; record	661
1856, p. 572. Phila.; controller; oath to one presenting bill	578
1859, March 29. Decree; lien	258
1860, March 31, § 36. Adultery	712
1867, p. 190. Lancaster County; quarter sessions; licenses	911
1867, p. 998. Pennsylvania railroad; depots, etc.	279
1869, March 17, § 8. Attachment; bond	749
1870, p. 242. Erie; boundary	488
1871, May 10. Erie County; quarter sessions	910
1871, June 19. Railroads; crossings	267
1871, June 19. Condemnation proceedings; injunction	280
1871, p. 639. Montgomery Co.; boroughs; streets	305
1872, April 3. Married woman; separate earnings	656
1872, April 9. Wages; exemption	708, 705
1873, p. 666. Sheriff; compensation	88
1874, April 18. Corporations; indebtedness	108
1874, May 14. Taxes; public property	303
1874, p. 158. Taxes; public property	307
1875, April 12. Intoxicating liquors; unlicensed druggist	727
1875, p. 15. Taxes; cities of third class; unconstitutional	814, 815
1876, p. 95. Nuisance; continuing; damages	687
1877, p. 25. Unconstitutional sheriffs, etc.; suit after term for fees, etc.	286
1878, May 24. Taxes; assessments; appeal	319
1878, p. 207. Wages; priority	704, 705
1879, p. 130. Phila.; controller; countersigning warrants	758
1879, p. 194. Justices of the peace	321
1881, June 29. Mines and mining; payment of employees; unconstitutional	887
1885, p. 11. Cities; ordinances; taxes	490

Virginia.

Revised Code.

Vol. 2, p. 212, § 1. Joint-stock companies; subscriptions	611
---	-----

STOCK TRANSACTIONS. See BANKRUPTCY, 8; CORPORATIONS, III.

After the lapse of more than twenty years there is a presumption that the apparent C. R., v. IV.

title of the assignee of corporate stock is the real title; and where all parties interested on the part of the assignor acquiesced in the assignee's title, and neglected to assert the contrary for that length of time, they should not be permitted, after the assignee's death, to maintain the claim that the stock was assigned as collateral only, without the fullest measure of proof.

Lockwood v. Brantly (N. Y.)

793

STREET RAILWAYS.

1. Where a passenger in a street railway car was injured by a collision with a steam railroad train,—Held, in order to recover against the company operating the steam railroad train, the plaintiff must show not only that the injury resulted from defendant's negligence, but that the negligence of the carrier company did not contribute to the result. Authorities cited.

Borough of Carlisle v. Brisbane (Pa.)

511

2. In an action against a street railway company for personal injuries, evidence on the part of the plaintiff that she, while alighting from one of the defendant's cars and carrying a child on her left arm, tried to reach with her right hand the handle of the rear dasher, but that, as another passenger, though there were empty seats in the car, was standing in the way, she missed the handle and, slipping on ice which remained on the step from the previous day, fell, receiving severe injuries, makes out a case for a jury; and a nonsuit is error, although it appears that the plaintiff knew there was ice on the step and might, by changing the child to the other arm, have grasped with her left hand the handle on the end of the car.

Neslie v. Second & Third Sts. Passenger R. Co. (Pa.)

699

3. The driver of a vehicle, rightfully using a street railroad track as a part of the public street, is entitled to notice that the company required the track for its car, before he is obliged to leave the track. Where plaintiff was driving on the main track and suddenly a car was moved on a spur track,—Held, the case was properly submitted to the jury to determine whether, under the facts, the safer and more prudent course for plaintiff to have pursued to avoid collision was to attempt to get off the track, or to quicken his speed and pass before the car reached the main track; and the fact that plaintiff urged on his horses and failed to reach a point necessary to avoid a collision by about a foot did not constitute evidence of contributory negligence. Paterson, J., dissenting, that it appeared that plaintiff had sufficient notice of the approach of the car, was an expert in driving horses, familiar with the locality, and with proper caution could have avoided a collision.

Orange & N. Horse R. Co. v. Ward (N. J.)

825

4. Conductor's written statement giving details of accident immediately after it happened, is not admissible in evidence, but the facts must be proved by the conductor or others who witnessed the occurrence. Conductor may use such written statement to refresh his memory.

North Hudson Co. R. Co. v. May (N. J.)

81

STREETS. See DEED, 11-18; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, IV., V.; RAILROAD COMPANIES, 16, 17, 18, 28, 29, 32; WAYS.

SUBROGATION. See EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, 45.

1. An administrator who has paid the debts of the estate, to an amount exceeding the personal estate, is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the creditors against the lands of the deceased, and to subject them in the hands of the heirs and devisees to the payment of the money necessary to his reimbursement.

Woolley v. Pemberton (N. J.) 89

2. The bill for such purpose is not multifarious because it also seeks a settlement and account for rents applied by the administrator to the payment of debts primarily chargeable upon the personal estate, and to establish the equitable rights of the parties entitled to the lands with regard to such application of the rents, where all such parties are before the court. Id.

3. Where a policy is obtained by the owner of the equity of redemption, with an agreement with the first mortgagee, that the money collected by him should go in satisfaction of his mortgage, the money paid by the insurance company on taking an assignment of the first mortgage must be regarded as paid on account of the insurance; and the company is not entitled to subrogation to the rights of the first mortgagee.

Pearman v. Gould (N. J.) 185

4. Where mortgagee insures for his own benefit his interest as mortgagee, the insurance company on paying the loss is entitled to subrogation to his rights as mortgagee. Authorities cited. Id. 187

5. Where a building was insured in the name of the mortgagee for his own security and that of mortgagor, the latter paying the premium, the insurance company is not on payment entitled to subrogation through mortgagee's rights. Authorities cited. Id.

6. Where mortgagor had obtained a policy and assigned it to mortgagee, but, before loss, had sold the property subject to the mortgage, which purchaser had assumed to pay, and the purchaser had taken no assignment of his grantor's interest in the policy, subrogation was decreed. Authorities cited. Id.

7. A vendor held a policy of insurance on the dwelling-house standing on the premises sold; she took a mortgage for a part of the purchase money, which was in excess of the amount due on the policy; she did not assign the policy at the time of the conveyance nor until after the house was burned; the company tendered the amount due on the mortgage and demanded an assignment of it, which was refused. Held, that the company was entitled to the mortgage, and that in order to carry costs it was not necessary that the company should tender the whole amount of the unpaid purchase money.

Boundbrook Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Nelson (N. J.) 187

SUBSCRIPTIONS. See BANKRUPTCY, 3; CORPORATIONS, III.

SUNDAY.

Under the Act of 1794, prohibiting the performance of "any worldly employment or business whatsoever on the Lord's Day, commonly called Sunday," there can be only one penalty for violation of the statute, on one day, whether the act or acts which constitute such employment are one or many. So held, where defendant on the same day sold cigars, tobacco, cider, etc., to several persons in violation of the Act, and was therefor convicted and fined for six several violations.

Friedeborn v. Commonwealth (Pa.) 271

SURETIES. See PRINCIPAL AND SURETY.

SURROGATE. See COURTS, XIV.

TAXES.

I. PROPERTY TAXABLE; PUBLIC PROPERTY; EXEMPTIONS; RAILROADS.

II. COLLECTION; COLLECTORS; SALES.

III. REMEDIES AGAINST ILLEGAL.

See BONDS, 1-5; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, III., IV.

I. PROPERTY TAXABLE; PUBLIC PROPERTY; EXEMPTIONS; RAILROADS.

1. The Society for Establishing Useful Manufactures is exempt from the tax imposed by the Act of April 18, 1884, upon the capital stock of corporations.

State v. Society for Establishing Useful Manufactures (N. J.) 139

2. The exemption from taxation conferred by the charter of said society extends to property of the society, acquired under a subsequent Act of the Legislature empowering it to extend its operations by condemning additional lands for the same purposes as those provided for in its charter. Id.

3. The exemption from taxation, under the Act of April 18, 1884, of manufacturing companies "carrying on business in this State," does not apply to a manufacturing company which has all its factories in other States, but maintains an office, sells its products, and holds its business meetings in this State.

State v. American Glucose Co. (N. J.) 142

4. Act of April 25, 1884 (P. L. 1884, p. 265), providing that certain firemen "shall be entitled to have and receive the same advantages in respect to taxes and jury duty as now are or hereafter may be allowed to the National Guard of this State," without settling out the acts in relation to the exemption of members of the National Guard, is within the constitutional inhibition that a statute, to make the Acts of a former statute part thereof, must insert those sections of a former Act in the new law.

State v. McNeal (N. J.) 147

5. Article 9, § 1 of the Constitution, providing that all taxes shall be uniform upon the same class of subjects, and shall be levied and collected under general laws, and that public property used for public purposes may, by general laws, be exempt from taxation, does not render public property taxable.

Erie Co. v. City of Erie (Pa.) 805

6. The Act of May 14, 1874, entitled "An Act to Exempt from Taxation Public Property Used for Public Purposes," which exempts certain property and contains a proviso that "all property, real or personal, other than that which is in actual use and occupation for the purposes aforesaid, and from which any income or revenue is derived, shall be subject to taxation, and nothing herein contained shall exempt the same," imposes taxation upon public property used for public purposes from which a revenue is derived. Id. 800

7. Property belonging to a municipality, owned and used by commissioners, appointed by law, in operating and carrying on water works to supply the public with water, and necessary for such purpose, from which a revenue is derived, is taxable under the Act of May 14, 1874. Id. 800

8. A house and lot and horses owned by a city, and used in operating the fire department of the city, are not liable to taxation. Id. 805

9. Public property used for public purposes is not subject to taxation, and cannot be without express statute. Authorities cited. Id. 807

10. The terms of Borough Act of March 7, 1872, relating to taxes for road purposes, should be construed to extend to assessments for road purposes where no previous appropriation has been made by legal authority.

State v. Horner (N. J.) 145

11. Where township voters have, at their regular election, fixed the amount to be raised for highways in the township for the ensuing year, and the township committee has appropriated the money, to be raised by taxation, to the several road overseers, and thereafter a part of the township votes to become an incorporated borough, the commissioners of such new borough are not entitled to the possession and control of the portion of such money raised by taxation upon the part of the township incorporated in the borough; but the same is to be expended by the township overseer as apportioned by the township. Id.

12. Without offending the rule of uniformity upon the same class of subjects, the Legislature may select the subjects of its taxation, but the tax, upon whatever laid, must be uniform, and in the taxation of property there can be no distinction between natural persons and corporations. Authorities cited. Dis. Op.

State Board of Assessors v. Cent. R. R. Co. (N. J.) 455

13. The Act of March 18, 1875, regulating the assessment and collection of taxes in cities of the third class, which contains a proviso excluding from the operation of the Act all cities of the third class, etc., which do not accept, by ordinance, the provisions of the Act, offends against article 8, § 7 of the Constitution of 1874, which prohibits the passage of any local or special law regulating the affairs of counties, cities, townships, wards, boroughs, or school districts.

Seranton School Dist. v. Lackawanna I. & O. Co. (Pa.) 811

Commonwealth v. Halstead (Pa.) 818

14. The Act of May 24, 1878, giving the right of appeal from assessments for the purposes of taxation, to owners of real estate in counties of less than 5,000 inhabitants is unconstitutional, under art. 8, § 7, of the Constitution.

City of Seranton v. Stillman (Pa.) 817

15. Under Act Feb. 25, 1870, providing that city councils shall discriminate, in laying city taxes, between rural portions and property in the improved or built up portions of the city.—Held, the action of councils in determining certain property to be taxable at the rates applicable to the whole class is not subject to review, where it appeared that the discretion conferred upon the councils was not abused, and that there was some evidence that the property was benefited by the various city improvements included in the assessment; and if this were not so, yet the levy was validated by the Act of April 30, 1885, providing that all ordinances levying taxes in cities of the third, fourth, and fifth classes, in amount not exceeding twenty mills in any one year, are hereby made valid.

City of Erie v. Reed (Pa.) 487

16. The "Act for the Taxation of Railroad and Canal Property," approved April 10, 1884 (P. L. 1884, p. 142), providing for the separate taxation, through a "state board of assessors," of property used for railroad and canal purposes, at the rate of one half of one per cent on the valuation, for state purposes, and at the local rate (but not exceeding one per cent) on the valuation of the real estate, exclusive of the main-stem and waterway, for local purposes, and providing that the companies shall not be required to pay a greater tax for all purposes under the Act than they would be required to pay at full local rates, does not contravene the provision of the State Constitution (Amendment of 1875), that "property shall be assessed for taxes under general laws and by uniform rules, according to its true value," or the 14th Amend. of the Federal Constitution, providing that no State shall deny to any person the equal protection of its laws. Railroad and canal property may be distinguished as a class, and a statute operating equally upon all such property is not a local or special law. Such law is enforceable against all corporations having repealable charters and therefore subject to additional taxation. Depue, Dixon, and Reed, JJ., dissenting.

(S. C. in Supreme Court, 2 Cent. Rep. 715, reversed.)

State Board of Assessors v. Cent. R. R. Co. of N. J. (N. J.) 428

17. By the reservation of the power to alter a charter, the Legislature retains the power to impose additional taxation. Id.

18. All taxes, whether levied for state, county or municipal purposes, are state taxes; they can be imposed by no other authority than that of the State. The State appropriates the proceeds to what purposes it sees fit; but however the proceeds may be appropriated, every tax is a state tax. Authorities cited. Id. 431

19. The true value, for the purposes of taxation, of railroad cuts and embankments and canal locks is not the cost, but what they are worth in connection with the works of which they form a part. Authorities cited. Id.

20. Perfect equality and perfect uniformity of taxation, as regard individuals or corporations, or the different classes of property subject to taxation, is a dream unrealized. It may be admitted that the system which most nearly attains this is the best, but the most complete system which can be devised, when we consider the immense variety of space which it necessarily embraces, must be imperfect. Authorities cited. Id. 432

21. Franchises are undoubtedly property, and, as such, are taxable. Authorities cited. Id.

22. Whenever a tax or burden is imposed upon property for the public use, and provision is made for a mode of confirming or contesting the charge thus imposed in the ordinary courts of justice, with such notice to the person, or such proceeding with regard to the property, as is appropriate to the nature of the case, the judgment in such case cannot be said to deprive the owner of his property without due process of law. Authorities cited. Id. 433

23. The true value of property used for railroad or canal purposes cannot be arrived at except in treating it as a class by itself. Railroads are a peculiar species of property, and railroad corporations are in some respects peculiar corporations. The right to classify railroad property as a separate class, for purposes of taxation, grows out of the inherent nature of the property. Authorities cited. Id. 436

24. Where a particular tax bears heavily upon a corporation or class of corporations it cannot, for that reason only, be pronounced contrary to the Constitution. Authorities cited. Id. 438

25. A tax is uniform when it operates with the same force and effect in every place where the subject is found, but perfect uniformity and perfect equality of taxation, in all aspects in which the human mind can view it, is a baseless dream. Authorities cited. Id. 439

26. With the selection of property to be taxed the power of the Legislature to discriminate ends. The rule of uniformity prescribed for taxation prevents property from being classified and taxed as classed by different rules. Authorities cited. Dis. Op. Id. 450

27. Where the power of the Legislature is not restrained by express constitutional limitations, the designation of the property to be taxed and the manner of taxation are matters within the discretion of the Legislature. Authorities cited. Dis. Op. Id. 453

28. In property there is always present the element of value as the basis on which equality in taxation can be attained by the application of a uniform rate on such values, but in franchises, trades, or occupations there is no element of value in common, and hence the rule of equality is not violated by a taxation of these subjects by a rule which is uniform as to each class. Authorities cited. Dis. Op. Id.

29. To impose certain taxes exclusively upon one class of taxable property is as much a discrimination as to vary the rates of the same or other taxes upon different classes of property. Authorities cited. Dis. Op. Id. 454

30. The Legislature may exempt certain specific property or classes of property from taxation, but such exemption must be absolute and total. The Legislature has no power to exempt property from one tax or from taxation for one purpose and hold it liable to taxation for other purposes, without violating the rule of uniformity. Authorities cited. Dis. Op. Id.

II. COLLECTION; COLLECTORS; SALES.

31. The constitutional amendment requiring that "property shall be assessed for taxes under general rules" does not affect the mere machinery for the collection of taxes; hence, it does not affect the time within which a sale for taxes should take place.

Baldwin v. City of Elizabeth (Pa.) 335

32. When a tax has been lawfully laid, but the sale to enforce it is a nullity, the Act of 1881 (P. L. 1881, p. 194), providing that no tax, etc., shall be set aside for irregularity, if the person against whom it is assessed is liable to taxation, but that the court shall make a new assessment, has no applicability. Id.

33. If land is seated when assessed, after the collector's return it is the commissioner's duty to cause it to be sold as seated.

Skinner v. McAllister (Pa.) 750

34. If land is seated when assessed, and sold for taxes as unseated land, the sale is void. Id.

35. As a general rule a tax deed is not even prima facie evidence of title. It is incumbent upon whoever asserts title under it to prove affirmatively that all the preliminaries to the sale which the law prescribes were complied with.

Brewer v. District of Columbia (D. C.) 621

36. A tax deed, made in pursuance of a sale for the unpaid taxes of a certain year, passes the property to the purchaser, discharged of the liens of all taxes remaining due and unpaid at the time of the sale. Id.

37. Where the proceedings have been lawful and regular, the title passed by the deed expunges all previous titles and puts in the grantee an absolute, complete, and perfect title in fee simple to the property, discharged of all pre-existing equities and liens whatsoever and by whomsoever owned, saving only such limited rights of redemption as may be specially provided for by statute. Authorities cited. Id. 633

38. Sales of land to the city of Eliza-

both for nonpayment of taxes, for a term of 900 years, are unauthorized by law; and such sales and the certificates thereof convey no estate or interest in the property sold.

Baldwin v. City of Elizabeth (N. J.) 825

39. A tax collector will not be relieved from liability to account for taxes collected by him, by the omission of other officials to observe the statutory requirements that the assessment account shall be kept in a separate book, and that moneys for educational purposes shall be levied separately.

Myers v. State (Md.) 844

40. The provision in the bond of a tax collector for Carroll County, that he shall "pay to the county commissioners or their order" money which he shall receive, is not impaired by the Act of 1873, chap. 233, making it the duty of the treasurer of Carroll County to "receive the proceeds of all taxes levied in the county." Payment to the treasurer is, in law, payment to the commissioners. Id.

41. The state comptroller having refused to cancel a tax sale and conveyance thereunder, cannot be compelled by mandamus to reach a different conclusion.

People v. Chapin (N. Y.) 188

42. A payment by a tax collector, of money collected by him on the taxes for one year, in discharge of the taxes for previous years with which he is chargeable, is a breach of his bond.

Myers v. State (Md.) 844

43. The facts that a tax collector reappointed to office was, at the time, in default under a former appointment, and that the sureties on his new bond were not notified, by the appointing authorities, of his existing defaultations, will not avail as a defense to the sureties. Id.

44. Application of a purchaser of real estate in Long Island City on the foreclosure of a mortgage, to be allowed on his purchase money the amount of taxes on the property for the years 1877 to 1885, remaining unpaid, opposed on the ground that said taxes were illegally assessed and therefore not valid liens, refused with liberty to the purchaser to be relieved from his purchase.

Re Byrnes v. Stevens (N. Y.) 118

45. Under the corporation tax law, the court of chancery has only authority to grant or refuse an injunction against a corporation's continuing business after failure to pay the tax assessed against it; and a proper case for such injunction appears when the court is satisfied that the State is not wholly in the wrong.

State v. American Glucose Co. (N. J.) 142

46. An injunction will not be granted under the Act of April 18, 1884, to restrain a corporation from exercising franchises in case of nonpayment of tax, where the corporation has only kept up a formal organization without transacting any business.

Re Faure Electric Light & Force Co. (N. J.) 148

Re New York File & Sharpening Co. (N. J.) 144

III. REMEDIES AGAINST ILLEGAL.

47. The "Act Concerning Past Due Assessments" (P. L. 1881, p. 38) affords a complete remedy to the owner of land assessed under unconstitutional laws for benefits for municipal improvements; and he therefore has no standing to seek relief in equity.

Baldwin v. City of Elizabeth (N. J.) 825

48. When a landowner seeks the aid of a court of equity to relieve him from a tax sale and the tax is lawful, the court should (on the principle that he who would have equity must do equity) require, as terms of setting aside the sale and certificate, that he pay the tax and interest thereon. Id.

49. The right to maintain a suit, under the statute, to quiet title by removing the cloud caused by a sale for alleged illegal taxes, may be lost through laches in failing to question the validity of the tax by certiorari. Id.

50. If a party assessed has opportunity to appeal to the board of commissioners, and fails to do so, he cannot have relief on certiorari on the question of valuation.

State v. Posenell (N. J.) 564

51. In an action to recover the excess of a payment, made on an assessment afterwards vacated, over the amount of a reassessment, it was held that the amount of the reassessment was to be charged against the payment as of the date of the first assessment, and interest could be recovered only on the balance. Authorities cited.

Cadmus v. Fagan (N. J.) 811

TENANTS IN COMMON. See JOINT TENANTS AND TENANTS IN COMMON.

TENDER. See EJECTMENT, 1, 8.

Vendee purchased horses, paying part of purchase price, delivery to be made at a subsequent date, at which time vendee offered notes drawn by vendor in part payment, which offer was refused on the ground that the sale was for cash. Vendee got possession, and it was held vendor might bring replevin without returning the hand money.

Bush v. Bender (Pa.) 85

TESTAMENTARY CAPACITY. See WILL, 2-4.

TICKETS. See CARRIERS, II.

TOWNS. See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

TRADEMARKS.

The use of words (here, "patent roofing") merely designating the kind of business one is engaged in cannot be protected as a trade-mark.

Fay's Admrs. v. Fay (N. J.) 241

TRESPASS. See ANIMALS; LOGS AND LOGGING.

1. An agreement in writing for the sale of unseated land, and an offer of immediate possession, and an acceptance of the same by the vendee, and part payment of the purchase money, gives the vendee the equitable title, and, in contemplation of law, the actual possession, which will support an action for trespass for injury done thereon.

Müller v. Zufall (Pa.) 496

2. The owner of wild and uncultivated land is to be deemed in possession, so as to maintain trespass, until an adverse possession is clearly made out. Authorities cited. Id. 493

8. It lies not in the mouth of a trespasser to defend by reason of the plaintiff owning only an equitable interest. Authorities cited. Id.

4. The vendee of land, under an unrecorded written contract, who has never been in possession, and who has paid only part of the purchase money, cannot, without first paying or tendering the balance of the purchase money, maintain against the legal owner trespass for cutting timber.

McGrew v. Foster (Pa.) 915

5. A part owner of goods in possession of them may recover all the damages resulting from a trespass upon the goods, committed by a stranger.

State v. Winkler (N. J.) 250

6. In trespass quare clausum fregit, plaintiff claimed title under a deed which had been lost, and in evidence thereof submitted a recital in a subsequent deed from the same grantor for other land, that one of the lines ran "thence by lands of" plaintiff. Held, that such recital was insufficient and did not indicate that the whole of the line was along such lands.

Riegelsville Del. Bridge Co. v. Bloom (N. J.) 820

7. If a man brings or uses a thing of a dangerous nature on his own land, he must keep it at his own peril, and is liable for the consequences if it escapes and does injury to another. Authorities cited.

Pa. Coal Co. v. Sanderson (Pa.) 483

8. A landowner may lawfully leave an excavation unprotected, so distant from the highway that no one can reach it without becoming a trespasser. Authorities cited.

Moore v. Logan Iron & S. Co. (Pa.) 506

9. One may not excusably place a dangerous pitfall or wolf trap or a spring gun purposely to catch even willful trespassers poaching on his grounds. Authorities cited. Id.

10. As a general rule, the only legal duty which a trespasser incurs by his wrongful act, where his trespass is complete when judicial aid is invoked, is a liability to reimburse the person injured, in money, for the loss which his trespass has caused.

Lords v. Carbon Iron Mfg. Co. (N. J.) 853

11. For a simple trespass, which is complete when the force by which it is committed ceases, and which is continuous in nothing but the consequences which may flow from it subsequent to its commission, the only remedy known to the law is an action of trespass, in which the person injured must recover his damages once for all. Id.

12. If the damages resulting from a trespass are aggravated or increased by the folly, willful obstinacy, or gross carelessness of the injured person, such part of his loss as is directly attributable to his own fault cannot be recovered. Id.

13. The jurisdiction of courts of equity in cases of trespass is purely preventive; they may restrain a threatened trespass, if the injury likely to ensue will be irreparable, or they may enjoin the continuance or repetition of a trespass; but for a completed trespass, which, as a legal wrong, is complete when protection is sought, they can give no redress whatever. Id.

C. R., V. IV.

14. A court of equity cannot award pecuniary damages in redress of a trespass. A court of equity has no authority to impose an easement on the land of a trespasser, in redress of the wrong done by the trespass. Id.

TRIAL. See CRIMINAL LAW, III.; JURY; WITNESS.

1. The exclusion of evidence is no cause for reversal where it is admitted at a later stage of the trial.

Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Rosenzweig (Pa.) 713

2. A point presented to the court for consideration should be so answered that the jury will clearly understand whether it is affirmed or denied.

Swank v. Phillips (Pa.) 461

3. An erroneous instruction upon a material point, expressing the opinion of the court that the evidence did not warrant a certain conclusion, is not cured, in the absence of an explicit withdrawal, by a subsequent submission of the question to the jury.

Driggs v. Phillips (N. Y.) 237

4. It is not error for the court to refuse to instruct the jury on facts that are not in evidence.

Erie City Passenger R. Co. v. Schuster (Pa.) 919

5. When a jury is misled by the charge of the court, the verdict will be reversed.

Skinner v. McAllister (Pa.) 750

6. Where the jury renders a verdict for plaintiff, by direction of court, subject to a reserved point of law which does not state the facts, and no exceptions are taken to the findings of fact contained in the verdict of the jury, the entry of judgment for the plaintiff, by the court, on the reserved point, will be presumed right, and will be affirmed.

Cent. Bank of Pittsburgh v. Earley (Pa.) 270

7. A reserved point of law must state the facts out of which it arises. Authorities cited. Id. 271

8. If plaintiff's case, as exhibited by the testimony and the rejected offers of evidence, is fatally deficient in the requisite kind or degree of proof, there is no error in the court's directing a verdict for defendant.

Shank v. Simpson (Pa.) 743

9. A rule of court, providing that a copy of a book account sued on, duly filed and verified by affidavit, shall be admitted in evidence without further proof, unless the defendant file an affidavit that he believes justice will be done if the plaintiff be not held to strict proof of his claim, construed, and held to apply to a case where the suit is by an administrator on a decedent's book account.

Mattern v. McDivitt (Pa.) 396

10. The refusal by a party to a suit to produce at the trial thereof papers then admitted to be in his possession, having been duly notified so to do, but no order to produce them under the rule of court having been asked for—does not justify denunciation by the court in its charge. Id.

TROVER AND CONVERSION.

1. Where one having a lien on goods sets up a claim hostile to the owner's title and wrongfully sells the goods, he cannot set up the lien as a bar to the owner's recovery, in an action of trover, for his illegal act.

Andrews v. Wade (Pa.) 689

2. Justification is not admissible under a general denial in trover.

Whedder v. Lawson (N. Y.) 186

3. Actual possession of personal property by plaintiff at the time of taking is enough, without other evidence of title, to maintain an action in trover for the conversion thereof, except against the true owner or one connecting himself with the true owner. Finch, J., dissents. Id.

TRUSTS. See EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS; GUARDIAN AND WARD; LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, 4; RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES; VENDOR AND PURCHASER, 13.

1. A deed conveying property in trust "for the use of the ministry and membership of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States of America, subject to the discipline, usage, and ministerial appointments of said Church," is too vague and indefinite, and the trust cannot be upheld.

Isaac v. Emory (Md.) 163

2. A trust cannot be upheld unless it be of such a nature that the cestuis que trust are defined and capable of enforcing its execution by proceedings in a court of chancery. Authorities cited. Id. 164

3. Where the evidence shows a wrongful conversion of trust funds by a married woman, her estate is liable in damages, although the trust funds be not identified as a part of her estate. There was no evidence of coercion by the husband.

Appeal of Franklin (Pa.) 322

4. Real estate acquired before the Code, by the husband, with money furnished by the wife, with her consent, and held in his name for many years, will be considered his, and not as held by him in trust for the wife.

Flynn v. Walsh (Md.) 155

5. A, the owner of certain real estate, executed a deed thereof to B, in trust to execute a conveyance of the premises to such person as C might appoint by a writing under seal, in her lifetime, or by will, and to permit C to occupy the same and receive the rents and profits thereof during her life. This deed was made upon a valuable consideration moving from C, the cestui que trust. A and B both died without C's having made any appointment under the trust deed. A leaving a will bequeathing all his estate to C. Thereafter C orally requested the principal heir at law of B to convey the C. R., V. IV.

premises to her, which was done by deed executed by the principal and certain other, but not all, the heirs at law of B. Held, that the power given to B to convey to C's appointee was a power coupled with a trust; that C's appointment of herself was valid; that the fact that her request for a conveyance was oral, instead of in writing, was such a defect in the execution of the power as equity will correct; that the conveyance of the legal title to C by heirs at law of B was valid, and that a title to the premises acquired through C thereunder is good.

Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Everett (N. J.) 828

6. Where a son was trustee, to some extent, or agent of his aged mother, and had the care or custody of her estate, and the possession of securities claimed to belong to such estate, he is held to a strict account; and the burden is on him to make clear and plain, and to remove every reasonable doubt as to the ownership of such security.

Parker's Admr. v. Parker (N. J.) 67

7. A note of hand, made by one having a contingent interest in remainder in a trust fund, secured only by an agreement between the maker and the person who has a life estate in the income of the fund, pledging all their interest in the fund to the payment of the note, is a doubtful security such as a new trustee will not be compelled to accept from his predecessor.

Re Craven (N. J.) 144

8. A preliminary injunction will issue at the instance of a trustee, restraining a cestui que trust from issuing execution on a judgment in his own name, where there is a dispute as to whether or not the judgment is included in the trust.

Reeser v. Reeser (Pa.) 51

TURNPIKE COMPANIES.

1. The change of a turnpike to a common, free, public road confers no special benefit upon the landowner, and assessments made therefor are void.

State v. Essex Pub. Road Board (N. J.) 830

2. No damage is done the owners of the soil of a public highway by changing such highway from a common, free, public road to a turnpike, or by transferring the easement from the public to a private corporation which by law is authorized to require of the public payment of tolls for traveling upon the road. Authorities cited. Id. 831

ULTRA VIRES. See CORPORATIONS, 5, 6, 8, 10, 18-23.

UNDUE INFLUENCE. See FRAUD AND FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE, I.

UNLIQUIDATED DAMAGES. See DAMAGES, 12.

USAGE. See CUSTOM AND USAGE.

USURY.

1. If a bonus for the loan of money, which, if paid to the lender directly, would render the loan usurious, is paid to the agent of the lender without the knowledge and against the will of the lender, he is not affected by the illegality of the transaction, and may enforce a mortgage given him to secure such loan; but if the bonus is taken by the agent with the knowledge of the lender, then his mortgage must be declared usurious.

Borchertling's Est. v. Trefts (N. J.) 837

2. If the lender under a usurious contract comes into court, the borrower can safely insist upon the enforcement of the penalty; but if the borrower comes in he will be required to pay what is really and bona fide due. Authorities cited.

Orandall v. Grow (N. J.) 71

VENDOR AND PURCHASER. See SALE.

1. A vendor's lien, or lien by way of equitable mortgage, because of a promise to give a mortgage to secure purchase money, held superior to the claim of an assignee representing judgment creditors of a firm of which the vendee was a member.

Hubbard's Admr. v. Clark (N. J.) 593

2. A vendor's lien for purchase money extends, on his death, to his personal representatives. Id.

3. A bill to enforce a vendor's lien for the purchase money of land conveyed by one since deceased is properly brought by the vendor's administrator, and the widow and the heirs at law need not be joined; and this, although the heirs had dealt with the vendee directly in reference to the purchase money. Id.

4. The establishment of a vendor's lien for purchase money is an equitable and not a legal remedy. Authorities cited. Id. 594

5. A bona fide purchaser of land from a married woman, with knowledge that it was acquired by her from her husband, and that a suit is pending against the husband as surety on a guardian's bond, is sufficiently affected with notice to render the property in his hands liable for the amount of the judgment subsequently recovered in such suit, after the exhaustion of other property improperly acquired from her husband remaining in the hands of the wife.

Flynn v. Walsh (Md.) 155

6. Where a purchaser has enough knowledge to put him on inquiry, it is equivalent to notice. Authorities cited. Id. 158

7. A vendee with notice of a former conveyance, or who, with such notice as should have put him on inquiry whether his grantor's title was disputed, neglected to inquire concerning it, is not an innocent purchaser and takes no title.

Swank v. Phillips (Pa.) 461

8. Where one takes a lease for a number of years, and during the term enters into a contract of purchase, with his landlord, of the same property, his possession, which was taken as tenant, operates as notice to one dealing with the landlord in respect to the land, not merely of his right as tenant but of his right to the inheritance. The possession, although taken as tenant, becomes also a possession as purchaser, protecting him as such to the extent

C. R., V. IV.

of his entire right. Authorities cited. Dia. Op. Stewart v. Long Island R. R. Co. (N. Y.) 154

9. Where complainant purchased, by verbal contract, of an agent who had parol authority to solicit purchasers, the principal retaining the right to reject any sale made by him, a piece of land and paid the agent $10, and by the agent's authority entered upon the land and dug a trench and deposited some timber for a building, and the principal subsequently rejected the contract and tender of performance, specific performance was refused.

Chamberlain v. Manning (N. J.) 821

10. In a contract in writing for the sale of land there is no implied covenant to give the vendee possession before the conveyance is executed.

McGrew v. Foster (Pa.) 915

11. A mere temporary occupancy for the purpose of making a survey or taking off timber, by one having no right of possession, is not such an actual occupancy as defeats the constructive possession of the owner. Id.

12. When an agreement for sale of land is fully executed in writing, the vendor thereby assumes the character of a trustee, and holds the legal title in trust for the vendee, under the terms and conditions of the contract. The trust thus implied is of the same character as if it had been expressed in the agreement.

Orne v. Kittanning Coal Co. (Pa.) 751

13. The vendee of land under an unrecorded written contract, who has never been in possession, and has paid only part of the purchase money, cannot, without first paying or tendering the balance of the purchase money, maintain against the legal owner trespass for cutting timber.

McGrew v. Foster (Pa.) 915

VERDICT. See CRIMINAL LAW, 18; TRIAL, 6-8.

VESSELS. See SHIPS AND SHIPPING.

VESTED REMAINDERS. See DEVISE AND LEGACY, V.

WAGERS. See GAMING; INSURANCE; 23.

WAGES. See MASTER AND SERVANT I; RECEIVER, II.

WARD. See GUARDIAN AND WARD.

WATER COMPANIES.

1. Property belonging to a municipality, owned and used by commissioners, appointed by law, in operating and carrying on water works to supply the public with water, and necessary for such purpose, from which a revenue is derived, is taxable under the Act of May 14, 1874.

Erie Co. v. City of Erie (Pa.) 300

2. The Act of May 14, 1874, entitled "An Act to Exempt from Taxation Public Property Used for Public Purposes," which exempts certain property and contains a proviso that "all property, real or personal other than that which is in actual use and occupation for the purposes aforesaid, and from which any income or revenue is derived shall be subject to taxation; and nothing herein contained shall exempt the same," imposes taxation upon public property used for public purposes from which a revenue is derived.

Id.

WATERS AND WATERCOURSES.

See DRAINS AND SEWERS; FISH AND FISHERIES; MILLS AND DAMS; MINES AND MINING, 6-17.

1. The description in a deed, "high water line" or its equivalent (here, "the beach"), is a fixed and permanent one, bounding the land conveyed by the high water line existing at the date of the deed; if the high water line subsequently recedes by natural causes, the land submerged is lost to the grantee in the deed.

Nixon v. Walter (N. J.) 875

2. The grantee of the shore of navigable waters does not take a fixed freehold, but one that shifts and recedes as the shore advances. Authorities cited. Id. 877

3. Where a boundary line was "along the high water mark of a pond," it was held that the line thus given was a fixed and permanent one, the line of high water mark at the date of the deed did not follow changes of the high water mark of the pond. Authorities cited. Id.

4. Under a grant from the commissioners of the land office of the State, to the owner of the adjacent upland, of lands under water in an arm of the sea, which is a common fishery, not a natural oyster bed, and within the limits of the port of New York, within which the dumping of dredging material is prohibited except in the construction of piers, etc., reserving to the people of the State the right of entering upon and using the granted premises until appropriated by the grantee by the erection of a dock, etc., the grantee has no right to dump dredging material upon an oyster bed planted by another within said granted premises, unless that constitutes an actual appropriation within the provisions of the grant.

Post v. Kreischer (N. Y.) 219

5. Land on a lower level is under a natural servitude to that located above it, to receive the water flowing down to it naturally.

Lords v. Carbon Iron Mfg. Co. (N. J.) 853

6. Where the cause of action is a pollution of a watercourse by water from a coal mine, and where the injury was caused by a combination of mine water which flowed naturally from the mines, which was damnum absque injuria, and water pumped from the mines, if as to the latter there would be liability for injury inflicted, where the injury is estimated without distinguishing between these sources, the judgment will be reversed. Pa. Coal Co. v. Sanderson, 86 Pa. 401, overruled. Mercur, Oh. J., Gordon and Trunkley, JJ., dissenting.

Pa. Coal Co. v. Sanderson (Pa.) 475

7. The right to mine coal is a right incident to the ownership of coal property, and when exercised in the ordinary manner and with due care, the owner cannot be held liable in damages to a riparian owner for permitting the natural flow of mine water over his own land into the watercourse, by means of which the water supply of a riparian owner is affected in quality or quantity, the mine introducing nothing into the water to corrupt it, the impurities being from natural and not artificial causes, and the result being a mere personal injury and not affecting the general health and well-being of the community. (Pa. Coal Co. v. Sanderson, 86 Pa. 401, overruled.) Mercur, Oh. J., Gordon and Trunkley, JJ., dissenting. Id.

8. Land on a lower level owes a natural servitude to that on a higher level in respect of receiving, without claim for compensation by the owner, the water naturally flowing down to it. Authorities cited. Id. 480

9. If a well of one landowner is so close to the soil of his neighbor as to require the support of a rib of clay or of stone on his neighbor's land, to retain the water in the well, no action will lie against the owner of the adjacent land for digging away such clay or stone, which is on his own property, and thereby letting out the water. Authorities cited. Id.

10. The superior owner may improve his lands by throwing increased waters upon his inferior, through the natural and accustomed channels, which is a most important principle, in respect not only to agriculture but to mining operations also. Authorities cited. Id. 481

11. If one builds a dam upon his own premises, and thus holds back and accumulates the water for his benefit, or if he brings water upon his premises into a reservoir, in case the dam or the banks of the reservoir give way and the lands of a neighbor are thus flooded, he is not liable for damages without proof of some fault or negligence on his part. Authorities cited. Id. 483

12. The owner of an artificial pool, formed by damming a natural stream, was held not liable for injury resulting from an extremely violent storm. Authorities cited. Id.

13. The law has never gone so far as to recognize in one man the right to convert another's farm to his own use for the purpose of a filter. Authorities cited. Id. 484

WAYS.

I. DEDICATION.

II. LAYING OUT; ASSESSMENTS · PROCEEDINGS.

III. RAILROAD COMPANIES.

IV. OBSTRUCTIONS.

V. PRIVATE WAYS; ALLEYS.

See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, IV., V.; TURNPIKE COMPANIES.

I. DEDICATION.

1. A dedication of land to the public cannot be inferred from the mere removal of a fence, by the owner; but if such inference obtained, the dedication would not be effectual without acceptance.

Rozell v. Andrews (N. Y.) 209

2. Where the owner of land lays it out into blocks and lots upon a map, and designates certain portions thereof to be used as streets, parks, and squares, an implied covenant arises as appurtenant to lots granted with reference to such plan, not to use the portions so devoted to the common advantage, although not of such a nature as to give rise to public rights by dedication, otherwise than in the manner indicated by such map.

Lennig v. Ocean City Asso. (N. J.) 808

8. The mere laying out or location of streets is not a dedication of the land upon which they are laid to the use of the public, but only an indication of what may thereafter be so dedicated, and until they are so opened the landowner is entitled to no damages.

Funk's Admrs. v. Waynesboro' School Dist. (Pa.) 800

II. LAYING OUT; ASSESSMENTS; PROCEEDINGS.

4. A city is not liable for consequential damages suffered by a land owner from the sliding down of his land, caused by the cutting down of the street and the removal of the lateral support, where such action of the city was authorized by its charter. Authorities cited.

Cogswell v. N. Y. N. II. & H. R. R. Co. (N. Y.) 329

5. The Act of May 9, 1871, entitled "An Act Relating to Streets in Several Boroughs of Montgomery County," which provides that the damages for locating streets shall be assessed under the general road laws, does not impose the payment of the damages upon the county under the general road laws, and the statute is therefore not unconstitutional as containing in its title no notice that it embraced matters relating to the county. Paxson and Green, JJ., concurring in the judgment on the ground that, while the Act does impose the payment of damages upon the county, the title of the Act sufficiently gives notice to the taxpayers.

Montgomery Co.'s Appeal (Pa.) 808

6. Upon certiorari of road proceedings the presumption is that the road was laid at a proper grade whenever practicable.

Re Road in Dunmore Township (Pa.) 88

7. In the absence of any rule of court prohibiting the viewers from being entertained by the petitioner, and upon finding of the court that it was done under circumstances evincing no sinister purpose or effort to unduly influence the viewers, the proceedings were not set aside. Id.

8. A contract entered into by the supervisors of a township, with a canal company, for the use of the tow path of the canal as a public road, in consideration of the payment of an annual sum of money, the contract being made by decree of quarter sessions court, is ultra vires, against public policy, and not authorized by statute; the canal company cannot enforce payment thereon.

Pa. Coal Co. v. Townships of Shirley and Union (Pa.) 927

9. The only parties to a proceeding under Act of 1882, to authorize the compromising or settlement by arbitration of a tax or assessment laid by any public road board, are C. R., v. IV.

the road board and the applicant; and to bring himself within the Act he must show an excess in the assessment over the accruing benefits.

State v. Skinkle (N. J.) 560

10. A return of the laying out of a public road by surveyors of the highways was amended by striking out an award of damages for lands taken, to "the heirs of A. B.," and inserting in lieu thereof a specific award to each individual owner. Held, that such owners had a right to caveat and procure a review of the necessity and utility of the road, by chosen freeholders, after the original return was received by the county clerk, by taking the steps required by Rev. 996, § 8, within the time prescribed; and that such right was not revived or renewed by such an amendment to the return.

State v. Craig (N. J.) 563

11. Section 8, concerning roads in the Township of Hackensack (Laws 1870, p. 8), applicable to Ridgefield, requires that the road board shall decide and determine upon the necessity of a proposed improvement in roads. Their decision must show that they did so decide and determine in exercising their special statutory authority.

State v. Ridgefield Pub. Road Board (N. J.) 573

12. The lack of notice will not be presumed from the silence of the return; and if damages have not been paid, the remedy will be, not to set aside the ordinance, but to compel the city to take the requisite steps to make compensation.

State v. City of Lambertville (N. J.) 574

13. After the lapse of sixteen years, proceedings to open a street will not be reviewed on certiorari, for failure of the return to show notice of the ordinance and an award of damages. Id.

14. The terms of Borough Act of March 7, 1882, relating to taxes for road purposes, should be construed to extend to assessments for road purposes, where no previous appropriation has been made by legal authority.

State v. Horner (N. J.) 145

15. Where township voters have, at their regular election, fixed the amount to be raised for highways in the township for the ensuing year, and the township committee has appropriated the money, to be raised by taxation, to the several road overseers, and thereafter a part of the township votes to become an incorporated borough, the commissioners of such new borough are not entitled to the possession and control of the portion of such money raised by taxation upon the part of the township incorporated in the borough; but the same is to be expended by the township overseer as apportioned by the township. Id.

16. The report of a reassessment, made after a partial vacation of an assessment for a street improvement, will not be vacated merely because on its face it seems to give awards to all owners of land taken or damaged, and to levy assessments upon all lands benefited, instead of being confined to the lands concerning which the original assessment had been vacated, it appearing that, as to other lands, the as-assessments in the second and first reports are identical.

State v. Village of South Orange (N. J.) 425

17. Where the report of a board of assessors, in a proceeding to condemn land for a street opening in Trenton, shows that they met at the time and place appointed, and nothing appearing to the contrary, the report must be accepted as true. Such report should show what notice of the meeting of the assessors was given and what manner of publication was adopted.

State v. City of Trenton (N. J.) 80

18. Under the charter (Laws 1878, p. 872), the assessors could not appoint meetings after the expiration of thirty days from the time appointed for their first meeting. Id.

19. Compliance with the charter requirements, that the report be completed and filed within 80 days after the first meeting, is essential to the validity of the proceeding. Id.

20. Everything necessary to give validity to the action of a special tribunal must appear in the record. Authorities cited. Id. 81

21. The change of a turnpike to a common, free, public road confers no special benefit upon the landowner, and assessments made therefor are void.

State v. Essex Pub. Road Board (N. J.) 880

22. No damage is done the owners of the soil of a public highway by changing such highway from a common, free, public road to a turnpike, or by transferring the easement from the public to a private corporation which by law is authorized to require of the public payment of tolls for travelling upon the road. Authorities cited. Id. 881

23. The power of a township committee to assign limits and divisions of the highways, under section 87 of the Road Act, cannot be exercised in any township where an overseer was elected by the inhabitants of the road district, after such an election during that year.

State v. Smith (N. J.) 881

24. It is proper for a township committee to refuse to recognize a claim for work done by a road overseer in the absence of or in excess of an appropriation to his district. Id.

25. The legislative grant in § 16 of the supplement of 1870 to the Road Board Act (P. L. p. 181), of the right to assess damages upon lands benefited, for the transfer of the franchise of a turnpike company to the Essex public road board, is an authority to lay a burden where no possible benefit can accrue, and is unconstitutional and void. It sanctions the taking of private property for public use without compensation. The prescribed limitation of time within which a writ of certiorari must be sued out to review an assessment is inoperative.

Essex Pub. Road Board v. State (N. J.) 829

State v. Essex Pub. Road Board (N. J.) 880

III. RAILROAD COMPANIES.

26. A railroad corporation having authority, when public necessity requires, to change the grade of will not be p that respect, the municipi located may payment of change.

Jersey City

27. Public destroyed, ev legislative ferred either implication. struction oug right of high cited. Id.

28. The in railroad of constituting that purpose, along the line to its center, public thereh out compen Chamberlasi.

29. A statu company to t a railroad, wit highways ex to make and l passages at th will not au public road l Pa. R. R. C

30. A railr priate and u the laying of switches, sid power is giv implication.

1

31. A muni and supervis its territorial l equity to pre streets or inju public of thei Jersey City v

32. Commis to the proceed the removal of and cannot m the removal o join future ob

Rozell v. Anc

33. Where t ject to the eas obstruction public officials acquiescence c can deprive th whole highway obstructions.

Driggs v. Ph

34. The pla against public performance c an obstruct cannot recover if the act complained of was done upon premises which at any time had been set apart as a highway and by dedication had become such, although plaintiff had occupied a portion of it for twenty years.

Id.

85. Where, after a street was opened and dedicated to public use, complainant railroad purchased a portion of land over which the street extended, taking a deed with full covenants of warranty, and completely obstructed the street by making a deep excavation for its road and laying its tracks, it is estopped from claiming that any portion of said street was dedicated, as against one erecting a dwelling-house on a portion of said street.

South Branch R. R. Co. v. Parker (N. Y.) 63

86. Afterwards complainant filed a caveat against recording of surveyors' return of public road over same land, crossing the railroad, and prevailed; and then built a water tank in the center of said proposed highway. Held that this too works an estoppel.

Id.

87. One who has his dwelling fronting on a street unlawfully occupied by a railroad company,—Held, to be specially injured, and entitled to an injunction restraining the occupation of the street without power expressly given or necessarily implied in the franchises of the company.

Pa. R. R. Co. v. Mish (Pa.)

276

V. PRIVATE WAYS; ALLEYS.

88. To establish a by-road from twenty years' uninterrupted enjoyment, there must be a certain, well-defined line of travel in the same place over the entire route.

South Branch R. R. Co. v. Parker (N. Y.) 63

89. The court will not declare the existence of an alleged way over a private alley way owned by two in common, unless both owners of the private way are in court.

Id.

40. In such case the court would rather presume a license by the absent owner than to declare the use adverse, without his being heard.

Id.

41. The owner of the fee in an alley way over which is a right of way may erect a building over said way, if in so doing he does not interfere with the right of way.

Sutton v. Groll (N. J.)

251

WIDOW. See DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION, 11-15; DOWER.

WILL. See DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION, 6; DEVISE AND LEGACY.

1. Declarations of the maker of a holographic will, made previous to the time of its execution and publication, in conversations with the persons who subsequently witnessed the will, may be admitted to aid in showing a publication within the statutory requirements, where such previous declarations are closely connected with the act of publication by words used by the testator at the time of publication.

Re Will of Beckett (N. Y.)

381

2. Where testator made a will in 1870, when C. R., V. IV.

he had undoubted testamentary capacity, and subsequently made another will in 1880, some of the provisions of which were hostile to the former, and there was some evidence that at the latter date the health and mental capacity of testator had been much impaired by intemperance, yet it appeared from the facts that the entire will was in testator's own handwriting and that he had attended to business, making and paying a number of checks and transacting a variety of matters, and there was a conflict of testimony as to whether the testator was physically capable of writing on the day of the date of the will; but the preponderance was that he had written the will and a number of other instruments, and the provisions of the will did not indicate any incapacity,—the decree of the orphans' court admitting the will of 1870 and rejecting that of 1880 was reversed.

Re Diets (N. J.)

387

3. A will cannot be rejected because the court sees no good reasons for its provisions.

Id.

4. When it is sought to establish a posterior will, to overthrow a prior one made by the testator in health and under circumstances of deliberation and care, where the subsequent will was made when the testator was in enfeebled health and in hostility to the provisions of the first one, the prior will is to prevail, unless he who sets up the subsequent one can satisfy the conscience of the court of probate that he has established a will. Authorities cited.

Id.

5. Lapse of time and laches (in this case a delay of fourteen months) are not a bar to the filing of a caveat to test the validity of a will.

Re Estate of McIntire (D. C.)

605

6. An executor is not, as such, incompetent, under section 829, Code Civ. Proc., to testify, on the probate of the will, as to personal conversations and transactions with the testator, on the ground that he is a party to the proceeding or interested by way of commissions. Authorities cited.

Id.

7. A legatee may, by releasing his interest in the will, remove his incompetency, under § 829, Code Civ. Proc., to testify, on the probate of the will, in relation to personal conversations and transactions with the testator.

Re Will of Wilson (N. Y.)

769

8. A divorced wife, however innocent, has no right to a distributive share in the personal estate of her divorced husband, upon his death intestate. Hence a divorced wife, who had been divorced on her own application (for the adultery of her husband), and who had released all interest in her former husband's real estate, is not entitled to notice of proceedings to probate his will.

Re Estate of Ensign (N. Y.)

376

9. In a suit by an executor to compel production of a will held by the daughter of testatrix and her husband, defendants having been in the wrong originally,—Held, liable for costs.

Beckett v. Zane (N. J.)

54

10. Under section 2589, Code Civ. Proc., the general term has no power, on appeal from a surrogate's court, to award costs to an unsuccessful contestant of the probate of a will.

Re Will of Wilson (N. Y.) 769

11. Every last will made when testator had no issue living, wherein any issue he might have is not provided for or mentioned, shall be void if, at the time of his death, he leave a child or children or issue, or leave his wife en-ciente of a child, and such testator shall be deemed to die intestate. Rev. 1246, § 20.

Coudert v. Coudert (N. J.) 182

WITNESS.

I. COMPETENCY.

II. CREDIBILITY.

III. EXAMINATION.

See EVIDENCE, 9-11, 14; HUSBAND AND WIFE, 83; PERJURY; WILL, 6, 7.

I. COMPETENCY.

1. A legatee may, by releasing his interest in the will, remove his incompetency, under section 829, Code Civ. Proc., to testify, on the probate of the will, in relation to personal conversations and transactions with the testator.

Re Will of Wilson (N. Y.) 769

2. An executor is not, as such, incompetent, under § 829, Code Civ. Proc., to testify, on the probate of the will, as to personal conversations and transactions with the testator, on the ground that he is a party to the proceeding or interested by way of commissions. Authorities cited. Id. 770

3. If, at the time of examination of a person before a coroner's inquest, it appears that a crime has been committed and that he is in custody as the supposed criminal, he is not to be regarded as a witness, but as a person accused, and he is to be treated in the same manner as if brought before a committing magistrate; and an examination not taken in conformity with the statute cannot be used against him on his trial for the offense. Authorities cited.

People v. Mondon (N. Y.) 859

4. Where a coroner's inquest is held before it has been ascertained that a crime has been committed, or before any person has been arrested charged with the crime, and a witness is called and sworn, his testimony (should he afterwards be charged with the crime) may be used against him on his trial, and the mere fact that at the time of his examination he was aware that a crime was suspected and that he was suspected of being the criminal will not prevent his being regarded as a mere witness, whose testimony may afterwards be given in evidence against himself. Authorities cited. Id.

5. A corporation, acting through officers and agents who are admitted to testify in cases where the corporation is a party, cannot be C. R., V. IV.

said to be under legal disability; and the opposing party in a suit can be examined as a witness.

North Hudson Co. R. Co. v. May (N. J.) 81

6. That the plaintiff in an action of ejectment has been permitted to testify to matters occurring in the lifetime of the deceased ancestor of defendants, either with or without objection, does not render the widow and son of the ancestor competent to testify to such matters for the purpose of sustaining defendant's title.

Swank v. Phillips (Pa.) 461

7. In a suit by a married woman through her husband as her next friend, the latter, being a nominal party to the suit only, is a competent witness for the plaintiff.

Neale v. Hermann (Md.) 161

8. Conductor's written statement giving details of accident immediately after it happened, is not admissible in evidence, but the facts must be proved by the conductor or others who witnessed the occurrence. Conductor may use such written statement to refresh his memory.

North Hudson Co. R. Co. v. May (N. J.) 81

II. CREDIBILITY.

9. Evidence testing the recollection and credibility, or showing the bias of a witness, is admissible as cross examination.

Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Rosenzweig (Pa.) 712

10. A judge is not bound to believe a thing merely because the witness swears to it, but he should test the evidence as other men of discernment would test it, believing what he is convinced is true, and discarding what he is convinced is false.

Fuller v. Fuller (N. J.) 88

III. EXAMINATION.

11. Cross examination is never limited or controlled by the mere words and phrases used in direct examination. Where a party to a suit denies the principal allegation or charge against him, in his direct examination, he thereby lays himself liable to cross examination upon every circumstance and transaction with which he was connected, which may tend to establish the allegation or charge.

Pullen v. Pullen (N. J.) 71

WORDS. See DEFINITIONS.

WRIT AND PROCESS. See EXECUTION.

A sheriff's return, that he served the summons in a case on the guardian of a minor, cannot be contradicted in a collateral action.

Levan v. Mitholland (Pa.) 966

WRIT OF ERROR. See ERROR.

SUPPLEMENTAL INDEX.

EDITORIAL NOTES AND BRIEFS.

ABANDONMENT. See WATS.

ABATEMENT. See NUISANCE.

ACCOUNT. See EQUITY; EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS; GUARDIAN AND WARD; LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

Equity jurisdiction of common pleas. (Pa.) 43

Bill for account must aver an indebtedness at time of filing. (Pa.) 43

Limitation of actions; mutual accounts. (Pa.) 897

ACTION OR SUIT. See ACCOUNT; AFFIDAVIT OF DEFENSE; APPEAL; ARBITRATION AND REFERENCE; ASSUMPSIT; ATTACHMENT; BANKS AND BANKING; CERTIORARI; CLOUD ON TITLE; CONTEMPT; CONTRACT; CORPORATIONS; COSTS; COVENANT; CRIMINAL LAW; DAMAGES; DEBT; DEPOSITIONS; EJECTMENT; EQUITY; ERROR; ESTOPPEL; EVIDENCE; EXCEPTIONS; EXECUTION; EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS; FRAUD AND FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE; HUSBAND AND WIFE; INSURANCE; JUDGMENT; JURY; LACHES; LIBEL AND SLANDER; LIMITATION OF ACTIONS; LIS PENDENS; MALICIOUS PROSECUTION; MANDAMUS; MASTER AND SERVANT; MORTGAGE; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS; NEGLIGENCE; NEW TRIAL; NONSUIT; NUISANCE; PARTITION; PERJURY; PLEADING; QUO WARRANTO; REPLEVIN; REPORT AND CASE MADE; SALE; SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM; TAXES; TENDER; TRIAL; TROVER AND CONVERSION; WILL; WITNESS; WRIT AND PROCESS.

Definition. (N. Y.) 127

An action is an ordinary proceeding in a court of justice; every other remedy or proceeding is a special proceeding. (N. Y.) 127

When lies. If claims may be counted on separately, they are separate causes of action, for one cause is no bar to another. (Pa.) 645

If parties agree that a debt shall be payable in installments, they have severed it, and a recovery of one installment under a declaration which counts for the whole debt does not bar a subsequent suit for an installment not due when the first suit was brought. (Pa.) 645

If a person makes a promise to another, upon a lawful consideration, for the benefit of a third person, such third person may maintain an action, even at law, upon it. (N. J.) 899

Where there is a legal right there is also a C. R., V. IV.

legal remedy by suit or action at law whenever that right is invaded. (N. Y.) 220

The court looks behind the nominal party, and treats as the real party him whose interests are involved in the issue and who conducts and controls the action. (Pa.) 765

State can no more be sued in equity than at law. (N. Y.) 184

Waiver of right to discontinue action of tort and bring new action ex contractu. (N. Y.) 181

ADJOURNMENT. See CONTINUANCE AND ADJOURNMENT.

ADMINISTRATORS. See EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

ADULTERY.

Sufficiency of indictment. (Pa.) 712

Indictment; omission of name of wife. (Pa.) 711

ADVERSE POSSESSION. See LIMITATION OF ACTIONS; WAYS.

AFFIDAVIT. See ATTACHMENT.

AFFIDAVIT OF DEFENSE.

An affidavit by a mere stranger, without showing a disability on the part of the defendant to make his affidavit, is insufficient. (Pa.) 508

An affidavit by defendant's attorney upon information of his client is not sufficient. (Pa.) 508

When an affidavit is made by the clerk of defendant, it must set out why it could not be made by the principal. (Pa.) 508

A general affidavit that the plaintiff's charges are excessive is insufficient. (Pa.) 508

An affidavit setting forth partial failure of consideration should state the exact amount. (Pa.) 508

If an affidavit be evasive, the plaintiff is entitled to judgment. (Pa.) 508

An item of commission for collecting a sum of money is not a proper subject for a book charge. (Pa.) 289

Judgment cannot be taken against a married woman for want of an affidavit of defense. (Pa.) 289

AGENT. See PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

ALIMONY. See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

AMENDMENT. See JUDGMENT.

APOTHECARY. See INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

APPEAL. See CRIMINAL LAW; EXCEPTIONS; REPORT AND CASE MADE.

No appeal will lie from an order that was discretionary. (N. J.) 837

Any order, judgment or decree is appealable which, if not set aside or reversed, will put an end to the suit in controversy. (D. C.) 617

A decree is final which leaves "nothing to be litigated between the parties." (D. C.) 617

An exception to "each and every part" of a surrogate's decree is unavailing. (N. Y.) 795

Practice. Findings on questions of fact upon conflicting evidence will not be disturbed. (N. Y.) 226

Finding of fact by master only set aside for plain error. (Pa.) 46

Conclusiveness of findings of fact upon conflicting evidence. (N. Y.) 185

Power of court of appeals to review questions of fact in actions originating in surrogates' courts. (N. Y.) 851

Upon failure to find upon issues of fact, presumption is that court below found against parties attempting affirmation of issue. (N. Y.) 181

Error in the admission of illegal evidence cannot be disregarded. (N. Y.) 790

ARBITRATION AND REFERENCE.

A referee's findings of fact are construed as a special verdict. (Pa.) 700

ARREST. See FALSE IMPRISONMENT.

The promoters of an imprisonment, in proceedings without the jurisdiction of the court, will not be protected for acts done under the void process. (N. Y.) 216

ARSON.

To constitute a dwelling-house in the statute against arson, it must be a habitation for man and usually occupied by some one lodging in it at night. (N. J.) 424

ASSESSMENT. See DRAINS AND SEWERS; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS; TAXES.ASSIGNMENT. See MORTGAGE.

A valuable consideration is necessary to support an equitable assignment. (N. Y.) 878

Right of assignee to sue in his own name. (D. C.) 609

ASSIGNMENT FOR BENEFIT OF CREDITORS.

Validity and recognition of foreign assignments for benefit of creditors. (Pa.) 660

A foreign attachment against a nonresident debtor is valid, notwithstanding a previous assignment for benefit of creditors made by the defendant, where the assignment has not been recorded within the county in which the debt was attached, and no notice thereof was given to the attaching creditor. (Pa.) 660

Validity of provision in lease that landlord should have title as mortgagee upon property on the premises to secure rent, and that the tenant should have the right to use the property and make sales thereof, as against assignee for benefit of creditors of the tenant. (N. Y.) 288

Recording. (Pa.) 666

C. R., V. IV.

Statutory right of assignee to property conveyed in fraud of creditors. (N. Y.) 187

Liability of assignee for permitting removal of property from possession. (N. Y.) 187

ASSUMPSIT.

Where contract was executed by agent in behalf of principal, and latter has ratified it by accepting its benefits, seal may be rejected as surplusage, and recovery had against principal in assumpsit, as if it were a simple contract. (N. Y.) 181

Bill for discovery will not lie where there is a remedy by assumpsit. (Pa.) 43

Whenever an account will lie, indebitatus assumpsit will lie. (Pa.) 474

ASSUMPTION OF RISK. See MASTER AND SERVANT.ATTACHMENT.

Will lie for assumpsit on a quantum meruit, goods sold and delivered, work and labor done, and the like, where no price was agreed upon. (N. J.) 78

Devisee of income of fund during life has no interest in the corpus, subject to gift, sale, or attachment. (Pa.) 84

Sufficiency of affidavit must be attacked before appearance. (N. J.) 77

Waiver of irregularity in issuance of writ, by appearance. (N. J.) 77

The bond should be in double the amount which may be recovered. (N. J.) 78

Practice under Act of March 17, 1869; liability on bond. (Pa.) 749

There is no rule which compels the real owner of property, on notice of a suit, to intervene and defend pro interesse suo, on pain of forfeiting his rights of property or of action. (Pa.) 766

Foreign attachment cannot be maintained for a debt not due. (Pa.) 660

Validity of foreign attachment against foreign assignment for benefit of creditors. (Pa.) 660

A foreign attachment against nonresident debtor is valid, notwithstanding a previous assignment for benefit of creditors made by the defendant, where the assignment has not been recorded within the county in which the debt was attached, and no notice thereof was given to the attaching creditor. (Pa.) 660

A foreign attachment will not be quashed on allegation of defendant of agreement with plaintiff to extend the time of payment of the debt; such agreement is matter of defense, to be pleaded and tried in the regular way, and not on a motion to dismiss the suit. (Pa.) 660

Foreign attachment will be quashed on motion when it appears on the face of the record that the proceedings are irregular and void. (Pa.) 660

Right of defendant in foreign attachment to require plaintiff to show cause of action. (Pa.) 660

When the defendant in foreign attachment enters security for the debt, it dissolves the attachment, and the action becomes merely a common-law remedy. (Pa.) 660

ATTORNEY AND CLIENT.

An order cannot be taken by default against a party, after his death, by service upon the person who had been his attorney during his lifetime. (N. Y.) 394

After verdict, attorneys who represented parties at the time of trial may continue to do so until judgment is entered, and notice upon such attorney after the death of one of the defendants is sufficient. (N. Y.) 395

An affidavit of defense by defendant's attorney upon information of his client is not sufficient. (Pa.) 508

Liability of attorney for the issuance of void or irregular process. (N. Y.) 217

ATTORNEY-GENERAL.

Has right to present quo warranto information without leave asked of any one. (N. J.) 85

When equity intervenes to restrain acts prejudicial to the community, it must be by bill by the attorney-general. (Pa.) 277

AUCTION AND AUCTIONEER.

Agreements not to bid at public auction; public policy. (N. Y.) 191, 194

A bidder at an auction may retract his bid at any time before the hammer is down. (Pa.) 890

A sale of lands by public auction is within the Statute of Frauds. (Pa.) 891

When the name of a bidder on real estate is entered by the auctioneer, on the spot, and such entry is so connected with the subject and promise of sale as to make part of the memorandum, it is a contract in writing so as to take the case out of the Statute of Frauds. (Pa.) 891

BAIL AND RECOGNIZANCE.

Recognizance is subject to the legal presumption of payment after twenty years. (Pa.) 458

BAILMENT. See PLEDGE AND COLLATERAL SECURITY.

If one does an act of pure favor for another, with the assent of the latter, his responsibility to him is reduced to the duty of merely slight care and diligence. (N. Y.) 205

The continued holding of a pledge prevents the operation of the Statute of Limitations. (Pa.) 458

BANKRUPTCY.

Evidence of acknowledgment or promise to pay a debt, in order to revive after discharge in bankruptcy, is more strictly construed than in cases to avoid the Statute of Limitations. (Pa.) 659

A mere recognition of a debt after discharge in bankruptcy will not revive; there must be an express promise to pay, unconditional and absolute. (Pa.) 659

BANKS AND BANKING.

A bank has no lien on money standing to the credit of one of its depositors, for the amount of the note of such depositor, discounted by the bank, but which is not matured. (Pa.) 262, 673

Deposit of negotiable bonds with bank, as collateral security; right of action. (Pa.) 106

C. R., V. IV.

BASTARDY.

Discharge under insolvent laws. (Pa.) 711
Sentence; costs. (Pa.) 711
Right of after-born child to take against will; Act April 8, 1833; child legitimated after the making of the will. (Pa.) 470

BAWDY AND DISORDERLY HOUSES.

Agent renting, liable. (N. J.) 880
Indictable at common law. (N. J.) 880
Evidence of reputation. (N. J.) 880

BILLS AND NOTES.

There is no implication that a creditor agrees to give time for the payment of the original debt, arising out of the fact that he takes a note at a future day on account of it. (Pa.) 645

The receipt of the debtor's note does not discharge the debt, unless it is so agreed. It is a mere concurrent security. (Pa.) 645

BONA FIDE PURCHASER. See VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

BONDS. See ATTACHMENT; BAIL AND RECOGNIZANCE; PRINCIPAL AND SURETY; RAILROAD COMPANIES; REPLEVIN.

BOOK ACCOUNTS. See EVIDENCE.

BOROUGHES. See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

BRIBERY.

By member of common council of New York city, punishable under Penal Code. (N. Y.) 165-168

BRIDGES.

The approaches of a bridge are a part thereof, and a duty to repair applies to them. (N. Y.) 786

BROKER. See PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

BURDEN OF PROOF. See EVIDENCE; FRAUD AND FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE; NEGLIGENCE.

BURGLARY.

Dwelling-house must be a house in which occupier and his family usually reside, or, in other words, dwell and lie in. (N. J.) 424

CANALS.

Seal of canal commissioners is not seal of State. (N. Y.) 181

CARRIERS. See NEGLIGENCE; RAILROAD COMPANIES; STREET RAILWAYS.

Of goods. In an action on the case by consignor, carrier may show that title to goods really belonged to third person who had taken possession thereof. (Pa.) 106

Of passengers; who. A person traveling as an employee is not a passenger. (Pa.) 900

One entering wrong train by mistake is a passenger. (Pa.) 719

A passenger is a person who rides upon the company's trains with its assent, not at the time being in its employ; and evidence which shows such assent is sufficient to create the relation. (Pa.) 900

Liability. The duty of a carrier of passengers is to exercise the highest degree of care, diligence, and foresight. (Pa.) 699

The lessee of a grand stand at the races, receiving a compensation for admission to the stand, was held liable to the same extent as a carrier of passengers. (Pa.) 649

It is the general American rule that there is no privity in negligence between a passenger and his carrier; the contributory negligence of the carrier is not to be imputed to the passenger. (Pa.) 510

The carrier's liability for injury to passengers is only prima facie, and can be removed when the injury complained of resulted from inevitable accident or from something against which no human prudence or foresight could provide. (Pa.) 648

Contributory negligence. Where a passenger in a conveyance can have no control over those in charge of it, he cannot be held to be so identified with them as to be considered a party to their negligence. (Pa.) 510

Where a passenger on a carrying vehicle is injured by a collision resulting from the mutual negligence of those in charge of it and of another party, the carrier alone is liable for the injury. (Pa.) 510

Where a passenger upon a railway car was guilty of a want of care which did not contribute to the accident, or only remotely contributed to it, he will not thereby be prevented from recovering. (Pa.) 901

Where a passenger on a ferryboat approaching the landing bridge stood outside the chain, and the boat collided with the wharf or bridge, and the passenger was injured,—Held, not guilty of contributory negligence, and for the jury. (Pa.) 901

Where a passenger standing on a platform of a car going slowly over a bridge was injured by a collision resulting from a defect in the car,—Held, the question of contributory negligence should be left to the jury. (Pa.) 901

Where the shipper of a load of cattle was directed by the station agent to ride on the top of the car where his cattle were,—Held, he was guilty of contributory negligence. (Pa.) 899

It is contributory negligence on the part of the passenger to allow his elbow to project from the car window. (Pa.) 641

It is not contributory negligence per se for a passenger to ride on the front platform of a crowded street car. (Pa.) 901

It is negligence for a passenger to ride in the baggage car even with the consent of the conductor. (Pa.) 900

Contributory negligence; passenger alighting from moving train. (Pa.) 640

It is not negligence per se for a passenger to get off a car that is moving slowly. (Pa.) 642

Contributory negligence not imputable to passenger who alights from train, on the instruction of the conductor, at an unsafe place. (Md.) 254

A railroad company has the right forcibly to eject those who refuse to comply with reasonable regulations. (Pa.) 718

It is the duty of one purchasing a ticket to know on what train it can be used; a ticket is but a part of the contract for the passage, the C. R., V. IV.

rules and regulations being the other part. (Pa.) 717

A railroad company has a right to make and enforce all needful rules and regulations for the management of its road and trains. (Pa.) 717

Right to exemplary damages for ejectment by conductor, wanton, reckless, and oppressive. (Pa.) 719

Where a passenger is injured, the burden is upon the carrier to show facts relieving it from liability. (Pa.) 699

CASE MADE. See REPORT AND CASE MADE.

CAVEAT. See WILL.

CERTIORARI.

A certiorari only brings up the record for review. (Pa.) 918

Proper remedy to review comptroller's decision for refusing to cancel tax sale. (N. Y.) 185

CESTUI QUE TRUST. See TRUST.

CHALLENGE. See JURY.

CHARGE OF COURT. See TRIAL.

CHARGE ON LAND. See DEVISE AND LEGACY.

CHARTERS. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW; CORPORATIONS; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS; RAILROAD COMPANIES.

CHATTEL MORTGAGE. See MORTGAGE.

CHURCHES. See RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES.

CITIES. See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

CLASSIFICATION. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

CLIENT. See ATTORNEY AND CLIENT.

CLOUD ON TITLE.

Action will lie to remove lien created by illegal tax sale. (N. Y.) 185

COAL MINES. See MINES AND MINING.

COLLATERAL SECURITY. See PLEDGE AND COLLATERAL SECURITY.

COMMERCE. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

COMMITMENT. See CONTEMPT.

COMMON PLEAS. See COURTS.

CONDEMNATION PROCEEDINGS. See EMINENT DOMAIN; RAILROAD COMPANIES; WAYS.

CONFESSION. See CRIMINAL LAW; JUDGMENT.

CONFLICT OF LAWS.

Validity and recognition of foreign assignments for benefit of creditors. (Pa.) 660

CONSIDERATION. See CONTRACT;
DEED; VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

CONSOLIDATION. See RAILROAD COMPANIES.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW. See EMINENT DOMAIN; INTOXICATING LIQUORS; RAILROAD COMPANIES; STATUTES; SUNDAY; TAXES.

Effect will be given to that part of a statute which is not obnoxious to the Constitution. (N. J.) 863

Sufficiency of expression of subject in title. (Pa.) 304, 307

Local and special legislation; classification of cities. (N. J.) 84, 86; (Pa.) 284, 285, 314, 319

No classification of school districts has as yet been attempted, and until they are classified any Act affecting them must affect all or none. (Pa.) 311

Act of June 20, 1881, regulating payment of persons engaged in mining coal, ore, etc., is void. (Pa.) 888

Act 1880, p. 191, creating excise departments in cities of over 15,000 inhabitants, is special and unconstitutional. (N. J.) 84

The Constitution of the United States and the Constitution of a State are the only restriction or limitation upon legislative power. (N. Y.) 544

A charter right to consolidate with other corporations cannot be taken away by subsequent statute or Constitution. (Pa.) 499

The right to cumulative voting cannot be given by a statute or Constitution, subsequent to the charter, without the consent of the stockholders. (Pa.) 499

Power of Legislature to alter, suspend, or repeal charter. (N. J.) 140

Consolidation of competing lines of railroad. Constitution of 1874, art. 17. (Pa.) 499, 500, 501, 508, 504

Effect of Constitution of 1874, prohibiting any railroad from consolidating with or acquiring a parallel or competing line, upon companies having charters before the adoption of the Constitution. (Pa.) 499

Application of Art. 17 of the Constitution, prohibiting acquisition or control of parallel or competing roads, to passenger railways. (Pa.) 501

Commerce. Police power of State Legislatures. (N. Y.) 543

Police laws are not unconstitutional because they impair property or interfere with its full enjoyment or individual rights. (N. Y.) 544

The police power of the Legislature is so essential to the welfare of the State that the Legislature cannot dispossess itself thereof. (N. Y.) 544

The Legislature may pass police laws which incidentally regulate interstate commerce. (N. Y.) 544

The Legislature has authority, as an exercise of police power, to suppress any trade which is injurious to the public health, welfare, or morals. (N. Y.) 544

The power of the Legislature to prohibit the sale of impure and unwholesome articles of food, and to provide for the confiscation and destruction of such articles on their being of C. R., V. IV.

ferred for sale in open market, cannot be questioned. (N. Y.) 544

The Legislature may regulate the weight and price of bread. (N. Y.) 544

It is within the police power of the Legislature to regulate and exclude slaughter houses in villages and cities. (N. Y.) 544

It is within the police power of the Legislature to control and forbid work in laundries in certain hours. (N. Y.) 544

Statutes prohibiting the killing or possession of game during certain seasons are constitutional. (N. Y.) 544

It is within the power of the Legislature to regulate public warehouses. (N. Y.) 544

The police power is superior to all charters, in one sense, but never in the sense of permitting the State, under it, to take for nothing the property rights of citizens or corporations. (Pa.) 500

Eminent domain. An Act entitled "An Act to open and straighten certain streets (naming them) in the city of Philadelphia," which provided, in the body of the Act, for the assessment of damages, was held constitutional. (Pa.) 804

A tax which is not uniform is in conflict with the Fourteenth Amendment of the Federal Constitution, which requires that no statute shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws. (N. J.) 427

The Legislature may prohibit the intermarriage of white and colored people. (N. Y.) 544

While the Legislature may establish the effect of certain evidence, and shift the burden of proof from one party to another, yet it has not the power to make the lawful act of one person presumptive evidence of the unlawful act of another. (N. Y.) 855

CONTEMPT.

Constructive contempts must be brought before the court by affidavits of persons who witnessed them, and thereupon a rule is made upon the offender to show cause why attachment should not issue against him. (N. J.) 585

The power of a court to commit for contempt is not to be upheld, except under the circumstances and in the manner prescribed by law. (N. J.) 585

Power of court to punish for libelous publication, out of court, concerning pending case. (N. J.) 579-580

Statutory provisions of the several States. (N. J.) 579-581

Liability for contempt on refusal to obey a surrogate's decree. Code, § 2555. (N. Y.) 210, 211

Practice and appeal, under Act April 17, 1884. (N. J.) 577

The power to commit for contempt is not the necessary incident of a court of justice, and therefore is not granted by implication; it can only be derived from the common law or by the legislative grant of such power. (N. J.) 581

Form of commitment for contempt. (N. Y.) 216

CONTINGENT REMAINDER. See DEVISE AND LEGACY.

CONTINUANCE AND ADJOURNMENT.

Where a party is present and makes no objection to the adjournment, he cannot afterwards be heard to except to it because irregular. (N. J.) 884

CONTRACT. See ASSUMPSIT; CONSTITUTIONAL LAW; CORPORATIONS; COVENANT; DEED; FRAUDS, STATUTE OF; HUSBAND AND WIFE; LIMITATION OF ACTIONS; VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

What constitutes. Conversations and negotiations leading to a written contract are admissible to prove a fraud or trust; but there should be clear evidence that the arrangement continued up to the time of executing the writing. (Pa.) 922

Where a parol agreement is in accordance with and not in opposition to a written contract, the parol agreement being collateral, it does not infringe the rule that a contract cannot be partly in parol and partly in writing. (Pa.) 652

Incapacity; drunkenness. (Pa.) 890
Where the only question is the construction of a written contract, a submission to the jury is error. (N. Y.) 531

Part payment of a debt overdue is not a valid consideration for an agreement to postpone or discharge the payment of the residue. (N. J.) 144

A moral obligation alone, as an executed consideration, is not sufficient to support either an express or implied promise. (N. J.) 557

No implied contract on part of State to pay for work voluntarily done. (N. Y.) 182

When there is an express contract, a party cannot be bound by an implied promise. (Pa.) 104

Executory contract. (Pa.) 86
No inference that a transaction is illegal will be allowed, unless absolutely necessary. (N. Y.) 192

Where a promise is void ab initio, it is not capable of ratification. (N. J.) 557

A lawful contract cannot be avoided by a void agreement. (N. Y.) 894

Contract will not be presumed illegal or against public policy, when it is capable of a construction which will make it consistent with the law. (N. Y.) 191

Agreements not to bid at public auction; public policy. (N. Y.) 191, 194

Not presumed void or illegal or against public policy, when capable of construction which will make it valid. (N. Y.) 129

Agreements in restraint of free competition at public sales are void. (N. Y.) 129

Equity will not enforce contract in restraint of trade. (Pa.) 46

Construed most strictly against makers. (Pa.) 46

Reformation; evidence of fraud or mistake must be clear, precise, and indubitable. (Pa.) 45

Limitations, conditions, forfeitures. (N. Y.) 884

Where no time is fixed for performance, the party from whom performance is due is not in default until he has been notified or required to perform by the other party; until some act or notice on the part of the latter, he must be regarded as consenting to the delay. (N. Y.) 198

Rescission for nonperformance. (N. Y.) 373

Rescission can only be by acts of both parties. (Pa.) 43

Rescission; restoration of consideration. (N. J.) 898

To retain any benefit under a contract is incompatible with rescission. (Pa.) 740

If a person makes a promise to another, upon a lawful consideration, for the benefit of a third person, such third person may maintain an action, even at law, upon it. (N. J.) 399

Where contract was executed by agent in behalf of principal, and latter has ratified it by accepting its benefits, a seal may be rejected as surplusage and recovery had against principal in assumpsit, as if it were a simple contract. (N. Y.) 181

Test for distinguishing liquidated and unliquidated damages in action on contract. (N. J.) 78

CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

See CARRIERS; MASTER AND SERVANT; NEGLIGENCE.

CONVERSION. See DEVISE AND LEGACY; TROVER AND CONVERSION.

CONVEYANCE. See DEED; FRAUD AND FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE; HUSBAND AND WIFE.

CORPORATIONS. See BANKS AND BANKING; CARRIERS; GAS COMPANIES; MINES AND MINING; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS; RAILROAD COMPANIES; RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES; SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS; STREET RAILWAYS; WATER COMPANIES.

Definition. (N. J.) 141

Power of Legislature to alter, suspend, or repeal charter. (N. J.) 140

A nonuser or misuser will not forfeit a charter. (N. J.) 141

Franchise defined. (N. J.) 140, 141

Every act affecting the public is the exercise of a franchise. (N. J.) 85

Immunity from taxation is not a franchise. (N. J.) 141

Subscription for stock in advance of the formation of the corporation becomes binding as soon as it comes into existence. (N. Y.) 192

Right of assignee to sue on stock subscriptions. (D. C.) 609

Individual liability of subscribers to creditors. (D. C.) 609

Right of stockholder to compel production and inspection of books. (N. J.) 403

Taxation of. (N. J.) 189-141

Contracts preliminary to the formation of a corporation, by persons acting in behalf of the corporation to be formed, if legitimate, are binding on the corporation when formed. (N. Y.) 193

The plea of ultra vires will not prevail for or against a corporation when it will not advance justice but, on the contrary, will accomplish a legal wrong. (N. Y.) 193

Where a contract has been performed and the benefit received, a plea of ultra vires cannot be set up. (Pa.) 928

An agreement originally ultra vires cannot be impeached after a considerable time. (Pa.) 928

The seal of a private corporation does not prove itself. (Pa.) 296

Right of officer of corporation to purchase and take assignment of claims against it. (Pa.) 707

A director or other officer of a corporation may lawfully become its creditor, and will be entitled to all the remedies of other creditors. (N. Y.) 191

The Statute of Limitations does not apply against a corporation which has ceased from the ordinary business for which it was created. Act of March 27, 1718. (Pa.) 458

Conveyances, by insolvent corporations, to prefer creditors. (N. J.) 828

The assets of an insolvent corporation are a fund for the payment of its debts. (Pa.) 457

A foreign corporation can only acquire and hold lands by comity. (N. Y.) 226

COSTS. See WILL.

In tort, plaintiff cannot recover compensation for his necessary expenses, together with counsel fees. (Pa.) 49

COTENANTS. See JOINT TENANTS AND TENANTS IN COMMON.

COUNSEL. See ATTORNEY AND CLIENT.

COUNTERCLAIM. See SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM.

COUNTIES. See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

COURTS. See CONTEMPT; EQUITY; JUDGES OF THE PEACE; RECEIVER.

Power of court to punish by contempt for libelous publication, out of court, concerning pending case. (N. J.) 577-579

Authority, under Act April 10, 1873, P. L. 666, to increase or decrease compensation of sheriff for board of prisoners in county jail. (Pa.) 88

New York Supreme Court; jurisdiction of foreclosure proceedings of premises in Pennsylvania and New York. (Pa.) 112

Common pleas; equity jurisdiction in settling accounts. (Pa.) 43

Within the sphere of its jurisdiction, the orphans' court is a court of equity. (Pa.) 898, 928.

Power of orphans' court to relieve against mistakes. (Pa.) 898

Power of orphans' court to rescind guardian's sale, for mistake, after delivery of deed, confirmation of sale, and payment of purchase money. (Pa.) 893

A decree of the orphans' court is not conclusive in cases of fraud, gross mistake, or misapprehension, and want of jurisdiction. (Pa.) 808

Where subordinate body or officer invested with power to determine question of fact, it is a judicial duty. (N. Y.) 184

COVENANT.

Covenants, like other contracts, are to be C. R., V. IV.

construed according to the intention of the parties, of which acts and declarations under the agreement, commonly called contemporaneous construction, are evidence. (Pa.) 693

Against incumbrances; municipal assessments; lien attaches when assessment confirmed, and not when work completed. (N. J.) 810

Running with land; covenant in oil lease on royalty, to use diligence in operating premises. (Pa.) 104

Breach of covenant in oil lease on royalty to use diligence in operating premises; measure of damages. (Pa.) 104

CREDITOR. See DEBTOR AND CREDITOR.

CRIMINAL LAW. See ADULTERY; ARREST; ARSON; BAIL AND RECOGNIZANCE; BASTARDY; BRIBERY; BURGLARY; GAMING; HOMICIDE; INTOXICATING LIQUORS; JAIL AND JAILER; PERJURY.

A guilty intent is not necessary to constitute the offense, under Laws 1885, chap. 183, § 7, amended by chap. 458, of selling oleomargarine made in imitation of butter. (N. Y.) 548

When a specific intent is required to make an act an offense, the doing of the act does not raise a presumption that the act was done with that intent. (N. Y.) 167

Former jeopardy. (D. C.) 618

When a defendant has once been tried for an offense upon an indictment, upon which he could have been legally convicted and sentenced, he cannot be tried again, at least where he has done nothing to set aside the verdict. (Pa.) 726

In criminal pleadings there can be no joinder of separate, distinct offenses in one and the same count. (N. Y.) 788

Indictment; averment of time. (N. Y.) 788

An indictment must allege the place where the offense was committed, with such distinctness, that a judgment rendered thereon may be pleaded in bar to any second indictment for same offense. (N. Y.) 788

In an indictment, nothing material shall be taken by intendment or implication. (Pa.) 712

It is not sufficient in an indictment for a statutory offense to lay it in the words of the statute, unless they expressly serve to allege the act, with all the necessary additions, and without the least uncertainty or ambiguity. (Pa.) 712

A judgment sustaining a demurrer to an indictment is not a bar to a new indictment or a trial thereon. (D. C.) 617

The prisoner shall have the benefit not only of the doubts upon the facts, but doubts also upon the law. (N. Y.) 790

Evidence. Presumption as to innocence. (N. Y.) 167

Facts consistent with innocence are not proof of guilt. (N. Y.) 167

When facts are consistent with honesty and dishonesty, court will adopt construction favoring innocence. (N. Y.) 167

Confessions; threats. (N. Y.) 166, 168

Liability for culpable negligence in construction of buildings, under Penal Code, §§ 192-

195; admissibility of photographs of building and of reports made by official inspector. (N. Y.) 789-790

When there has been an acquittal on one count, and a conviction on another, for a distinct offense, a new trial can only be granted on the count on which there has been conviction. (Pa.) 727

Right of appeal, under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 772. (D. C.) 617, 618

Right of State to appeal in criminal cases. (D. C.) 620

CROSS EXAMINATION. See WITNESS.

CROSSINGS. See RAILROAD COMPANIES.

CUSTOM AND USAGE.

Where a custom prevails in a certain trade, contracts are presumed to be made in reference to it. (Pa.) 888

Custom cannot control a statute to the contrary. (Pa.) 888

Custom cannot control a statute (April 15, 1884) making 2,000 pounds a ton of coal. (Pa.) 888

DAMAGES. See MASTER AND SERVANT; MILLS AND DAMS; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS; RAILROAD COMPANIES.

When public or private rights are invaded, and an injunction is asked, no question of the amount of damages is raised, but merely one of the invasion of a right. When railroad companies exceed their statutory powers in dealing with other people's property, this principle may be invoked. (Pa.) 278

Test for distinguishing liquidated and unliquidated damages in an action on contract. (N. J.) 78

Right to exemplary damages for willful negligence. (Pa.) 718, 719

In tort, plaintiff cannot recover compensation for his necessary expenses, together with counsel fees. (Pa.) 49

Measure, upon breach of covenant in oil lease on royalty, to use diligence in operating premises. (Pa.) 104

Right to recover damages up to day of trial, under Act of May 2, 1876. (Pa.) 686

DAMS. See MILLS AND DAMS.

DEBT.

Gaming securities should be decreed to be delivered up, notwithstanding both parties had participated in the fraud, because public policy would be best served by such a course. (N. J.) 421

DEBTOR AND CREDITOR. See ACCOUNT; ASSIGNMENT FOR BENEFIT OF CREDITORS; ATTACHMENT; BANKRUPTCY; DEBT; FRAUD AND FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE; SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM.

In case of the insolvency of the borrower before the actual payment of the money by the lender, an equitable right, analogous to that of stoppage in transitu, may be exercised by the lender. (Pa.) 263

C. R., V. IV.

DECEDENTS' ESTATES. See DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION; DEVISE AND LEGACY; DOWER; EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS; GUARDIAN AND WARD; WILL; WITNESS.

DECLARATIONS. See ESTOPPEL; EVIDENCE.

DECREE. See EQUITY; JUDGMENT.

DEDICATION. See WAYS.

DEED. See COVENANT; EASEMENT; ESTOPPEL; FRAUD AND FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE; HUSBAND AND WIFE; MORTGAGE; VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

Parol evidence may be received to prove a consideration not mentioned in the deed, provided it be not inconsistent with the consideration expressed in it. (Pa.) 923

Record of deed not containing definite description is not notice to purchaser at judicial sale. (Pa.) 916

A purchaser from one whose deed is unrecorded is affected with notice of an unrecorded mortgage mentioned in the receipt for purchase money, at the foot of such unrecorded deed. (Pa.) 917

Where the statute designates the book in which an instrument must be recorded, its terms must be complied with, or the record will be worthless. (Pa.) 666

Where the statute does not require that an instrument should be recorded in a particular book, it may be properly recorded in any book kept by the recorder. (Pa.) 666

An unrecorded deed is not valid, after the death of the grantor, as against one holding a recorded deed from the grantor's heir, without notice of the former deed. (N. J.) 874

An unrecorded deed is void against a subsequent purchaser without notice. (Pa.) 463

Reformation of deed will not be made to the prejudice of a judgment creditor of the grantee. (D. C.) 616

Recitals in the deed are evidence against the grantee accepting the same. (Pa.) 917

Recitals are evidence against parties and privies to the conveyance. (Pa.) 917

Recital is prima facie evidence of payment of consideration. (Pa.) 916

DEFAULT. See JUDGMENT.

DEFINITIONS.

Action. (N. Y.) 197

Authorized. (D. C.) 151

Chose in action. (Pa.) 661

Cohabitation. (Pa.) 679

Corporation. (N. J.) 141

Crime. (Pa.) 746

Dwelling; residence; domicile. (N. J.) 424

Franchise. (N. J.) 140, 141

Gas not synonymous with petroleum oil. (Pa.) 927

Heirs. (N. Y.) 178

Issue. (N. Y.) 178

Petroleum oil not synonymous with gas. (Pa.) 927

Property. (N. J.) 146

Survivor. (N. Y.) 177

DEMURRER. See PLEADING.

DEPOSITION.

Issue of commission; appealability of order. (N. Y.) 127
Form of executing commission to take testimony. (Pa.) 642

DEPOSITS. See BANKS AND BANKING.

DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION.

See DOWER; WILL.

Next of kin. (Pa.) 47, 48
Brothers and sisters of half blood and their issue take to the exclusion of more remote kindred of the whole blood, and in preference to deceased uncle of whole blood. (Pa.) 47
There cannot be two perquisitors from whom to trace the blood. (Pa.) 48
Lien of debts against lands inherited by heir. (N. J.) 874

DEVISE AND LEGACY. See DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION; DOWER; EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS; WILL.

Right of disposition. A feme covert may exercise any kind of power, whether simply collateral, appendant, or in gross, and it is immaterial whether it was given to her when sole or married. The concurrence of her husband is in no case necessary. (Pa.) 466

The law favors a construction to prevent an intestacy. (Pa.) 637

Intention must be clear before the court will hold a legacy to be specific. (N. J.) 831

Intention to be ascertained from whole instrument. (N. Y.) 177

In arriving at testator's intent, words of will must be permitted to have their proper force. (Pa.) 83

A testator is presumed to have an additional purpose for each additional expression. (N. J.) 865

Effect to be given to every clause. (N. Y.) 177

Though a will must be construed as an entirety, yet the legal construction of one section cannot be controlled by guesses as to the intent of the testator, arising from the disposition of his property in the remaining sections. (N. J.) 865

A will is construed according to the ordinary sense of the words used, except where a rule of law, the context, external circumstances, or a rule of construction is inconsistent with such interpretation. (N. J.) 865

The construction of a will depends upon the intention of the testator, to be ascertained from a full view of everything contained within the four corners of the instrument. (N. J.) 866

All doubt must be resolved in favor of the testator's having said exactly what he meant, and plain, clear words, read in their ordinary sense, must always control in searching for the intention of the testator, unless repugnant to other words, equally plain and clear, in another part of the will. (N. J.) 866

To change the express and definite words of a bequest, it must be clear that the testator did not intend what he said, and this by the provisions of the will. (N. J.) 866

Construction of testamentary words must always depend in some measure upon special facts. (Pa.) 84

Punctuation may be regarded as a guide to the construction, when no other means of solving an ambiguity can be found. (N. J.) 865

Several independent devises, not grammatically connected or united by the expression of a common purpose, must be construed separately and without relation to each other, unless a design to connect them be very plain and apparent. (N. J.) 865

In the absence of an expressed contrary intent, the intention of the testator should be construed to give to his widow a fair equivalent for the portion which she would have taken under the intestate laws. (N. Y.) 866

It is a prima facie rule of construction that an additional legacy given by a codicil is attended by the same incidents as the original legacy. (N. Y.) 881

"Issue" in a limitation of personal property take as purchasers, the reason of the rule being that the operation of the law, whenever possible, makes real estate descendible and personal estate distributable. (Pa.) 637

Where a remainder shall be limited to take effect on the death of any person without heirs, or heirs of his body, or without issue, the words "heirs" or "issue" shall be construed to mean heirs or issue living at the death of the person named as ancestor. (N. Y.) 178

The term class, applied to a gift involving survivorship, and upon the question of vesting, is applicable only to the case of the plurality of persons comprised under one general description, indefinite in number and individually undistinguished by name or particular description. (Pa.) 638

The naming of some of a class of children, or others of a number of beneficiaries, will not in itself render the gift any the less a gift to a class. (Pa.) 637

A gift of aliquot shares to several as tenants in common is not to a class. (Pa.) 638

A bequest of personalty for life without limitation over will be construed as an absolute gift. (N. J.) 865

Devise to wife of one half of real estate, also all personal property during life, — Held, she had the real estate in fee. (N. J.) 865

Bequest of income will not carry an absolute estate in the principal, where the plain intent of testator is otherwise. (Pa.) 83

Life estate; gift over. (N. Y.) 176-178

Devise for life with gift over in case of death without issue. (N. Y.) 177

A devise of an estate generally or indefinitely, with the power of disposition over it, carries the fee, but where the estate is given for life only, the devisee takes only an estate for life, though a power of disposition or to appoint the fee by deed or will be annexed. (Pa.) 466

A remainder becomes vested as soon as there is any one in existence capable of taking. (Pa.) 681

Investment of trust funds: accretions; right of life tenant and remaindermen to accretions. (N. Y.) 797

The law favors the vesting of estates in remainder at the earliest possible period. (Pa.) 681

Distinction between vested and contingent remainders. (Pa.) 682, 683

Vested remainders. 466

Where a contingent estate is limited after a life estate, the English rule is that the contingency is death during lifetime of the life tenant. (N. J.) 595

Where there is no antecedent gift of a future legacy, independent of a direction and time of payment, the legacy is contingent. (Pa.) 636

Contingency in case of death without issue. (N. Y.) 177, 178

Executory devise. (N. Y.) 177
Words, "all the residue of my estate," may be restricted to personality. (Md.) 159

Gift of income of fund with limitation as to time. (Pa.) 83

A gift of the proceeds of a thing is the gift of the thing itself. (Pa.) 467

Devisee of income of fund during life has no interest in the corpus subject to gift, sale, or attachment. (Pa.) 84

Implied power of sale. (Md.) 160

Redeemable lease for ninety-nine years will take away devise of land which is converted into personality. (Md.) 160

Powers are to be strictly construed. (Pa.) 467

Ordinarily a power of a disposal annexed to the fee is merged in the estate; but where a married woman is the devisee in fee and the donee of the disposing power, the power, the execution of which may be necessary to pass her estate, should not be regarded as merged. (Pa.) 466

If a power is required to be executed by deed, nothing less will satisfy the words; and it must be sealed and delivered as a proper deed, without reference to the power of the donee to make a proper deed; therefore a married woman must seal and deliver the deed as if she were sui juris. (Pa.) 466

A power has no effect on a limitation over until it is executed. Until then it is as if it had no existence, but if it carries the fee, when executed, it operates as a divestiture. (Pa.) 466

A power is collateral, when conferred upon a stranger without interest; appendant, when the person, along with his interest and within its compass, has the power of revocation or appointment; in gross, when the life tenant has the power of appointment out of the compass of his estate. (Pa.) 467

Mingling of realty and personality into one fund makes legacies payable out of such fund. (Md.) 160

Personal liability of devisee to pay legacies. (N. Y.) 177

Words charging debts will charge legacies. (Md.) 160

Charge upon land; legacies. (Md.) 159, 160

Words, "pay out of my estate," are an express charge on realty. (Md.) 160

Equity has exclusive jurisdiction in regard to legacies charged on land. (Md.) 160

DISCONTINUANCE.

Waiver of right to discontinue action of tort and bring new action ex contractu. (N. Y.) 181

DISCOVERY. See EQUITY.

DISORDERLY HOUSES. See BAWDY AND DISORDERLY HOUSES.

C. R., V. IV.

DISTRESS. See LANDLORD AND TENANT.

DIVORCE. See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE. See EVIDENCE.

DOWER.

Right of widow to dower in proceedings for partition, under Act March 29, 1833. (Pa.) 293

Right of dower in land held in joint tenancy. (N. J.) 66

Right of widow, under Intestate Act of April 8, 1838, is a freehold estate. (Pa.) 293

A widow, although she dies, is entitled to dower according to her expectancy of life, and not by actual value as determined by length of life. (N. J.) 570

Widows' quarantine. (N. J.) 847

An election made in ignorance, or under mistake of the real nature or extent of the party's right, is not binding, and may be revoked, unless the rights of third parties have intervened. (N. J.) 847

Power of married woman to convey her inchoate right of dower. (N. Y.) 214

The joinder of a feme covert with her husband in his conveyance operates as a release of her contingent future right, by way of estoppel. (N. Y.) 214

A quitclaim or release by a married woman, to a stranger to the title, is ineffectual to divest her of an inchoate right of dower. (N. Y.) 214

DRAINS AND SEWERS.

Validity for assessments for cost of sewers at a rate per lineal foot of street frontage; special benefits; assessments according to value of property. (N. J.) 247

DURESS.

Avoidance of marriage for duress of imprisonment. (N. J.) 423

EASEMENT.

Equity will not permit disturbance, right being doubtful. (Pa.) 53

EJECTMENT. See PARTITION.

Vendee cannot maintain equitable ejectment without having tendered purchase price. (Pa.) 917

Plaintiff cannot recover upon a title acquired after suit brought. (Pa.) 463

The acts of a deceased person done against his interest are evidence in favor of those claiming under him. (Pa.) 463

EMINENT DOMAIN. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW; RAILROAD COMPANIES; WAYS.

Right of one railroad company to take land appropriated by another. (Pa.) 265

Authorizing a corporation to do such acts upon its own land as shall destroy or seriously impair the enjoyment of adjoining land is taking such land within the meaning of the Constitution; and although such authority be given for public purposes, if provision be not made for compensation to the party injured, the authority is void. (N. Y.) 236

EQUITABLE ESTOPPEL. See ESTOPPEL.

EQUITY. See CLOUD ON TITLE; EASEMENT; INJUNCTION.

Principles. As between persons having only equitable interests, if their interests are in all other respects equal, then priority in time gives the better equity. (N. Y.) 878

Equities are equal between parties equally innocent and diligent. (Md.) 156

Equity affords relief where a fraud has been practiced by one party and the other acted by mistake. (N. Y.) 784

Equity will not interfere in dispute as to mere legal rights. (Pa.) 112

Having cognizance of litigation, will dispose of every feature of dispute. (Pa.) 43, 45

He who seeks equity must do equity. (Md.) 155

He who comes into equity must come with clean hands. (Md.) 155

The rule that he who goes into equity must do equity applies only to equities arising out of the same transaction, the same contract. (Pa.) 740

One attempting to defraud another in payment cannot ask repayment of part consideration from him. (Pa.) 87

Not relieve against bona fide purchaser for valuable consideration. (Md.) 156

Jurisdiction is in personam. (Pa.) 112

Jurisdiction over administration of assets of decedent. (N. J.) 89

Has exclusive jurisdiction in regard to legacies charged on land. (Md.) 160

In equity, executor is trustee of all assets. (Md.) 160

State can no more be sued in equity than at law. (N. Y.) 184

An action cannot be maintained at law by the wife against her husband's representatives, for money received by him in his lifetime, to her use. (N. J.) 862

Will not enforce contract in restraint of trade. (Pa.) 46

Fraud or mistake. To reform contract, evidence must be clear, precise, and indubitable. (Pa.) 45

Jurisdiction to cure mistake in deeds. (D. C.) 616

Parol evidence is admissible to support allegations of mistake, surprise, or fraud. (Pa.) 46

Account. Equity jurisdiction of common pleas. (Pa.) 43

Jurisdiction for account. (N. J.) 819

Bill for account must aver an indebtedness at time of filing. (Pa.) 43

Administrator allowed to account in equity, though letters taken out before surrogate. (N. J.) 89

Jurisdiction for discovery. (N. J.) 819

Bill for discovery will not lie where there is a remedy by assumpsit. (Pa.) 43

The power to appoint a receiver has been classed under the head of the quia timet jurisdiction of chancery; the remedy is a provisional or auxiliary one, exercised as an adjunct to the principal relief sought in the case. (N. Y.) 865

In the United States, the power of the court of chancery to appoint a receiver has been exercised as an inherent authority, without legislative aid. (N. Y.) 865

In England, the power to appoint receivers exists only by virtue of statute, the equity courts having declined to exercise it before authority to do so was expressly conferred. (N. Y.) 865

When equity intervenes to restrain acts prejudicial to the community, it must be by bill by the attorney-general. (Pa.) 277

Will not prevent disturbance of alleged easement where complainant's right is doubtful. (Pa.) 52

Jurisdiction to restrain breach of trade contract. (Pa.) 43

Laches. (Pa.) 53

Pleading. Oath to bill must be either required or authorized by common law, or statute, or rules of court. (D. C.) 151

Prayer for general relief entitles to any relief consistent with case made in bill. (Pa.) 49

An answer responsive to the bill must prevail, unless overcome by two witnesses, or one witness supported by circumstances equivalent to evidence. (N. J.) 879

Where a demurrer is frivolous or intended to delay it should be overruled. (N. J.) 863

Where a demurrer is too extensive it should be overruled. (N. J.) 863

The unrecorded testimony of the complainant is insufficient to overcome a responsive answer. (N. J.) 879

Decree. Conclusiveness. (Pa.) 98

A cause should not be referred to a master before there is an interlocutory decree finding a liability to account. (Pa.) 43

Findings of fact by master only set aside for plain error. (Pa.) 46

ERROR. See APPEAL; EXCEPTIONS; REPORT AND CASE MADE.

A case stated is like a special verdict and subject to the same rules. (Pa.) 261

ESTATES OF DECEDENTS. See DECEDENTS' ESTATES.

ESTOPPEL.

The doctrine of estoppel applies to corporations. (D. C.) 621

Estoppels are strictly construed. (N. Y.) 880

By deed, etc. (D. C.) 621

By deed; no other consideration can be set up. (Md.) 156

A stranger to the title cannot claim the benefit of an estoppel by deed of a feme covert. (N. Y.) 214

One not a party to proceedings is not estopped thereby. (Pa.) 106

By contract. (Pa.) 43

Where a party has, by his declarations and conduct, induced another to act in a particular manner, he will not afterwards be permitted to deny the truth of his admissions, if consequences would be such as to work an injury to the other person. (N. Y.) 879

To create an estoppel the party must have been guilty either of fraud in willfully misleading, or of negligence in not observing that his words would mislead the other. (N. Y.) 880

Intention to mislead is immaterial, if conduct was calculated to mislead and actually did mislead. (N. Y.) 380

A statement can only create an estoppel in favor of the individual to whom it is made. (N. Y.) 380

Equitable; acquiescence and ratification. (Md.) 155

Matter of estoppel must be specially pleaded as such. (Pa.) 42

EVICTIION. See LANDLORD AND TENANT.

EVIDENCE. See CUSTOM AND USAGE; CRIMINAL LAW; DEED; DEPOSITION; DISORDERLY HOUSES; EQUITY; FRAUD AND FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE; INTOXICATING LIQUORS; NEGLIGENCE; NON-SUIT; PERJURY; PLEADING; REPLEVIN; TRIAL; VENDOR AND PURCHASER; WILL; WITNESS.

Where a party suppresses evidence in his power, the presumption is that, if produced, it would make against him. (Pa.) 397

Circumstance from which inference is to be drawn is never to be presumed, but must be substantially proved. (N. Y.) 167

While the Legislature may establish the effect of certain evidence, and shift the burden of proof from one party to another, yet it has not the power to make the lawful act of one person presumptive evidence of the unlawful act of another. (N. Y.) 355

Whenever the plaintiff bases his action on a negative allegation, the burden is on him to prove such allegation. (Pa.) 905

Where a matter is peculiarly within the knowledge of the other party he must prove it. (Pa.) 904

Documentary. If part of contract is to be received in evidence, defendant is entitled to have whole received. (Pa.) 104

In the absence of fraud or mistake, a contract is not only the best, but the sole, evidence of agreement. (Pa.) 46

An exemplification of a record is not evidence of a secondary quality, but stands upon an equality with the original. (Pa.) 463

The seal of a private corporation does not prove itself. (Pa.) 296

An item of commission for collecting a sum of money is not a proper subject for a book charge. (Pa.) 289

Items susceptible of proof by books of original entry. (Pa.) 289

Photographs are secondary evidence. (N. Y.) 790

Photographs have never been allowed as competent evidence when the article itself could be seen in the same condition as represented by the photograph. (N. Y.) 790

On the trial of an issue involving the condition, appearance, or identity of a person, place, or thing at a previous time, a photograph at the time in question is competent, upon proper evidence of its fidelity. (N. Y.) 790

Admissibility of parol evidence of contemporaneous agreement. (Pa.) 747

Parol evidence is admissible to explain a latent ambiguity. (Pa.) 922

Parol evidence may be given to explain written agreement. (Pa.) 46

Parol evidence may be received to explain and define the subject-matter of a written agreement. (Pa.) 922

Admissibility of parol evidence to contradict or vary written instruments. (Pa.) 46

Generally parol evidence is inadmissible to contradict or vary the terms of a written instrument. (Pa.) 922

Conversations and negotiations leading up to a written contract are admissible to prove a fraud or trust, but there should be clear evidence that the arrangement continued up to the time of executing the writing. (Pa.) 922

Parol evidence is admissible to alter the legal operation of an instrument, where it contradicts nothing expressed in the writing. (Pa.) 922

Parol evidence must be such as would justify a chancellor in reforming a writing on the ground of fraud, accident or mistake, and must be clear, precise, and indubitable. (Pa.) 922

Parol evidence is admissible to supply deficiencies in a written agreement. (Pa.) 922

Parol evidence may be received to prove a consideration not mentioned in the deed, provided it be not inconsistent with the consideration expressed in it. (Pa.) 922

A written agreement may be modified, explained, reformed, or altogether set aside by parol evidence of an oral promise or undertaking material to the subject-matter of the contract, made by one of the parties at the time of the execution of the writing, and which induced the other party to put his name to it. (Pa.) 747

Res gestæ. (Md.) 348

Declarations, to be part of the res gestæ, must have been made at the time of the act they are supposed to characterize. (Md.) 349

Admissibility of declaration in party's favor; presence of other party. (Md.) 348, 349

The existence of the marriage relation is not enough to make admissions or declarations made by either husband or wife competent against the other, but it is enough to show that the declarant was the agent of the other in the matter involved, and acted as such when the declaration was made. (N. J.) 400

Where some evidence of agency has been given, it is competent to give in evidence the acts and declarations of the alleged agent respecting the subject-matter of his authority. (Pa.) 296

The acts of a deceased person, done against his interest, are evidence in favor of those claiming under him. (Pa.) 463

Where one has sold the same land to different persons, his declarations before the second sale are evidence against his second vendee. (Pa.) 463

An expert was held incompetent to testify from an immediate comparison of hands made by him at the trial, without adequate knowledge previously acquired of the handwriting of party. (N. Y.) 790

If a knowledge of the witnesses is derived from specimens, although genuine, which have been selected by the party calling the witness, or by the witness himself, to enable him to qualify himself to testify as to the handwriting, his testimony cannot be received. (N. Y.) 790

When "experts" are called for purpose of relieving obligor in injunction bond, court should instruct that such testimony should be received with great caution. (Pa.) 50

Admissibility of evidence to show genuineness of handwriting; comparisons, when allowed. (N. Y.) 789

Competency; sufficiency; weight. Plaintiff is bound to offer all the evidence pertinent to maintain the issue on his part. (Md.) 849

The admission of incompetent evidence cannot be assigned for error, if the facts were subsequently established by other conclusive evidence. (Pa.) 468

If incompetent evidence has been admitted on the one side, it may be rebutted by the same amount of evidence on the other. (Pa.) 468

A mere scintilla of evidence is not sufficient to send the case to the jury. (N. Y.) 581

Failure of proof. (N. Y.) 190

EXCEPTIONS. See APPEAL; REPORT AND CASE MADE.

Amendment of bill after signed and filed. (Md.) 162

EXECUTION.

Where the right to issue execution upon a judgment depends upon the existence of the fact of a performance of some collateral act, the existence of that fact or the performance of the act must be judicially determined before execution can issue. (Pa.) 926

Where the execution is not issued for the enforcement of the judgment, it is fraudulent as to subsequent execution creditors. (Pa.) 656

An execution is intended not to secure, but to enforce, payment of a debt. It must be used in good faith, for its legitimate purpose, or the plaintiff in whose favor it issues gains no advantage from it. (Pa.) 657

Where the plaintiff's object is to obtain security, not satisfaction, for his debt, the employment of an execution for this purpose is a perversion of its design, and a fraud against third persons. (Pa.) 657

Even where the execution plaintiff is guilty of laches, he will not be postponed, if he orders the sheriff to proceed before another writ comes into his hands. (Pa.) 656

Delay will defeat an execution, whether owing to the directions or permission of the plaintiff, or to the default of the officer. (Pa.) 657

An execution will not be postponed for an officer's default. His procrastination, even by sufferance of the creditor, is not fraudulent per se, and postpones only where the creditor directs him not to proceed. (Pa.) 656

It is not necessary that the notice of sale be signed by the sheriff, or master, or executor with his own hand. (N. J.) 884

A sale for less than value, if fair, is no cause for setting aside the sale. (N. J.) 884

Irregularities will not avoid a sale. (Pa.) 907

Caveat emptor applies with especial force to judicial sales. (N. Y.) 224

Upon the distribution of the proceeds of a sheriff's sale, a subsisting judgment can only be attacked by other creditors collaterally upon the ground of collusion. (Pa.) 627

Power of court to set aside sale after delivery of sheriff's deed. (Pa.) 892

C. R., V. IV.

Record of deed not containing definite description is not notice to a purchaser at a judicial sale. (Pa.) 917

A purchaser at sheriff's sale is bound to take notice of defects appearing upon the record. (Pa.) 907

A purchaser at a judicial sale is not to be deprived of his rights by reason of mere irregularities in the proceedings, of which he was ignorant. (N. J.) 834

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS. See DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION; DEVISE AND LEGACY; DOWER; WILL; WITNESS.

It is the duty of joint executors to make investments in their joint names, and to keep a joint possession of the property. (N. Y.) 525

Where one of several executors has in the first instance the actual custody of the funds of the estate, he has a right to retain possession. (N. Y.) 525

One executor or trustee will be liable for the acts of another, if he permits the latter to have the entire management of the estate, or acquiesces in his misapplication of the funds. (N. Y.) 525

In order to hold one executor liable for the acts of his coexecutor, the general rule is that there must be a conjunction of wrong. (N. Y.) 526

A devastavit of one of two executors shall not charge his companion, provided he has not intentionally or otherwise contributed to it, for the testator's having misplaced his confidence in one shall not operate to the prejudice of the other. (N. Y.) 526

Executors de son tort; who are; liability. Note. 94

Right of administrator d. b. n. to collect, under Act of 1834. (Pa.) 928

Right of nonresident to letters of administration. (Pa.) 677

Management of estate; claims. Executors, interest in estate; power of administrator. Note. 94

An executor must use the same care and management that a prudent man would exercise in his own affairs. (Pa.) 787

In equity, executor is trustee of all assets. (Md.) 160

Equitable jurisdiction over administration of assets. (N. J.) 89

Continuing business. Note. 94

Trust funds received during the year are regarded as inoperative, until the close of the year. (N. J.) 879

Executors may retain money to meet contingencies. (N. J.) 880

Reclamation of real estate fraudulently conveyed by decedent. (N. Y.) 889

Proceedings on the reference of a claim against an estate do not constitute an action. (N. Y.) 127

Allowance of funeral expenses against insolvent estate. (N. J.) 848

In the absence of statute, funeral expenses have the preference. (N. J.) 848

Where the wife and other relatives of the testator made a journey to visit the testator, who was sick at a distance from home, their expenses were allowed against the estate, although they did not arrive until after his death. (N. J.) 843

Where an intestate committed suicide away from home,—Held, the expenses of a special messenger sent to his relatives, and the expenses of a person to accompany the body, should be included among the funeral expenses. (N. J.) 843

Any person providing reasonable burial for a decedent is entitled to recover therefor, and receive a preference where the estate is insolvent. (N. J.) 843

The cost of ordinary mourning apparel for the family of the deceased is an item of charge against the estate. (N. J.) 843

The expenses of a wake have been allowed as part of the funeral expenses. (N. J.) 843

The cost of erecting a suitable gravestone is a charge against the estate. (N. J.) 843

It is not necessary that the notice of sale be signed by the sheriff, or master, or executor with his own hand. (N. J.) 834

Adjournment of sale by executor for payment of debts may be made by his attorney. (N. J.) 834

A completed orphans' court sale is a judicial sale, to which the rule of caveat emptor applies. (Pa.) 893

A sale of decedent's real estate, even after confirmation by the court, does not divest the title of the heirs of the decedent until a deed has been executed and delivered. (Pa.) 893

The confirmation, by the orphans' court, of a sale of real estate by an executor, made in pursuance of its authority, is not complete till the purchase money be paid and a deed delivered. (Pa.) 893

If the court has jurisdiction of a sale of real estate by an executor, a mere irregularity in selling, or in the method of conducting the same, will not avoid the sale. (N. J.) 831

A sale for less than value, if fair, is no cause for setting aside the sale. (N. J.) 834

Offers to pay more for the property than it brought at public sale are not in themselves ground for setting aside the sale. (N. J.) 834

Accounting. Note. 94
Accounts; prima facie evidence of correctness. (Md.) 155

Final account filed by some of several executors; liability of executors not participating. (N. J.) 831

Administrator allowed to account in equity, though letters taken out before surrogate. (N. J.) 89

The orphans' court cannot open a final account except to correct particular items. (N. J.) 831

Executor, when charged with interest, compound and simple. (N. J.) 880

Review of an executor's or guardian's account can be had only (1) for error of law appearing in the body of the decree; (2) for new matter which has arisen after the decree, and, (3) it may be allowed ex gratia for new evidence as to facts subsequently discovered, which could not have been procured by due diligence; the plaintiff must show that he has been diligent and not negligent. (Pa.) 737

Commissions; determination of rate. (N. J.) 879

Commissions of accountant are due at the time at which the services for which they are allowed are performed. (N. J.) 879
O. R., V. IV.

When yearly accounts are required to be rendered, and interest charged on balance, full commissions should be allowed on each year's receipts and disbursements. (N. J.) 879

Personal liability of executor for loss resulting from delay or negligence in collecting or vesting funds. (N. J.) 831

Liability for mingling funds. Note. 94

Liability, upon payment of debts and legacies, for deficiency of assets. (N. J.) 89

Administrator not liable for debt he returns good, or "separate," unless collected. Code, art. 93, § 232. (Md.) 163

Liability for contempt on refusal to obey surrogate's decree. Code, § 2855. (N. Y.) 210, 211

Actions to charge real estate of decedent; notice to devisees; parties. Acts of Feb. 24, 1884, June 18, 1886. (Pa.) 906

EXECUTORY CONTRACT. See CONTRACT.

EXECUTORY DEVISE. See DEVISE AND LEGACY.

EXEMPLARY DAMAGES. See DAMAGES.

EXEMPTION. See TAXES.

EXPERT TESTIMONY. See EVIDENCE.

EXTRINSIC EVIDENCE. See EVIDENCE.

FALSE IMPRISONMENT. See MALICIOUS PROSECUTION.

The promoters of an imprisonment, in proceedings without the jurisdiction of the court, will not be protected for acts done under a void process. (N. Y.) 216

A void judgment will not protect the parties who procured it. (N. Y.) 216

Error of the court in adjudging a party entitled to process does not make the party liable for acts done under the erroneous process. (N. Y.) 217

FELLOW SERVANT. See MASTER AND SERVANT.

FEME COVERT. See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

FENCES.

The removal of a fence and substituting a row of trees will not warrant the inference of an intention to dedicate the land as a street. (N. Y.) 209

FINDINGS. See APPEAL; ARBITRATION AND REFERENCE.

FIRE INSURANCE. See INSURANCE.

FIRES AND FIRE DEPARTMENTS. See ARSON.

Tenure of office of firemen, under Laws 1885, p. 180. (N. J.) 884

FISH AND FISHERIES.

Oysters planted under tide waters of a bay or arm of the sea; common fishery; right of proprietorship. (N. Y.) 220

FORECLOSURE. See MORTGAGE.

FOREIGN ATTACHMENT. See ATTACHMENT.

FOREIGN CORPORATIONS. See CORPORATIONS; RAILROAD COMPANIES.

FORFEITURE. See CONTRACT; INSURANCE.

FORMER JEOPARDY. See CRIMINAL LAW.

FRANCHISES. See CORPORATIONS; TAXES.

FRAUD AND FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE. See EQUITY.

Fraud; in general. One attempting to defraud another in payment cannot ask repayment of part consideration from him. (Pa.) 87

Fraud, to vitiate a contract, must be such as occasioned the contract, not collateral to it, as in a security accompanying a debt. (Pa.) 740

Fraud, to invalidate an assignment, must be at the time of making it, so as to have attached to it, and not in a prior transaction affecting the property passing under it. (Pa.) 740

An assignee of a contract cannot insist upon fraud, used in the making of the contract, on the party under whom he claims. (Pa.) 740

An unsuccessful effort at fraud will not void a title. (Pa.) 740

If an innocent third party has acquired an interest in the property, or by delay the position even of a wrongdoer is affected, it will preclude a party from exercising his right to rescind. (Pa.) 740

Equity affords relief where a fraud has been practiced by one party and the other acted under a mistake. (N. Y.) 784

Waiver of right to rescind sale for fraud. (N. Y.) 190

Fraud upon creditors. Voluntary conveyances. (Md.) 156

Conveyances by insolvent corporations, to prefer creditors. (N. J.) 823

Conveyance void if made with intent to hinder and delay creditors. (N. Y.) 185

Where conveyance or mortgage is taken to secure debt, even with express purpose of preventing lien of judgment to be taken, it is valid. (N. Y.) 185

Chattel mortgage not filed, and without immediate and continued change of possession, is fraudulent. (N. Y.) 187, 188

In case of general assignment for creditors, fraud of assignor alone is sufficient. (N. Y.) 185

A conveyance without valuable consideration cannot stand where there are creditors, unless the grantor has sufficient ability to otherwise pay his debts and there has been no collusion. (Pa.) 665

A reservation of a portion of the property assigned is fraudulent, without inquiring as to whether there is surplus. (Pa.) 665

If a debt is a voluntary one and its effect is to hinder or delay creditors, a vendee without consideration, whether there was fraud on his part or not, will take no title as against creditors. (Pa.) 665

Validity of transfer made by insolvent containing provision that any surplus is to be returned to the assignor. (Pa.) 666

A husband may settle property on his wife although he afterwards becomes insolvent. (Pa.) 744

When the purchaser of property pays a full consideration therefor, he cannot be deprived of it on a vague suspicion that it was sold for the purpose of defrauding the vendor's creditors. (Pa.) 766

A concurrent possession in the vendor and vendee is not sufficient as against creditors. (Pa.) 766

One cannot be prejudiced by the fraud of another of which he had no notice. (Pa.) 766

Until the creditor has obtained a judgment at law for his demand against the debtor, and the return of an execution unsatisfied, an action in equity cannot be maintained to set aside a conveyance as fraudulent and void. (N. Y.) 889

Fraud without damage or damage without fraud gives no cause of action. (Pa.) 86

Reclamation of real estate fraudulently conveyed by decedent. (N. Y.) 889

If there is evidence of fraud it should be left to the jury. (Pa.) 86

Fraud is never presumed. (N. Y.) 190

Burden of proof is on party alleging fraud. (N. Y.) 190

Actual fraud must be shown upon the part of both grantor and grantee. (N. Y.) 185

Fraud may be inferred from facts, but they must tend to prove the fraud. (Pa.) 766

FRAUDS, STATUTE OF.

A parol contract for the purchase of land may be disaffirmed; on it there is no legal liability to take and pay for the land. Damages can only be recovered on a parol agreement. (Pa.) 891

A sale of lands by public auction is within the Statute of Frauds. (Pa.) 891

When the name of a bidder on real estate is entered by the auctioneer, on the spot, and such entry is so connected with the subject and promise of sale as to make a part of the memorandum, it is a contract in writing so as to take the case out of the Statute of Frauds. (Pa.) 891

A contract for the sale of standing timber on a tract of land, to be taken off at the discretion of the purchaser as to time, is an interest in the land, within the meaning of the Statute of Frauds. (Pa.) 491

Sufficiency of evidence to take parol contract out of the statute. (Pa.) 490

FUNERAL EXPENSES. See EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

GAME AND GAME LAWS.

Statutes prohibiting the killing or possession of game during certain seasons are constitutional. (N. Y.) 544

GAMING.

Dealing in stocks on margins. (N. J.) 421

GAS COMPANIES.

Right to include in assessment for local improvements the expenses of removing and relaying gas pipes as a necessary incident to the work. (Pa.) 857

The Legislature may fix the price of water and gas, and grant exclusive privileges to supply the same to villages and cities. (N. Y.) 544

GIFT. See DEVISE AND LEGACY.

Delivery. (Pa.) 698

Declarations of donor, evidence of intent to make gift. (Pa.) 698

A gift is not executed so long as the donor retains any control over it. (Pa.) 696

Devisee of income of fund during life has no interest in the corpus, subject to gift, sale, or attachment. (Pa.) 84

GUARDIAN AND WARD.

A guardian must use the same care and management that a prudent man would exercise in his own affairs. (Pa.) 787

Power of orphans' court to rescind guardian's sale for mistake, after delivery of deed, confirmation of sale and payment of purchase money. (Pa.) 893

Account is only prima facie evidence of correctness. (Md.) 155

Review of an executor's or guardian's account can be had only (1) for error of law appearing in the body of the decree; (2) for new matter which has arisen after the decree, and (3) it may be allowed ex gratia for new evidence as to facts subsequently discovered, which could not have been procured by due diligence; the plaintiff must show that he has been diligent and not negligent. (Pa.) 787

HANDWRITING. See EVIDENCE.HIGHWAYS. See WAYS.*HOMICIDE.

Deliberation and premeditation. (N. Y.) 540
After mutual combat, the question is whether there has been sufficient time to cool, and not whether, in point of fact, the defendant did remain in a state of anger. (N. Y.) 540

If the killing is not the instant effect of impulse, if there is any hesitation or doubt to overcome, and choice made as the result of thought, however short the struggle between the intention and the act, it is sufficient to characterize the crime as deliberate and premeditated murder. (N. Y.) 540

If a fatal blow be struck in self-defense, the homicide is not justifiable unless the prisoner had retreated as far as possible. (N. Y.) 540

HOUSES OF ILL FAME. See BAWDY AND DISORDERLY HOUSES.HUSBAND AND WIFE. See ADULTERY; DOWER; TRUSTS.

Marriage. The Legislature may prohibit the intermarriage of white and colored people. (N. Y.) 544

Mere words, without an intention corresponding to them, will not make a marriage or any other civil contract. (N. J.) 428

The best evidence of reputation is that it never was discussed or questioned in the community. (Pa.) 678

Reputation consists of the speech of the people who have an opportunity to know the facts to be proved by them. (Pa.) 678

Evidence of marriage by cohabitation, reputation, and acknowledgment of parties. (Pa.) 678, 679

Meretricious relation; reputation; sufficiency of evidence to prove marriage. (Pa.) 679

Relation illicit in its origin is presumed to continue so. (Pa.) 679

A wife is a competent witness to prove a marriage contract between herself and deceased husband, in a contest where the legality of the marriage is in question. (Pa.) 679

False representations of a woman that she is pregnant, when in fact she is not, or that the husband is the father of an unborn child, when in fact another is the father, will not avoid a marriage induced thereby. (N. J.) 423

Where a husband receives money from his wife during coverture, with the understanding that he was to hold it for her, his estate must account in equity at the suit of the widow. (N. J.) 863

Reduction to possession, with the wife's consent, for the purpose of reinvestment, does not vest title in husband. (N. J.) 863

Declarations of the husband when receiving the wife's money or chose in action, or afterwards, clearly evincive of his intent at the reduction into possession, are sufficient to repel the presumption of personal acquisition, and to establish the relation of trustee for the wife. (Pa.) 696

A husband may settle property on his wife, although he afterwards becomes insolvent. (Pa.) 744

Liability of husband receiving legacy belonging to his wife; agreement to repay. Note. 850

Wife. Rights and liabilities as husband's creditor. (Md.) 155, 156

As to property of married woman. Note. 850

A feme covert may execute any kind of power, whether simply collateral, appendant, or in gross, and it is immaterial whether it was given to her when sole or married. The concurrence of her husband is in no case necessary. (Pa.) 466

Right of married woman to contract under Act of March 24, 1862. (N. J.) 557

Power of married woman to contract. Feme Sole Trader Act of April 8, 1872. (Pa.) 655

While a feme covert may not be liable on a contract to sell and deliver her personal property at a future time, yet she cannot repudiate a gift or contract fairly made, under which she has delivered possession of the property. (Pa.) 655

A quitclaim, or release by a married woman, to a stranger to the title, is ineffectual to divest her of an inchoate right of dower. (N. Y.) 214

Power of married woman to convey her inchoate right of dower. (N. Y.) 214

Validity of judgment note given by married woman on purchase of land; expression of consideration on face of note. (Pa.) 709, 710

At common law the chose in action of a married woman remains hers until reduced to possession by the husband; and rendition is a matter of intention. (N. J.) 389

A married woman acting as trustee will be liable for waste committed during coverture. (Pa.) 828

Torts of wife; liabilities of husband; liability of wife; evidence of coercion; presumption from presence. Note. 834

Conveyances, etc. A deed of a married woman must be made with the joinder of her husband. (Pa.) 467

The mortgage of a married woman given for the purchase money of real estate will be enforced, although her husband does not join in the mortgage. (Pa.) 760

Form of acknowledgment of married women. (Pa.) 461

A substantial compliance with the form of certificate of acknowledgment by a married woman is sufficient. (Pa.) 461

An action cannot be maintained at law by the wife against her husband's representatives, for money received by him in his lifetime to to her use. (N. J.) 862

Judgment cannot be taken against a married woman for want of an affidavit of defense. (Pa.) 269

Competency as witnesses in actions by and against. (Md.) 162

The existence of the marriage relation is not enough to make declarations or admissions made by either husband or wife competent against the other, but it is enough to show that the declarant was the agent of the other in the matter involved, and acted as such when the declaration was made. (N. J.) 400

Divorce; grounds. Cruel and barbarous treatment has been defined to be actual personal violence, or the reasonable apprehension of it, or such a course of treatment as injures life and health and renders cohabitation unsafe. (Pa.) 282

Where each party has cause for divorce, neither can obtain a divorce. (Pa.) 282

Mere want of sympathy, disagreeable manner, bad temper, etc., are not cause for separation. (Pa.) 282

Alimony is in the sound discretion of the court. (Pa.) 283

Alimony; when allowed, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1769. (N. Y.) 537

Power of court to make additional allowance of alimony for past expenses. (N. Y.) 537

ILLEGITIMACY. See BASTARDY.

ILL FAME, HOUSES OF. See BAWDY AND DISORDERLY HOUSES.

IMPLIED CONTRACT. See CONTRACT.

INDICTMENT. See ADULTERY; CRIMINAL LAW.

INFANTS. See GUARDIAN AND WARD; NEGLIGENCE.

Negligence; contributory negligence of parents. Note. 919

Negligence; when negligence of parent imputed to. (Pa.) 920

INJUNCTION. See EQUITY.

When lies. When public or private rights are invaded and an injunction is asked, no question of the amount of damages is raised, C. R., v. IV.

but merely one of the invasion of a right. When railroad companies exceed their statutory powers in dealing with other people's property, this principle may be invoked. (Pa.) 278

Right of adjacent landowner to enjoin unlawful occupation of street by railroad. (Pa.) 277, 278

By trustee against cestui que trust. (Pa.) 52

Injunction will be granted in all cases of timber, coal, ores, and quarries, where the party is a mere trespasser, or where he exceeds the limited rights with which he is clothed. (N. Y.) 884

Restraining breach of trade contract. (Pa.) 43

Laches will bar relief. (Pa.) 52

Under Act May 6, 1844, injunction will not issue until bond given. (Pa.) 49

When experts are called for purpose of relieving obligor in injunction bond, court should instruct that such testimony should be received with great caution. (Pa.) 50

Pleading; practice. When equity intervenes to restrain acts prejudicial to the community, it must be by bill by the attorney-general. (Pa.) 277

Preliminary injunction to preserve statu quo; discretion of chancellor. (Pa.) 52

Clear title must be shown to authorize preliminary injunction. (Pa.) 52

Where answer denies all equity, injunction will not issue. (Pa.) 52

Action on bond; damages; counsel fees. (Pa.) 49, 50

INSOLVENCY. See ASSIGNMENT FOR BENEFIT OF CREDITORS; BANKRUPTCY; CORPORATIONS; RECEIVER.

A party whose debt is not due has no equitable claim to have it set off against a debt of his own, already due, in the hands of a party who is insolvent. (Pa.) 262

In case of the insolvency of the borrower before actual payment of the money by the lender, an equitable right, analogous to that of stoppage in transitu, may be exercised by the lender. (Pa.) 262

Discharge from sentence under fornication and bastardy laws. (Pa.) 711

Form of order in discharge. (Md.) 255

INSTRUCTIONS. See TRIAL.

INSURANCE.

Fire. Authority of agents to waive conditions in policy. (Pa.) 761, 762

Evidence of authority of agents. (Pa.) 296, 297

A policy, together with the application, constitutes the contract. (N. Y.) 580

Distinction between warranties and mere representations in application for insurance. (N. Y.) 581

Where there was a warranty of no building within a certain distance of the property, it was held the reasonable intent was to make the warranty applicable to such a building only as increased the risk. (N. Y.) 581

The effect of a breach of warranty is to annul the policy, without regard to the materiality of the warranty or whether the breach had anything to do in producing the loss. (N. Y.) 530

Alteration of premises; increase of risk; duty of insured to give notice. (Pa.) 688

An insurance company which has insured the mortgagee's interest is liable for an injury to the property, although the remaining land is ample security. (Pa.) 652

Life. Insurable interest in life policies. (Pa.) 808

An insurable interest arising from the ties of blood or marriage is such as will justify a reasonable expectation of advantage or benefit from the continuance of life. (Pa.) 809

A man has no insurable interest in the life of his brother per se. (Pa.) 808

A man may effect an insurance on his own life for the benefit of a relative or friend. (Pa.) 809

If the relation of debtor and creditor subsists, and the policy is effected with the privity of the debtor, and it is agreed or can be inferred that it is intended as a security, it will belong to the debtor after the payment of the debt, although the creditor has paid over all the premiums. (Pa.) 808

All that is printed or written on the face or back of a policy are parts of it and constitute the contract. (N. Y.) 788

Wagering policies. (Pa.) 809, 694
Forfeiture for nonpayment of premiums; nonforfeiture policies. (N. Y.) 788, 784

Right of representative of insured to recover on life policy issued to one having no insurable interest. (Pa.) 649

INTERMARRIAGE. See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

INTERVENTION. See ATTACHMENT.

INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

Act 1880, p. 191, creating excise departments in cities of over 15,000 inhabitants, is special and unconstitutional. (N. J.) 84

Right to license, under Act March 22, 1867. (Pa.) 912

Licenses, under Pa. Act, March 22, 1867; question to be considered by the court; discretion of the court. Notes. 909

Construction of Act April 12, 1875, prohibiting druggists from selling without licenses, to be used as a beverage. (Pa.) 726, 727

Illegal sale; Sunday; druggist; modification of previous legislation imposing penalties by Pa. Act, p. 12, 1875. Notes. 725

Constitutionality of statute making fact that a person is seen to drink liquor in a shop prima facie evidence that it was sold with intent. (N. Y.) 855

Evidence that "persons went in sober and came out drunk" is competent on the question of the sale of intoxicating liquors. (N. Y.) 855

The law implies a sale where the evidence is that a person called for liquor and it was furnished him. (N. Y.) 855

Sale by the servant is prima facie by the master. (N. Y.) 855

INTOXICATION. See CONTRACT.

C. R., v. IV.

ISSUE. See DEVISE AND LEGACY.

JAIL AND JAILER.

If the county jail should be burned or rendered uninhabitable by infectious disease, the commissioners have power to hire prisoners kept in some other suitable place. (Pa.) 928

Compensation paid to sheriff for board of prisoners is an emolument of his office. (Pa.) 87

Authority, under Act of April 10, 1873 (P. L. 666), to increase or decrease compensation of sheriff for board of prisoners in county jail. (Pa.) 88

JEOPARDY. See CRIMINAL LAW.

JOINT EXECUTORS. See EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

JOINT TENANTS AND TENANTS IN COMMON.

Rights and remedies inter se. Notes. 471
Right of one joint tenant to recover for improvements. (Pa.) 474

Liability of tenant for repairs and improvements made by cotenant. (Pa.) 100, 101

Assumpsit for use and occupation will lie by one joint tenant against another. (Pa.) 474

Account, and not assumpsit, is the remedy for one joint tenant against another who has held sole possession. (Pa.) 474

Neither trespass nor assumpsit will lie for mere passive occupation by one. (Pa.) 474

Validity and effect of mortgage made by several joint tenants to secure the debt of one. (N. J.) 244

Right of dower in land held in joint tenancy. (N. J.) 66

In partition in equity, a tenant in common is entitled to improvements made by him which are reasonably necessary for the proper enjoyment of the land, and not injurious to the estate of the other cotenant. (Pa.) 90

A husband who thus improves property in which his wife has an undivided interest is not a stranger or volunteer. Id.

JUDGMENT. See EQUITY.

The jurisdiction of a court or other tribunal to render a judgment affecting individual rights is always open to inquiry when the judgment is relied on in another proceeding. (N. J.) 585

An order cannot be taken by default against a party after his death by service upon the person who had been his attorney during his lifetime. (N. Y.) 394

Effect of death of one of joint defendants. (N. Y.) 394

After verdict, persons who represented parties at the time of trial may continue to do so until judgment is entered, and notice upon such attorney after the death of one of the defendants is sufficient. (N. Y.) 395

Form of warrant to confess judgment. (Pa.) 287, 288

Judgment cannot be entered on warrant of attorney, before the warrant is actually filed in the prothonotary's office. (Pa.) 287

Courts have authority to vacate or modify a judgment entered by warrant of attorney, either for cause appearing on the record, or for such as may be established by depositions. (Pa.) 287

Res judicata. (N. Y.) 181
Conclusiveness of decree. (Pa.) 98

Where the law has confided to a special tribunal the authority to hear and determine certain matters arising in the course of its duties, the decision of that tribunal within the scope of its authority is conclusive upon all others. (Pa.) 488

If the evidence in a second suit would have been clearly available in the first suit, then the judgment and verdict in the first is an absolute bar to any recovery in the second. (Pa.) 645

The plea of former recovery is composed partly of law and fact, is a mixed question, and, where there is any conflicting testimony, is always for the jury. (Pa.) 645

Upon the distribution of proceeds of a sheriff's sale, a subsisting judgment can only be attacked by other creditors collaterally, upon the ground of collusion. (Pa.) 637

A judgment transferred from one county to another, under Act of April 16, 1840, has the same force and effect as the original judgment as to the lien and right to an execution. (Pa.) 257

The lapse of five years raises the presumption of payment of an unrevived judgment. (Pa.) 257

Power of court to amend after term. (Pa.) 696

Practice. When judgment at law is rendered against A and B, equity will not afford relief against it in their favor; yet when it is made the basis of proceedings in equity against X and Y, strangers to it, equity will, in their favor, relieve against it if it was rendered fraudulently, etc. (Md.) 155

Reformation of deed will not be made to the prejudice of a judgment creditor of the grantee. (D. C.) 616

JUDICIAL SALE. See EXECUTION.

JURISDICTION. See EQUITY; JUDGMENT; MORTGAGE.

JURY. See NEGLIGENCE; TRIAL.

One who has formed an opinion from the reading or report of the testimony against the prisoner on a former trial, however strong his belief and purpose to decide on the evidence and give an unbiased verdict, cannot be readily received. (N. Y.) 789

If there is any doubt concerning a juror's impartiality, he should be rejected. (N. Y.) 789

It is a ground for challenge, in an action for libel on the manager of an opera, that a juror declares himself opposed to theatrical performances. (N. Y.) 789

A juror should be rejected who has an opinion as to defendant's guilt which would require evidence to remove, but who believed he could render an impartial verdict. (N. Y.) 789

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE.

A justice has no jurisdiction in trespass quare clausum fregit, if the title to the land is in dispute. (N. J.) 562

LACHES.

Forfeiture of right to relief. (Pa.) 52
C. R., V. IV.

LANDLORD AND TENANT. See RAILROAD COMPANIES.

Lease construed most strongly against landlord. (Pa.) 46

When an option is given in a lease, it is that of lessee. (Pa.) 48

Where no definite term is mentioned, the grant is construed to convey the largest estate possible. (Pa.) 904

A lease for one hundred years, with provision that the lessee, his heirs, and assigns may hold the premises so long as he and they shall think proper after the expiration of the term, at the same rent, is not determinable by the lessor after the end of the term, at least not without making compensation for improvements. (Pa.) 904

Lease from year to year is assignable. (Pa.) 904

A covenant to repair is neither superseded, nor qualified, nor restricted, as to amount, by a covenant to insure for a specified amount. (Pa.) 904

Validity of provision in lease, that landlord should have title as mortgagee upon property on the premises to secure rent, and that tenant should have the right to use the property to make sales thereof, as against assignee for benefit of the creditors of the tenant. (N. Y.) 238

A reversion is essential to a lease; and when a grantor has transferred all his term and estate in the demised premises, the instrument of transfer will operate as an assignment of the lease, and not as an under-lease, notwithstanding the reservation of a rent to the grantor, or a writ of re-entry on nonpayment or on the nonperformance, by the grantee, of covenants contained in it, and although words of demise be used instead of words of assignment. (N. Y.) 117

Transfer of an entire term is an assignment, and not a sublease. (N. Y.) 116

The same instrument may be an assignment between the original lessor and the transferee, and a sublease between the parties to it. (N. Y.) 117

Where the two contracts differ, and an interest is reserved by first lessee against his tenant, the latter will be regarded as an undertenant and not an assignee. (N. Y.) 117

Measure of damages for breach of covenant for royalty to use diligence in operating premises. (Pa.) 104

A demise to one, his heirs and assigns, for such time as he pays rent, is a perpetual lease. (Pa.) 904

A tenancy at will exists only nominally, and is, in fact, a tenancy from year to year. (Pa.) 904

Tenancy at will cannot arise without express grant or contract. All general tenancies are by implication and constructively from year to year. (Pa.) 904

If any circumstances, payment of rent or otherwise, appear referable to an annual holding, the term is from year to year, and not at will. (Pa.) 904

The reservation of the yearly rent is not inconsistent with a tenancy at will. (Pa.) 905
Leases for an uncertain time are prima facie leases at will. (Pa.) 905

Assignment of an estate at will puts an end to it. (Pa.) 904

Among the examples of life estates are: "If a man grant an estate to a woman dum sola fuit, or durante viduitate, or quamdiu se bene gesserit, or so long as the grantee dwell in such house, or so long as he pays ten pounds," or for any like uncertain time. (Pa.) 904

Every indefinite estate is an estate for life, although it may terminate earlier, even though the termination is by the act or fault of the lessee. (Pa.) 904

A lease to a tenant, as long as he desires to use the house for a drug store, creates an estate for life, determinable by failure to use it. (Pa.) 904

If a man make a lease of a manor that, at the time of the lease, is worth £20 per annum, to another, until £100 be paid, in this case because the annual profits of the land are uncertain, he has an estate for life. (Pa.) 904

A lease during the time that salt works should be erected and used on the land, creates an estate for life, subject to be defeated. (Pa.) 904

Requisites of surrender of premises by tenant during term, to release him from liability for rent. (Pa.) 702

Request by the landlord for the keys of the premises, followed by an acceptance of them, will constitute a surrender of the term. (Pa.) 701

Eviction is any act of the landlord which deprives the tenant of that beneficial enjoyment of the premises to which he is entitled under the lease. (Pa.) 701

Eviction; defense to action for rent. (Pa.) 701

Railing off a part of demised premises is an eviction. (Pa.) 701

A landlord's refusal to allow an undertenant to enter the premises under threats of suit, whereby the lessee is deprived of underletting, amounts to an eviction. (Pa.) 701

Taking possession of premises left vacant by the tenant, repairing, advertising the house to rent, are all acts in the interest and benefit of the tenant, and do not discharge him from his covenant to pay rent. (Pa.) 701

Claims for wages under Act April 9, 1872; priority over distress for rent. (Pa.) 704

After suit for rent, judgment and execution, the landlord may distrain. (Pa.) 706

Taking the note of a third person, when not in satisfaction of the rent, will not estop the landlord from distraining. (Pa.) 706

Rights; liabilities of parties. An owner in possession induced to sign a lease is not estopped from denying the tenancy or setting up his own title. (Pa.) 662, 663

Tenant is estopped from denying title of landlord. (Pa.) 662

Exceptions to the rule that a tenant will not be allowed to dispute the title of his landlord. (Pa.) 663

A tenant of an upper floor of a building is not liable, in the absence of negligence, for damages caused by water escaping from the plumbing to the lower floor. (Pa.) 477

Liability of landlord making excavation on premises, for injury resulting to members of the family and visitors of the tenant. (Pa.) 506

LEASE. See LANDLORD AND TENANT.

C. R., V. IV.

LEGACY. See DEVISE AND LEGACY.

LIBEL AND SLANDER.

Words actionable. (Pa.) 85

Words are actionable whenever they impute an offense of moral turpitude, punishable in temporal courts. (Pa.) 85

If words are not actionable, special damages alleged and proven will support verdict and judgment. (Pa.) 85

Words charging or imputing act of fornication; want of chastity. (Pa.) 85

Sense in which words are received by the world is the sense to be ascribed to them on the trial. (Pa.) 85

The truth of the innuendo is for the jury. (Pa.) 85

Power of court to punish by contempt for libelous publication out of court concerning pending case. (N. Y.) 577-579

LICENSE. See INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

No warranty of validity of letters patent is implied in any license given thereunder, and proof of invalidity is therefore no defense to any suit for promised royalties. (Pa.) 48

LIEN. See JUDGMENT; MORTGAGE; RAILROAD COMPANIES; VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

Vendor's lien for purchase money. (N. Y.) 899

Lien of contractors and laborers for work done in the construction of a road. (Pa.) 457

As to third persons acquiring subsequent liens upon property, the record is their proper resort for information, and they must be permitted to rely upon it with confidence. (N. J.) 874

Manufacturer's lien. (Pa.) 688

A lien may be lost by setting up a claim hostile to the title of the owner of the goods. (Pa.) 690

LIFE ESTATE. See DEVISE AND LEGACY; LANDLORD AND TENANT.

LIFE INSURANCE. See INSURANCE.

LIMITATION OF ACTIONS. See CORPORATIONS; LACHES; PLEDGE AND COLLATERAL SECURITY.

In general. Courts of equity apply the Statute of Limitations by analogy. (N. J.) 863

Equity follows the law in stale claims. (Pa.) 458

The Statute of Limitations does not apply against a corporation which has ceased from the ordinary business for which it was created. Act of March 27, 1718. (Pa.) 453

Whether there has been an actual purchase or not, equity will presume one after the lapse of twenty years, a presumption based not on fact, but in the face of evidence to the contrary. (N. Y.) 794

Adverse possession; what length of time will defeat partition. (Pa.) 98

Adverse possession; interruption; abandonment. (N. Y.) 233

In the case of unseated lands, where taxes were paid for thirty years, and no taxes paid or other acts of ownership exercised by the adverse claimant.—Held, the Statute of Limitations ran in favor of the payor. (Pa.) 758

Right to acquire title in highway by adverse possession. (N. Y.) 288

Contracts under seal. (N. Y.) 181

The continued holding of a pledge prevents the operation of the Statute of Limitations. (Pa.) 458

Mutual accounts. (Pa.) 897

An action by a census que trust against the trustee, under a direct trust, is not within the statute. (N. Y.) 525

The Statute of Limitations does not affect the lien of the vendor for purchase money, because the vendee or the purchaser from him, with notice, stands in the relation of a trustee or mortgagor for the unpaid purchase money. (N. J.) 899

The presumption of payment from the lapse of time is not conclusive, but casts the burden of rebutting it upon the creditor. (Pa.) 458

LIQUIDATED DAMAGES. See DAMAGES.

LIS PENDENS.

Notice. (Pa.) 119

LOCAL IMPROVEMENTS. See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

LOCAL LEGISLATION. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

LOGS AND LOGGING.

One having a right to timber upon the land of another may be required to take it off after a reasonable time. (Pa.) 690

A contract for the sale of standing timber on a tract of land, to be taken off at the discretion of the purchaser as to time, is an interest in land, within the meaning of the Statute of Frauds. (Pa.) 491

LUMBER. See LOGS AND LOGGING.

MALICIOUS PROSECUTION.

Malice; probable cause; advice of counsel. (D. C.) 151, 152

Malice may be inferred from the want of probable cause. (Pa.) 494

Recovery of possession of land under legal process; probable cause. (Pa.) 494

MANDAMUS.

Mandamus is a common-law remedy, and not an equitable one. (N. Y.) 200

Mandamus will issue only for public purposes and to compel the performance of public duties. (N. Y.) 200

Not issue where another remedy. (N. Y.) 185

Will not lie to compel the performance, by public officers, of acts calling for the exercise of judgment and discretion. (Pa.) 755; (N. Y.) 184

To compel state comptroller to cancel tax sale. (N. Y.) 184

Duty of controller of Philadelphia in relation to warrants; discretion; mandamus. (Pa.) 755-757

Will not issue to enforce a private contract with a corporation created to supply a public want. (N. Y.) 200

Where the duty to build and operate a railroad is not made imperative by the charter or laws of the State, mandamus will not lie. (N. Y.) 200

MARRIAGE. See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

MARRIED WOMAN. See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

MASTER. See EQUITY.

MASTER AND SERVANT.

Claims for wages, under Act April 9, 1872; priority over distress for rent. (Pa.) 704

Act of June 29, 1881, regulating payment of persons engaged in mining coal, ore, etc., is void. (N. J.) 888

Physical disability rendering the servant unable to perform his part of the contract will excuse the master from paying the stipulated wages while the disability lasts. (Pa.) 820

Insolvent railroad; lien and priority for wages of employees. (N. Y.) 865, 866

Liability. Duty of master to furnish safe machinery. (Pa.) 650, 918; (N. J.) 569; (N. Y.) 892, 519

A master is not bound, as to his servant, to employ the latest and most improved machinery, but only such as is suitable. (Pa.) 914

There is no obligation on the part of a railroad company to build its bridges over public roads with such an elevation that one of its employees standing upright on the top of the cars will not be endangered. (Pa.) 914

An employer is not bound to make such constant examination and overhauling of his machinery and works as would interfere with the proper furtherance of the business. (Pa.) 649

A master is not bound to make use of the safest known instruments and appliances, nor is he responsible for a failure to discard one which is not such. (N. Y.) 519

A railroad company is not liable to its employee for using on its train an old mail car, lower than others composing the train, although the danger of coupling the old car with another was greater than if the cars had been of equal height. (N. Y.) 519

Where one has been placed in a perilous situation by his own negligence, yet ordinary care on defendant's part in furnishing suitable machinery would have prevented the injury, the latter is liable. (N. Y.) 519

Knowledge of master of defect in machinery. (N. Y.) 519

Knowledge of defects by master. (N. J.) 569

Liability of master for injuries resulting to servant while assisting third person engaged in repairing the property of plaintiff's master. (N. Y.) 390-392

Notice and warning should be given to minors in and about machinery or dangerous structures. (N. J.) 569

A master introducing a new explosive, without informing his servant of its dangerous character, will be liable for an injury resulting therefrom. (N. J.) 569

Where a conductor was injured by insufficient side tracks,—Held, the company was liable. (N. J.) 569

A teamster injured by the negligence of a railroad superintendent may recover against the company. (N. J.) 569

A master must see that his building and machinery are kept in repair, and the repairer's neglect is his; he is liable, no matter who may be the agent through whom he acts. (Pa.) 650

Assumption of risks by servant. (N. J.) 569; (Pa.) 649

An employee attempting to couple cars by getting inside the rails while the train is in motion, and continuing to move with the train after he has ascertained that the pin would not pull, is guilty of contributory negligence. (N. Y.) 519

It is not contributory negligence for a railroad employee to attempt to uncouple while a train is in motion. (N. Y.) 520

When the servant, in obedience to the master, incurs the risk of machinery, which, although dangerous, is not so much so as to threaten immediate injury, or if it is reasonably probable that it may be used safely by extraordinary caution, the master is liable for an injury resulting. (N. J.) 569

Whether or not a servant, when injured, was in the course of his employment, is to be inferred from the circumstances and is for the jury. (N. J.) 570

Where an employee, contrary to the rules of his employer, is in a part of the mine where he is injured by unsafe machinery, this is no defense for the negligence of the master. (Pa.) 901

Where there is any doubt whether the employee was acquainted, or ought to have been acquainted, with the risks, the determination of the question is for the jury. (Pa.) 914

A brakeman assumes the risk of low bridges. (Pa.) 914

Fellow servants must be in the employ of the common master and engaged in a common business. (Pa.) 650

Where an injury results from the negligence of the employer, he is not exonerated from liability because the negligence of the co-servant has also contributed to the accident. (N. Y.) 392

When a servant receives an injury in part by the negligence of his master, and in part by that of a fellow servant, he cannot maintain an action against the master for such injury. (N. J.) 569

An employer is not generally liable for injuries received by a subemployee hired by the employee, when the negligence of any of the workmen engaged in the common task is the cause of the injuries. (Pa.) 649

A brakeman and car inspector held fellow servants. (Pa.) 900

A brakeman and the mechanics in a repair shop held fellow servants. (Pa.) 900

A conductor and a brakeman on another train held fellow servants. (Pa.) 900

A railroad company will be liable to an engineer for negligence of the conductor of the train. (N. J.) 569

A conductor and the servants working upon his train held fellow servants. (Pa.) 900

C. R., v. IV.

A conductor and station baggage master held fellow servants. (Pa.) 900

Where a common laborer was injured by the negligence of the conductor, held the company liable. (N. J.) 569

An engineer of the switch engine and the car repairer held fellow servants. (Pa.) 900

An engineer and the servants of a contractor engaged in furnishing wood to a railroad under a contract, being on the same train, held fellow servants. (Pa.) 900

An engineer and telegraph operator held fellow servants. (Pa.) 900

Car repairer of cars on track in yard and car dropper held fellow servants. (Pa.) 900

A carpenter or other employees of a railroad, and the men in charge of the train on which they are carried to their work, held fellow servants. (Pa.) 900

Liability of master for negligent acts of his servant. (N. Y.) 891

Liability of master for malicious acts of servants; exemplary damages. (Pa.) 719

The general rule is that where a servant in the employ of his master does an act which he is not employed to do, the master is not responsible. (Pa.) 900

MAXIMS.

He who seeks equity must do equity. (Md.) 155

He who comes into equity must come with clean hands. (Md.) 155

Whatever is agreed to be done is considered in equity as done. (Pa.) 490

Expressum facit cessare tacitum. (Pa.) 104

Nemo tenetur seipsum accusare. (N. Y.) 167

Sic utere tuo ut alienum non lædas. (Pa.) 476, 477

MERGER. See MORTGAGE.

MILLS AND DAMS.

Right to recover damages up to day of trial, under Act May 2, 1876. (Pa.) 686

MINES AND MINING.

Act of June 29, 1881, regulating payment of persons engaged in mining coal, ore, etc., is void. (N. J.) 888

Custom cannot control a statute (April 15, 1884), making 2,000 pounds a ton of coal. (Pa.) 868

Where an employee, contrary to the rules of his employer, is in a part of the mine where he is injured by unsafe machinery, this is no defense for the negligence of the master. (Pa.) 901

Flowage from superior to inferior mine. (Pa.) 477

Surface water; rights and liabilities of superior and inferior owners. (Pa.) 476

MINOR. See INFANTS.

MISTAKE. See EQUITY.

MORTGAGE. See DEED; HUSBAND AND WIFE; RAILROAD COMPANIES.

Validity or effect of mortgage made by several joint tenants to secure the debt of one. (N. J.) 244

Avoidance, for duress, of imprisonment. (N. J.) 428
To show by parol that a deed absolute upon its face is a mortgage, the proof must be clear, explicit, and unequivocal. (Pa.) 928
Conveyance absolute on its face may be shown to be a security for money loaned, by oral testimony. (Pa.) 922
Notice of improperly registered mortgage given to secure purchase money is sufficient notice. (N. J.) 899
A mortgagee has no right to make one a party defendant who claims adversely to the title of the mortgagor and prior to the mortgage. (N. Y.) 238
Possession of the bond and mortgage is sufficient evidence of the authority of the holder thereof to receive payment, both of the interest and principal. (N. Y.) 880
An insurance company which has insured the mortgagee's interest is liable for an injury to the property, although the remaining land is ample security. (Pa.) 652
An assignee of a bond and mortgage takes subject to equities. (N. J.) 244
The assignee of a mortgage takes it subject to all equities and defenses existing between the original parties at the time of the assignment, whether they be latent or not. (N. J.) 899
Vendor's lien for purchase money, as against subsequent transferee or mortgagee of the vendee. (N. J.) 899
Parol evidence is admissible to rebut the presumption of a merger upon conveyance of the mortgaged premises to the mortgagee. (Pa.) 627
Foreclosure. Parties; terre-tenants. (Pa.) 767
Those only are terre-tenants who claim by a conveyance subsequent to a mortgage. (Pa.) 767
Although it is not necessary to make the terre-tenants parties to the scire facias, yet it is the better practice to do so. (Pa.) 768
The only effect of aiming to make a terre-tenant a party is that he will be permitted to make any available defense against the purchaser at sheriff's sale that he might have set up on the trial of the scire facias in case it had been served upon him. (Pa.) 768
Jurisdiction in New York of proceedings for foreclosure and sale of mortgaged premises both in Pennsylvania and New York. (Pa.) 112
Validity of Act of 1880, P. L. p. 255, abolishing decrees for deficiency in foreclosure suits. (N. J.) 868
The rule that a purchaser on foreclosure sale may acquire a perfect title has no application where he purchases only a limited interest that is apparent. (N. Y.) 198
A purchaser on foreclosure obtains the title which the mortgagor had before he gave the mortgage. (N. Y.) 224
Chattel mortgage not filed, and without immediate and continued change of possession, is fraudulent. (N. Y.) 187, 188
There is no distinction between bills of sale, given as security, and chattel mortgages. (N. Y.) 188
In a chattel mortgage the legal title to the property mortgaged passes to the mortgagee. C. R., V. IV.

and becomes in condition. (N. J.)
Words create a chattel thereby. (N. J.)

MUNICIPAL BRIBERY; POLICE DE LAWS; W.

The power subject to legis
A municipal instituted by the carrying out of government. (Pa.)

A quasi municipal powers which acts done by the void. (Pa.)

A township The doctrine of ratifications. (D. C. Act 1880, p. 100) ments in title special and un-

Act of May 1880, p. 100 tion public provision and providing shall be taxab waterworks (Pa.)

Private proposition of supply water. (Pa.)

Assessments must be equal
Validity of a rate per line benefits; assess-

Right to improvements the laying gas pipe work. (N. Y.)

Claims for pphias; frontage
Parties in assessments a (N. Y.)

Officers. (Laws 1879, c. 100) board of charity overseers of the ties for violation commissioners 109. (N. Y.)

Implied power charge must be taint; all fact must appear; in favor of judgments. (N. J.)

Duty of condition to warrant

Duty of magistrates; right to (N. J.)

The mayor, counsel to defend (N. J.)

Liability for expenses incurred in suits by officers in official capacity. Notes. 248

Defective. An excavation in a road or street made for a lawful purpose must be fenced and lighted. (Pa.) 511

A municipality is not liable for injuries which are the result of nothing more than the ordinary slipperiness caused by recent snow and ice. (Pa.) 700

A traveler may presume all parts of the highway safe, and even when he may have notice of a defect he is not chargeable with negligence, because he fails to have it at all times in mind. (N. Y.) 786

Particular charters. Bayonne; lien of assessment for opening streets; reassessment relates back to lien of original assessment. (N. J.) 810

Camden; power to grant licenses. (N. J.) 84

Elizabeth; power to grant licenses. (N. J.) 84

Erie; exemption of waterworks from taxation; property from which income or revenue is derived; Act of May 14, 1874. (Pa.) 800

Jersey City; licenses. (N. J.) 84

Newark; licenses. (N. J.) 84

New Brunswick; power to grant licenses. (N. J.) 84

New York; assessments for repaving; petition of a majority of property-holders required. (N. Y.) 781

Bribery by member of common council punishable under Penal Code. (N. Y.) 165-168

Paterson; power to grant licenses. (N. J.) 84

Philadelphia; duty of city controller in relation to warrants. (Pa.) 754-757

Claims for paving and curbing; frontage rule; rural property. (Pa.) 675

South Orange; form of assessments for street improvements, under Laws 1875, p. 896, § 5. (N. J.) 426

Trenton; power to grant licenses. (N. J.) 84

Prior to Act 1880, p. 190, common council had exclusive right to grant licenses. (N. J.) 88

MURDER. See HOMICIDE.

NEGLIGENCE. See CARRIERS; MASTER AND SERVANT.

What is. Negligence in law is when the standard is fixed, when the measure of duty is defined by the law, and is the same under all circumstances; or where the precise measure of duty is determinate and the same under all circumstances; or the violation of a fixed rule, the same under all circumstances. (Pa.) 699

Negligence may consist either in the careless performance of obligations assumed, or in neglecting to undertake the performance of obligations imposed by law. (N. Y.) 205

Whether gross negligence is known to or defined in the law is seriously doubted. (N. Y.) 205

Mere evidence of the explosion of a boiler is not evidence of negligence. (N. Y.) 893

Proximate cause is to be decided by the jury. (Pa.) 719

Where several proximate causes contribute to an accident, and each is a sufficient cause, without which the accident would not have happened, it may be attributed to all or any of them. (N. Y.) 391

Where the injury is the result of two con-curring causes, one party in fault is not exempted from liability for an injury, although another party may be equally culpable. (Pa.) 511

The mere existence of a defect, occurrence of an accident, or omission of a duty, is not sufficient to create liability, without evidence that the defect or omission caused the accident. (N. Y.) 519

If one does an act of pure favor for another, with the assent of the latter, his responsibility to him is reduced to the duty of merely slight care and diligence. (N. Y.) 205

The question in each case as to the degree of care which should be exercised depends upon the particular circumstances. (Pa.) 641

When a person employs others, not as servants, but as mechanics or contractors, in an independent business, and they are of good character, if there is no want of due care in choosing them, he incurs no liability for injuries resulting to others from their negligence or want of skill. (Pa.) 649

The owner employing a contractor may in a measure have some personal control of the work in hand, without subjecting himself to liability for its faulty performance. (Pa.) 649

When the owner has done all in his power to erect a proper structure, he is not liable to others for its occult defects, if he had no knowledge of them and no reason to believe in their existence. (Pa.) 649

The lessee of a grand stand at the races, receiving a compensation for admission to the stand, was held liable to the same extent as a carrier of passengers. (Pa.) 649

A person who is injured by the negligence of another servant cannot be a fellow servant with the servant whose neglect caused the injury, unless he is under the control and orders of the same master. (Pa.) 650

Liability of landlord, making excavation on premises, for injury resulting to members of the family and visitors of the tenant. (Pa.) 506

Where persons are in the habit of crossing a railroad in a particular place, although there is no right of way there, it throws upon the company the responsibility of taking reasonable precautions in the use of such places. (Pa.) 630

The erection of an obstruction to the view at a crossing, while not negligence per se, should be left to the jury to say whether, under the circumstances, it was negligence. (Pa.) 630

A railroad company has a right to a clear track at all points upon the road except at public crossings. (Pa.) 631

At public crossings the rights of railroad companies are concurrent with those of the public. (Pa.) 631

Duty of railroad to maintain flagman at crossing; liability for omission. (Pa.) 631

Railroad companies running their trains through cities or populous towns are held to a degree of care commensurate with the danger involved. (Pa.) 631

Proof of the violation of a city ordinance, in the running of trains, does not establish negligence per se. (Pa.) 631

What is a reasonable rate of speed for a railroad train at a crossing is a question for the jury. (Pa.) 631

A railroad company is not liable for an injury resulting from breaking or failure of machinery, unless it is shown that the corporation has been guilty of negligence in regard thereto. (N. Y.) 519

Where a passenger on a carrying vehicle is injured by a collision resulting from the mutual negligence of those in charge of it and of another party, the carrier alone is liable for the injury. (Pa.) 510

Question for jury. (Pa.) 700

Where the evidence is conflicting, or, from the circumstances shown, inferences are to be drawn which are not certain and incontrovertible, and as to which reasonable men might differ, it is for the jury to decide. (N. Y.) 519

Negligence is a question for the jury only if there be reasonable doubt as to the facts tending to prove it, or as to the just inferences to be drawn therefrom. (Pa.) 640

If there is no sufficient proof of negligence, the court must take the case away from the jury. (Pa.) 681

Pleading; evidence. The right of recovery must be confined to the particular negligence charged in the declaration. (Pa.) 718

The negligence alleged must be the proximate cause of the injury complained of. (Pa.) 681

To sustain a recovery, it must appear that there was no negligence on the part of the plaintiff that in the slightest degree contributed to the injury. (N. Y.) 786

Negligence is an affirmative fact, and must be proved by the plaintiff. (N. Y.) 786

The burden of proof rests upon the plaintiff to show the damages sustained, and to distinguish them from damages for which defendant was not responsible. (N. Y.) 205

Where the person injured is not a passenger, the burden of proving negligence rests upon him. (Pa.) 681

The fact of the explosion of a boiler is presumptive evidence of negligence, and the burden is cast upon the owner of removing the presumption. (N. Y.) 891

Contributory; in general; effect. The doctrine of contributory negligence ceases when the person inflicting the injury was guilty of gross negligence. (Pa.) 901

No matter how negligent one may have been in putting himself in a particular position, he can recover for injuries inflicted by one who could have avoided the injury by the exercise of the ordinary care which is usual with prudent persons under the circumstances. (Pa.) 901

To defeat recovery, the negligence of the party injured must have been of such a character as to draw on him the injury. (Pa.) 901

The negligence of plaintiff which will defeat his recovery must be an approximate cause of the injury. (N. J.) 569

Where one has been placed in a perilous situation by his own negligence, and yet ordinary care on defendant's part in furnishing suitable machinery would have prevented the injury, the latter is liable. (N. Y.) 519

If an injury is occasioned in any degree by plaintiff's own negligence, he is without redress, unless the act of the defendant amounted to a willful trespass or an intentional wrong. (N. J.) 825

Contributory negligence is not imputable to a person for failing to look out for danger when, under the surrounding circumstances, the person sought to be charged with it had no reason to suspect that danger was to be apprehended. (N. J.) 569

The age, intelligence, and experience of one who has suffered from an injury held to determine whether he was guilty of contributory negligence. (N. J.) 569

It is not necessary that plaintiff's negligence should directly contribute to the injury; if it approximately (that is, in the order of causation) so contributes, there can be no recovery. (N. Y.) 205

Whenever the facts are undisputed, and it appears that the party has been guilty of contributory negligence, it is the duty of the court to take the case from the jury. (Pa.) 914

Where the admitted facts clearly show contributory negligence, it is the duty of the court to direct a verdict. (Pa.) 641

If it appears by plaintiff's own evidence that his own negligence contributed to the injury, it is the duty of the court to nonsuit, and a writ of error will lie for a refusal to grant a nonsuit. (N. J.) 825

To justify a nonsuit on the ground of contributory negligence, it must appear that no construction of the evidence or inference from the facts would have warranted a contrary conclusion, and that a verdict the other way would have been set aside as against the evidence. (N. Y.) 800

A nonsuit should not be granted upon the ground of contributory negligence, unless the undisputed facts show the omission or commission of some act the law adjudges negligence. (N. Y.) 891

Nonsuits are rarely permissible in actions for negligence. (N. Y.) 519

Contributory; passengers, etc. It is the general American rule that there is no privity in negligence between a passenger and his carrier; the contributory negligence of the carrier is not to be imputed to the passenger. (Pa.) 510

Where a passenger in a conveyance can have no control over those in charge of it, he cannot be held to be so identified with them as to be considered a party to their negligence. (Pa.) 510

Contributory negligence not imputable to passenger who alights from a train, on the instruction of the conductor, at an unsafe place. (Md.) 254

It is not negligence per se to stand on the step of the front platform of a street car, with the implied consent of the conductor and driver. (Pa.) 642

Where a traveler voluntarily puts his arm out of the window, it must be regarded as negligence per se. (Pa.) 900

Riding upon a railroad engine, even with the consent of the engineer, has been held negligence per se. (Pa.) 899

Travelers must stop, look, and listen before crossing the track, and failure to do so is negligence per se. (Pa.) 681, 641

If obstacles obstruct the view of the crossing, a traveler must use increased vigilance. (Pa.) 682

It is contributory negligence to attempt to cross a railroad track immediately in front of an approaching engine. (Pa.) 641

Where a railroad has a right to a clear track, all persons not in the employ of the company going upon such track are trespassers, and there is no difference in the rule between children and adults. (Pa.) 682

Where a person crosses a railroad track by a common and well-known foot path, used by the public for many years without let or hindrance on the part of the employees of the railroad company, he cannot be regarded as a trespasser. (Pa.) 680

Infants; contributory. Negligence of parents. Note. 919

Infants, when negligence of parents imputed to. (Pa.) 920

Contributory negligence in children of tender years. (Pa.) 680

It is negligence in a parent to permit a child to trespass on a railroad track, or a child of tender years to run at large in a city, or to engage in a dangerous employment. (Pa.) 641

A child crossing a railroad track is responsible only for the exercise of the caution and discretion of which children of its age are supposed to be capable. (Pa.) 681

NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS. See BILLS AND NOTES.

NEW TRIAL. See CRIMINAL LAW.

Where the charge of the court is erroneous in some part, but the result of the charge is correct, such error furnishes no ground for a new trial. (N. J.) 825

NEXT OF KIN. See DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION.

NONRESIDENTS. See EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

NONSUIT. See NEGLIGENCE.

Nonsuits are rarely permissible in actions for negligence. (N. Y.) 519

Where the evidence is conflicting, or, from the circumstances shown, inferences are to be drawn which are not certain and incontrovertible, and as to which reasonable men might differ, it is for the jury to decide. (N. Y.) 519

The power to nonsuit results from the principle that the court is a judge of the law where there is no dispute about facts. (N. Y.) 581

A mere scintilla of evidence is not sufficient to send the case to the jury. (N. Y.) 581

It is error to submit a question to the jury when there is no fact for them to consider. (Pa.) 269

If there is evidence from which the jury can properly find the question for the party on whom the burden of proof rests, it should be submitted to the jury; if not it should be withdrawn. (Pa.) 659

In determining the correctness of a nonsuit, the following rules are to be observed: 1. Plaintiff is entitled to the most favorable inferences from the evidence, and all contested facts are to be deemed established in his favor. 2. Where, from the circumstances shown, inferences are to be drawn which are not certain and incontrovertible, or as to which persons might differ, it is for the jury to decide. (N. Y.) 890

C. R., V. IV.

NOTES. See BILLS AND NOTES.

NOTICE. See DEED; VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

Whatever puts a party upon inquiry amounts in judgment of law to notice. (Pa.) 917

NUISANCE.

A man has no right to abate any more of the nuisance than is necessary to secure his rights. (N. Y.) 205

If one abating a nuisance do more injury to another than was necessary to effect the legitimate object, he is liable to an action. (N. Y.) 205

A legislative grant does not exempt corporations from liability for injury caused by noise in the erection of workshops near dwellings and places of business, disturbing the enjoyment thereof and injuring property by casting smoke, fumes, dust, etc., upon dwellings and grounds. (N. Y.) 236

Maintaining chimneys of a lower height than surrounding dwellings, necessarily causing smoke to enter windows, is sufficient ground on which to maintain an action. (N. Y.) 236

An injury is sufficient to sustain an action for nuisance for damages, if it produces that which is offensive to the senses, injurious to the health, or renders the enjoyment of life in the use of property uncomfortable. (N. Y.) 236

The mere existence of a steam railroad, together with the passing of trains thereon, is not per se a nuisance. (Pa.) 277

OBSTRUCTIONS. See WAYS.

OFFICE AND OFFICER. See ATTORNEY-GENERAL; BRIBERY; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS; POLICE AND POLICE DEPARTMENTS; QUO WARRANTO; RECEIVER; SHERIFF; STATE AND STATE OFFICER.

Eligibility to office belongs equally to all persons whomsoever, not excluded by the Constitution. (N. J.) 571

There can be no recovery if no services have been performed by the officer. (Pa.) 320

Right of officer to salary while physically disabled from performing duties. (Pa.) 321

Compensation paid to sheriff for board of prisoners is an emolument of his office. (Pa.) 87

Mandamus will not lie to compel act by public officer in regard to which he may exercise his judgment or discretion. (N. Y.) 184

Public officers necessarily possess a capacity to sue, commensurate with their public trusts and duties. (N. Y.) 235

Liability of municipal corporation for expenses incurred in suits by officers in official capacity. Note. 248

ORPHANS' COURT. See COURTS.

OYSTERS. See FISH AND FISHERIES.

PARENT AND CHILD. See BASTARDY; GUARDIAN AND WARD; INFANTS; NEGLIGENCE.

A voluntary conveyance by a father to a son is presumptively intended as an advancement. (N. Y.) 513

Right of after-born child to take against will; Act April 8, 1883; child legitimated after the making of the will. (Pa.) 470

It is negligence in a parent to permit a child to trespass on a railroad track, or a child of tender years to run at large in a city, or to engage in a dangerous employment. (Pa.) 641

PAROL EVIDENCE. See EVIDENCE.

PARTIES. See ACTION OR SUIT; MORTGAGE.

PARTITION.

Upon a sale in partition the character of the cotenants' interest as land is not changed. A mortgage of his share is discharged from the ground, but adheres as a lien to the cotenant's share, whatever new form it may actually assume. (Pa.) 768

Liens against shares of cotenants are by proceedings in partition, discharged from the corpus of the estate, and attached to the individual shares. (Pa.) 768

Where proceedings result in a suit, the parties, the court, and the sheriff are bound, in apportioning and distributing the fund, to regard the lien creditors of the cotenants. (Pa.) 765

In partition founded on legal or equitable title joint possession is not essential. (Pa.) 98

Equity will not interfere if complainant's title be denied, until he has vindicated it at law. (Pa.) 98

What adverse possession will defeat action. (Pa.) 98

In partition in equity, a tenant in common is entitled to improvements made by him which are reasonably necessary for the proper enjoyment of the land and not injurious to the estate of the other cotenant. (Pa.) 99

A husband who thus improves property in which his wife has an undivided interest is not a stranger or volunteer. Id.

PARTNERSHIP.

Representations, conduct, and circumstances calculated to induce the belief that parties are partners will render them liable to creditors doing business with them under the impression so created. (N. Y.) 870

Sufficiency of evidence of holding out as partners. (N. Y.) 870

Division of profits is evidence of partnership. (N. Y.) 870

Sufficiency of evidence of partnership. (N. Y.) 870

Where credit is given by third persons on the faith of an apparent partnership, the law will not permit them to become losers on account of a secret agreement or understanding of the apparent partners. (N. Y.) 870

The existence of a partnership is a question of fact triable by a jury. (N. Y.) 870

An action for damages for the breach of an express agreement entered into by one partner with another will lie, if the damages when recovered will belong to the plaintiff alone. (Pa.) 274

One partner cannot sue his copartners in an action at law, except in account rendered, for or about a partnership adventure, unless they have settled their accounts and struck a balance, or the partnership was limited to a single transaction. (Pa.) 275

a. R., v. IV.

If a person agrees to become a partner with others and furnish a certain amount of capital, and makes default, they can sue him at law for damages. (Pa.) 275

Whether taking the separate note of one of the partners amounts to an extinguishment or satisfaction of the debt depends upon the intention of the parties. (Pa.) 260

PASSENGERS. See CARRIERS.

PATENT.

No warranty of validity of letters patent is implied in any license given thereunder, and proof of invalidity is, therefore, no defense to any suit for promised royalties. (Pa.) 45

PAUPERS. See POOR AND POOR LAWS.

PAYMENT. See JUDGMENT; LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

There is no implication that the creditor agrees to give time for the payment of the original debt, arising out of the fact that he takes a note at a future day on account of it. (Pa.) 645

The receipt of the debtor's note does not discharge the debt unless it is so agreed. It is a mere concurrent security. (Pa.) 645

A note for a less sum than the debt will discharge the debt. (Pa.) 260

The acceptance, by the creditor, from the debtor, of bank notes, will be presumed to be a discharge and satisfaction of the debt, although the bank had failed at the time. (Pa.) 260

Payment by check, presumption of conditional payment. (Pa.) 260

Whether taking the separate note of one of the partners amounts to an extinguishment or satisfaction of the joint debt depends upon the intention of the parties. (Pa.) 260

Where the securities held by the creditor are surrendered at the time a new instrument is delivered and accepted, the inference will be strong, if not irresistible, that the debt is satisfied. (Pa.) 260

The presumption of payment from the lapse of time is not conclusive, but casts the burden of rebutting it upon the creditor. (Pa.) 458

Recognizance is subject to the legal presumption of payment after twenty years. (Pa.) 458

One attempting to defraud another in payment cannot ask repayment of part consideration from him. (Pa.) 87

Right to recover back money paid under mistake. (N. Y.) 181, 182

PENALTIES. See SUNDAY.

Penal statutes must not be so strictly construed as to defeat the obvious intention of the Legislature. (Pa.) 271

PERJURY.

Definition, Rev. Stat. § 5298. (D. C.) 151
Cannot be assigned upon answer in equity, unless bill calls for answer under oath. (D. C.) 151

PHOTOGRAPHS. See EVIDENCE.

PHRASES. See DEFINITIONS.PLEADING. See AFFIDAVIT OF DEFENSE; CRIMINAL LAW; EQUITY; NEGLIGENCE;
REFLEVIN; SET-OFF AND COUNTER-CLAIM.

If a pleader needlessly describes the tort and the means effecting it, with particularity, the proof must sustain the allegations. (Pa.) 718

The statement of claim at the conclusion of the narr. is equivalent to a bill of particulars, and nothing can be recovered thereunder that is not included in the narr. and bill. (Pa.) 645

When the want of capacity to sue appears on the face of the complaint, the objection must be taken by demurrer; Code Civ. Proc. § 488. (N. Y.) 286

When want of capacity to sue does not appear on the face of the complaint, the objection must be taken by answer. Code Civ. Proc. § 498. (N. Y.) 286

Variance. (Md.) 162

Failure of proof. (N. Y.) 190

PLEDGE AND COLLATERAL SECURITY.

Deposit of negotiable bonds with bank as collateral security; right of action. (Pa.) 106

It will not be presumed, for the purpose of relieving a pledgor from the Statute of Limitations, that there was an agreement between the parties that the pledgee should keep the stock until he should have repaid himself out of the dividends and proceeds. (N. Y.) 798

Whether there has been an actual purchase or not, equity will presume one after the lapse of twenty years; a presumption based not on fact, but in the face of evidence to the contrary. (N. Y.) 794

POLICE AND POLICE DEPARTMENTS.

Right of officer to salary while physically disabled from performing duties. (Pa.) 821

Implied power of municipality to remove; charge must be stated with substantial certainty; all facts must be alleged; jurisdiction must appear; no intendments are indulged in favor of jurisdiction or regularity of proceedings. (N. J.) 82, 88

Causes for removal, under statute May 2, 1885. (N. J.) 871

POLICE POWERS. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.POLICY. See INSURANCE.POOR AND POOR LAWS.

Continuous residence necessary to gain settlement, under Rev. 834. (N. J.) 424

A person cannot have two or more inchoate settlements at one and the same time, either of which, at his option, may be ripened into a perfect settlement. (N. J.) 425

POWER OF SALE. See DEVISE AND LEGACY.POWERS. See DEVISE AND LEGACY.PRACTICE. See ACTION OR SUIT; APPEAL; EQUITY; JUDGMENT; WAYS.

C. R., V. IV.

PRESUMPTION. See APPEAL; CRIMINAL LAW; EVIDENCE; FRAUD AND FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE; LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.PRINCIPAL AND AGENT. See BAWDY AND DISORDERLY HOUSES.

Where some evidence of agency has been given; it is competent to give in evidence the acts and declaration of the alleged agent respecting the subject-matter of his authority. (Pa.) 286

Whenever an agent is estopped from disputing his principal's title to a fund held by him, then the agent cannot be compelled to pay it back to a third party. (N. J.) 819

Where contract was executed by agent for principal, and latter has ratified it by accepting its benefits, a seal may be rejected as surplusage, and recovery had against principal in assumpsit, as if it were a simple contract. (N. Y.) 161

Agent's mistake of fact is mistake of principal. (N. Y.) 162

A creditor is not bound to give notice of the withdrawal of authority from his agent, but the debtor must see that the agent has the securities at each payment. (N. Y.) 830

Lien of broker for services upon moneys belonging to his principal. (N. J.) 819

Commissions of a broker for sale of real estate are not proper subjects for a book charge. (Pa.) 269

Right to compensation for procuring sale; fraud. (N. Y.) 129, 130

PRINCIPAL AND SURETY.

Judgment against principal is only prima facie evidence against surety. (Md.) 155

Discharge by material alteration. (Pa.) 461

Release by alteration of contract. (Pa.) 633

PRISON. See JAIL AND JAILER.PROBABLE CAUSE. See MALICIOUS PROSECUTION.PROBATE. See WILL.PROCESS. See WRIT AND PROCESS.PROMISSORY NOTES. See BILLS AND NOTES.PROSTITUTION, HOUSES OF. See BAWDY AND DISORDERLY HOUSES.PUBLIC OFFICER. See OFFICE AND OFFICER.PUBLIC POLICY. See CONTRACT.PUBLIC ROADS. See WAYS.PUBLIC WAREHOUSES. See WAREHOUSES.PUBLIC WORKS. See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.QUIETING TITLE. See CLOUD ON TITLE.QUI TAM AND PENAL ACTIONS. See PENALTIES.

QUO WARRANTO.

Lies where any new jurisdiction or public trust is executed without authority. (N. J.) 85
 Attorney-general has right to present information, without leave asked of any one. (N. J.) 85
 The name of a relator in an information is, so far as the court is concerned, "to be considered surplusage." (N. J.) 85
 An information for usurping a franchise need show no title in the people to the franchise; but it lies with defendant to show his warrant for exercising it. (N. J.) 85

RAILROAD COMPANIES. See CARRIERS; MASTER AND SERVANT; NEGLIGENCE; STREET RAILWAYS.

Charter of Pennsylvania Railroad Company; how affected by new Constitution. (Pa.) 501

Locating road, etc. Power of railroad company to condemn land owned by the State for terminal facilities. (N. Y.) 515

Power of railroad company to condemn land dedicated to public use, as land under water dedicated to purposes of commerce. (N. Y.) 515

The tunneling in a street, by a railroad company, is not considered as a departure from the original public use, entitling the abutting property-owners to damages. (Pa.) 277

The mere existence of a steam railroad, together with the passing of trains thereon, is not per se a nuisance. (Pa.) 277

A general grant of power to take lands for railroad purposes does not include the power to take a street. (Pa.) 266

Right to occupy land will not imply the right to occupy streets. (Pa.) 278

Right of a railroad company to occupy streets will not extend to road leased by the company. (Pa.) 278

Right of adjacent landowner to enjoin unlawful occupation of street by railroad. (Pa.) 277, 278

When public or private rights are invaded, and an injunction is asked, no question of the amount of damages is raised, but merely one of the invasion of a right. When railroad companies exceed their statutory powers in dealing with other people's property, this principle may be invoked. (Pa.) 278

The appropriation of land by a railroad is completed upon the location of the road; after the assessment of damages, though the report has not been affirmed, the right of the landowner to damages is vested, and cannot be defeated by an abandonment of the original location. (Pa.) 298

The owner of property along which a railroad has been built at an elevation can use the spaces under the trestle or arches, provided such use does not interfere with the use of the road. (Pa.) 668

The owner of land does not lose his right thereto because it is occupied and used by a railroad, even though by the consent of the owner. (N. J.) 417

The words in a charter, "from a town or city," have been taken inclusively and to permit the company to enter the town or city. (N. Y.) 200

The words "to" or "at" have been construed to include a city or town. (N. Y.) 200

The location of buildings and structures of the company is within the reasonable discretion of its managers. (N. Y.) 226

Under the statutes of New York, railroad companies may properly acquire land for engine houses, shops, yards, turnouts, and side-tracks, as necessarily incident to the operation of the road. (N. Y.) 226

It is incident to the grant of a railroad that it may lay down as many sidings as are necessary to accommodate its business. (Pa.) 278

Where the duty to build or operate a railroad is not made imperative by the charter or laws of the State, mandamus will not lie. (N. Y.) 200

Mandamus will lie to compel a public corporation to perform its contracts and charter obligations, as the completion or operation of a railroad, the running of trains and maintenance of stations, the construction of bridges, the receipt and transportation of freight, the keeping of the records and registers, and generally the performance of any duty toward the public. (N. Y.) 201

Right of one railroad company to take land appropriated by another. (Pa.) 265

One railroad company cannot take land occupied by another company for any purpose connected with the operation of the road. (Pa.) 266

Lands or the right of way occupied by one railroad company for its corporate purposes cannot be taken as right of way by another railroad company, except for mere crossings; and then only for crossing purposes, and not for exclusive occupancy. (Pa.) 265

A foreign railroad corporation has no power to condemn lands in the State of New York. (N. Y.) 516

A foreign corporation can only acquire and hold lands by comity. (N. Y.) 226

Power of domestic railroad company to condemn land for use, on contract with and for the benefit of a foreign corporation. (N. Y.) 516

At public crossings the rights of railroad companies are concurrent with those of the public. (Pa.) 681

A railroad company owes no duty to trespassers, either to give signals or use ordinary care, and it is only liable for gross or wanton injury. (Pa.) 682

The affairs of a railroad corporation must be managed by its board of directors. (N. Y.) 192

Insolvent railroad; lien and priority for wages of employees. (N. Y.) 365, 366

Lien of contractors and laborers for work done in the construction of a road. (Pa.) 457

Materialmen who suffer their property to go into and become a part of a railroad consent to its being covered by a mortgage, and acquire no lien to the prejudice thereof. (N. Y.) 365

Under a charter or franchise to make a road only, a lease cannot be made of a road already built. (Pa.) 500

A railroad mortgage executed at the inception of the undertaking, but to procure funds for the construction of the road, is intended to cover titles and rights as they are procured, and as they are procured they become subject to the mortgage. (N. Y.) 108

 Issue of bonds; amount of indebtedness; ratification; corporate seal affixed to bonds was ratification. (Pa.) 112

Organization of new company by purchasers under foreclosure; Laws of 1857, chap. 444. (N. Y.) 191

Consolidation of competing lines of railroad; Constitution of 1874, art. 17. (Pa.) 499
 500, 501, 503, 504

The public policy of the Commonwealth is to encourage the consolidation of management and interests of railroad companies. (Pa.) 503

Effect of Constitution of 1874, prohibiting any railroad from consolidating with or acquiring a parallel or competing line, upon companies having charters before the adoption of of the Constitution. (Pa.) 499

RECEIVER.

Power to appoint a receiver has been classed under the head of the quia timet jurisdiction of chancery; the remedy is a provisional or auxiliary one, exercised as an adjunct to the principal relief sought for in the case. (N. Y.) 865

In the United States the power of the court of chancery to appoint a receiver has been exercised as an inherent authority, without legislative aid. (N. Y.) 865

In England the power to appoint receivers exists only by virtue of statute, the equity courts having declined to exercise it before authority to do so was expressly conferred. (N. Y.) 865

Debts for betterments, improvements; priority over rights of bondholders and mortgagees. (N. Y.) 870

Insolvent railroad; lien and priority for wages of employees. (N. Y.) 865, 866

Right of receiver to sue in foreign jurisdiction. (D. C.) 610

RECITALS. See DEED.

RECOGNIZANCE. See BAIL AND RECOGNIZANCE.

RECORD. See DEED; MORTGAGE.

An exemplification of a record is not evidence of a secondary quality, but stands upon an equality with the original. (Pa.) 468

REFERENCE. See ARBITRATION AND REFERENCE.

REFORMATION. See CONTRACT; DEED.

RELEASE AND DISCHARGE. See PRINCIPAL AND SURETY.

RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES.

The locking of the door of a pew, thereby preventing one who had right to use it, is equivalent to an eviction. (Pa.) 701

REMAINDER. See DEVISE AND LEGACY.

RENT. See LANDLORD AND TENANT.

REPEAL. See STATUTES.

O. R., V. IV.

REPLEVIN.

To entitle defendant to plead title in third person, he must connect himself therewith. (Pa.) 106

Evidence that another has a right superior to plaintiff will defeat action. (Pa.) 106

In an action on a replevin bond, with warrant to confess judgment, a scire facias quare executio non must be issued. (Pa.) 926

REPORT AND CASE MADE.

A case stated is like a special verdict and subject to the same rules. (Pa.) 261

RESCISSION. See CONTRACT; SALE.

RES GESTÆ. See EVIDENCE.

RES JUDICATA. See JUDGMENT.

RESTRAINT OF TRADE. See CONTRACT.

RIVERS. See WATERS AND WATERCOURSES.

ROADS. See WAYS.

RULE OF COURT. See TRIAL.

SALE. See INTOXICATING LIQUORS; TAXES; VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

There is no distinction between bills of sale, given as security, and chattel mortgages. (N. Y.) 186

Bill of sale not filed, and without immediate and continued change of possession, is void. (N. Y.) 189

Devisee of income of fund during life has no interest in the corpus subject to gift, sale, or attachment. (Pa.) 84

In a sale for cash, payment should be made to pass property. (Pa.) 86

Where no time is fixed, the law implies the terms are cash on delivery. (Pa.) 86

Reconveyance or return of property. (Pa.) 87

Effect of earnest money in changing title of property. (Pa.) 86

Trover for value of horses sold, by vendor refusing to receive his own note in payment. (Pa.) 87

Waiver of right to rescind for fraud. (N. Y.) 190

SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS.

Proceedings for taking lands for school purposes, under Act of April 9, 1867. (Pa.) 298, 299

No classification of school districts has as yet been attempted, and until they are classified, any Act affecting them must affect all or none. (Pa.) 811

SEAL. See CANALS; CORPORATIONS.

SECONDARY EVIDENCE. See EVIDENCE.

SECOND JEOPARDY. See CRIMINAL LAW.

SELF-DEFENSE. See HOMICIDE.

SERVANT. See MASTER AND SERVANT.

SERVICE. See WRIT AND PROCESS.

SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM.

A demand, to be set-off, must be a subsisting cause of action at the time of the commencement of the suit. (Pa.) 678

Set-off is inadmissible, unless it be between the same parties. (Pa.) 262

The party whose debt is not due has no equitable claim to have it set-off against a debt of his own already due in the hands of the party who is insolvent. (Pa.) 262

SEWERS. See DRAINS AND SEWERS.

SHERIFF. See WRIT AND PROCESS.

Authority, under Act of April 10, 1873 (P. L. 666), to increase or decrease compensation of sheriff for board of prisoners in county jail. (Pa.) 88

Compensation paid to sheriff for board of prisoners is an emolument of his office. (Pa.) 88

SHERIFF'S SALE. See EXECUTION.

SLANDER. See LIBEL AND SLANDER.

SPECIAL LEGISLATION. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

STATE AND STATE OFFICERS.
See ATTORNEY-GENERAL; QUO WARRANTO.

State can no more be sued in equity than at law. (N. Y.) 184

Seal of canal commissioners is not seal of State. (N. Y.) 181

No implied contract on part of State to pay for work voluntarily done. (N. Y.) 182

Mandamus to compel State comptroller to cancel sale. (N. Y.) 184

Certiorari is the proper remedy to review comptroller's decision for refusing to cancel tax sale. (N. Y.) 185

STATUTE OF FRAUDS. See FRAUDS, STATUTE OF.

STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS. See LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

STATUTES. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW; FRAUDS, STATUTE OF; INTOXICATING LIQUORS; LIMITATION OF ACTIONS; SUNDAY; TAXES.

Construction. Intention will control the letter. (Pa.) 912

When acts can be construed by a fair and liberal construction, it must be done. (N. Y.) 286

Where one statute is repealed, and a more comprehensive one enacted relating to the same subject, in construing the latter, resort may be had to the former. (N. Y.) 285

When a statute is made in addition to another on the same subject, without repealing it, the provisions of both must be construed together. (N. Y.) 235

A thing which is within the intention of the makers of the statute is as much within the statute as if it were within the letter. (N. Y.) 235

Whenever a power is given by statute, everything to make it effectual, or requisite to attain the end in view, is implied. (N. Y.) 235

Remedial statutes are to be liberally construed. (Pa.) 912

Effect of New York City Consolidation Act of 1883 upon Penal Code. (N. Y.) 165-168

Repeal by implication. (N. Y.) 167

Repeals by implication are not favored. (N. Y.) 286

A statute will not be deemed repealed by implication, unless there is a clear and strong inconsistency between the two enactments. (Pa.) 804

A construction which repeals a part of the statute and seriously impairs the harmony of the system should be very clear, before it is adopted by the court. (N. Y.) 285

Posterior general law does not repeal prior local or special Act, unless such intent appear. (N. Y.) 166

Later affirmative statute shall not take away former Act, if the former is particular and the latter general. (N. Y.) 166

A local statute providing a remedy in a particular class of cases is not repealed by a subsequent statute, general in its application, although the terms of the subsequent statute are broad enough to include the cases embraced in the special law, unless the intention to repeal is manifest. (N. Y.) 286

General legislation on a particular subject gives way to special. (N. Y.) 166

STOCKS. See CORPORATIONS.

STREAMS. See WATER AND WATER-COURSES.

STREET RAILWAYS.

Application of art. 17 of the Constitution, prohibiting acquisition or control of property and competing roads, to passenger railways. (Pa.) 501

It is not contributory negligence per se for a passenger to ride on the front platform of a crowded street car. (Pa.) 901

It is not negligence per se to stand on the step of the front platform of a street car, with the implied assent of the conductor and driver. (Pa.) 643

STREETS. See WAYS.

SUIT. See ACTION OR SUIT.

SUNDAY.

Laws requiring the observance of the Sabbath are constitutional. (N. Y.) 544

One penalty covers the combined infractions of a whole day. (Pa.) 271

SUPREME COURTS. See COURTS.

SURETY. See PRINCIPAL AND SURETY

TAXES.

Power of taxation. (N. J.) 189

The sovereign power of the State in respect to taxation may be exercised upon any subject within its jurisdiction, and to any extent not prohibited by the Federal Constitution. (N. J.) 189

Taxation is not a judicial but a legislative function, and courts cannot interfere therewith or revise it, except when clearly warranted by the Constitution. (Pa.) 488

Uniformity. (N. J.) 140, 427; (Pa.) 488

All taxes shall be uniform upon the same class of subjects. (Pa.) 806

Taxes must be equal and uniform. (N. J.) 247

A tax which is not uniform is in conflict with the Fourteenth Amendment of the Federal Constitution, which requires that no statute shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws. (N. J.) 427

Independently of constitutional restriction, it has been held to be a fundamental condition of legal taxation that there shall be equality and uniformity in the distribution of public burdens. (N. J.) 428

A tax is uniform when it is equal upon all persons belonging to a prescribed class upon which it is imposed. (N. J.) 140

The test, whether a tax in any given case is a franchise, as distinguished from a property tax, is that a tax according to a valuation is a tax on property; whereas a tax imposed according to nominal value, or measured by some standard of mere calculation, may be a franchise tax. (N. J.) 141

Franchises. (N. J.) 428

Property taxable; exemptions. Power to impose taxes upon corporations. (N. J.) 189-141

A tax may be imposed upon the business of a corporation, graduated by a percentage of the business done. (N. J.) 189

Classification of railroad and canal property. (N. J.) 427

State right to tax business or profession; Legislature has power to impose such burden by way of tax or license fee. (N. J.) 189

Assessment and sale of unseated lands. (Pa.) 753

A tract of land ceases to be unseated as soon as it is actually occupied with a view to permanent use; and that occupation may be said to commence with the moment of entry for the purpose of clearing the land. (Pa.) 753

Exemption. Notes. 800

Exemptions are strictly construed. (Pa.) 488

Exemption of public property. (Pa.) 806

Act of May 14, 1874, exempting from taxation public property used for public purposes, and providing that property producing revenue shall be taxable; construction as applied to waterworks of the city producing revenue. (Pa.) 808

Assessors of taxes have much larger powers than those assessing for improvements; they may be liable for misconduct, but their conduct cannot prevent recovery of taxes. (N. Y.) 115

Assessment. Harmless defects. (N. J.) 141

Assessments for local improvements must be equal and uniform. (N. J.) 247

Omission of part of property liable makes tax invalid. (N. Y.) 115

Assessors have no discretion to omit taxable property. (N. Y.) 115

Act of April 30, 1885, making valid all ordinances levying taxes in cities of the third, fourth, and fifth classes, in amount not exceeding twenty mills in any one year, considered. (Pa.) 488

C. B., V. IV.

Rate of taxation of rural property; Act of February 25, 1870. (Pa.) 486

Failure of assessor to make affidavit to roll. (N. Y.) 113

No tax shall be set aside for any irregularity or defect in form or illegality in assessing, if the person against whom or the property upon which tax is assessed is, in fact, liable to taxation. (N. J.) 141

Sale discharges lien of other taxes. (D. C.) 621

Validity of sales, by the city of Elizabeth, for nonpayment of taxes, for a term of nine hundred years. (N. J.) 823

Duty of comptroller, on discovering invalidity of sale, to cancel same. (N. Y.) 184

Mandamus to compel State comptroller to cancel sale. (N. Y.) 184

Certiorari is the proper remedy to review comptroller's decision for refusing to cancel tax sale. (N. Y.) 185

An action cannot be maintained to recover back money paid for an illegal assessment, not void upon its face, so long as the assessment remains unvacated and unreversed. (N. Y.) 783

An action at law may be maintained to recover back money paid for an assessment or tax which is void upon its face, after having first set aside the tax or assessment. (N. Y.) 783

TENANT. See LANDLORD AND TENANT.

TENANTS IN COMMON. See JOINT TENANTS AND TENANTS IN COMMON.

TENDER.

Tender of money paid on account must be made before replevin brought on failure to pay full purchase price. (Pa.) 93

TERRE-TENANTS. See MORTGAGE.

TOWNS. See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

TOWNSHIPS. See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

TRESPASS.

Whenever a man does an act which in law and in fact is a wrongful act, an action on the case will lie for damages. (Pa.) 494

The owner of wild and uncultivated land is deemed in possession so as to maintain trespass, until an adverse possession is clearly made out. (Pa.) 490, 917

Private convenience is no excuse for infringing upon the rights of another under the plea of necessity. (N. Y.) 226

Liability of landlord, making excavation on premises, for injury resulting to members of the family and visitors of the tenant. (Pa.) 506

TRIAL. See DEPOSITION; DISCONTINUANCE; EVIDENCE; EXCEPTIONS; JURY; NEW TRIAL; NONSUIT; PLEADING; REPORT AND CASE MADE; WITNESS.

Construction of rule of court by the trial court should be accepted by the higher court as conclusive. (Pa.) 897

Where a party suppresses evidence in his power, the presumption is that, if produced, it would make against him. (Pa.) 897

Plaintiff is bound to offer all the evidence pertinent to maintain the issue on his part. (Md.) 349

Notice to produce original receipt. (Md.) 163

It is error to blend questions of law and fact and submit the whole to the jury. (Pa.) 269

If there is evidence from which the jury can properly find the question for the party on whom the burden of proof rests, it should be submitted to the jury; if not it should be withdrawn. (Pa.) 659

To permit a jury to pass upon a fact admitted or unquestioned is to permit it to find a fact not admitted, and therefore to find a condition which is denied by both parties. (Pa.) 718

Where the charge of the court is erroneous in some particular, but the result of the charge is correct, such error furnishes no ground for a new trial. (N. J.) 825

When disputed facts are assumed in the point propounded to the court, the refusal to charge as requested is not error. (Pa.) 269

TROVER AND CONVERSION.

Trover for value of horses sold, by vendor refusing to receive his own note in payment. (Pa.) 87

Sufficiency of possession to maintain action. (N. Y.) 187, 188

TRUSTS. See LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

Trustees can only be allowed for necessary expenditures. (Pa.) 101

In equity, executor is trustee of all assets. (Md.) 160

The trust being an active one, the legal estate for life is in the trustee, to perform the duties imposed by donor, and cannot coalesce with any subsequent estate. (Pa.) 34

A contract in violation of a fiduciary relation is not void, but voidable only at the election of the fiduciary. (N. H.) 191

A feme covert may become a trustee. (Pa.) 323

A married woman acting as trustee will be liable for waste committed during coverture. (Pa.) 323

A trustee is liable only for his own acts and defaults, not for those of his cotrustee, nor for funds collected by his cotrustee. (N. Y.) 526

A voluntary grantee from a trustee will hold subject to the trust. (Pa.) 323

Cestui que trust has option to take or refuse benefit or loss of unauthorized act of trustee. (Pa.) 101

ULTRA VIRES. See CORPORATIONS.

USAGE. See CUSTOM AND USAGE.

VACATION. See WAYS.

VARIANCE. See PLEADING.

VENDOR AND PURCHASER. See DEED; EASEMENT; FRAUD AND FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE; SALE.

Parol contract to convey land must be clearly proven. (Pa.) 490

Parol declarations made by the parties, after the sale of land by written agreement, are admissible in corroboration of the agreement. (Pa.) 463

The vendor has no right to take possession as against his vendee, and cut timber, and set off its value against the unpaid purchase price. (Pa.) 917

Covenant to purchase and pay over purchase money upon delivery of deed; upon tender, vendor may recover purchase money. (N. J.) 78

Vendee failing to pay purchase price cannot maintain trespass against vendor. (Pa.) 917

After a contract for the sale of land, equity considers the purchaser as a trustee to the vendor for the purchase money. The vendee is seized of the estate, and must bear any loss and will be entitled to any benefits affecting the land. (Pa.) 917

A purchaser having paid part of the purchase money, and refusing to comply, cannot recover back what he has advanced, the vendor being willing to do his part. (Pa.) 890

Vendor's lien for purchase money. (N. J.) 899

Vendor's lien for purchase money as against subsequent transferee or mortgagee of the vendee. (N. J.) 899

To constitute a lien, as against a purchaser under the original vendee, there must be notice of the indebtedness, and that the indebtedness arose upon the purchase money. (N. J.) 899

The burden of proof is upon the purchaser to establish that, in a particular case, lien for unpaid purchase money has been intentionally displaced or waived by the consent of the parties. (N. J.) 899

The taking of the purchaser's note or bond for unpaid purchase money, and a recovery of a judgment thereon, will not impair the vendor's lien. (N. J.) 899

The Statute of Limitations does not affect the lien of the vendor for purchase money, because the vendee or the purchaser from him, with notice, stands in the relation of a trustee or mortgagor for the unpaid purchase money. (N. J.) 899

Bona fide purchaser. Notice. (Md.) 156

Equity will not relieve against bona fide purchaser for valuable consideration. (Md.) 156

A purchaser for value is protected against prior equities of which he has no notice. (Pa.) 740

Extinguishment of valid debt against vendor constitutes vendee purchaser for value. (N. Y.) 185

Notice of improperly registered mortgage, given to secure purchase money, is sufficient notice. (N. J.) 899

Notice is a question of fact for the jury. (Pa.) 463

Possession or occupancy, to be equivalent to constructive notice of title, must be clear, open, and notorious, and unequivocal at the time of the purchase. (Pa.) 463

Whatever is sufficient to put the purchaser upon inquiry which would have necessarily led him to the discovery of an adverse claim to the land, affects him with notice thereof. (Pa.) 463

A subsequent purchaser for valuable consideration, with notice, actual or constructive, of prior rights, takes subject to those rights. (Pa.) 463

Where one has sold the same land to different persons, his declarations before the second sale are evidence against his second vendee. (Pa.) 468

VESTED REMAINDER. See DEVISE AND LEGACY.

VILLAGES. See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

WAGER. See GAMING; INSURANCE.

WAGES. See MASTER AND SERVANT; RAILROAD COMPANIES.

WARD. See GUARDIAN AND WARD.

WAREHOUSES.

It is within the power of the Legislature to regulate public warehouses. (N. Y.) 544

WARRANTY. See INSURANCE.

WATER COMPANIES.

Private property may be taken for the purpose of supplying the inhabitants with pure water. (Pa.) 802

The Legislature may fix the price of water and gas, and grant exclusive privileges to supply the same to villages and cities. (N. Y.) 544

Act of May 14, 1874, exempting from taxation public property used for public purposes, and providing that property producing revenue shall be taxable; construction as applied to waterworks of the city producing revenue. (Pa.) 808

WATER AND WATERCOURSES.
See MILLS AND DAMS.

The State owns the bed of navigable streams to high-water mark, and may grant them or any interest in them to an individual. (N. Y.) 221

An action may be maintained for the diversion of a watercourse, although no actual damage is occasioned, upon the ground of the injury done to the riparian proprietors, and the acquisition of an adverse right by an uninterrupted enjoyment for twenty years. (N. Y.) 224

Liability for water escaping from mine. (Pa.) 477, 478

WAYS. See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

Requisites of dedication. (N. Y.) 209

The removal of a fence and substituting a row of trees will not warrant the inference of an intention to dedicate the land as a street. (N. Y.) 209

Right to acquire title by adverse possession. (N. Y.) 238

Laying out. Without an order of the court of sessions, supervisors have no authority to open a new road, or to correct errors in the opening of an old one. (Pa.) 928

Power of supervisor to contract for use of canal towpath as public road. (Pa.) 928

Presumption is in favor of legality of proceeding. (Pa.) 40

Effect of entertaining viewers by parties. (Pa.) 89, 40

C. R., V. IV.

The action of a jury of view is merely advisory, subject to approval or disapproval of court. (Pa.) 40

Viewers are not required to report elevation of road. (Pa.) 40

Payment of costs, on part of petitioners for review, depends upon their success. (Pa.) 89

Form of assessments and reassessments after partial vacation, under Laws 1875, p. 896, § 5. (N. J.) 426

Defects. An excavation in a road or street, made for a lawful purpose, must be fenced and lighted. (Pa.) 511

Obstruction; public; private; right of abutting landowner. Notes. 253

Proceedings to remove obstructions are statutory; no jurisdiction in equity. (N. Y.) 209

Right of adjacent landowner to enjoin unlawful occupation of street by railroad. (Pa.) 277, 278

The right of the railroad company to occupy lands will not imply the right to occupy streets. (Pa.) 278

WIDOW. See DOWER.

WIFE. See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

WILL. See DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION; DEVISE AND LEGACY; DOWER; EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

A substantial observance of the statute relating to execution of wills will be regarded as sufficient. (N. Y.) 883

It is not necessary that witnesses should subscribe in the presence of each other; it is enough that each subscribe in the presence of the testator. (N. Y.) 883

A codicil referring to a will operates as a republication, and the two are to be regarded as one instrument, speaking from the date of the codicil. (N. Y.) 881

Capacity of proponent as a witness in proceedings to establish a will. (N. Y.) 769

Due execution may be established by the testimony of one or either of the witnesses or against their testimony. (N. Y.) 883

Burden on proponent to establish due execution of will. (N. Y.) 769

Lapse of time is not a bar to the filing of a caveat to test the validity of a will. (D. C.) 606

Unsuccessful contestants of will; liability to costs. (N. Y.) 769

A probate of a will is a proceeding in rem, and is notice to all the world. (D. C.) 607

Power of register to admit wills to probate. (D. C.) 606

Decrees of probate as to personality are final and can be reviewed only on appeal. (D. C.) 607

Notice of probate. (D. C.) 606

Proof of publication. (N. Y.) 881, 883

Right of after-born child to take against will; Act April 8, 1883; child legitimated after making of the will. (Pa.) 470

WITNESS. See EVIDENCE; HUSBAND AND WIFE; PERJURY.

The competency of a witness disqualified by interest may always be restored by a release. (N. Y.) 769

The interest of a witness must be affirmatively shown. (Pa.) 463

Persons collaterally interested may transfer and release such interest and become competent witnesses. (Pa.) 922

Transactions relating to decedents. (Md.) 162; (N. Y.) 769

Actions against decedents' estates; a witness is incompetent if the effect of his testimony may be to preserve a fund for the payment of the debt due to himself. (Pa.) 928

Capacity of proponent as a witness in proceedings to establish a will. (N. Y.) 769

Competency of husband and wife. (Md.) 162

A wife is a competent witness to prove a marriage contract between herself and deceased husband in a contest where the legality of the marriage is in question. (Pa.) 679

C. R., V. IV.

When objection to the competency of evidence arises upon the examination of a witness, the objector has the right to interpose with a cross examination upon the facts material to the question of competency. (N. Y.) 790

Corroboration. (N. Y.) 167

WORDS AND PHRASES. See DEFINITIONS.

WRIT AND PROCESS.

A statute may authorize service of process out of the county in which the action is pending. (Pa.) 284

An erroneous process is good until set aside, and a protection for all acts done under it. (N. Y.) 217

Void process protects no one. (N. Y.) 217

Conclusiveness of sheriff's return. (Pa.) 907

Ex. J. M.

